“The present number of this paper closes the year in which the present publishers have had entire charge of the matter and manner of the Monroe Sentinel. It has been a year fruitful with events in the political annals of this State and Nation. The redress of great political outrages have reverted to the popular will, and the crime against free institutions has been signally rebuked by the popular judgment. We have confidence in the integrity of the popular heart. The consciences of the people have been thoroughly aroused. They will take care of the future. In regard to the business of this office, it has not been remunerating to a degree that will warrant the continuance of the business connection of the present publishing firm. The senior editor withdraws from the publication of the Sentinel, but will continue editor in connection with George W. Tenney, who will be hereafter sole publisher of the Sentinel. This step is taken because the present publishers have come to the conclusion that it will be better for both; and the senior feels that he can do better pecuniarily, than to have his earnings and interests longer in the Sentinel.

“Thus far there has been a mutual harmony in the business of this office, and we trust that our friends have been well satisfied with the character of the Sentinel. We have, never reprinted any of the many encouraging notices of our course by the press of this State; for the reason that we chose to devote our room to matters of greater public concernment than the favorable opinions expressed of us by our cotemporaries. They have our thanks.

“The senior hopes that those who are indebted to the office will pay promptly whatever may be due the same, immediately; and in future to keep the cash receipts of the business on something like an equality with its expenditures. The business looks well enough—is well enough—on paper, but newspaper credit is a bad business at best. If a paper is worth having at all, it is best to pay for it in advance.”

Mr. Tenney continued to edit and publish the Sentinel until August, 1860, when the paper passed into the hands of James Bintliff and E. E. Bryant. Mr. Bryant retired from the Sentinel May, 1861, to enter the army in the War for the Union. Mr. Bintliff continued the paper until the 6th of November following, when he sold a half interest to E. E. Carr, as appears by the following announcement of Mr. Bintliff on that day, in the Sentinel

“We have sold a one-half interest in the Sentinel office to Egbert E. Carr, of Shullsburg, who becomes jointly interested with us in the publication of the Sentinel with the present issue, and who we expect will, about the 1st of December next, introduce himself to its readers as one of its editors. Mr. Carr is a thorough practical printer of more than twenty years’ experience, and come to us with the best recommendations of his integrity as a man, and his qualifications to conduct a printing office.

“Our only object in making this change is to relieve us of the responsibility of managing a business we do not understand, and to give us more time to devote to our editorial duties. We hope by this arrangement to improve the Sentinel, and make it still more worthy of the support of this county. It is now fifteen months since we became connected with the Sentinel, and during that time it has received the hearty support of a very large class of the best citizens of the county.

“Our subscription list is as a whole as prompt pay as any in the State, but there are a few who have not paid one cent since we took possession of the office. To such we take this opportunity to say that we cannot afford to send you a paper longer than one year unless we get pay for it. All the expenses of a printing office are cash, and no man can publish a newspaper and do justice to himself and those who pay him, and give credit to any man longer than one year. Come friends, pay up.”

Mr. Bintliff entered the Union army, but continued still as co-editor of the Sentinel, and retained his interest therein. On the 28th of July, 1865, the paper was sold to A. J. High and Charles A. Booth. Their announcement upon assuming control was as follows:

TO THE PATRONS OF THE SENTINEL.

“In accordance with the announcement of Messrs. Bintliff & Carr last week, the undersigned today assume the editorial management of the Sentinel. In entering upon the arduous duties before us, we do so with a degree of diffidence proportionate to the great responsibilities devolving upon us; and, while we do not lay down any extended programme of future action, a due regard for the customs of the times and the opinions of our readers seems to demand a declaration of the political faith that will govern us in our new relation.

“Politically, the Sentinel will remain unchanged. As in the past it has been the bold and earnest defender of moral and constitutional right, so in the future, while under our control, it will support those principles and measures best calculated to secure the liberties of the people and maintain the integrity of the government. We march with the great Union army. Whether in the field or in the sanctum, we are fighting in the same good cause. In the field we stood opposed to treason in high places, boldly proclaimed and defended, while now, in the sanctum, it is only necessary to ‘change front’ in order to meet that more contemptible, sneaking, cowardly treason which skulks in darkness and stabs in the rear.

“In these eventful days of progress and reform, party creeds are very brief. The great questions which once agitated the public mind now stand recorded in the political catechisms only as a part of our past history. Slavery, once the all-absorbing topic, the cause of bitter party strife, the moral and political curse of the Nation, has been wiped out of existence.

“Banks, tariffs, sub-treasuries, public lands, internal improvements, compromises and provisos ‘no more divide our choice’ or gender strife. These questions, if not obsolete, have been so nearly arbitrated that the political lambs and lions, on common ground, lie down together. We believe that at the present time a single question involves the whole character and responsibility of the American citizen:

Are you loyal to the government of the United States in the maintenance of its National honor and the perpetuity of the Union and the Constitution undivided and unimpaired? It seems to us there can be no neutral position taken upon the great question now at issue between the government and traitors. 'Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.' He that is not for us is against us.' Every man within the wide limits of our country is either a friend of the government or an enemy. Holding 'these truths to be self-evident,' our path of duty is plain, and all our energies shall be given to sustain the State and National authorities in every lawful act to enforce justice and to promote the peace and welfare of our country.

"We will endeavor at all times to keep the readers of the Sentinel well informed in regard to the news and general topics of the day, both at home and abroad. It is our desire to publish a paper entertaining and instructive to all classes of society; something for the family, the professional and literary man, the farmer, mechanic, merchant, student, young and old, grave and gay.

The Sentinel will be especially devoted to the advancement of the growth and prosperity of Green county. We desire to establish our home among this people, and therefore our interests are identical. Whatever will promote your welfare will benefit us, and when we labor for the highest good of the citizens of this county, we but discharge the plain duty of every local publisher, who should always seek to build up the community which supports him. In a word, we shall pay particular attention to the local affairs of the town and county.

"We cannot close this article without offering a word of congratulation on the return of peace and the bright future which seems to await our Nation. After serving three years amid the toils, hardships, dangers and, sufferings of a terrible war, how gladly we hail the day of peace! With gratitude we acknowledge that kind Providence which has safely led us through the great strife and back to home and friends again. We also acknowledge that Almighty Power which has given us the victory in a life and death struggle for National existence. Thank God, the Nation lives! Thank God, slavery is dead! That foul stain upon our National character is obliterated forever, and henceforth we call say without blushing that America is free!

"Let us learn lessons of wisdom from the experience of the past, and in the future be careful to avoid those political rocks on which our good ship of State was so nearly wrecked. The severe trials through which we have passed should teach us to appreciate our liberal government, and at the first approach of danger, to stand up manfully in its defense against the encroachments of corrupt politicians and the intrigues of traitors, if faithful to the great trust committed to us, all will be well, and the beauty of constitutional liberty will shine forth as a beacon light to nations of the earth, to lead them to a higher and holier destiny.

"A. J. HIGH,
"CHARLES A. BOOTH."

Messrs. High & Booth conducted the Sentinel in partnership until the 7th day of December, 1870, when Mr. High disposed of his interest to S. B. Gardner, as appears by the following

TO THE READERS OF THE SENTINEL.—

"With this number of the paper, my business connection with the Monroe Sentinel ceases, Having decided to engage in other business next spring, I have sold my interest in the Sentinel establishment to S. E. Gardner. As I shall remain in the office for a time as associate and corresponding editor, I will not now bid a final editorial farewell to the readers of the Sentinel.

“After a continuous term of service of twenty-five years in the printing office, either at case or in the editorial chair, I am glad to be released from the cares and responsibilities of the newspaper business; and yet there is, to me, a fascinating influence about the printing office which may, at no distant day, draw me back to it again.

“It is highly gratifying to me to be able to state that the permanency of the Sentinel is established beyond a question or doubt. After passing through the political and financial storms of nearly twenty-one years, the patrons and friends of the Sentinel are to-day much more numerous than ever before; its subscription and advertising patronage has steadily increased during the past five years, and is still rapidly increasing. We are pleased to know that the Sentinel is in so prospering a condition at the present time, and sincerely hope that the same liberal support may be extended to it in the future. The members of the new firm are worthy young men and will leave nothing undone, on their part, to merit the confidence and good will of the public.

“The personal and business relations between Mr. Booth and myself have always been harmonious and satisfactory. I have ever found him to be a true and genial friend, an agreeable and efficient business partner. In severing our business relations, we part as we met—warm personal friends.

“Wishing prosperity and peace to the Sentinel and its many friends,

I remain, as ever, yours,

“A. J. HIGH.”

SALUTATORY.

PATRONS:—The new firm greet you with a full determination to do their utmost in presenting a readable local newspaper. We shall make no boast or promise as to what we may accomplish, but prefer to let a generous public judge for themselves how well we shall succeed. We shall ever uphold those sacred principles of the Constitution of the United States as it now is, and shall not hesitate to point out corruption in the management of public affairs, wherever it shall come to our notice. In all things concerning local matters, we shall endeavor to act justly, though independently, and use the influence we may have for the greatest good to the greatest number. As our interests are identical with those of our generous patrons and our will is to live and let live, we have no fears for the future; on the contrary, we go forth with courage and hope that we shall receive that hearty encouragement which it has been the lot of our predecessors to receive for twenty years past. Again we greet you.

“S. E. GARDNER.”

On the 18th of February, 1874, Mr. Gardner leased his half of the paper to Mr. Booth and the latter became sole editor. The half he thus leased was, on the 8th of July, 1879, purchased by him; so that he then became sole proprietor. Mr. Booth has continued to edit and publish the Sentinel to the present time (1884).

THE SENTINEL OF TODAY.

The Sentinel is now (1884) a nine column paper, with a large circulation (the largest, indeed, of any in the county). Its size is 28x44 inches. It began its 33d volume with a new dress of burgeois and nonpareil. It is all printed at home. It carries from seventeen to eighteen columns of local advertising—mercantile, manufacturing and legal. It is the official county paper and has been for thirty years, without change. It is printed on a Fairhaven power press, and in mechanical point of excellence is not excelled by any office in the county. Its pages are always clean and bright. It is always free from slang or personalities. It labors for the general welfare of the people, and the especial interests of Green county and the city of Monroe. It is bold in exposing rascals and swindlers. It still holds to the faith of republicanism. It has one of the best equipped job offices to be found anywhere outside the larger cities and its pamphlet, mercantile and general printing is first-class. Mr. Booth is a terse writer and edits the Sentinel with marked ability.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE SENTINEL.

The following brief history of the Sentinel appeared in that paper Jan. 19, 1876:

"EDITOR SENTINEL:—Having noticed on your return envelopes that the Monroe Sentinel was 'established in 1848,' I thought it would be proper to give you a brief history of the foundation of your paper.

"It was on or about the 16th day of April, 1850, that there appeared in the village of Monroe, for the first time, a small six-column paper, 22x23 inches. It was christened the 'Green County Union.' This was the first newspaper printed in Green Co., Wis. The office of publication was in Francis Emerson's stone block, south of the court house. The Union was edited and published by J. W. Snow, who was also the sole proprietor of the concern. Mr. Snow was a gentleman of refined taste, and of extremely good habits, but of a very reticent nature; he made no effort to form an acquaintance with his patrons; he seemed rather to avoid them. Of course a man of such make up will scarcely succeed in the publication of a country newspaper. Mr. Snow was not a politician, he took no interest in political affairs, consequently the Green County Union was a 'neutral' organ on the political questions of its time. It was by hard work, close cutting, and good engineering that the editor managed to continue to publish the Union for one year, after which it ceased to have any existence. Thus ended the first newspaper published in Monroe.

"The type, press and fixtures of the defunct Green County Union were traded to J. W. Stewart, who brought into existence the "Monroe Sentinel," about the middle of May 1851. Mr. Stewart removed the office to the front room of the second story of A. Ludlow's brick block, immediately after taking possession of the same. Mr. Snow took for the payment of his press and fixtures an old, dilapidated dwelling house in Monroe, considered to be worth about $250. The Sentinel was the same size as the defunct Union.

"Mr. Stewart being an active politician of the whig faith, of course the Sentinel was an advocate of the principles enunciated by the leaders of that party in its day. The Sentinel was a lively local paper, and names were rapidly added to the subscription list. Its business also increased. But Mr. Stewart soon became weary of the duties and perplexities of a news paper manager, and, before he had worn the editorial harness six months, sold the office, together with its good will, to Rev. J. Walworth and O. D. Moulton. The new publishers at once changed the tone of the Sentinel. Now it advocated democratic principles. As the supporters of the Sentinel were mostly of the whig faith, this sudden change in its tone was severely felt by its publishers, in, the loss of many of its best paying patrons. From that time to the close of the first volume the Sentinel only just existed. It scarcely paid expenses. Its ownership and its editors changed two or three times during the second half of its first year. At the commencement of the second volume Rev. J. Walworth was the sole proprietor. He secured Israel Sanderson, from Galena, to take full charge of the mechanical department of the office. Mr. Sanderson was master of his profession; he was also a rich and racy writer. Together they made a good paper of the Sentinel; and from that time onward the Monroe Sentinel has ranked among the best local paper of Wisconsin. Mr. Sanderson was connected with the office about two years when he retired on account of poor health. George W. Tenney succeeded Mr. Sanderson in the mechanical department of the Sentinel. Soon after, Mr. Tenney, in company with N. L. Stout, purchased the office from Rev. J. Walworth; and in less than two years from the time he went into the office as foreman, George W. Tenney became the sole proprietor and publisher of the Monroe Sentinel. This was somewhat remarkable for one so young, as he was yet in minor years when he assumed the responsibilities in the publication of a first class country newspaper. It is proper to say the Sentinel did not lose any of its good qualities after it passed into Mr. Tenney's hands. He continued its editor and publisher till the summer of 1860, when he retired in favor of James Bintliff and E. E. Bryant, having sold the office to them. From 1860 to the present time the history of the Sentinel is familiar to all of its patrons.

"At about the commencement of its third volume, in 1853, the Sentinel was enlarged one column to the page, or was made a seven column paper. During the year 1857, or 1858, I am not certain which, Mr. Tenney enlarged the paper.

"It may not be out of place to say that your correspondent played 'devil' in the Green County Union office, commencing with the first issue of that paper; and was also a typo in the Sentinel office, 'off and on,' for the first three years of its existence.

Fraternally yours,

JOHN WALWORTH

was born at Big Sodus Bay, Wayne Co., N. Y., July 28, 1804. His ancestors emigrated from London, England, about the year 1765, some of whom located in Virginia, and others in Herkimer Co., N. Y. At the age of seventeen, John was sent to Norwich, in Chenango county, for the purpose of being educated, where he remained about six years. He afterwards engaged for several years in teaching school. During this time, he was married to Sylvia Lambson, of Hampden Co., Mass. He then moved to Michigan, where he entered upon the ministry as a profession. In 1840, Mr. Walworth went to Illinois and traveled four years as a missionary. In 1846, he removed to Monroe, Green Co., Wis., where he subsequently became proprietor and editor of the Monroe Sentinel, then democratic in politics. By constant labor, Mr. Walworth soon gained for his paper a large circulation for that day of newspapers, not only in Green but in, the counties adjoining. At this time the encroachments of the slave power upon the courts of justice on free territory, and the capture of both political parties in the enactment of the fugitive slave law, and the repeal of the Missouri Compromise had thrust upon the people very grave questions in regard to the fate of freedom in this country, or under our government in the near future. The Sentinel was the first democratic newspaper in Wisconsin that came out emphatically against the aggressions of the slave power, and the legislation of both democrats and whigs in the interest of slavery. On the 13th day of July, 1854, a people's convention met in Madison, without respect to previous affiliations; and Mr. Walworth, in consideration of the active part taken by him in the movement, was chosen its president. This convention organized the republican party in Wisconsin. In 1858, Mr. Walworth located at Richland Center—he having purchased the office of the Richland County Observer. He was afterward twice elected to the legislature from that county. He was made chaplain of the 43d regiment of Wisconsin, in the fall of 1864. Since the war, Mr. Walworth has resided at Richland Center.

DEATH OF MR. TENNEY.

[From the Sentinel of Dec. 14, 1864.]

George W. Tenney, for many years the publisher of this paper, and for the last three years engaged in the publishing business at McGregor, Iowa, died at his home in that city a few days since. His remains were brought to this village, and were, yesterday afternoon, buried with Masonic honors. We understand that his sickness originated in a hurt produced by excessive labor, while assisting to extinguish the fire in his office in September, 1863. Within a few weeks it assumed the form of quick consumption, which speedily terminated his existence.

was born Nov. 1, 1824, at Salterhebble, near Halifax, Yorkshire, England. All the school education he received was at the village school in England, before he was twelve years of age. When he was sixteen years of age his father emigrated to the United States, leaving him behind. The next year, in the spring of 1842, he came also. He soon after engaged in a woolen factory in New York State. In 1847 he was married; and soon after he commenced farming. Having accumulated $1,000 in the fall of 1851 he moved to Wisconsin, and purchased a farm in Green county, where he remained two years, after which he moved to Monroe. After a two years' residence in Monroe, he was employed as a book-keeper and cashier in a banking office at that place. In the fall of 1851 he was elected register of deeds of Green county. In the spring of 1860 he purchased a one-half interest in the Monroe Sentinel, and, one year later, he purchased the whole office. In 1862 he was commissioned to raise a company for the 22d regiment of volunteers. He then sold one-half of the Sentinel to E. E. Carr, who edited that paper during Gen. Bintliff's absence from the State in the field of battle. We refer our readers to the foregoing account of Wisconsin in the war for Gen. Bintliff's war record. It will suffice here to say that he won distinction on the battle-field. Soon after he returned from the war, he sold his one-half interest in the Monroe Sentinel, and started for Missouri with the intention of locating there; but, after traveling all over the State, he found society in so unsettled a condition, that he did not deem it wise to remove any family there, and returned to Monroe, where he purchased a book, stationery and wall paper business, and continued in it until July, 1870, when he purchased a one-half interest in the Janesville Gazette, and became the editor of that journal. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the Wisconsin Soldiers' Orphan Home, and president of the board. He was a delegate from Wisconsin to the National republican convention which assembled in Chicago in 1868, and nominated Grant, and again to the convention which re-nominated him in 1872 at Philadelphia.

CHARLES ASA BOOTH

was born in Covington, Tioga Co., Penn., Feb. 15, 1839, and is the son of George W. and Artemisia (Crandall) Booth, both of whom were of English descent, the former a native of Rhode Island and the latter of Pennsylvania. His father was a master builder by occupation, and erected many of the depots on the New York Central Railroad, and large blocks in various towns in the central and western' States. They had a family of eight boys and two girls, of whom five boys and one girl are living, Charles A. being the second child. At the age of six he was taken by his parents to western New York, where the family remained about eight years. Meantime he learned a variety of "trades," beginning with "watching crows" on a cornfield stump, from sunrise till sunset, for a compensation of two shillings per day; he also worked one season in a wool-carding and cloth-dressing establishment; for a time was assistant for a brick mason, but soon found the work more than he could endure. He was a precocious youth, and when not otherwise engaged, attended the district school, and, like other boys of his station in life, learned the three R's--'readin', 'ritin', 'rithmetic—but, as the sequel proves, his forte lay in the middle R, and he has since become great in the use of the pen. He always sought the company of those who were able to give information and help him in his intellectual growth. Fond of antiquities, he read Rollin's Ancient History, Josephus, Plutarch and Macaulay, Emerson's prose works, Lowell, Holmes, and other distinguished authors, before he reached the age of sixteen years. The family removed to Beloit, Wis., in 1853, and he has a very distinct recollection of the Fremont—Buchanan campaign of 1856, in which he rigorously espoused the cause of the former, and though he was not in a position to give his favorite a vote, yet he derived strength and political nourishment from the campaign that told in future times, and since then his candidates have always been successful. He attended school one or two seasons in Wisconsin and became a fair English scholar, and in the spring of 1858 he came to Monroe, and in August of the same year entered into an apprenticeship in the Monroe Sentinel printing office, which was then owned by the late G. W. Tenney, and of which he has since become sole proprietor and editor. He served three years as an apprentice, and at the end of his first year as a journeyman printer he was made foreman of the office; but the war was raging in the south, his country needed his services, patriotism triumphed over the tears of a mother and her younger children, of whom he was the support, and in July, 1862, he enlisted in the 22d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Col. Utley. At the organization of company G, to which he belonged, and which was commanded by James Bintliff, then one of the proprietors of the Sentinel, he was appointed by a unanimous vote, to the position of 2d sergeant; from this he was promoted to the rank of orderly, and thence to that of 2d lieutenant—all within a year. The 22d regiment was the first fully equipped and one of the best equipped and disciplined regiments that ever left Wisconsin. It was known during the earlier part of the war as the “nigger” regiment, being the first that absolutely refused to give up “contrabands” who came into the Union lines. At the battle of Thompson’s Station, near Franklin, Tenn., which occurred March 5, 1863, our subject received a severe wound by a rifle ball, and had his clothes riddled by bullets, but did not desert. His post for several hours, and while going to the rear narrowly escaped capture by the rebels. The enemy in this engagement outnumbered the Union forces ten to one. The lines of the latter were broken and scattered, many prisoners were made, and many others, alas! were left on the field. Nearly four months intervened before he was again fit for duty. In the autumn of 1863 he was commissioned 1st lieutenant of his company, and was subsequently appointed on the brigade staff (2d brigade, third division, 20 A. C.) as assistant aid-de-camp and provost marshal, and was with his brigade and regiment in all its subsequent battles. He participated in the famous Sherman campaign on Atlanta, and commanded in person the right flank of the line of skirmishers which first entered that city after the battle of Jonesboro. He was also at the battles of Resaca, Peach Tree Creek, Golgotha, Kenesaw, Culp’s House and the siege of Atlanta, besides numerous skirmishes, experiencing many narrow escapes, but never receiving a scratch after the first fight. He participated in Sherman’s famous march to the sea, and in the “fire and smoke” campaign through the Carolinas, took part in the battle of Averysboro, fought by a part of Sherman’s men with the army of Joe Johnston, which had confronted the Union troops, having disputed the march of the western army for more than two years. Thence the victors marched by way of Richmond, Va., to Washington, participating in the “grand review” by the President, and was mustered out in June, 1865. In July of the same year he bought of his former employer a half interest in the, Monroe Sentinel, the other half being bought by A. J. High, and for five years the business was conducted under the firm name of High & Booth. In December, 1870, Mr. High sold to S. E. Gardner, who, in 1872, leased his interest to Mr. Booth, and since then the Sentinel has been under his sole charge. It is one of the most ably conducted weeklies in the west. Its articles are spicy and readable, while it discusses questions of National and State policy with an ability and pungency that makes it either a powerful ally or a formidable opponent. It is the organ of the people, to whom its columns are always open. It is, furthermore, conducted on the highest moral principles, strenuously opposed to all shams or humbugs, and excluding from its columns all advertisements of an immoral or dishonorable character. Mr. Booth has participated in every political campaign since 1865, stumped the county every fall for the republican party, and is one of the most indefatigable and successful workers in the State. During the Rebellion he was a frequent correspondent of the Wisconsin State Journal and the Monroe Sentinel. He is not a member of any Church, and contributes his full share to religious and benevolent organizations. He is a total abstainer, and has been W. C. of the Good Templar organization of Monroe. He was also N. G. of the order of Odd Fellows, and has been representative in the grand lodge of the order. On the 10th of September, 1862, he married Elizabeth Gardner, daughter of Elijah T. Gardner, who was born in the first frame building erected in the village of Monroe, which now has a population of about 4,000. Mrs. Booth is a lady of genuine good sense and superior cultivation, to whose advice and influence her husband is indebted for much of his success in life.

THE JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRAT.

This paper was commenced under the auspices of George C. Baker as editor, Aug. 14, 1856. The following is his

SALUTATORY.

"We this day present to the public the first number of the Jeffersonian Democrat. In establishing this journal and assuming the control thereof, we but act in compliance with the expressed will and wishes of a large number of the residents of Monroe and the surrounding country. This portion of the community have long felt the want of a democratic newspaper in their midst, and it is to supply that want and to furnish a suitable channel for the expression of the opinions of the democracy, as well as for the purpose of keeping them advised of the various political movements and organizations of the day, which has induced us to spread our sheet before the people. It would be well, perhaps, to mention that our own feelings have had considerable influence in prompting us to this step. The principles for which we shall contend are as dear to us as the apple of our eye, and we shall advocate those principles with all the love and ardor of an amateur. As stated, in our prospectus (Which we publish in another column) the course of the Democrat, while under our control, shall be thoroughly and uncompromisingly democratic; and, as it will not, we presume be considered out of place, in this connection, we shall indulge in a brief survey of the ground occupied by the democracy in the political contest now waging. Questions of great magnitude are at the present agitated among us, they will continue to be agitated for some time, and their discussion and final decision must involve consequences of the most serious nature. It is the duty, therefore, of every citizen to prepare his mind that he may be enabled to decide properly upon them. When the elements of disorder are gathering in their strength for the overthrow of our political and domestic interests, it is time for all good men to rally to the rescue of sound principles. Such, we conceive, are those embodied in the democratic creed.

"The present position of parties is one that calls for calm and dispassionate deliberation on the part of every one who feels that he has an interest in the well-being of our common country; and we shall, therefore, at this time endeavor to portray faithfully, yet succinctly, the most prominent land-marks and guide-stars which have always, and do still, distinguish between the genuine Jeffersonian democracy, and the base counterfeits which unscrupulous politicians aided by a venal and hireling press are trying to foist upon the masses.

"In the first place, then, the democratic party believes that no more power should be delegated than is imperiously required to produce the good intended, because history clearly shows that the tendency of power is to exceed its proper limits, and that assumption and usurpation on the part of rulers have always been destructive to free governments. Again, one of the most prominent articles of its faith is that recognizing the doctrine of State's Rights, which doctrine forbids all interferences on the part of Congress with the domestic policy or municipal institutions of the States, thereby insuring the stability of the Union by avoiding the exciting causes of danger. The democracy believe that in construing the Constitution of the United States, that no jurisdiction should be extended beyond the obvious meaning of the language in which it is conveyed. They believe, furthermore, that congressional interposition with regard to the Territories of the United States should be confined to the organization of governments, leaving untouched the domestic relations, whether of husband and wife, of parent and child, of master and servant, or of any other of the social conditions of life; maintaining that the people of the Territories like those of the States, should be left perfectly untrammelled, to decide in their own way upon all questions relative to the domestic policy and domestic affairs within the limits of the Territories. In other words, they leave with the general government all the powers which are granted to it, and claim for the people the remainder. They regard slavery as local and municipal, and not as National in its character; and, entertaining this opinion, they do not recognize the right of our National legislature to interfere with the institution. They contend, also, for an equality of the States, holding that every section of the Union has an equal right and interest in the general government and to the National domain or territory.

“In regard to our foreign policy—to adopt the language of our noble standard bearer in this campaign—it ought ever—and will be if the democracy triumph—to be based upon the principles of doing justice to all nations, and requiring justice from them in return. Having thus briefly, and truly, though somewhat hastily, glanced at democratic principles, we now ask every candid reader of our journal if they are not such as they can readily, nay heartily subscribe to. Are they not clear, plain common sense stand-points? There can be but one response from every American heart. They, and they alone, are the principles which have secured to us the prosperity that we now enjoy, and they are the only ones through the medium of which we can hope to retain the blessings of civil and religious liberty. In conclusion, we tender the hand of fraternal fellowship to our brethren of the quill throughout the State and country, hoping and trusting that even the heat of party warfare may not lead us astray from the paths of courtesy and gentlemanly conduct.”

The Jeffersonian Democrat lived only to April 1857.

VARIOUS MONROE PAPERS.

In the fall of 1857, the Independent Press, edited by S. P. Condee and E. C. Moulton, arose from the ashes of the Democrat. Mr. Moulton withdrew from the Press in January of the next year; and three or four months later, Mr. Condee sold it to a gentleman who transformed it into the Albany Times.

The next venture in the way of a newspaper, was that of N. L. Slant, who published the State Rights a year or two, beginning in the spring of 1859. The next was that of A. W. Potter, who, in January, 1870, started the Green County Republican. In the fall of 1872, F. J. Mills started the Liberal Press, which in September, 1873, was consolidated with the Republican, the new paper being known, at first, as the Republican and Press, but latterly as the Green County Reformer. It was edited by A. W. Potter and George H. King, until January, then by Mr. Mills until April, then by G. J. Patton until January, 1875; afterwards by I. T. Carr, with whom William Bullock was associated the first year.

THE SUN.

A younger brother of G. R South, having got possession of an amateur novelty press and sufficient old type, rules, etc., to publish a small three column paper, an office was fitted up in the loft of an unused shop, and it was resolved by these brothers, to publish every two weeks, a paper, without advertisements, to be called the Sun. The first number was issued Saturday, Jan. 23, 1875, with the following INTRODUCTORY.

"Well, we are going to run a peaceable little Sun—very peaceable. The immense interests of this great and glorious village—commerce and trade, hog and hominy, pork and beans, corn and its ethereal essence, the fair and the fair sex, accidents, irregularities, circuses, weddings, balls, and a little genuine slander thrown in occasionally, as a gentle stimulant seasoning. Gentle reader! Dost thou love slander and scandal? Dost thou revel in human foibles and frailties? Dost thou delight in frost-bites and back-bites and 'sich' like? Dost thou sometimes glory in human imperfections? If yea, we will feed you on some sweet morsels. Art thou sick, or hip-shotten, or colicky, until you feel that earth is full of sorrows that Heaven cannot heal and you want to be an angel, and with the angels stand? Scan our fresh and fragrant columns attentively, and, perhaps you'll find a balm for every ill—a weal for every woe. The Sun is a public functionary and shines on all and for all alike. We intend to cater and caper for the 'dear people.' The 'body politic' is a menagerie, and the different beasts require, and must be fed on different foods. Our 'Bill of Fare is before you. If you like it, board with us, and pay as you go, (price two cents) and when you get tired, quit. This is a free country. "The genial Sun does not propose to dapple in the reeking maelstrom of politics at all, It graciously leaves all the grave and momentous political questions of the day to the profoundly soporific pen of our great Boss Bourbon and finance philosopher—whose 'living lyre' has once more awoke to ecstasy, after a dismal and protracted silence, and opened his sluices to deluge a long suffering people with his 'chromatic,' glittering incongruities. No, the Sun will take no politics in his'n, but will be independent and outspoken in all things, and neutral in nothing.

"With malice toward none; with charity for all, and firm in the right, as far as the sinuosity's of our original sin will permit us to see the right, we intend to express our opinion impartially and boldly, and pursue the even (or uneven, according to circumstances), tenor of our way, without fear or favor. There are persons whom it is perfectly safe to 'go for' at any time. We desire it to be distinctly understood that to that species of hair-pins we do not belong. Our 'composing-sticks' will be double-leaded as accession may require, and we flatter ourselves that we have had sufficient practice in the 'art preservative of arts,' to use them with skill and precision. In the use of the 'shooting-stick,' our devil considers himself proficient, and if any one has a hankering to have his 'form justified,' 'locked up' in a neat-fitting rosewood overcoat and 'sent to press,' be can he accommodated with neatness and dispatch, and on short notice, and—'that's all there is of this business.'"

Money not coming in very fast, the young brother who did the mechanical work on the paper grew discouraged and finally retired from the "company" leaving George to publish the paper alone. The office was removed to a much more eligible location near to the public square, where, unaided by any one, the paper was published regularly by George every two weeks. The first number issued after the change was made, contained the following

“TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME, GREETING.

“The Sun Printing Company, having collapsed and been dissolved by the ‘devil’ forsaking us, we have, after an infinite amount of patient meditating, cogitating, ruminating, thinking, studying, pondering and soliloquizing, finally settled down to the settled determination to run our little concern alone, according to the dictates of our own conscience and our true inwardness, as guaranteed to us by the grand palladium of our liberties and civil rights, Andy Johnson, and play our own ‘devil’ to the best of our ability. And now let the winds that sweep the prairies carry the glad tidings to afar, that owing to the fact that Christopher Columbus discovered America—in consequence of which George (Washington) couldn’t tell a lie, and to the additional fact that it has been as cold as blazes everyday that it has not snowed for the past thirteen months, and consequently there is not much ‘bloom upon the rye,’ to speak of, and the corn is not waving, Annie dear,’ by a long shot, we decided to issue semi-monthly this paper for the sole benefit of this fodder-stricken community, so that the people who have found by bitter experience that farming is an honest way to get a hard living, can store their minds with useful and ornamental knowledge, while bewailing their unfortunate condition. The ends we aim at are our ‘country’s, our altars and the greenbacks of our sires.” This edition is gracefully contributed to this generous, confiding community, like salvation, without money, without price, and, we will add, without passing a contribution box, etc., etc.”

The little paper became immensely popular, and was a success from the start, and being confined principally to local and society matters it soon had a large bona fide paying subscription list. The publication of the paper was continued regularly twice a month—with the exception of a month or over in the heat of summer, when its publication was suspended while the editor was taking a trip somewhere—for six years, until the year 1881.

About a year after the death of his father, which occurred in the spring of 1880, George, foreseeing that the support of his mother and sister would in all likelihood, eventually devolve upon him, resolved to make journalism the more serious and responsible business than it had been, and he therefore went to Chicago and purchased a Washington hand press and the necessary type and material to publish a seven-column folio weekly paper. Under circumstances of the most depressing and discouraging nature, and with well-founded misgivings as to the success of the venture—a few democrats becoming alarmed at the prospect of having another republican paper here (it being assumed that the Sun was to be run in the interests of that party) made a desperate and successful effort to start a democratic paper ahead of the Sun with the avowed purpose of crowding the paper to the wall. And so the Gazette was started, the editor, a worthy but impecunious young man having been induced by flattering promises to remove his printing office from Jefferson, in this State, to Monroe. But the editor of the Sun had gone too far to think for a moment of abandoning his project, and although it was almost “rushing in where angels feared to tread,”—starting another paper in a city the size of Monroe where there were two English and one German paper already established—yet he went courageously to work fitting up his office, etc., and on the morning of Saturday, Nov. 26, 1881, the first number of the weekly Monroe Sun was given to the public, the editor making his salutatory in the following words, addressed

TO THE PUBLIC.

“With this issue the Sun makes its first appearance as a weekly newspaper, and in an enlarged form, and takes hearty pleasure in presenting its greetings to all its old friends and patrons, and to all the new ones as would like to try our board. It introduces itself to the public with the determination to win support.

"It is quite unnecessary, we presume, for us to make any announcement in relation to the political affiliations of the Sun in the good hereafter. It will, however, be reasonably independent in politics, neutral in nothing, and fair in all things. We shall be bound by no clique and no party, general or local, and the dictates and behests of leaders, self-appointed or otherwise, will, as such, have no influence with us whatever; but we shall on all subjects of public interest, express our views unbiased by the dictates of any power save our own opinions and a desire to aid, so far as in us lies, public well-being. No caucus nomination or party orders will, as such, receive from us any obedience whatever. We believe neither in the cry of 'party, not men,' nor in that of 'men, not party,' but we believe in 'men with principles.' In local affairs whenever any matter of considerable interest is at issue, we shall be guided by such interest. When no such interest is at stake we shall choose the best men for our support, or where no choice is warranted, we shall remain neutral. It is quite possible that we may make occasionally, mistakes in judgment, but it shall be our aim to make as few as possible, and if made, to acknowledge them freely when discovered. No party owns us, and no clique controls us, and what we do will be done in what we believe to be the interest of all. This much we promise, and so far as we redeem this promise, shall we, in our opinion, have succeeded or failed. Failure or success of our own views or candidates will mean to us as editor, little, but a neglect to labor earnestly for those views and candidates would mean to us a complete and disgraceful failure. We shall not thus fail.

"The Sun will be specially devoted to encouragement of all commendable public enterprises and interests and a faithful chronicler of matters relating to the local affairs of this town and county. "It will open its columns at all times to courteous communications, irrespective of political, social, or class distinctions.

"Special efforts will be made to continue the Sun as well-deserving the regards and confidence of the generous public and as welcome a visitor into the household as it has been as a semi-monthly.

"The worth of a journal is to be ascertained as it represents well or ill, the best interests of the people. The Sun, therefore, asks the public to judge it by its future; and as it deserves so may it be rewarded."

The first year of the publication of the weekly Sun was not encouraging; but the paper struggled along, money going out in a constant and never-failing stream and nothing but promises and great expectations" coming in. However, the editor persevered and now, at the commencement of the 3d volume, he begins to realize the fruition of his fondest hopes in finding himself at the head of a prosperous and popular weekly newspaper.

GEORGE REPPERT SOUTH.

oldest son of John and Sophia C. Reppert South, was born in the picturesque little city of Brownsville, situated on the banks of the romantic Monongahela river, about thirty miles above Pittsburg, Penn., March 23, 1841. His father, after a hard two years struggle to establish himself in his chosen field of labor, that of carriage building, removed in 1842 to the city of Allegheny, opposite Pittsburg, where the clear, pellucid waters of the Allegheny river joins Monongahela's murky tide to form the noble Ohio river. Here a much more lucrative and more extended field opened to the struggling but rising young mechanic. A few years of close application, endowed, as he was, with keen business capabilities and an indomitable energy that could not be discouraged, and he began to realize the fruition of his fondest hopes and aspirations, by finding himself the independent possessor of a large carriage manufactory, employing scores of skilled mechanics, and with a trade extending far into the southern States, in addition to the large and constantly increasing home patronage. His fame as a builder of superior vehicles increased at home and abroad as the years came and went, and when the first ominous mutterings of the coming storm were heard, which eventually culminated in the great Rebellion, "South's carriages" was the synonym of all that was excellent and beautiful in those vehicles. In the meantime the family continued to increase until ten children, Six sons and four daughters were gathered beneath his roof-tree, all of whom are still living, excepting the youngest, a daughter, who died in infancy. In this city George's early life was passed, with about the usual unimportant events common to the boyhood of all, attending the public, and occasionally select or private schools, until the spring of 1853, in the twelfth year of his age, when the almost fatal event occurred which resulted, finally, in his losing a leg, and undoubtedly changing the whole tenor of his future life. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to go into details as to the causes which led to the above misfortune. Suffice it to say, that with the thoughtlessness and rashness of childhood, he plunged into the cold waters of the Allegheny river while overheated from running, and received a severe chill. The effects of this indiscretion manifested themselves the morning following, when upon attempting to rise out of bed, he found himself unable to stand, in consequence of the intense pain such exertion subjected him to. This was the beginning of a long, tedious languishing upon a bed of pain for two and a half years, when, by having a leg amputated above the knee, he was soon able to hobble about on crutches and thus liberated from his weary confinement. Up to the beginning of George's illness, it had always been his desire and intention to follow mechanical pursuits, for which he already displayed a natural aptitude full of promise of future excellence in whatever branch he might devote his energies, but losing a leg put an effectual veto upon his engaging in any mechanical pursuit, and so from his fifteenth to his nineteenth year he applied himself diligently and studiously to acquire as thorough and practical a common school education as circumstances would permit, attending for this purpose a select private school for boys, and this was all the schooling he received. The eventful spring of 1860 found George in charge of a carriage repository in Pittsburg, in the interest of his father, who, finding his southern trade liable to be cut off, began to give more of his attention to home trade. Adjoining the repository was a book and variety store, in which George served a clerkship, which proved very advantageous in giving him a drill and confidence, and what was still more acceptable, some money of his own earning. The knowledge of business thus acquired enabled him at a later period to embark in business on a small scale by himself, and when, in the fall of 1864, his father finding his business in the south entirely destroyed by the war and, no signs, at that time, indicating the near close of the fratricidal strife, he disposed of all his real estate, some of it at a great sacrifice, in Allegheny, and with the family, George alone excepted, removed to Wisconsin to pass the remainder of his days. George, as above stated, remained behind to carry on his business, selling jewelry, varieties, etc., which had just begun to prove highly remunerative. But so assiduously did he devote himself to business that his nervous system began to suffer and dyspepsia intervening his health broke down completely. He grew gradually worse in health until the spring of 1870, when he was reluctantly compelled to close up his business, now very profitable, and go home to die, as he then firmly believed. This step proved the turning point in his life and changed its whole course and undoubtedly saved him from a premature grave. The pure, invigorating and bracing air of Wisconsin, combined with the change of scene and living, wrought so beneficially upon his enervated system and debilitated digestive organs, that quite restored him to his pristine health and hopeful spirits. Two years subsequent he began to take a lively interest in literary pursuits, and got his first most needed drill in the use of the pen, laying the foundation for his future success in the field of journalism. His first feeble efforts were somewhat satirical criticisms and burlesques of the literary effusions of some local scribes who had got into a jangle upon religion, and were carrying on a wordy warfare in the public prints, and, although sent anonymously to an opposition sheet, were deemed of sufficient merit as to impel the editor to give the articles insertion, instead of consigning them to the waste basket, the general fate of anonymous communications. Thus encouraged he put forth still greater efforts, and his contributions on other topics, published over the nom de plume of "I. U. N." attracted so much attention as to induce the editor, himself, to ask in his paper, "who was this literary feller?" He at length was persuaded to take charge of the local columns of the Liberal Press, in which capacity he did good work, as his spicily written "locals" and pungent paragraphs attested. He continued to act as local editor, more for the love of it and the discipline it gave than what money there was in it, until the paper, for the third time, changed ownership and I. T. Carr took control. George took this opportunity to retire from a position where the pay was not near commensurate with the amount of labor entailed. But having once tasted of the sweets of publicity, he could not be content to pass much of his time in obscurity. He thereupon, in connection with a younger brother, as already explained, commenced the publication of the Sun.

THE MONROE GAZETTE.

A paper was started in Monroe, by J. W. Odell, called the Gazette, on the 4th day of November, 1881. This periodical was first started in Jefferson, Jefferson Co., Wis., and then continued in Monroe; so that the first number issued in Monroe was "No. 15, Vol. III," instead of "No. 1, Vol. I." In issuing the first number in Monroe, Mr. Odell explains his views and determination in the following:

SALUTATORY.

"In commencing the publication of a democratic paper in Green county, we are aware of the difficulties that we shall be called upon to encounter, therefore we realize at the beginning that to make the Gazette a success as a permanent institution, we must have the hearty co-operation of every independent thinker who acts up to his convictions in this country. This will induce the great majority of those who call themselves democrats and a portion of those who go by the party name republican, and quite a number of those who belong to other parties.

"All the people of this county we argue, will agree that an independent democratic paper is needed here. Believing this to be the case ourselves, we come here for the purpose of publishing such a paper. We desire also to state in this connection, that our paper is not to be built up on the ruins of others that have gone before us, neither has it any connection with any democratic paper heretofore published in this county. We bring our own press with us and start out on our own hook as the saying is, hoping to merit the patronage of men of all parties and creeds.

"Our columns will be open to fair and free discussion so far as we may have the space, but not open for the purpose of slander and abuse of others. We shall endeavor from time to time, to set forth true democratic doctrines and principles, and uphold so far as we are able to do so, honest government. We do not deem it necessary because we publish a democratic paper that we shall be in favor of every person and idea called by the name democrat. Still we shall finally hold to the cardinal principles of the great National democratic party, and at the same time act in all these matters as becomes an independent citizen.

"We therefore without saying more under this head, ask the co-operation of the people generally, while we give them as good a paper in return as we are able under the circumstances to get up. In conclusion, we desire to say that we will do our part in helping to build up the business interests of this community, while our paper shall be conducted so as to merit a place in every household and be a welcome visitor to every family in the community who favor us with their patronage."

The Gazette, when first started in Green county, was an eight column quarto. The editor, in his first editorial, emphatically declares that he is "in favor of free trade; or, what is the same thing, a tariff for revenue only." In 1883 the paper was cut down to a six column quarto and the name changed to the Monroe Gazette. It is ably conducted.

J. W. ODELL

was born in Montreal, Canada, Aug. 27, 1848. He came to Wisconsin in 1852 and settled in Evansville, Rock county. He remained there until 1859, when he removed to Jefferson, Jefferson Co., Wis. He lived there until June, 1872. He served a regular apprenticeship in the Jefferson Banner from 1862 to 1865. Mr. Odell occupied the position of baggage-master at that city in the employ of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company for four years prior to June 1, 1872, at which time he went on the road as brakeman, moving to Janesville, Wis. He continued in this employment for eight months, then took a job as fireman, which position he filled until March 13, 1876, at which time he severed his connection with the railroad company by mutual consent and moved down to Grant Park, Kankakee Co., Ill., a small place fifty miles south of Chicago on the C. & E. I. Railroad, where he first started a paper called the Grant Park News, a small sheet 12x16 inches. The first issue was on July 4, 1876. This paper he continued in that small form until Aug. 11, 1877, when he enlarged it to a four column quarto and published that until June 1, 1879, when he went to Jefferson, Wis., and commenced publishing the Independent. This paper he published to July 24, 1881, when he moved the office to Monroe and commenced the publication of the Gazette, a democratic organ, mention of which has just been made.

GREEN COUNTY HERALD.

The Green County Herald, a German paper published at Monroe, Green Co., Wis., was established by B. Loewenbach Sept. 15, 1877. It is published every Wednesday, has four pages, size 26x40 inches, and is independent in politics.

R. Loewenbach, of Monroe, was born Oct. 9, 1853, in the city of Milwaukee. He received an academic education and is by profession a printer, being engaged in his father's printing office. In 1877 he came to Monroe, and for the last seven years has been proprietor and publisher of the German paper, the Green County Herald, which position he holds up to this date (1884).

THE JUDEAN.

On the 13th day of July, 1877, was issued No. 1 of Vol. I of the Judean at Juda, by the "Judean Publishing Company." It was an exceedingly diminutive sheet of four pages with only two columns to the page. "It is not the intention," say those who started the paper, "of those who have it in charge, we may safely say, to make it a money making institution, but merely to collect and diffuse throughout the community such items of news as may be of general interest to the public." However, in the third issue is found among other matters of an editorial character, the following: "The observing ones who look over this number of the Judean will notice that it contains at the head of this column a small but important line reading thus: 'Terms, fifty cents a year.'" The circulation was thirty-six.

During the latter part of February, 1878, "some indefatigable worker in the lower depths of arch-deviltry" notified the post office department at Washington that the Judean was only

“an advertising dodge,” and thereupon the Judean Publishing Company were notified that their paper could no longer pass through the mails at paper rates. The result was the discontinuance of the Judean under that name and the establishing of a newspaper that could not be in any way considered as “an advertising dodge.” “This is the last issue,” say the publishers, March 31, 1878, “of our paper under its present form. Next week we shall not print a paper, but shall prepare for the publication the week following of a larger sheet (eight pages of four columns each). The subscription price will be $1 per annum.” So, on the 3d day of April, 1878, No. 1, Vol. I was begun of

THE LATEST NEWS.

This paper was published by J. B. Stair and H. C. Witmer. “We herewith present,” say the editors in their salutatory, “our readers with the first number of the Latest News. We shall not urge you who have not already done so, to subscribe for it, but every one may by this feel himself especially and personally invited to favor us with their name and $1 for a year’s subscription.”

On the 19th of July, 1879, Mr. Stair retired from the paper and Mr. Witmer became (and still is) the sole editor and proprietor. “Having assumed,” says the editor, “the responsibility of continuing the News, our name appears at the head of this column. We take charge of it feeling as though we would not continue it long, not being equal to the situation”—but the paper “still lives” and is in a flourishing condition, having a large circulation, and an extensive advertising patronage. It is edited with much ability.

MONTICELLO ITEMS.

The Monticello Items was published for a brief period, in Monticello, Green county; beginning in 1874, by Messrs. Stair & Lane, who were both editors and proprietors. The paper was neutral in politics. It continued about one year. Although a small sheet, it had quite a local circulation;

however, it did not pay, and, as already explained was soon discontinued. Its editors were both young men—medical students.

HENRY CLAYTON WITMER, was born in Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., son of David and Catharine Witmer. He was two years old when the family moved to Juda, Wis. When he became old enough, he went to the village school, also in later years assisted his father in a drug store till the spring of 1873, when he went to Monroe to clerk in a dry goods store. After staying there fifteen months, he again returned to Juda, and re-entered the village school. In the beginning of 1876 he went to R. C. Spencer’s Business College, Milwaukee, from which institution he graduated in May, returned home, and after his father died in June of the same year he assumed his business, which consisted in making loans and the business that would necessarily be connected. He also settled his father’s estate. He was appointed notary public when he was twenty-one, also chosen a member of the school board. In partnership with Dr. J. B. Stair, a village physician, he started a small newspaper called the Judean, in July, 1877, but the paper was enlarged and called the Latest News, in March, 1878. His partner retiring in March, 1879, Mr. Witmer assumed the responsibility of editor and publisher alone. In the spring of 1882, in company with four business men of Monroe, he helped to start “The Citizens’ Bank,” of Monroe, of which he was chosen vice-president. During his stay in Juda, he took quite an interest in keeping up the life and growth of the village. He was one of the foremost in building its Town Hall. His habits are strictly temperate, he belongs to no Church; in politics is a republican. He is a bicyclist—no further comment.

Joseph M. Witmer, born of the same parents in Juda, Wis., Aug. 27, 1858, went to the village school until the fall of 1874, when he went to school in Monroe, and in the fall of 1875 went to the State University at Madison, entering the preparatory department; remained at Madison three years, and in the spring of 1878 passed examinations at Cincinnati for admission to Howard University; entered the class of 1882 at Howard, but did not like the change, so returned home; returned to Howard College, however, in the fall of 1879, and joined the class of 1883, with which he graduated. He started in business with his brother in the fall of 1883. Witmer Brothers' business is mostly an outgrowth of M. H. C. Witmer's business, and although it has been quite extensive, amounting to $500,000 a year, it nevertheless will be closed up in the fall of 1884, owing to a removal of the two members of the firm to Los Angeles, Cal.

DAVID WITMER

born in Londonderry township, Lebanon Co., Penn., Oct. 1, 1813, is a son of John and Hannah Witmer, both natives of Lebanon Co., Penn. The family is of Swiss descent, some five or six generations since. The subject of this sketch lived at home with his parents on the farm until he was about eighteen years of age, when he went to Palmyra, a post village not far distant to enter the mercantile business as a clerk in a dry goods store. In speaking of his financial start in life in later years, he was heard to remark that he clerked for $2 per month the first year, and at the end of the year was $36 in debt. How long he remained at Palmyra as a clerk is not definitely known by the writer; but it must have been about 1837 or thereabout that he went to Aaronburg, Center Co., Penn., to engage in a like capacity in a dry goods store belonging to his uncle. At this time he also used to buy cattle in Ohio for his uncle and ship them east. Having saved a little money, he resolved in the spring of 1842 to take a trip to the west, and together with a friend he purchased lands where now stands the city of Burlington, Iowa. But at that time Burlington consisted of but a few houses and the prospect of its great growth was not promising. The taxes on the land being great and the tenant careless, the land was sold. In the year of 1846, in partnership with John Harper, now of Monroe, Wis., he bought out his uncle's store and the business was carried on under their names until 1852, when Mr. Harper retired. Selling out in the spring of 1855, he again went west, purchased lands upon which the southern portion of Juda now stands, and in the fall of the same year he moved to Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., where he purchased a half interest in a dry goods store. Here he remained till the spring of 1858, when he removed to Juda, Wis. During the years 1858 and 1865, inclusive, he was busily engaged in the general merchandise business, principally in dry goods, also in grain. His business was quite extensive, amounting to $100,000 or upward a year. He built several large buildings and being one of the early settlers of Juda, he took a deep interest and contributed in no small degree to its growth and development. In 1865 he retired from active business and devoted most of his attention to his lands in the vicinity of Juda, but in 1870 he again entered the mercantile business, having purchased a drug store in which he thought he might interest his two sons enough to keep them out of mischief. In the winter of 1875—6 he sold out again and the next spring he prepared to go east for the purpose of trying to regain his health and restore, if possible, his shattered constitution, but he became enfeebled and a severe attack of the palpitation of the heart coming upon him, he was obliged to take his bed, from which he never arose. He died June 25, 1876, and his body was buried in the Juda cemetery. Mr. Witmer was married, March 12, 1846, to Catharine Corman, of Miles township, Center Co. Penn., by Rev. William Yereck. They had seven children, three of whom died in infancy, leaving two daughters and two sons, all grown—Mary Agnes, born August 12, 1848, now Mrs. Samuel Lewis, of Monroe; Anna Victoria, born Sept. 2, 1854; Henry Clayton, born Aug. 25, 1856; Joseph M. Witmer, born Aug. 27, 1858; Mr. Witmer's characteristics in brief are, straight-forward and careful in business transactions, successful, temperate, industrious, benevolent, unassuming, generous. public spirited, friend of the people in general, especially of the poor, ardent republican, never aspired to office, but held quite a number, mostly township offices. Do not know that he belonged to any Church, yet took an interest in all religious societies, and generally aided ed them (financially).

THE BRODHEAD INDEPENDENT.

The Independent was established the first week in March, 1860, by a joint stock company of which I. F. Mack, one of the original proprietors of the village, was president. The stockholders failed to respond and the paper virtually was the property of Mr. Mack from the outset.

The entire outfit of the States Rights, which had been published at Monroe, was purchased at a low price and removed to Brodhead; and the first number of the new paper was issued. On the 1st of November, 1864, Mr. Mack made arrangements by which his son I. F. Mack, Jr., (now of the Sandusky, Ohio, Register) became proprietor, while he still retained the position of editor. This continued until Aug. 10, 1866, when the following notice appeared in the paper:

"TO THE PUBLIC.

"From this date this paper will be under the sole control, both in its editorial and business management of myself. I. F. Mack, Sr., for the past five and a half years the editor, has withdrawn from the concern.

I. F. MACK, JR.
August 9, 1866."

On the 31st of the same month, Mr. Mack felt called upon to publish the following notice:

"In answer to numerous inquiries, I wish it distinctly understood that no one whatever has anything to do with the editorial or business control of the Independent save myself. No other person has any voice in the management of this journal, or one dollar's interest in it.

I. F. MACK, JR."

On Tuesday, Nov. 17, 1868, Mr. Mack announced the sale of the paper in the following

VALEDICTORY.

"With this issue of the Brodhead Independent, I cease to be its editor and publisher, having sold the office and newspaper establishment to D. W. Tyrrell and E. O. Kimberley.

"Four years ago I became the publisher and proprietor, and two years ago last August took upon myself its sole editorial management. When I entered the office, Nov. 1, 1864, the business had run down and the office was not paying its expenses. With what business tact I had, I proceeded to make it pay, which it did the first year about $1,100. Since the close of the first year, the business has steadily increased and it now pays as well as any country paper in the State. So much for the business.

"Believing in radical political principles, my efforts since becoming the editor have been directed to making the paper thoroughly radical. With what measure of success the files of the paper will show. Manhood suffrage, universal liberty, the right of royal men to rule where traitors had misruled, the honorable and just payment of the debts of the Nation, have been advocated in these columns without fear or favor. Whatever I have said on those and kindred subjects cannot be unsaid, nor would I unwrite one word the editorial columns have contained for the past two and one-half years.

"In local matter I have attempted to deal justly with all men, and have never as a local editor knowingly injured the feelings of any man.

"Believing that literary honesty is the brightest ornament of an editor's life, I have never to my knowledge failed to give proper credit for every line taken from an exchange, and have uniformly preferred to write as best I could rather than gain a fictitious reputation by stealing from my neighbors.

"For many kind words from many kind friends, I am a thousand times grateful.

"For my successors I ask the hearty good will and generous support of all my old patrons and many new ones. My successors are well known to the people of this village and county. D. W. Tyrrell has been nearly four years the foreman of the office, is a thorough practical printer, a straight forward, honorable man, and a far better writer than the average of country editors. During all our intimate connection, for during all these years he has been a member of my family, we have had no unpleasant word. E. O. Kimberley was for years a resident here, learned the trade in the old Reporter office, and worked for me some months. Modest, unassuming but straight forward and prompt; Mr. Kimberley will bring to the business a determination to make the paper better than it has been under my management. It need not be said that both these gentlemen are radical republicans, and will never fail to advocate the radical policy of the republican party. In their hands I feel safe in leaving the Independent, for the prosperity of which and political soundness of which I shall ever pray.

"I shall go into another paper not far distant, as soon as my business here is settled up.

"To the business men of Brodhead, and to the people of the town and country about, who have encouraged me in my business, with these last words as your editor, I bid you farewell.

I. F. MACK,

"Kimberley & Tyrrell's salutatory was published Nov. 27, 1868. The partnership lasted until December, 1869, when Mr. Kimberley took full charge and so continued until July, 1873, when he sold to Willis J. Stone and Charles M. Morse. On July 2, 1873, Mr. Morse published the following:

"NOTICE TO OUR PATRONS.

"With this issue of the Independent our labors cease as editor and proprietor. During our connection with this journal or nearly two years we have endeavored to do our duty and labor for the best interest of our village; but in looking back we realize that errors have been made. We sincerely regret that it is thus, and trust that the people will 'forgive and forget.'

"To our many friends who have encouraged us both by liberal patronage and kind words we return our gratitude.

"Our successor E. O. Kimberley, formerly editor of the Independent needs no commendation from us. We bespeak for him a liberal patronage.

"With these few words we close, bidding our friends farewell, and again thanking them for kindness in the past.

Most Respectfully,

CHARLES M. MORSE."

In taking charge of the Independent, Mr. Kimberley published an historical salutatory in these words:

SALUTATORY.

"After an absence of two years we return to our former charge, as proprietor of the Brodhead Independent. During the interval we note some very trying changes,—in the world at large, and more particularly in domestic life, applicable to our self. In this will readily be seen the allusion to the sickness coming upon us and which well-nigh ended our days. Details of the same, herewith, would be superfluous, as all, perhaps, are cognizant of the fact. We were tenderly brought home after the critical time declared past, not to die, but to be nursed in convalescency; and today we feel grateful for a degree of good health, such as was never our lot before to enjoy. To some, our return may seem strange, and others may regard it alike with our self. Brodhead is and has been our home for many years past, and need we say it was with a view of being at home that prompted the change on our part. There are some very desirable features connected with city life, and there are other features of an unpleasant nature. The quiet of the country, the never ending confusion of the city, and vice versa are contrasts of great magnitude, and a sudden change from one to the other seems strange indeed, and for a time almost beyond the powers of endurance. From country to city, our experiences, physically, as related, were anything but pleasant. Such a change from a two-years' sojourn in the city, we would very reluctantly anticipate.

"In 1857, we took up our abode in Brodhead, and since then have been a citizen a greater part of the time. Perhaps it may be truthfully said that we are favorably impressed with the place, hence our departure at different times and subsequent return. These occurrences have been frequent. Between ourself and the Independent we note the following: In the month of February, 1861, a stock company, with I. F. Mack, Esq., president, and W. W. Shepard, (afterward killed at the battle of Pea Ridge), secretary, purchased the press and material of the States Rights, owned and published at our county seat, by F. Stout, Esq., and removed the same to Brodhead. Out of that material our hands set the first type on the Independent. These were the trying times of a Nation's uprising in armed conflict. Treason was asserting itself day by day, until the "first gun" was fired at Sumter.

"We well remember the day when this dreadful evidence of war came upon us. A messenger came to the office in great haste with the intelligence, and with patriotic hearts and patriotic songs the "boys" of the office could not be induced to "stick" another type. (The management, however, succeeded in issuing their paper regularly.) After thirteen months of army life we returned home, and again to the Independent then edited by I. F. Mack, Jr. This was of short duration however, for we rallied the "blowers," and again donned the blue. After the wearisome marches attendant upon Sherman's campaign, and after peace was declared, we were permitted to again return to Brodhead and confront a "case" in the Independent office. Very soon after we were a resident of the very pleasant village of Monroe. Remaining there among good friends two years we returned to Brodhead, formed a co-partnership with D. W. Tyrrell, and purchased the Independent, of I. F. Mack, Jr., at a good round price. After a partnership of about eight months Mr. Tyrrell associated himself with Mr. Potter, then publisher of the Green County Republican, at Monroe. Being then left to our own responsibility we did the best we could. In July, 1873, we sold the office to Messrs. Stone & Morse, taking our self to the great city of the northwest—Chicago. Two years have passed and again we are found in the Independent office, as proprietor, having effected the purchase on the 28th ultimo. What there may be for us in the dim and unknown future, we cannot of course predict with any degree of safety. If our past history has wrought anything to our good, the patrons of the Independent shall reap the same at our hands as one week succeeds another, and as good health is spared us.

"Our promises will not be numerous. We will promise this much, that we will conduct the Independent to the best of our ability, and always to the best interests of its patrons and all interested in our beautiful village. Can we say more? If we know what morality is, our paper shall be moral. If we know the meaning of discretion our paper shall be discreet. If we know what right is, our paper shall be as near the same as it lies in our power to make it. We shall not attempt to revolutionize local business in excess of local capacity, but shall advocate the full use of that capacity to the best interests.

In politics, we shall not be "on the fence" but shall always advocate republicanism, and may be depended upon as republican; and the Independent, we are sure, while in our charge, will labor for the best interests of republicanism at home and abroad.

"The firm of Titus & Kimberley, printers, Chicago, will continue, at 120 and 122 La Salle street. Under the excellent management of Mr. Titus, the business of that office will be correctly and judiciously managed. Charles Titus, a brother, will represent our interest.

"While we shall be ever ready and anxious to accommodate our friends with any kind of ordinary job work, at this office yet there may be, possibly, some beyond our capacity. Anything of this kind will be forwarded to our city office, executed by the best of workmen, and returned promptly.

"The former proprietors, Messrs Stone & Morse have our best wishes for success. Mr. Stone will return to Chicago and engage in business. Mr. Morse, after two months more preparation, will present himself for examination at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. We sincerely trust that his efforts may be successful. In the event of his being admitted, we are sure he will advance rapidly, do himself credit and honor the State of Wisconsin:

"We now leave ourselves with the good people of Brodhead, and surrounding country, and sincerely hope to merit their good will and patronage. We want to find a friend in every one. Shall this be our good fortune?

E. O. KIMBERLEY."

Mr. Kimberley continued as publisher of the paper several years. In June, 1878, he made a trip to Dakota, from which he wrote some interesting letters. Returning home Aug. 23, 1878, he offered the office for sale. About a month later (September 19,) he left for Sioux Falls to engage in business again, offering the office for sale, but announcing it would be kept up by his father and John E. Bartlett.

On the 14th of October, 1878, Burr Sprague bought the office, and four days thereafter Mr. Kimberley issued his

VALEDICTORY.

"The last issue of the Independent (October 11), closed our work upon its pages and in the office. On Monday of this week, Burr Sprague, Esq., purchased the establishment, together with the subscriptions of the paper. Gay Sprague, a promising young man and a good printer, will superintend the mechanical department, and, as we are informed, will publish the paper. Burr Sprague is so well and favorably known to all that it is not necessary we should say any more of him. As for ourselves, we have discharged our duties to suit ourselves. If others have been suited, all right; if not, all right. The paper will remain republican. We hope the new helmsman will be liberally patronized by all classes of people. Sioux Falls, Dak., is to be our future home, and in one corner of a new paper will read, Kimberley & Morse. And now to all a fond farewell.

On the same day was published Mr. Sprague's

SALUTATORY.

"By the transfer of the Independent, duties and responsibilities with which we are not familiar, have suddenly devolved upon us, and we acknowledge that it is not without some reluctance and misgivings that we assume them.

"Trusting in the sympathy and kind wishes of our friends, and hoping they will not demand better results than we may accomplish, we shall earnestly endeavor to make the Independent as good a local paper in the future as it has been in the past.

"In its columns shall be found as much of the general and local news of the day as necessary economy of time and space will permit.

"Whatever measures or principles we may conceive to be in the interest of real reform, it will zealously advocate and defend.

"Upon the present political issues it will remain republican in letter and in spirit; and in the cause of temperance it may always be relied upon to tally one.

"In the interest of education, and especially of the public school system, it will be ever ready to disseminate encouraging words; and in regard to Churches and religious rites and beliefs, it will exhibit 'charity for all and malice toward none.'

"Mr. Kimberley, who has established the reputation of the Independent, and of the fine job office connected with it, takes his leave to enter upon a larger, and it is hoped a more prosperous field of labor, in which he has the best wishes of ourself and many warm friends.

"Gay Sprague, who has served an apprenticeship of nearly four years with friend Booth in the office of the Monroe Sentinel, will have full charge of the publishing and job printing department, and we shall rely largely upon him for aid in the general conduct of the paper.

BURR SPRAGUE."

Burr Sprague continued in charge of the Independent until May 23, 1879, when he sold to E. A. Charlton, and made the following

VALEDICTORY.

"We have sold the Independent and the subscription accounts to E. A. Charlton—who will fill the advance subscriptions; and he will take possession of the office and assume control on Monday next.

"We have had charge of the paper but little more than seven months, and during the most of this time we have been so burdened with other pressing duties that it has been impossible for us to devote the time and attention to the paper that has been desirable, and seemed necessary; but we have thus far, to the best of our ability under the circumstances, fulfilled the promises made in our first number. How well we have succeeded during this brief period of time is wholly for our readers to decide—they having the best opportunity to know, and being the most competent and impartial judges—and be their verdict in favor of or against us, it will doubtless be correct, and we shall not complain.

We have always endeavored to exclude from our columns everything of a personal nature which would be liable to cause or excite ill feeling, aiming to speak plainly and boldly for principles only, and not in any sense for personal ends. If, in doing this, we have unwittingly given offense, we regret such result—for we harbor no malice or ill-will toward any one—but having acted according to our best judgment, and with good motives, we have nothing to retract; and only wish we might have dealt still heavier blows in the cause of right.

"If we have erred or blundered at times, we only are responsible, for no one has dictated, counseled or advised us.

"We have been constantly cheered and encouraged by kind words and substantial tokens of regard and appreciation, and our numerous exchanges have treated us very respectfully and kindly; for all of which we are truly grateful.

"We have become warmly attached to the Independent, and shall feel more than a common interest in its future welfare and prosperity.

"After a few weeks' travel for recreation, we shall take up another line of business which awaits us.

"In making this transfer, we feel entirely confident that we are doing no injustice to our subscribers, fully believing that our successor is competent to greatly improve the Independent, and that it will be his aim to do so. Eight years' experience as president of the State Normal School at Platteville, and the liberal endorsement given him by eminent and worthy men, occupying high positions of trust in our State, afford unquestionable proof of his ability and honesty of purpose; and coming among us as he does, a comparative stranger, free from the piques and prejudices in the personal or neighborhood differences which too frequently exist between older residents, we bespeak for him a hearty welcome, hosts of friends and abundant success.

BURR SPRAGUE"

E. A. Charlton's salutatory was in these words:

"In accordance with the announcement made last week, we have assumed control of the Independent as editor and publisher.

"It is not without some misgivings that we enter upon these new duties and responsibilities.

John H. Woodling

but relying upon the kindness and forbearance of our friends and patrons, we hope to become "masters of the situation," and in due time to satisfy all reasonable expectations.

"It will be the aim of the Independent to promote the best welfare of the community in which it is published. Whatever we can do through its columns to promote the moral, intellectual and social interests of this village, will be cheerfully and heartily done. We shall advocate those principles and practices that in our judgment tend to improve society and to make human life more happy and more useful.

"Our long experience as a teacher has made us so familiar with public and private education and has given us such an interest in this subject, that we can hardly refrain—if we would, from devoting especial attention to the interests of our common schools and other institutions of learning. The educational affairs of this community, and of this State, shall receive due attention. In this direction we shall advocate thorough preparation and faithful work on the part of teachers; efficient and liberal management on the part of boards. We believe that teaching should be recognized as a profession, that only competent and skilled teachers should be employed, and that these should be justly paid for their services.

"In politics, we shall not be partisan. While we shall, in general, advocate the principles of the republican party, as party lines are now drawn, we shall give credit for honesty, integrity and patriotism in public service, whenever and wherever found.

"While the Independent must necessarily, give especial attention to local matters and interests, we shall endeavor to present such original and selected articles as will prove acceptable to our more distant readers. In this connection it may not be improper to say that Mrs. Charlton will be a frequent contributor to our columns, and will aid us in our editorial work.

"But we are aware that we shall be judged by what we perform, rather than by what we promise. We can only assure our readers that whatever can be done by entire devotion to our work shall be done.

"To the citizens of Brodhead, we beg leave to say that we have come here hoping to stay. We propose to cast. in our lot with you, and become identified with the interests of your beautiful village, and to do our part, so far as in us lies, to sustain all its beneficent institutions. Our business will be in connection with the Independent, and we ask your liberal patronage not only in subscriptions but in every department of our work. We shall make such improvements from time to time as your support will warrant us in doing.

"Thanking our friends both far and near for their cheering words and kind encouragement, we extend 'A kindly greeting to old friends, A hearty welcome to the new.'

Respectfully,

E A. Charlton.

On Sept. 13, 1880, Mr. Charlton took charge of the Brodhead High School and continued through the school year, closing June, 1881. During this time he exercised a general oversight over the affairs of the office, but the bulk of the editorial work was done by Mrs. Charlton, while the foreman attended to the business of the office. With this exception he has given his entire time and efforts to the paper, since he became its owner.

On the 21st of June, 1881, Mr. Charlton purchased of Walker & Co., Madison, a Prouty Power Press, turning over to them, in part payment, the old hand press which had been in service from the outset, and had previously done duty for the States Rights, at Monroe.

The paper was in 1864 a seven column folio. On Oct. 7, 1881, Mr. Charlton enlarged it to its present size, an eight column folio.

The original price of the paper was $2 a year. In 1870 it was made $1.50, in advance, and has since remained at that price.

voter, the anti-slavery agitation swept over the land. In that cause he took a warm interest, and counted himself a “free-soiler” before the formation of the republican party. And when that party came to the front he found in it the embodiment of the principles in which he thoroughly believed, and to which he has steadily adhered. As mentioned elsewhere, he was married March 20, 1862, to Helen Elizabeth Holmes, of Lockport, N. Y., whose father, Hon. Alfred Holmes, is now the senior member of the Niagara county bar, having been engaged in the practice of law for upwards of fifty years. His wife has proved, in the full sense of the term, a helpmate. She has given him valuable aid in his school work, and as associate editor of the Independent, has made frequent contributions to its columns, both in prose and in verse. Two children have been born to them—Walter Holmes Charlton, was born at Schenectady, N. Y., Jan. 4, 1866, and died at Lockport, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1875, while on a visit with his mother at her old home. The second and only surviving child, Winifred Holmes Charlton, was born at Platteville, Wis., May 13, 1874.

THE BRODHEAD REGISTER.

The Brodhead Register, the latest newspaper venture in Brodhead, was established and its first number issued Nov. 1, 1883, by Louis A. W. Sprague, ‘doing business as the Peerless Printing Company. The salutatory of the editor, we give entire:

“The Peerless Printing Company commenced business just two years ago, on a small scale, with no special inducements and but little to encourage such an undertaking.

“Thus far our work has been confined to job printing exclusively.

“We did not anticipate great results in so short a time, and in this have not been disappointed; but we have endeavored to turn out a class of work that would fairly merit favorable consideration and a reasonable share of patronage. Our hopes in this respect have been fully realized. The field is small, at best, but our business has steadily increased until we have deemed it both safe and expedient to secure pleasant and convenient rooms for a long term of years, and to add largely to our stock and materials, until we have every facility requisite to publish a small weekly paper.

“At the earnest solicitation of very many citizens of Brodhead and vicinity, among whom are numbered some of the ablest and best business men, we have consented to commence the weekly publication of the Brodhead Register, at the beginning of our third year.

“In this enterprise we shall make no vain pretensions, but, as in our jobbing department, shall endeavor to give ‘value received’ to all our patrons, and submit the result to their candid judgment.

“It may be said that there are already newspapers enough in Green county. This may be said of any trade, business or profession; and yet many more merchants, farmers, mechanics and professional men will doubtless begin business and succeed in our midst, and we feel assured that no large-hearted public-spirited man or woman will presume to oppose or discourage the establishment of any new firm, business or enterprise that is honorable.

“The writer has resided in this village since he was five years old, received his schooling here, and learned the art of printing during that time. His home and his interests are in Brodhead. It is and has been impossible for him to the trade of his choice at home, in any other way or manner than the one he has adopted. He believes there is room for him to earn an honest living by hard work and close application at home as well as abroad.

“As announced in our New Year’s greeting we are ‘here to stay,’ and whether our pathway shall be strewn with more of roses or of thorns and thistles, we shall’ at least put forth a hearty effort to overcome obstacles, and above all else to please our customers, and give them the worth of their money.

“We prefer to begin in a small way with a hope and prospect of steady and certain growth, to shouldering a burden too heavy for our youthful shoulders; and in so doing we trust that every change may be for the better.

“We are not united with any sect or political party, and are consequently free to advocate any principles or views that may seem to us just and equitable. It is our purpose to remain unfettered and untrammled, and to speak fearlessly in the cause of right at all times, treating all as friends who are willing to be such, and show themselves worthy.

“Our subscription list is thus far composed of unsolicited subscribers. This issue will be mailed to some who are not subscribers, and we shall be pleased to continue the paper to them all, with the understanding that it shall be discontinued at any time when requested.

“Our subscription price is $1 a year, and to those who pay in advance, before the 1st of January next, we will send the paper until January, 1885—fourteen months from date.”

The Register is, really, an ably conducted paper, and though unpretentious as to size, has doubtless, before it, a brilliant future.

LOUIS A. W. SPRAGUE

was born June 23, 1862, at Oxford, Rock Co., Wis. He moved to Brodhead with his parents—Burr Sprague and Vina B. Sprague—when six years old, and has resided there ever since. He was educated in Brodhead at the high school. He has worked at the printing business since the fall of 1878, most of the time in Brodhead. He opened a jobbing office Nov. 1, 1881, and has since kept the same in operation. He commenced the publication of the Brodhead Register, Nov. 1, 1883. He married, Dec. 31, 1883, Mattie E. Barber, of Brodhead.

ALBANY WEEKLY JOURNAL.

The first paper was a seven column folio by I. S. Dexter and Y. T. Lacey in 1858 or 1859. In the early part of the year 1860 the paper passed into the hands of Joseph Baker, under the original name of the Albany Times, who ran it about one year, when it was purchased by Dexter & Klaesy, who continued its publication until August, 1862, when the enlistment of the junior editor (Gustave Klaesy) in United States service, together with the entire force of the office, caused its suspension. In the fall of 1865, at the close of the war, C. W. Osgood and your humble servant, J. E. Bartlett, revived the patriotic old type, and under the name of the Albany Journal, which existed for the short period of six months. In June, 1878, the Journal was again started by Brundage & Bullock. After running about six months it passed into the hands of the present proprietor, J. E. Bartlett. When it was survived this time it was changed to a five column quarto, 26x40 inches. It had been a staunch republican paper. Its entire outfit, presses, type, etc., save the file of copies, was destroyed by fire on the 26th of November, 1883, together with a large part of the business portion of the village, but was immediately reestablished and published, only losing one issue.

JOHN E. BARTLETT, editor of the Albany Journal, was born in the town of Corinth, State of New York, Aug. 9, 1847. In 1856 he came with his parents to Wisconsin, and located in Beloit, Rock county. His parents now reside in Brodhead. In 1857 he came to Albany, and in 1858 was apprenticed to Lacy & Dexter, editors and proprietors of the Albany Times, to learn the printer's trade, for which business he seemed to have a natural adaptation. He remained upon the force publishing that paper until 1862. Meanwhile the Times had changed hands twice, being controlled after the first change by Joseph Baker, who was in turn succeeded by Dexter & Klaesy. Upon the 6th day of August, 1862, the subject of this sketch, together with the junior editor (Gustave Klaesy), and C. W. Osgood and Ira A. Foster, associate employee, responded to the call of his country and enlisted in company F, 31st regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers. This company was organized by Capt. C. W. Burns. This action of so many of the force of the Times caused the suspension of that paper. After three years of service in the army Mr. Bartlett returned to Albany, broken down in health, consequent upon exposure and hardship incident to the life of a soldier during those dark days of the great American conflict. He was a good soldier, and thus sacrificed upon the altar of his country his young strength. Upon his return, in company with C. W. Osgood, a former associate in the printing business, he revived the patriotic old press and type which had so long been silent, and under the name of the Albany Journal, embarked in a newspaper enterprise, which, on account of his failing health, had only a brief six months' duration. In 1878, upon the earnest solicitation of time honored friends, he resumed the publication of the Albany Journal, and has since continued, with varied success. He was not exempt from the disastrous fire which laid waste so great a part of this thriving village, and everything he had went up in smoke; but with characteristic energy the Journal was again put on a footing, and is now among the better class of papers of the county. Mr. Bartlett was married Dec. 25, 1866, to Emma Payne, a native of New York State. They have had two children—Flora Stella, who died in infancy, and Spencer E., who was born Nov. 20, 1869.

THE ALBANY VINDICATOR.

The Vindicator is published every Thursday at Albany and is now in its first volume. It is published by the Vindicator Publishing Company. It is edited largely in the interests of prohibition and is ably conducted.

RANDOM EXTRACTS CONCERNING GREEN COUNTY NEWSPAPERS.

BRODHEAD REPORTER.

"We have received the first number of the Brodhead Reporter, L. Winthrop Powell, editor and publisher. The paper is republican in politics, devoted to the general interests of the town and county in which it is published; is a seven column sheet, very neatly gotten up; and bears evidence of earnest management. We wish friend Powell a good list of subscribers and a thrifty business."—Monroe Sentinel, May 4, 1859.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF TWO PAPERS.

[FROM THE MONROE SENTINEL, MAY 11, 1859]

About the first week in May, 1850, Mr. Snow commenced the publication in this village [Monroe,] of a six column paper, neutral in politics, entitled the Green County Union. After continuing its publication one year, he sold the office to our fellow-townsmen, J. W. Stewart, who put the paper partly in a new dress and made a regular whig organ. After continuing as editor and publisher for little more than three months, he sold the office to Rev. J. Walworth and O. D. Moulton, who changed the politics of the paper from whig to democratic, and published it through the volume, when Mr. Walworth became sole editor and proprietor. He afterwards enlarged to a seven column size and continued its publication until Sept. 15, 1854. It is proper to remark that, about the time of the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, Mr. Walworth took grounds against the step and took part in the organization of the republican party. On the 15th of September, 1854, N. L. Stout and G. W. Tenney leased the office and fixtures for the term of one year, and came out wholly and unequivocally in favor of the republican party—a position the paper has maintained ever since. On the 16th of May, 1855, Messrs Stout and Tenney purchased the office and continued joint editors and publishers until September 15, of the same year, when N. L. Stout retired and left the present publisher in sole possession. On the commencement of the next succeeding volume, in May, 1856, we put the Sentinel in an entire new dress, and on August 11, following, enlarged it to eight columns to the page.

GONE OUT—DISAPPEARED—BUSTED—VANISHED

"INDEPENDENT PRESS.—The paper which has been published in this village [Monroe] for the past seven months, bearing the above title, has gone out, disappeared, busted, vanished. without word of premonition, or signal of alarm, something after the manner in which an ideal vision of dimes is oftentimes dissolved by the introduction of a dun. It undertook to carry Lecompton, to which absurd idea it probably is in a measure indebted for its dissolution. 'We understand the materials have been taken to the village of Albany, in this county, at which place a new and distinct paper will be issued.'

RETIRED.

"By the last number of the Albany Times, we learn that I. S. Dexter has surrendered the honors, emoluments and tripod to his associate, Yates T. Lacy. Dexter is one of the tallest kind of editors and looked at matters about him from a high stand-point. May his shadow never be less."

EDITORIAL CHANGE.

[From the Monroe Sentinel, April 25, 1860.]

We hear it stated that friend Lacy of the Albany Times has disposed of that paper to Col. Baker, formerly of the Janesville Free Press. Mr. Baker drives the pen with vigor and talent and we cordially extend our hand in welcome. Our relations with Mr. Lacy, who, we suppose, retires from the paper, have led us to regard him as a true and honorable gentleman.

TO THE FRIENDS AND PATRONS OF THE GREEN COUNTY DEMOCRAT.

[From the Monroe Sentinel, June 13, 1860.]

It is due the patrons and friends of the Democrat that I should make a statement of facts in regard to its discontinuance. The office was purchased upon the following terms: Nine democrats of Brodhead and vicinity endorsed a note or bond for me, for $300, payable three months from date, and I gave my own notes for the sum of $412; this added to the $300 note, made the amount $712 in all. The $300 note became due on the 16th of April last, but as my endorsers nor myself could not raise the amount, I had it extended thirty days more. It also expired, and we could not pay. The 16th of May one of my own notes, of $140 became due also; and I could not meet it, and thus the office was left in a bad situation. It was understood that donations from prominent democrats in Brodhead and other places, were to be made to pay off the $300 note, but no donations were ever made, nor were any of the glowing promises, which were made to me fulfilled. I received but five very small sums as donations, three of fifty cents and two of two dollars. There was a great hue and cry made by one very prominent democrat that we were extravagant in our funds and received plenty of money. I had no means of my own and all I had to depend on to support myself, and pay the expenses of the office, was the subscription money, which was "few and far between." The advertising did not amount to anything; and here let me say that the democratic business men of Brodhead did lend their influence and patronage to the Reporter, a republican sheet, in preference to one of their own party—but four democrats advertised their business, and that upon a very small scale. Mr. J. Brant, saddler, being the last advertiser I had. Yet in the face of all this, I was accused of extravagance! Kept too much help, etc. Had the democrats canvassed the county, and performed the work they promised to do, our expenses would not have been half of what they were, but the democrats failed to canvass, and it was left for me to do the work in the office as well as to canvass. Any person, of sense, will see that it was utterly impossible for me to do the work and canvass too. I was compelled to hire an employee, and to keep my matters in running order. I was kept from home the most of my time in collecting money and canvassing, and I could not get far enough ahead without hired help.

Reports of all kinds were circulated to my injury, by several disappointed democrats, because I would not be controlled by them, and do and write as they dictated. It was well understood before I started the Democrat, that I would not be controlled by any one man, clique or sect, but was willing to be ruled and governed by a majority of the democrats in the county. Those democrats who made those glowing promises, had all a remunerative office in view, and as soon as it was discovered that they would not get the "loaves and fishes," their purses as well as their devotion to the principles of democracy collapsed. They are no democrats from principle, but from office. I have always been opposed to such democracy and always will be. I want a man to be one thing or the other, out and out. There are several sound and live democrats in Green county, and the most prominent are S. P. Condee, of Monroe, Samuel Northcroft and Samuel Rowe, of Decatur, and John Taylor, of Brodhead. To John Taylor I am indebted for many favors extended towards me, and he is a true and tried democrat. For the past four weeks I did not receive $2, and we could not buy our paper on credit and run in debt for board. Last Monday the office was closed by Messrs. Rounds & Langdon. I never toiled and devised ways and means to keep the office running, as I did in Brodhead, but all to no purpose. The office closed and I am $50 in debt, and borrowed $3 with which to leave town. I think it will be a long time before they get a printer in their clutches. I am a democrat and always have been, and always expect to be, but I shall never stoop to low trickery to gain laurels and fame. The above statements I can corroborate, and I do not publish them for the purpose of injuring the party in Little Green, but for the purpose of placing the blame where it belongs. More could be told, but I think this sufficient.

NEW PAPER.

[Oct. 18, 1865.]

We have received the first number of the Albany Weekly Journal, published at Albany, in this county, by Osgood & Bartlett. C. W. Osgood is the editor, with Joseph Baker assistant editor. The paper professes to be "free and independent, and will not intermeddle with party quarrels or controversies." What do you mean, Mr. Osgood, by "free and independent?" You say that you will publish other men's opinions; but have you no political opinions of your own? You say you have served in the army; what did you fight for? Were there no political principles involved in that great struggle with Rebellion? Is there nothing for patriots to do now? Have you no opinion to express on the great and vital issues which now convulse the Nation? We cannot understand how any man can be neutral, with all these momentous National questions before him.

Gen. James Bintliff, for a long time a prominent citizen of Green county, takes up his pen to edit the Gazette, in Janesville, Wis., tomorrow, Thursday, June 30. By those who know him best, Mr. Bintliff is regarded one of the ablest writers and speakers of this State. He has a rich store of practical knowledge of human nature, and the history of the important events of modern times. He has always taken a front rank in the republican party, since its organization; served his party and the great principles of freedom faithfully, on the stump, in the field of war and in the sanctum. He will take to the Gazette a degree of energy, good will, ability and experience in the things which make men valuable, excelled by none, equaled by few. His going will take from us a valuable citizen, and will add to the editorial fraternity of Wisconsin, one more bright particular star, who will, we predict, rise rapidly to that high position for which he is so fitly qualified. Yet we are satisfied that his zeal and labors for the welfare of Rock county will not prevent his taking some interest in the affairs of his old "stamping ground."

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE SWISS COLONY OF NEW GLARUS.

BY JOHN LUCHSINGER.

In the northern part of Green Co., Wis., about sixteen miles north of Monroe, is situated the little village of New Glarus. This village, as well as the township in which it lies, was so named after the canton and town of Glarus in eastern Switzerland, of which place the inhabitants are natives or their descendants. Pleasantly located on the west bank of Little Sugar river, on sloping ground, and in the midst of varied, rather rough, yet pleasing scenery, it presents a romantic and somewhat un-American appearance, owing to the diversified style of its buildings; and its plain yet queer church-tower, unlike any other outside of the old country. The houses are mostly built on the border of the streets, there being no sidewalks for foot passengers, nor space in front for shade trees. The village contains about fifty dwellings, with barns and other out-buildings. There are two churches, two school houses, a grist and saw mill run by water-power, a large cheese factory, a brewery, three stores and four hotels and saloons.

The population is about 200. A physician, a minister of the Swiss Reformed Church, and two schoolmasters reside in the place, and attend to the medical, religious and educational wants of the people. There are, besides, artisans, mechanics and laborers of all trades and occupations needed by a community of this size, thus rendering this settlement quite independent of the surrounding villages—in fact, it is a community within itself.

The people of the village, as well as of the surrounding country, speak among themselves almost exclusively the German-Swiss dialect. All school and town meetings and elections, and even proceedings in justice's courts, are of necessity conducted in this language. A stranger stopping here for the first time could easily imagine that he had dropped down upon a portion of Switzerland. They occupy, with the exception of a small portion on the northern and eastern boundaries, the whole of the township; the only persons of other Nationalities in the town being three or four families of Norwegians and Irish. In fully one-half of the town of Washington, and large portions of half a dozen other towns in Green county, and also in the southern part of Dane, a number of Swiss have gained a foothold. The number of Swiss and their descendants in Green county alone exceeds 3,000, comprising about one-seventh of the entire population of the county. The village of New Glarus is the central point of gathering on all holidays and festivals; and is also the place where religious services are held for most of the Swiss in the county.

The people of this settlement are noted for their industry, frugality and economy, qualities which with them are inherited, their ancestors having from necessity been obliged to practice them for many centuries, owing to the sterile and mountainous character of their fatherland, where nature yields her bounties grudgingly, and with scanty measure. One cannot help observing, on entering the settlement, the effects of these good qualities; good, comfortable houses, spacious and substantial barns, and other out-buildings are seen everywhere; and nowhere in Green county is so much money expended in permanent improvements as here, and that, too, in the face of the fact that the country is very broken and rough, the soil on the uplands thin, liable to wash away at every heavy rain, and in many places stony.

But the people at an early period betook themselves to dairy farming and the raising of cattle. To this branch of industry they were well adapted, and thoroughly understood it, that being of necessity the only branch of agriculture possible among the mountains of their old home. This vicinity is also well suited for the purpose; for the hill pastures produce sweet, nutritious, if scant, grasses, while the natural meadows in the bottoms yield an abundance of good hay, and springs and streams of pure, cool water abound, almost every farm being supplied with running water. All these are requisites in order to produce excellence in the product, and health in the stock.

The people, as a rule, are hard-working, believing that honest, old fashioned, sturdy strokes and blows are required to secure a livelihood and competence. They are economical also, to the verge of penuriousness; spending less than they earn, the mystery is easily explained why they get on in the world better than many of their neighbors of American or other Nationalities, who are so often heard to express wonder how people with so many obstacles, natural and artificial to contend with, should have done so well. Industry and economy will bring about the same good result in any Nation or country. The people are generally less involved in debt, and less complaint of hard times is heard here than in other sections of the country.

Prior to the year 1845, for about fifteen years, the times in Europe were prosperous. A long reign of peace had given an impetus to trade, and manufactures had greatly increased, so that the large surplus population of Switzerland, that had formerly found vent by enlisting in foreign armies now found employment in the factories; and as long as trade was good, every one prospered. About this period, a general stagnation in business occurred, which threw large numbers of the poor out of employment; and added to this, a partial failure in crops caused a rise in the price of the necessaries of life, so that distress was great among the working classes, and it became a serious question to the governments of the Swiss cantons as to what would be the fate of many of those who had hitherto obtained bread, and were contented, during prosperous times.

The portions of arable land which were owned by the different parishes, and allotted to each citizen for cultivation annually, were becoming smaller and smaller as the population increased, being at that time from forty to 160 klafters of six feet square each, for the head of every family, according as the parish he happened to belong to, was rich or the reverse. The parishes and communes in many instances not only owned these portions of arable land, but also the summer pastures on the Alps, which were leased from time to time to private parties. The income from this source, and also from the forests, which are mainly owned in the same way, is applied to the payment of salaries to preachers and the civil officials; taxation, in consequence of this large income, is very light in many localities.

Every citizen in Glarus is entitled to the use of one of these portions, which he may cultivate himself or by others; or he may give or lease it to others, if not in condition to use it himself. When any left the country, the value of such a share, together with other privileges, was estimated, and paid in money to those who migrated, being, in fact, a premium on emigration. These small parcels were mainly planted with potatoes, beans and other vegetables, the raising of grain being almost unknown in Glarus, the people depending for breadstuffs partly on Italy, but mostly on Hungary. In times of depression, the food of the poorer working classes is mainly potatoes, with salt or green cheese, called schabzieger, for spice or seasoning. The cheese is made from skim-milk coagulated with acid whey, then packed in casks and left to ripen, which occurs in about four weeks. It is then ground in a mill, and mixed with a certain proportion of leaves of a species of blue pansy, which are previously dried and pulverized for the purpose. After being thoroughly mixed, the cheese is pressed into conical moulds, which hold about two pounds; and, after drying, is ready for use. When ripe, it is of a dark green color, and so hard that it can be grated like a nutmeg. The so called sap-sago cheese is its counterpart. Coffee is made from the roots of chicory; and is drank without sugar, and in many families, without milk. The supply of bread, even in prosperous times, is limited, the house-wife allotting to each a certain portion, and no more. The leading men of the canton of Glarus cast about for means by which this over-population and consequent distress could be relieved. Meetings were held, and it was thought that an emigration under the care and control of the government would be the best method of relief. Another meeting to devise ways and means was called, and was largely attended at Schwanden, and a committee was appointed to wait on the authorities and ask their co-operation. This was extended, and the sum of 1,500 gulden or florins was appropriated for the purpose of sending two pioneers to the United States of America, to seek and locate a tract of land for a colony. An Emigration Society was also formed, and took charge of the funds, which were increased by private subscription and appointed two intelligent men to select a suitable location, and purchase lands on which to plant the colony—one was Nicholas Duerst, then forty-eight years old, who came out only to see the settlement well under way, and then returned to Switzerland, where he died in 1874, at the good old age of seventy-seven years; his associate was Fridolin Streiff, then twenty-nine years of age. Mr. Streiff agreed to remain three years with the colony, and extend to them every assistance and advice.

Before that time expired, he sent for his family, and now resides at Monroe, Wis. On the 8th of March, 1845, the pioneers started on their voyage and search for a new home, accompanied by the warmest wishes for their success of those who remained behind, but were soon to follow. In due time they arrived in this country, and sought W. H. Blumer, in Allentown, Penn., a fellow Swiss, who assisted them with his advice; and from his many years' residence in America, was well capable of rendering them very essential aid by his knowledge and experience.

They had received from the Emigration Society, instructions to buy 1,200. acres of land in one body, with sufficient timber. After wandering through several States in search of a location, which, according to their instructions must have a healthy climate, good water, and plenty of timber, they came into the vicinity of Mineral Point, and proceeded to the land office, then located there, for advice and directions. They first examined a tract in Rock county, close to the line of the Mineral Point and Milwaukee land district; but on returning to the Point, found that it had just been bought. After further fruitless search in the Wisconsin river valley, in Dane and Sauk counties, they were finally directed to Little Sugar river, where, on both sides of the Mineral Point and Milwaukee road, they found and located a tract according to instructions. Twelve hundred acres were purchased in one body, and eighty acres of heavy timber two miles south of the main location.

It was considered an excellent selection. Springs abounded, the soil appeared good; and as it was on one of the most frequently traveled roads at that time in the State, a railroad seemed to be a possibility; but this expectation has not yet been realized. Owing to location, and the difficult character of the country, railroads have passed us by; the nearest station is Brooklyn, fifteen miles east, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. If the pioneers had not literally followed the instructions to buy in one body, it would have been better, as the 1,200 acres included much rough and worthless land which could have been avoided, and valuable land bought instead; but it is of little consequence now, as it all, good and bad, belongs to the colonists, their children or their countrymen

As soon as possible after taking possession of the land, the two pioneers commenced building a little cabin on the western bank of Little Sugar river, near the east wall of the old graveyard, covering it with boards; it was a small affair, and is only recollected, and referred to, as the primitive hut of the settlement.

And here we will leave them awhile, and rehearse the story of the migration, and final arrival, of the little colony of which they were the precursors. On the 10th of April, 1845, 193 persons, of all ages and both sexes, were collected on the banks of the Linth canal, which runs alongside of the Linth river, a tributary of the Rhine, in the canton of Glarus. They were the colonists who had declared their readiness to venture into the strange, far-off land, called America, of which they had read and heard so much, as being the home and haven of the poor; and where those who came with stout hands and willing hearts were sure eventually to reap a rich reward. But among all who were ready to go, but few could look back upon the frowning, yet beloved mountains, on whose sides they had left their poor homes, humble friends and kindred, without feeling their courage tried almost to failure. But in the land they were leaving poverty stared them in the face, and want and oppression were always the lot of the poor, with no hope of improvement. Before them lay the land of golden promise, where they believed that honest labor would meet its just reward, and where they could lift themselves and their children to competence, independence, and equality with other men, by their own exertions—which was well nigh impossible in their old home. Therefore, with hearts full of grief, and tearful eyes, they took leave of friends and father-land; and with few earthly goods, but with bright hopes for the future, they embarked in an open boat or barge.

Before starting, M. Jenny, a delegate from the government, addressed them in a feeling manner. He urged upon all the necessity of industry and concord as indispensable to their success, and after commending them to the care of providence, bade them God speed, and amid the tears and good wishes of hundreds of friends, who had come to witness their departure, the emigrants started on the way, and slowly commenced their wearisome journey to the New World.

The emigrants chose two of their number, George Legler, Sr., now of New Glarus, and Jacob Grob to act as leaders and spokesmen during the migration, and to preserve order among the party, and exercise general care and supervision over everything connected with the journey. The colonists, on their part, promised to render due obedience to their directions and commands. On reaching Zurich the weather became very inclement, and snow fell. The women and children would have suffered greatly, but for the kindness of a Swiss gentleman, Cosmos Blumer, the then representative of the canton of Glarus in the Swiss legislature, who accompanied them on this part of their journey, and provided covered wagons, in which they followed the boat on shore until all reached Basle.

The journey from this place to Rotterdam, in Holland, was continued on the Rhine; it was slow and tedious, which, combined with the cold wintry weather, and an uncertain future prospect, was the cause of much depression to all. Arriving at Rotterdam on the 6th day of May, they learned that the ship on which they were to sail lay at New Dieppe. Proceeding to that place, the ship was found to be not yet ready to sail; it having been engaged in carrying cotton from New Orleans to Europe, was not provided with berths, etc., for the accommodation of passengers. The colonists were thus delayed six days, until the ship was fitted for their reception. This caused the already needy people a great expense, which, however, was partially alleviated by an advance of 100 gulden by a warm-hearted Swiss gentleman, P. Jenny. However, on the 12th of May, they embarked for Baltimore; and, after a stormy, toilsome voyage of forty-nine days, arrived at that place on the 30th of June.

They there contracted for passage to St. Louis, that being the point where they were directed to await orders from the pioneer agents, Duerst and Streiff. At Baltimore they were, for the first time, put on railway cars and were carried about fifty miles, to Columbia, Penn. At the point where the road crossed a mountain, the first cars were drawn up by an engine on the top, by means of wire ropes, and then the descending cars were made to pull up the others. At Columbia they were placed on board canal boats, in which they were conveyed to Pittsburg, Penn. From thence they descended the Ohio in barges to Cincinnati; thence for the first time they rode in a steamboat, which took them to St. Louis, where they arrived on the 23d of July. They were here kindly received and entertained by Swiss countrymen who were settled in that city.

No intelligence, no directions, had yet been received from the pioneer agents. On the contrary, after waiting some days, the discouraging but false rumor reached them, that in penetrating into the interior those adventurous agents had lost their lives. What was to be done? Long delay would inevitably break up the party; some had already, through fear, dissatisfaction or other causes, dropped off, and sought and found work at some of the various stopping places by the way.

After remaining, with no little anxiety, in St. Louis two weeks, with no tidings from their agents, it was resolved that two of the party should go and search for them. Jacob Grob and Mathias Duerst were selected for this service. They proceeded to Galena, Ill., and there learned that those whom they were seeking had been there some weeks before, and had gone northward. They were advised to go to Mineral Point, where there was a government land office, and where the pioneer agents would have been likely to enter land, in case they had bought in Wisconsin. The searchers went to "the Point," as it was termed; and, on inquiry at the office, found that their agents had bought land in township 4, range 7, on Little Sugar river. The men were much rejoiced when this good news was communicated to them, and at once sent back word to St. Louis for the party to start for Galena immediately. They then resolved to find the location. Theodore Rodolph, now of La Crosse, who was then at Mineral Point, offered his services as guide, which were thankfully accepted. They commenced their journey at once, over a trackless country for thirty-two miles, fording creeks and streams, with a compass to direct their course, until they came to a point directly north of the location about three miles, according to a corner stake which was found on a hill.

Rodolph led the men due south, and, on rounding a point of brush land, came directly upon the pioneers, on the 8th of August, who were busy erecting the primitive hut of the settlement. After the first joyous greetings were over, it was decided that Nicholas Duerst should go to St. Louis and guide the colonists to their new home.

The two new comers were eager and anxious to remain, and assist in the work of building. Duerst at once left, and had proceeded as far as Galena, when, just as he was about to leave for St. Louis one morning, he heard some one remark that a large party of emigrants had arrived in town the evening before. Curiosity caused him to make inquiries, when, to his astonishment, he found that those whom he was going to St. Louis to escort, were already in Galena. He at once directed that the able bodied men should start for the new settlement, and assist in building the necessary shelter for the reception of the colonists, while he would arrange to follow with the main body.

On the afternoon of the same day, eighteen men started on foot for the settlement, with eager steps, a distance of sixty-two miles. They traveled all night and the next day, when they arrived at Wiota, in Lafayette county. There they obtained a night's shelter in a stable; and the next morning, after procuring the services of a guide, there being no traveled track there, and buying some flour at a mill on the Yellowstone river, they, without much difficulty, walked the rest of the way to their land, arriving late in the evening, foot-sore and weary.

They related that every person whom they met fled at their approach, and no wonder; for bearded, unkempt, and ragged as they were, carrying axes and tools of every description, and bags of flour and provisions, they at a distance more resembled a band of robbers than a party of honest emigrants.

Upon their arrival they united with their three predecessors, and erected a much larger hut than the primitive structure. This was located near the west wall, and within the enclosure of the old grave yard, and close to where the district school house now stands. Its size is not recollected. A large excavation was made in the hill side, posts were inserted in the ground, the sides inclosed with boards hauled sixty-two miles from Galena, and covered with boughs and wild hay. The floor was constructed of split poplar logs, the riven side uppermost; and no windows, nor chimney. All possible diligence was used to complete the rude structure, and have it in readiness for the coming colonists. Autumn was at hand, and winter approaching. Some of the men were carpenters, who had brought their tools with them from their old Switzerland home.

After the shelter was prepared, which took but a few days, the colonists all arrived, teams having been hired at Galena to convey the women and children, provisions and other necessaries; but not in sufficient numbers to carry them all. So they had to take turns in alternately riding and walking. The main body arrived on the 15th of August, the whole long journey having been made by water, except the short distance from Baltimore to Columbia, and the sixty-two miles from Galena to New Glarus. One hundred and eight persons, out of the original 193 remained, the rest having, from various causes, become discouraged, and dropped off along the way. Many of these, however, in after years, rejoined their friends, and shared in the fortunes of the colony.

Many of these original colonist brought their pots, pans, kettles and other utensils all the way from the Old World, all of which did duty for a long time in the colony, in the days of its infancy, when it required all the means the people possessed, and could obtain, to supply food and clothing. About a dozen pans and kettles had to do duty for all the families; and it is related, that for some time a single broom sufficed for the whole settlement. It was, no doubt, better than the modern made article.

When the colonists arrived, there was scarcely any food on hand, as their arrival had not been so soon expected, and the necessary provision had not been made. In this emergency, the streams were largely drawn upon for food, being abundantly stocked with fish. As there were not many hooks and lines, the party was divided—some caught fish, and others bait—namely, grass-hoppers. In this way a plentiful supply of fish was caught, which were cooked and eaten without seasoning, as the supply of salt had given out.

Even in later years, owing to unforeseen circumstances, the necessary food for the colonists was sometimes very short; for as late as the fall of 1850, the Rev. Wilhelm Streissguth, the first preacher, wrote that there were not fifty pounds of flour in the settlement, on account of the threshing machine having broken down, and no wheat threshed. The threshers had to go to Milwaukee, 100 miles, for repairs, which trip could seldom be made in less than a week. Oxen were used to run the first threshing machine for several seasons. The good pastor wrote that he frequently made his meals three times a day upon boiled potatoes alone, and with relish, for "hunger is the best of sauce."

The clannish spirit of the native valleys, in spite of the common poverty, early asserted itself in the New Glarus settlement. The inhabitable portion of Old Glarus is mainly separated into two natural divisions—the Great and Little Valleys. Each locality has some peculiarity of language and customs that differ from each other; and consequently the inhabitants of each section cherish a sort of clannish affection for their own clan-people, whether Great or Little Valleyites. This is more particularly true of the people of Little Valley, perhaps from coming less in contact with the rest of the canton and the world, because of their secluded location. About one-quarter of the original settlers of New Glarus were from Little Valley; and very soon after their arrival, began to evince their ancient spirit of clannishness, finding some cause of disagreement over often very trifling matters. This soon led to a secession, on a small scale—some twenty-five persons, including the Little Valley portion, retiring from the contracted quarters of the common hut or cabin, and erecting a separate shelter for themselves on the east side of Little Sugar river, about eighty rods from the main habitation, and close to the bridge, on the road leading east from the settlement. But in the ensuing spring, they assisted the others in building additional cabins, and rejoined the main body. Several families, however, at an early day, abandoned the colony, removing some twelve miles east, into the towns of Mount Pleasant and Sylvester, where much prosperity has attended them. The people have since become more homogeneous, and little, if any, of the old clannish feeling of distrust toward each other is seen or cherished by the younger generation. The beginning was now made, it is true; the land was bought and the people were on it, but the immediate outlook was dismal enough. In a strange land, among strangers, ignorant of the language, manners, customs and mode of farming of the country, and bare of clothing and the necessaries of life, with winter approaching, it certainly looked dark to these settlers; and if it had not been that the sum of $1,000, to meet their necessities, had arrived from the old home, and been made available, it would have gone hard with the colonists. This money was expended for food, tools, and some stock of various kinds, and for building material.

The large cabin or hut, built partly in the hill-side, answered the intended purpose of a makeshift until others could be erected. This original shelter for the colony was so contracted that at night, and on rainy days the inmates were crowded together like sheep in a pen. New log houses, of rude structure, were erected, some twelve to sixteen in number, so as to accommodate the several families, by putting two in each cabin. So, by Christmas the several families were distributed in their new homes, and somewhat prepared for the expected severities of the season.

The first winter was thus encountered, indifferently provided for but fortunately it proved a very mild one. In the following spring, the land was portioned off into sixty lots of twenty acres each, and, according to the arrangement made in Switzerland, each colonist who was the head of a family, twenty-two in number, received twenty acres of tillage or meadow land, the location being determined by lot. The timber lot was, for eight or ten years, held in common, each using, under certain rules what he required; but it was at length divided into two and a half acre lots, and apportioned among the heads of families. It was understood that the value of the land at the time of the purchase,

$1.25 per acre, should be repaid within ten years, by the colonists, without interest; and should any persons abandon their portion before payment, the next emigrant settler arriving might make claim thereto. However, few portions were abandoned, and all were paid before the allotted time expired. The remainder of the allotment tracts, after supplying the original emigrants, was subsequently granted to new comers, to several single men of age, and, in some cases, to widows who claimed them.

After the division had thus been made, each colonist began to clear and break up his lot in small way, in which labor the women rendered assistance, as most of them were accustomed to out-door work from childhood. This breaking was slow and laborious, as teams and plows had not yet been obtained. Most of the first breaking was done with spades and shovels.

Some time during the spring of 1846, drovers from Ohio brought a lot of cows to Exeter, a mining town eight miles east of New Glarus. The colonists hearing of it, at once set out to purchase some; and, being excellent judges, soon selected the best animals of the herd in sufficient numbers to give each family one. These cost $12 apiece, and were paid for out of the unexpended balance of the $1,000 aid, before mentioned. Additional log huts were now erected in sufficient numbers, so that each family had one for its occupation. These were built close together, apart from the twenty acre apportionments, so as to form a small village. In after years, when the several lots had been increased, houses were built upon the farms, while mechanics and tradesmen occupied those in the village.

Progress toward the hoped for independence was for some years very slow, owing in part to poverty, and yet more to ignorance in tilling the soil, and handling the crops after the fashion of this country. Generally in their old Switzer homes, no horses nor plows were used in agriculture; all spading, sowing, mowing, etc., being done by hand. The hay and other crops are carried on the backs of men and women; even manure was, and is, still carried there in tubs made for the purpose, up to the steep mountain slopes where it was used. In fact they were ignorant of all modes of farming, except the care of cattle, in which they excelled.

This beginning certainly looked discouraging to the people. Without money, without skill in a strange land, and among those whose language was different from their own, it required firm determination, courage and faith to hold out. With some, it is likely it was only the want of means to return that prevented their leaving. Most of the men, however, made up their minds to win success by unceasing efforts; They as well as the women, sought and found work elsewhere, the men at the lead mines at Exeter, and Mineral Point, and on the farms of older settlers; the women as domestic servants, washer-women, in fact anything by which they could honestly earn something. Their earnings were scanty—about fifty cents a day being a man's wages, and even this was paid mostly in flour, meat, potatoes and other produce, which they carried home on their backs, often a distance of twenty-five miles. Money was an almost unknown commodity. In this way they managed to live until they could cultivate enough land to enable them to find work and food at home.

As the year advanced, Mr. Streiff purchased four yoke of oxen for the common use of the colony. They were used, in turn, by each family, for breaking up land, drawing wood from the timber tract, or anything else necessary to be done. After one person had used a yoke of cattle the allotted time, he turned them over to the next on the list entitled to them. The oxen are reported to have had as hard a time of it as any of the colonists, if not harder fare, and harder service.

When the colonists went into winter quarters about the close of 1845, much to the regret of all, Nicholas Duerst, one of the pioneer adventurers and locators of the colony, returned to his native Switzerland. J. J. Tschudy was prevailed upon by the friends of the enterprise to take Mr. Duerst's place as leader and advisor to the colonists, and reached New Glarus in the autumn of 1846, and continued his residence there until 1856, securing, in a high degree, the confidence and esteem not only of his countrymen, but of all classes of people. About this time, the connection between the colony and the father-land was, in a great measure, dissolved, the lots having all been disposed of, and paid for. Mr. Tschudy, now advanced in years, resides in Monroe, highly respected for the good services he rendered the New Glarus colony in its infancy, and for his worth as a man and good citizen. The names and memories of the two Duerst's, Streiff, Tschudy, Legler, P. Jenny, Sr., Egger, Streissguth, Zimmerman and Etter, will long be held in grateful remembrance by the people of New Glarus and their descendants.

From this time, 1846, onward, although the progress of the Swiss emigrants was slow, it was sure. The money earned by most of them was carefully hoarded; and as soon as enough was saved to buy a forty acre tract, it was thus promptly invested. The journey to the government land office at Mineral Point, a distance of thirty-two miles, was often made on foot, for prior to 1850, there were few horses in the settlement.

The early unfavorable reports sent home by the discouraged ones, very naturally tended, for some years, to deter others from following; and, until 1850, their numbers were not much increased. After that time, owing to the better and nearer markets, and afterward the outbreak of the Crimean War, and the consequent rise in the price of wheat, at that time the principal product in the New Glarus settlement, a steady acquisition of emigration from Switzerland was received each year, and that mostly of a class who possessed means to buy land and stock, and make needful improvements. At length the long toiled-for result, so anxiously hoped for, yet so long doubted and despaired of by some, was realized beyond expectation. Strong and self-reliant, the colony is not only a success, but is a standing proof of what a small amount of money, well directed and expended, may do to better the condition of the honest poor of over-crowded cities, towns and localities in the old and new world. The money expended has long since been refunded, so that in fact the founding of this colony cost literally nothing, while the benefit to thousands has been priceless.

Owing to the fact that the cheap lands have all been taken up, and there being little disposition to sell among those possessing landed estates, immigration has now almost altogether ceased. On the other hand, many young men, far more in number than the original colonists, have gone to the fertile prairies of the west, in some instances again forming small colonists; but many have dispersed, each striking out for himself.

Many of those first comers, who had nothing but their poverty and their willing hands, are now not only in good circumstances, but wealthy. And all, without exception, of those who retained and practiced the old-time habits of industry, economy, and, above all, sobriety are much better off than it would ever have been possible for them to have become in the country they left, to which, though dear the memory be, few would return to stay. And little need is there to return, for here the Swiss finds everything he left at home, language, people and customs the same, only lacking the towering snow-clad mountain to complete the resemblance.

In sketching briefly the customs and institutions as they now exist here it is proper that the Church and religion of the colonists should be first in order. The first house of worship was built of hewn logs, in 1849, by voluntary contributions of labor and money, and was for the time a roomy and substantial structure. It was also used for school and town purposes. The village school district bought it when the present structure was erected; and when, in process of time, a new school house was needed, it was sold to a farmer living three and a half miles east of the village, who removed it, and now occupies it as a dwelling. The present church was built of stone, in 1858, at a cost of $1,950 in money, and 550 days' work by the members of the congregation. It is a plain structure, with a square tower, surmounted by a dome, and provided with two bells. The first bell was bought by the Rev. Mr. Streissguth in Milwaukee, in 1852. It weighs 327 pounds, and cost $112. The second was bought in 1859, weighing 468 pounds, and cost $172.50, of which $120 was raised by subscription.

Before the arrival of a clergyman, Mr. Tschudy conducted religious services. The first preacher was the Rev. Mr. Streissguth, now of St. Paul, Minn., who was sent to the colony in 1850, and was supported for two years at the expense of parties in Switzerland. He remained five years. He is spoken of as a man of good ability, a true Christian, and in every way worthy and charitable. He had some knowledge of medicine, which he exercised gratuitously for the relief of the sick, at a time when physicians resided at a distance and the people were too poor to employ them. His successor was the Rev. John Zimmerman, now of Burlington, Iowa, who was pastor from 1855 to 1859. He was engaged when Mr. Streissguth left, and on his recommendation. He resigned on account of disagreement with the trustees in matters of government, rules, etc. The present minister, Rev. J. T. Etter, came in 1860, and has uninterruptedly served the congregation ever since and during the eighteen years of his pastorate, he married 115 couples, christened 861 children, and attended the burial of 267 persons. The second church belongs to the Evangelical Association; the members are few, and the manner of worship is identical with that of the Methodists. The first itinerant preachers came into the vicinity in 1847. They gained some converts in spite of the opposition, distrust and dislike with which the colonists regarded any religious innovations. In 1859, they built a large, frame church, on the hill, about two miles from the village; not daring at that time to build in the village, so strong was the prejudice against them. In 1865, this feeling having considerably moderated, the church was removed into the village, and worship is held regularly without molestation or disturbance from others. They now seldom receive any accession to their numbers, which are few; but among them are some of the most worthy and substantial citizens of the colony.

The reason why the New Glarus people have so generally adhered to the faith of their fathers, is, doubtless, because at an early day they organized a Church with regular services after the customs of the fatherland which, with people disposed, as these are, to venerate everything that their ancestors did, went far to strengthen their attachments to their ancient forms of worship.

Of the two Churches, the Reformed Church was first organized in 1849. It has a membership of 170 heads of families, representing about 600 persons. The men of families are alone called upon to contribute for its support; and this is done by levying a tax equally upon all, whether rich or poor, sufficient to pay expenses. The amount is determined by the annual meeting of the male members, at which all rules for the government of the congregation are made and altered; and all such meetings are almost always fully attended, great interest being taken in the proceedings. The congregation is independent of any other Church or synod of the same denomination in America. Repeated efforts have been made by synods to bring them into connection, but all attempts in that direction have encountered an independent spirit of opposition on the part of this society, which would not brook even the semblance of control.

The Church is nominally in connection with the synod of Eastern Switzerland, but the relation is practically of little benefit to either party. The hymn books and catechisms are the same as those used in Switzerland, and are imported as required, none of this kind being printed or used elsewhere in this country. The liturgy is also from the same source, containing prayers which are read for each Sunday, holiday and other occasions of worship. Prayers are always read—never extempore in Church service.

As it may be interesting to others to know how the services are conducted, the following order on Sundays, will give a proper idea: At about 9 o'clock the first bell is rung, not tolled, as in many other churches; and between the first ringing and 10 o'clock, the worshipers begin to come in, taking seats where they please, except that the sexes sit separately on either side of the church. At 10 o'clock both bells are rung, which is the signal that the minister has started from his house, about eighty rods away; the ringing continues until he enters the building, when the people rise as he enters, and remain standing until he reads prayers, and announces the text, and also during the singing, which is led by a good choir of male voices, accompanied by an organ. After the sermon is over, prayers are again read, followed by singing and the benediction. Then follows the singular custom of the female part of the congregation leaving the church first, the bell ringing the while, and the men standing; and not until the last skirt has passed the door, does the male part follow, led by the pastor.

The origin of this custom, according to tradition, is as follows: Some 500 years ago, the Austrians being at war with the Swiss, attempted to surprise the town of Nafels, in Glarus; or, as other traditions have it, a battle occurred between the combatants in the neighboring canton of Grisons or Graubundten. In either case, the circumstances were the same—the people were at church—whether Sunday or holiday is not recorded; but a woman leaving church during service discovered the enemy, and gave the alarm; and, it is related, that the women on that day did valorous service, rolling and throwing rocks upon the enemy, and aiding in a great measure, to gain a decisive victory over their old enemies, the Austrians. Since that time, tradition says, the right and honor are accorded to the female worshipers in all the churches of the canton of Glarus, to leave the church first, the men standing in deference while they pass out. This custom is rigidly, and without exception, kept up here, no matter what the occasion for meeting and worship.

Weddings are for the most part solemnized by the ministers; seldom by justice of the peace. Tuesdays and Thursdays are the only days on which a Swiss will be married; the latter is the favorite day. The other days of the week are not regarded as fortunate; Wednesday is especially considered the most unlucky. Persons about to enter matrimony, some time before the ceremony takes place, go together to the houses of those whom they wish to invite as guests to the wedding, and verbally request their presence. Wedding feasts are of late mostly arranged at a hotel; but formerly at the home of the groom or bride. After being pronounced man and wife, at the church or in the minister's house, the couple, with the invited guests, partake of the wedding dinner, after which dancing is indulged in till a late hour. Before and after the marriage ceremony, the lads and young men salute the bridal party with a profuse discharge of fire-arms. The more noise, the greater the honor. Very rarely do the Swiss here intermarry with the people of other nationalities; almost without exception, they marry among their own country folks.

The baptism of infants is another occasion for a feast. Children are usually christened when less than three months old; and the ceremony takes place in the church, except in a few instances, a god-father and god-mother invariably witnessing the baptism at the altar. According to Church rules, parents are not permitted to act as sponsors. If parents are Church members, no fee is required for weddings, baptisms or funeral services; otherwise a fee is collected, which is paid into the Church fund, and not as a perquisite to the preacher, as in other societies.

When a person dies, the relatives, friends and countrymen are notified by messengers of the time of death and burial; and the accompanying of the dead to their last resting place is a duty which is faithfully fulfilled, over 150 teams being often seen at a funeral. The church bells are made to do duty on all of these occasions. A couple of bell-tolls give notice to the sponsors that the minister is at the altar, ready to proceed with the baptism. On account of the baptisms being always performed at the close of the regular services, the god-mother and child remain in some convenient dwelling near the church, until summoned by the bell. This is so arranged that the congregation may not be disturbed by any fretfulness on the part of the infant, to whom no doubt the services would often become as tedious as they sometimes do to older children, not only in this, but in numerous other churches.

At weddings they ring a merry peal; and at funerals the bells are tolled until the coffin is lowered into the grave. They are also rung twice each day, as is the custom in Switzerland, at 11 A. M., and at dusk every evening, for five minutes each time; and at midnight of the 31st of December they are rung a whole hour, to welcome in the New Year.

Kilbi, as it is termed here—a corruption of Kirchwethe, or church hallowing—is the holiday of all days. The 4th of July is celebrated with American fervor; but Kilbi is a blending of all holidays into one. This day occurs on the last Sunday of September of each year; and, as its name denotes, is strictly a religious festival, being the anniversary of the dedication of the church. On that day the pastor, at the close of the services, dedicates the building anew; and this is as far as religious observances are kept. In the afternoon, target-shooting, and dancing, are moderately indulged in; but Monday is the great day. Strangers come from distance, and neighbors and friends meet, and renew friendships, over loaded tables and foaming glasses. The youth, and, in fact, almost everybody, repair to the village; and music and dancing begin about noon, and are kept up until next morning, at three or more different halls, and all are crowded. In spite of the crowd, and the quantities of beer and wine drank—but stronger drinks are scarce, and consequently so are quarrels—the best of humor and hilarity prevail.

The way these dances are managed is a novelty to Americans. Usually there is a committee of three managers at each dancing place, whose business it is to provide the music, keep order, collect the entrance fee from the male dancers; and, above all, supply them with female partners. For this purpose, the best looking manager is sent with a gay and ribbon-bedecked team, to all places where it is known young ladies live, and politely invite them to take seats in his carriage; and, unless there is a prior engagement, the lasses are always ready to comply. When his carriage is full, he drives to the hall at which he is a manager, unloads, and again sallies forth in another direction until a sufficiency of partners is secured, or the supply of lasses are exhausted. His fellow managers in the mean while keep order, arrange the couples, and direct things generally, for the enjoyment and comfort of all.

A good time is had at the homes, as well the best that can be afforded is cooked and eaten; and among all the cakes and dishes of every kind, honey is accorded a prominent place. Few there are who do not eat bread and butter and honey on Kilbi. The general good time extends into Tuesday, sometimes, but usually Monday night closes the feast, which not only is kept up by the Swiss, but by American youth from a distance, who have learned to share in the celebration.

The earliest attempt at English education was made under difficulties. The first district school was taught in 1847, by Mr. Cowan*—only a short term—in a small log house belonging to Balthasar Schindler. The next school was kept in the house of Matthias Schmidt, in 1848, by a certain James Kilroy, an Irishman; who, as report says, walloped learning into the youth well. But conceive the circumstances: A small log house, a family of nine persons, an Irish pedagogue and about twenty Swiss scholars, all in one room, and not very large at that. Many are still living in this vicinity who belonged to that primitive school; and the log house, the scene of these early pedagogic. exhibitions, is still standing.

A school house was built in 1849 in the village, and Peter Jenny was teacher for some six years. Afterwards J. C. Zimmerman taught three years; and since, with few intermissions, Matthias Steussy has taught the district school in the village for the last eighteen years. All these teachers were Swiss. The outlying districts in the township are taught as is usual by different persons almost every term. Several young men of Swiss descent have qualified themselves for teaching at academies elsewhere; but no "school-marm" has New Glarus ever produced. The reason for this is not apparent, unless it be the general belief here entertained, that much education for a girl will spoil her for a housewife. A knowledge of reading, writing and arithmetic is considered sufficient for women. A girl is early taught the mysteries of cooking, washing and sewing; and her education is not considered complete unless she also understands milking, making butter and cheese and binding grain in the harvest field. In consequence of the active out-door labor, which in addition to their household duties the females perform, they are in general more healthy, robust and fit to fight the battle of life that awaits all, than are their American sisters who seldom allow the summer sun to shine upon their unprotected hands and faces, and who as a rule are hardly allowed the needful exercise which health demands. Weak nerves and hysterics are often the rule with the latter, while with the former they are unknown.

The German schools in the village have been fully as ably conducted as the English. First, a Mr. Ernst and Mr. Tschudy and then the Rev. Mr. Streissguth, and subsequently Rev. Mr. Zimmerman, taught the German school; and, in addition to the ordinary branches of study, included such religious instruction as the rules of the Church required. In 1867 F. Knobel, a teacher from the canton of Glarus, settled here, and has taught German uninterruptedly since his arrival. Christian Luchsinger has taught a German evening school for those who, more advanced in years, and employed in labor, could not attend in day time. German school books were first brought from the old country; but the supply giving out, American printed books were adopted. The desire for education is universal; and, as a whole, the people of New Glarus compare favorably in learning with other rural sections of the country.

The political partialities of the people are largely with the democratic party, two-thirds usually voting that way; and it is another instance of the conservatism of these Swiss settlers that they have adhered, through all changes, to the political creed they first embraced when they settled here. For a man to change his political belief is quite as rare as to change his religion. Among the younger generation the leaning is toward the republican party; but members of both parties have almost unanimously supported at the polls deserving persons who were well known to them, without regard to party affiliations.

Politicians are few; politics being a subject not so much discussed as among Americans. Elections are always conducted quietly, with but little of the jobbing and pettifogging usual at some places. J. J. Tschudy was the first Swiss elected to a County office in Green county. He served as recorder, then register, and afterward served four terms as county clerk. Matthias Marty was county clerk while Mr. Tschudy was register. John Luchsinger has, for the fourth time, been elected to represent the north district of Green county in the legislature, and was the first person of Swiss birth sent to the legislature from Green county, and has served longer than any other representative from that county.

No lawyers have ever found any encouragement to locate in the settlement. The few cases where their aid has been required were managed by the Monroe attorneys. There has been little need of the profession, as the people are too busy and economical to think of litigation.

Mr. Tschudy was the first to render assistance to the sick, having some knowledge of medicine and being provided with a stock of medicines from his father, an experienced physician in Old Glarus. Rev. Mr. Streissguth afterwards administered medical aid to the settlers. A person by the name of Bonjour, a French-Swiss, dispensed drugs; but, in 1853, he was displaced by Dr. Samuel Blumer, a good physician, who arrived from Glarus. He remained here until 1866, when he removed to Iowa. His son, J. J. Blumer, M. D., who received his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania, is now located here, and is justly considered an excellent physician.

There is a fine glee club organized, which contains some good voices, and is, as well as the church choir, under the direction of F. Knobel, the German teacher. The songs and ballads of Switzerland are sung with the same pathos and feeling here as there, and seldom any others. A rifle club, consisting of about twenty members, is active in drill, and numbers many excellent shots, who have won prizes at the annual competitions in this and other States. There are no secret societies whatever, and, as far as known, no members of any in this settlement.

When the Civil War broke out, the Swiss in New Glarus and vicinity furnished their full proportion of volunteers, according to the best authority, about ninety-eight, boys in blue, who did not dishonor the memory of their sires who fought at St. Jacob, Nafels, Morgarten, and other well-fought fields in the father-land.

The people are very conservative in most things, especially in their adherence to the customs and usages of their ancestors, and in their language, religion and politics. It is illustrated by the fact that the same pastor has preached, and the same schoolmaster taught, for eighteen successive years. There has been scarcely any perceptible change or diminution in the hearty, homely manners of the New Glarus people and their descendants; nor in their disposition to work, to economize and achieve independence in all things. Even dame fashion has been able to make but small inroads among the fair sex; a basque, pin-back overskirt, or any other fashionable contrivance, is looked upon as a snare and an abomination by the elderly women; but their daughters trespass somewhat, in a mild way, in that direction. And happily the barbarous fashion of banged-hair has not yet appeared. Should any girl thus attempt to disfigure herself, there would, without doubt, be banging enough from the unfashionable mater familias.

Attachment to the father-land is strong and sincere. From time to time, fully thirty persons, who have gathered a competency here, have returned to Switzerland, some having been twice and even three times; but not to exceed half a dozen have returned to remain. The large farms, grand distances, and enlarged thought of this country tend to give larger views to both sight and mind; so that, it is said, everything in the Old Country appears close and contracted by comparison; and, as some have expressed it, that there seemed to be hardly room to breathe there. Still the love for the "old home," as it is still affectionately termed by all, is undying; and few who were adults when they came here but cherish the wish and hope to behold their loved native mountains once more before they go hence to the undiscovered country.

How long this reverential feeling will continue, will depend upon circumstances; but it would seem, from past experience in Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York, where many whose ancestors migrated 200 years ago, still speak only German, that unless the iron horse finds his way to these hills and valleys, it is more than likely that 100 years hence will make little change in the language and customs of the New Glarus people. With all this adherence to what is ancient, and aversion to mixing, and intermarrying with those of other Nationalities, those who read, and few do not, are well informed, and quick to comprehend whatever is of advantage to themselves, and of general interest. From being almost entirely ignorant of the modes of American farming, they are now considered the equals of the best farmers in the country, taking advantages of, and purchasing the best labor-saving machinery, and in enterprise and endurance are scarcely equaled by any.

In public spirit they are not lacking. In addition to the fine district school house, there has also been built another in which German is taught. In 1870 when a railroad was projected in the vicinity, the township promptly voted $20,000 to aid in building it, besides $100 in cash to assist in defraying the expense of surveying. As yet there is no prospect of the road being built. In 1861 news was received that the town of Glarus, Switzerland, was almost destroyed by fire. In a short time, the sum of $1,250 was contributed, and sent there for distribution among the suffering people.

In 1850 the parsonage was built of hewn logs and framed. It was then considered the finest house in the village. It is still the parsonage, but it is sadly the worse for wear; and we may safely conclude, that in the onward march of improvement, it will soon be supplanted by a much better one.

In 1852 the scarlet fever raged in the colony, and in a short time seventeen children died. In 1854 a new comer arrived, by the way of Freeport, Ill., who was infected with the cholera; and the disease spread, and proved a very sad scourge, no less than twenty-two persons adults, dying in a short time from its ravages.

The town of New Glarus was organized in April, 1850; prior to which, the settlement had been generally known as the Swiss colony, but to those in Switzerland as New Glarus. The territory comprising it had been hitherto attached, for all civil purposes, to the adjoining town of York. The village of New Glarus was laid out and platted, in by Mr. Spangler, of Monroe. During the year, the first framed house was erected by Ott Bros., since of Madison, who opened the first store; and the same year Joshua Wild built a saw mill with an undershot wheel. The first hotel was erected by Baumgartner Brothers in 1853. In 1862 David Klaessy built a grist mill, with two run of stones, propelled by water power; and with this mill was probably connected the first barley hulling machine in Wisconsin. The demand warranted the outlay, as hulled barley soup is a favorite dish among the New Glarus people. In 1867, a brewery was built by Dr. Blumer & Co; and beer has been brewed since, supplying the settlement, which formerly received its national beverage from Madison and Monroe.

Swiss cheese was made by many farmers as early as 1854, and much of an excellent quality was sold; but dairy cheese making has given way to the factory system. The first cheese factory was established in 1870; and since then eight others, large and small, have gone into operation. Three-fourths of the cheese made is Limburger, and is said to pay the maker better than any other variety. The number of cows whose milk is brought to these factories is about 2,500; and fully 600,000 pounds of cheese are now made in a season in the township of New Glarus alone. It is a branch of farming that, on these rolling lands, assures the farmer a steady income. There are no fortunes made quickly by it, but it gives a surer return for labor than any other branch of farming industry, and is a direct benefit to the soil, more land being in grass, and better manured than with grain culture.

The factories are built by the farmers, and leased to cheese makers, who buy the milk at a fixed price, thus differing from many other places, where the farmers hire the cheese maker and divide the net proceeds. Some Swiss cheese is still made here, but not to compare with former years in quantity. Of the cheese product, the most was formerly shipped to Milwaukee, Chicago and St. Louis; but of late, cheese has been sent to Great Britain, and, incredible as it may seem, some even to Switzerland, that land of cheese.

In the year 1849 the stock in the colony, according to the report of the Rev. Mr. Streissguth, consisted of one horse, one bull, forty-one oxen, forty-nine cows, forty heifers and steers two years old, fifty-one calves, fifteen sheep and 482 hogs. The crop of that year was sixty-five bushels of oats, 545 of corn and 495 of potatoes—the product of 104 acres of cultivated land. The population was then rated at 125.

Bilten is the name of a branch of this colony, in the adjoining town of Washington, and was founded in 1847 by the authorities of the parish of Bilten, in Glarus, Switzerland. In that year sufficient funds were sent to Fridolin Streiff, one of the pioneers of New Glarus, to purchase seventeen forty acre tracts; and in the same year twelve families, mostly from the above named parish, settled thereon. The Bilten settlement has shared with the main colony in reputation for thrift and industry; and the people, as a class, are doing well. They have by purchase extended the original boundaries, which were about five miles from New Glarus, so that now the two settlements have blended into one, with no intervening settlers of other nationalities.

The pastors of New Glarus formerly held divine service in Bilten once in four weeks; but for some years this has been discontinued, and those who do not come to New Glarus for worship have themselves built a handsome church, at which preachers from Monroe officiate. The chief branch of farming in this settlement is also the making of cheese, for which the land is well adapted, being rolling, and well watered by brooks and springs; and it now comprises about one-half of the township, being the northern and rougher portion,

Thus, from feeble beginnings, has the New Glarus colony, with its adjacent Swiss settlements, expanded from something over 100 poverty-stricken people, to fully 4,000 in number; and from 1,280 acres of wild, uncultivated land, to over 60,000 acres, transformed into comfortable homes, with all the conveniences, and many of the luxuries of life. With comfortable residences and barns, churches and schoolhouses, fruitful orchards, well cultured fields of golden grain, well filled granaries, with herds on many a hill-side, horses and carriages, and pianos and melodeons scattered here and there through the settlement, the people of New Glarus and their descendants have abundant cause to thank God for the success of the past, and put their trust in him for the future.

December, 1878.

ADDITIONAL NOTES ON NEW GLARUS.

[By J. Jacob Tschudy.]

The colony of New Glarus was founded by an association of several political communities of the canton of Glarus, in Switzerland, who organized themselves into a society under, the sanction of the government of the canton, in the year 1844; and had the following aims or purposes in view for the benefit of the overcrowded population of that small and mountainous canton, which are copied from the records:

1. The emigration shall be executed in common, and directed to one of the States in the northwestern portion of the United States. The idea is to found a community similar to that of the canton of Glarus. The States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri shall be first explored in seeking for a suitable locality for the colony.

2. In the course of 1844, two agents shall be sent to visit those States for the purpose of selecting a tract of land large enough for the experiment, and to arrange the necessary steps to execute the plan in view. These agents shall have the necessary instructions for their work, and be fully empowered to carry the design into execution.

3. Every family willing to emigrate shall receive twenty acres of land; the money to pay for the land shall be advanced by the association. All the expenses of the voyage or emigration must be provided for by the emigrants themselves.

4. The expenses of the agents the association agrees to pay.

5. The several communities are invited to ratify these resolutions, and thereby become members in fact of the association.

These resolutions were ratified by the several communities, and by the government of the canton, who also donated a large part of the expenses of the agents, say about $600. A committee was appointed who drew up the regulations for the rule of the association, which were accepted and ratified; and in the persons of Messrs Nicholas Duerst and Fridolin Streiff, were found and selected the agents for the important trust. They departed for their far-away field of responsible labor the 8th day of March, 1845; and, after a stormy and disagreeable voyage, landed on the shores of the New World, where they were directed to consult a commercial house in New York, and an old countryman, Mr. Blumer, in Allentown, Penn., who would assist them with counsel and every needful help. Mr. Blumer secured Joshua Fry, a man able to speak English, to accompany the agents to the far west', 'and to aid them in carrying out their instructions, which were as follows:

1. The agents will journey from Switzerland, via Havre, to New York.

2. They will find an amount of money (about $2,500) deposited with a house in New York, sufficient to buy a certain quantity of land for the emigrants, according to the respective shares to which they will be entitled.

3. This money they will not draw before they have selected and bought the land, or are ready to buy; and shall be guided in this matter by the counsel or advice of Mr. Blumer, of Allentown.

4. As soon as they arrive in New York, the agents will proceed to the said Mr. Blumer, and ask him either to accompany them, or aid them with his knowledge of the relative advantages of the country in the northwest.

5. In regard to the purchase of the lands, the agents will consider the climate and the nature of the soil, which ought to be as near as possible similar to those in the old country, and suitable for the production of grain and cattle.

6. The agents are not positively bound to purchase government land; but they shall, if possible, try to secure enough that each colonist may have twenty acres, for the amount of money, $1.25 per acre, which is the price of government land.

7. The agents shall try to buy all the land in one tract, well situated in regard to communications with the rest of the State, by means of roads, etc.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

8. After the purchase, the land shall be divided in timber, bottom and field land, so as to make as just a partition as possible.

9. The agents will take charge of the emigrants from St. Louis, where they will wait for them; and when they arrive on the land, the lots shall be equitably distributed to each family.

10. The agents will also have the oversight of the families on their first arrival in the colony; but the emigrants must defray their own expenses.

11. In all important matters, the agents must consult, besides Mr. Blumer, the heads of the commercial house in New York, from which they draw the money.

12. It will be necessary to provide for the breaking up of some land to raise produce for man and beast, for which the agents shall make provisions.

13. The purchase of the land shall be made in the name of the "Emigration Society of the Canton of Glarus." Mr. Duerst will have a plat made of the lands, divided into lots, and numbered, with the names of the owners. The head of every family will draw his lot of twenty acres, and be the exclusive owner. The price thereof, as well as advances made afterwards, must be repaid within ten years, without interest. Mr. Streiff will keep a copy of said plat, and all the papers; also keep an accurate record of the names of all owners, their increase or decrease, etc.

14. The agents will do their utmost to provide, as soon as possible, for the establishment of a Church and school, and for the relief of the poor of the colony.

15. When the agents think that they have executed these instructions according to the best of their ability, Mr. Duerst will promptly return to his father-land.

16. Mr. Streiff will remain with the colonists, and report to the association concerning every thing of interest from time to time; he will also keep accounts of all expenses, etc.

17. Mr. Duerst shall receive for his service $1 per day till his return, with all expenses. Mr. Streiff shall have his personal expenses paid from his departure from home until Mr. Duerst returns to Switzerland; after which he shall receive such remuneration for his services as the executive committee of the association shall consider just and proper.

When the people arrived on the land, in August, 1845, wholly destitute of money, and unable to live through the approaching winter without help, the agents drew on the association, which honored the draft, to the amount of $1,000, which was used to make advances to the families in provisions, cattle, tools, seed, etc. This money had to be refunded, with the price of the lots, within ten years from the foundation of the colony. In 1855, all these debts were fully paid and cancelled, and deeds issued by the association to each owner. Messrs. Fridolin Streiff and Fridolin Egger were at that time the agents representing the association, with full authority to settle with every colonist. The last papers were issued, if I am not mistaken, in 1856; and from that time the so-called colony was perfectly independent of the parent association, although there existed, and yet exists, only the kindest remembrances and relations.

In the fall of 1846, a successor to Mr. Duerst, and assistant to Mr. Streiff, was sent from the old country by the association, in the person of J. J. Tschudy, who arrived at New Glarus, in October, when he at once proceeded to collect some statistics in relation to the financial and agricultural progress of the colony up to that time. On a visit made to every cabin, he found that, although some families were suffering from sickness, and had yet only poor accommodations, still, in general, there was a steady improvement, a hopeful out-look for the future, and reasonable contentment with the new home and the progress thus far made. The winter of 1846—47 was a hard one. From January till the spring of 1847, men and beasts suffered much from exposure in the rough, unfinished huts and stables, and with scarcity of fodder for the cattle. Still, spring found all well, and ready to go to work with a will, and with new courage, to break land, plant and improve according to their best ability. They were, however, often hindered and retarded for want of teams, tools, and other necessaries, which were provided, as far as possible, by advances from the association.

As information was sent by the parent association that more emigrants would be sent in the spring of 1847, the agents bought, by instructions given them, another tract of land in the adjoining town of Washington, on the south, which was also divided into twenty acre lots, and distributed among the new comers in that year. But this second colony never kept together so exclusively as did the men of New Glarus, who named the whole township after their old country home, together with the village therein. The settlers of New Glarus founded their own Church—the Reformed Church—according to the rights and usages of the Old Country; and had their German school from the beginning, as well as an English one. In 1853, the first celebration of the 4th of July was held by a few of the colonists, associating with it the vivid remembrance of a day of festival kept in their father-land—very similar to the American holiday; and, from that time, Independence day has been celebrated every year more or less in the village by all the people, old and young. A number of the primitive settlers have gone to their everlasting rest; but those remaining may be seen on these festive occasions, taking part in the celebration of the 4th of July, which serves to remind them of their native land, and of the battle-day which delivered their ancestors from the tyranny of their oppressors on the 9th of April, 1388, when 800 men of Glarus defeated several thousand Austrians.

I now append the statistics of the colony as I took them on my arrival in the autumn of 1846:

Land broken for tillage, 100 acres, which I think was well done under the circumstances, oxen and plows being owned in common, and had necessarily to be used in rotation, making it often rather difficult to keep the work all going on in peace and harmony. Up to Nov. 20, 1846, there were two births and seven deaths in the settlement. On the 19th of November, in that year, Mr. Streiff brought the first sheep to New Glarus. Lot No. 13 was selected as the village plat, and had thirteen cabins at the time. There were then twenty cabins in the whole colony. Poultry was largely kept, but no enumeration of the number was taken. Garden produce of various kinds was planted on all lots cultivated, and gave very rich returns.

There were at that time in the colony of New Glarus 129 persons, men, women and children; and the number of twenty acre lots taken, and partly improved, twenty-nine. One settler had two horses, while another was the owner of a bull; four yoke of working oxen were held in common by the whole settlement; eighteen cows were held separately, fifteen heifers, twenty-five calves and 199 hogs. Their first harvest, that of 1846, yielded the settlers 700 bushels of corn, and enough potatoes for the use of the colony. All things considered, this was a good showing for the first year's operations, and all seemed satisfied with the results, trusting in the good providence of God that still better days were yet in store for them. Nor were their hopes disappointed.

CHAPTER XXVII.

TOWN OF ADAMS.

The town of Adams embraces congressional township 3 north, range 6 east. It is bounded on the north by the town of York, on the east by Washington, on the south by Jordan, and on the west by Lafayette county. The surface of the town is rather broken, and a good share of it is covered with timber, yet many valuable and well cultivated farms are found here. There are 22,752 acres of farming land in the town, the assessed value of which is $6.01, and total assessed value, $136,849. The total assessed value of all real and personal property is $217,902. In 1875 the population of the town was 913; in 1880, 930. The stock in the town is estimated as follows: 765 milch cows valued at $17,406; 485 horses, assessed value $45.97, total $22,297; 2,295 head of cattle, assessed value, $14.22, total, $32,655; 8 mules, assessed value $47.50, total, $380; 1,272 sheep, assessed value $1.77, total $2,256; 1,713 swine, assessed value $3.88, total, $6,663.

The principal farm products grown in the town of Adams in 1882 were as follows: 3,598 bushels wheat, 68,750 bushels corn, 54,130 bushels oats, 320 bushels barley, 1,954 bushels rye, 4,312 bushels potatoes, 1,360 bushels apples, 40 bushels clover seed, 1,540 tons hay, 42,685 pounds butter, 128,000 pounds cheese. The principal farm products growing in the town at the time of making the assessment in 1883 were as follows; 348 acres wheat, 2,621 acres corn, 2,050 acres oats, 14 acres barley, 155 acres rye, 87 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres potatoes, 65 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres apple orchard, 3,260 acres growing grasses, 5,124 acres growing timber and 2,137 bearing apple trees.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

James Biggs, of Ohio, made the first settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Adams. He came here before the Black Hawk War, intrusted by the government with the work of surveying and subdividing range 6. He finished this work in 1834. While prosecuting his work he discovered on section 8, in this town, a rank growth of what is termed "lead-weed," or more properly "leadplant," called Masonic in an early day, whose roots are said to extend forty feet below the surface. Gen. Biggs knew that both scientists and Indians regarded a line of this weed on the surface as an indication of a fissure that might contain lead, and at odd moments he began to dig there. In 1835 he settled here, but for several years his family spent much of the time at "Hamilton Diggings."

William Brazel, a native of Illinois, came here in 1837, and made a claim on sections 32 and 33; erecting a log house on the latter section. Three years later he moved into what is now the town of Jordan, and entered land on section 4. He erected a log cabin and lived there until 1849, when he sold out and removed to section 32, in the town of Adams, where he had previously entered land. Here he lived until the time of his death, which occurred in 1851. His family still occupy the homestead.

In June, 1837, Jonas Shook arrived in Wiota, where he settled. In 1838, he removed to the town of Adams, this county, locating on section 24, where he purchased forty acres of land on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter:

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

He built a double log cabin, afterwards putting in a substantial stone basement. He lived in the town of Adams until 1881, when he removed to Monroe. Shook's Prairie received its name from this pioneer settler.

Richard Gabriel, a native of Ohio, came to this county in 1838, and entered land on section 13, this town. He lived here a few years, when he removed to the town of York, where he still resides.

William L., James H. and David D. Bailey, Sons of Robert Bailey, came here in 1840, and entered land on section 23. William improved a farm and lived here until 1874, when he sold out and removed to Bremer Co., Iowa, where he still lives. James H. lived here several years, then sold out and removed to Monroe, where he died in 1882. David lived on his farm until the time of his death, which was caused from a cancer in his face.

Matthew Cunningham, a Virginian, came in 1842 and settled on the northwest quarter of section 24. He improved a farm and lived there for several years when he sold out and removed to Iowa county, where he died.

Michael Crotty, one of the pioneers of the town of Adams, was born in county Sligo, Ireland, in 1819. He was there reared to manhood, and was united in marriage with Mary Sweetinan, who was also born in county Sligo. In 1842, Mr. Crotty emigrated to America, and took a claim on section 28, township 3, range 7 east., now known as the town of Adams, in this county. Not having the means to enter the land, he engaged with Jonas Shook, and followed mining during the winter. In the spring he went to Wiota and engaged in mining there. He was there joined by his wife and two children. They lived in Wiota two years, during which time he had entered his land, and had some improvements on it. In 1845, he removed to the Badger Digging on section 11, and engaged in mining there. He employed a man to improve his farm, and he also erected a log cabin. He continued to follow mining until 1846, then removed to his farm, and devoted his time thereafter to farming, and is now one of the substantial moneyed men of the town. He owns 640 acres of land, and is extensively engaged in stock raising. He also owns valuable mill property in Argyle. His wife died in 1857, leaving four children—John, Patrick Nancy and Joseph. He was married the second time to Marcella Gavigan. They have five children—Michael, Sarah, Francis, George and Joseph.

In 1843 Cutler Wilkins came from near the State line and settled on the northeast quarter of section 31. He remained a few years, then sold to Richard Scott, and moved away.

Davis Roub came in 1844 and claimed the southeast quarter of section 33. He remained there seven or eight years, and then removed to Dane county, where he still lives.

Samuel Kelly, a native of Kentucky, came here from Ohio in 1844 and lived for two years in the town of Clarno. In 1846 he settled on section 34, in the town of Adams, where he improved a farm and remained until the time of his death, in 1870.

Martin Mullin, one of the pioneers of the town of Adams, was born in county Sligo, Ireland, in the year 1800. When twenty years old he left his native land and came to America. He spent four years in the States of New York and New Jersey, then returned to Ireland and was married to Jane Wallace, also a native of county Sligo. Four months later he came to America, accompanied by his bride; They first settled in New Jersey, where they lived two years, then removed to the State of New York, and lived there three years. They then immigrated to Illinois and settled near Joliet, where he was engaged upon a canal. Four years later they removed to Stephenson county, in the same State, and there bought and improved land near Davistown. They remained there until the spring of 1844, when he came to Green county and made a claim on section 19, township 3, range 6. During the summer he erected a log cabin and cut some hay upon his claim. He then returned to Illinois and harvested his crops. He traded his land there for stock. In the fall of the year he removed with his family to this county. The following spring he broke a small tract of land and put in a crop of corn. He also raised a crop in Stephenson county up—on land which he had rented. He afterwards devoted his time to farming upon his own land, clearing and fencing over 100 acres. He built a frame house and barn, and made this his home until the time of his death, which occurred in March, 1872. His widow still resides at the homestead. They were the parents of six children—James, Frank, Mary A., Robert, Charles and John. Mary A. died at the age of two years and four months.

Frank Mullin, chairman of the town board of Adams, was born in the State of New York, Feb. 18, 1837, and was seven years old when he came to Green county with his parents. He received his education in the schools of Stephenson Co., Ill., and those of the town of Adams. He was married Feb. 28, 1867, to Mary Barry, a native of Green county. He had previously traded for a farm of 200 acres on sections 7 and 8, of the town of Adams. Upon the place was a log cabin in which they began housekeeping. Four years later he built the frame house they now occupy. They have six children—Joseph, Frank, Martin, Elizabeth J., Edward and William. Mr. Mullin has been a member of the town board several terms, and is serving his second term as chairman.

Another, old settler of the town of Adams was William Morrison, who came from Ohio at an early day and located on section 35.

R. M. Jackson, a native of Pennsylvania, came from Illinois in 1845 and entered land on section 12. He improved part of the land and lived here until 1861, when he sold out and removed to Monroe, where he kept the Junction Hotel (which he erected) for a short time, and then went to Missouri. Reuben Holcomb came at about the same time. He was a native of the State of New York, but came here from Iowa Co., Wis. In the fall of 1845 he purchased the northeast quarter of section 13, but did not settle here until 1850. He still lives on that section.

David Covey, a native of Cayuga Co., N. Y., came to Green county in 1845 and settled on the Rust Branch, in the town of Jordan, where he purchased 200 acres of land. He was a shoemaker by trade, and spent a good deal of time working at his trade, aside from improving his farm. In the fall of 1847 he sold out and moved to what is now the town of Adams, purchasing 200 acres of land on section 19. He put up a log house near Dougherty's Branch, and lived there six years, then removed to Argyle, where he worked at his trade and bought the Cottage Inn, and ran hotel. In 1861 he sold the hotel building and erected a larger one, naming it the American House, and ran this hotel until the time of his death, in April, 1874. His widow still lives in the village, and his son, David S., now manages the hotel.

George Devoe, one of the pioneers of the town of Adams, was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., March 14, 1806. He was married to Elizabeth Kinney, a native of the same county. In 1815 they emigrated to Michigan, going by land, to Buffalo, thence by the lakes. They lived in Jackson county, where they rented land until 1845, then with one ox team, the family started west to seek a home, taking with them their household goods and camping out by the way. They came to the Territory of Wisconsin and made a claim near the present site of the village of Wayne. He built a log cabin and lived there until July of that year, then sold out and came to Green county, making a claim on section 6 of what is now the town of Adams. He had three yoke of oxen and engaged in teaming lead from Mineral Point to Milwaukee, a distance of 125 miles. He built a log house and made some improvement on his land that fall, and the following year raised a crop of spring wheat and some corn. At that time he had seven sons, some of them grown, and the boys were engaged in mining, teaming, and farming. Game was plenty, and the boys being expert deer hunters, kept the family well supplied with meat. In 1861 Mr. Devoe removed to Argyle, where he bought a house and lot and spent the remainder of his days. He died July 8, 1862. His widow now lives with her son, William A., in the town of Cadiz. There were twelve children born to them, six of whom are now living—Orson B., George S., Loron B., William A., Phebe A. and Mary A. George S. Devoe now owns and occupies the old homestead. He was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., April 4, 1833, and was but four years old when his parents moved to Michigan, and twelve years old when they settled in this county, where he grew to manhood. He assisted his father in clearing a farm, in mining, teaming, etc., and shared with his brothers the pleasures of hunting and fishing. He was married, Dec. 6, 1855, to Oretta M. Oviatt, who was born in the State of Ohio, June 9, 1839. He bought forty acres of land on section 7. He built a house on his father's land and lived there one year, then moved to Lafayette county and rented land three years, then returned to the town of Adams and settled on the old homestead. They have six children living—William S., Richard L., Lawrence G., Charley W., Clarence O. and Millie A.

Reuben Holcomb, one of the early settlers of the town of Adams, was born in Monroe Co., N. Y., May 16, 1816. When he was one year old his parents moved to Niagara county and settled in the town of Hartland, where, six years later, his father died. After this he lived in different places in the State of New York, until he was twenty-five years old. He then went to Michigan and located in La Pere county, living there and in Oakland county until 1844. In that year he came to the Territory of Wisconsin, and settled in that part of Iowa county now known as Lafayette county, remaining there until the spring of 1845, when he came to Green county and spent two months. He then went to Michigan and remained through the summer. In the fall of that year he returned to Iowa county and entered land in the town of Fayette. The next four years he spent in Iowa and Green counties, working as carpenter and joiner. In 1849 he bought eighty acres of land of Richard Gabriel, on section 13, of the town of Adams, and soon after entered adjoining land. He was married in 1855, to Sarah E. Wilderman, who was born in St. Clair Co., Ill. They settled upon his land on section 13, going to house-keeping in a small log house that was standing upon the place. In 1866 he built a good frame house which they now occupy. He now owns 300 acres of land, and is engaged in grain and stock raising, also keeps a dairy. Mr. and Mrs. Holcomb have had five children—James A., Ernest, Florence M., Reuben and Jennie L. In 1853 Mr. Holcomb's mother came to Green county, and died here in the fall of that year. Their daughter, Florence M., died at the age of seventeen months.

Russell Allen, a stone mason by trade, came here in 1846 and erected a cabin on section 24. He remained in the town, working at his trade in the summer and mining in the winter for several years, and then removed to Iowa.

Levi C. Allen, a native of New York, came at the same time and settled on the northeast quarter of section 1. He died there about twelve years later, and his family soon afterward went to Polk Co., Iowa, where they now live.

Uriah G. Bailey, a pioneer of the town of Adams, was born in Jackson Co., Ga., in March, 1808. In 1811 his parents moved to Kentucky and settled in Logan county, where they lived three years, then removed to Illinois and settled at Saline Salt Works. Two years later they removed to Sullivan Co., Ind., where they were among the early settlers. They remained there six years, then removed to Vermilion Co., Ind., thence to Vermilion Co., Ill. Here his father bought timber and prairie land and improved a farm. The subject of this sketch remained with his parents until the time of his marriage in 1835, to Harriet McMillan, a native of Licking Co., Ohio. He bought land in Vermilion county, on which they settled, and lived until 1846. He then sold his land and came to Green county, moving with teams and bringing their household goods. They also drove some cows and sheep along with them. He entered 200 acres of land on section 13, of the town of Adams, upon which he built a log house in which they lived several years. He then erected a good frame house. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey had five children, only one of whom is now living—William E. Mrs. Bailey died in 1878.

William E. Bailey was born in Vermilion Co., Ill., in January, 1836, and was ten years of age when he came with his parents to Green county. He grew to maturity in the town of Adams, receiving his education in the district school. He was married in April, 1857, to Jane McDonald, and settled on his father's farm. In September of the same year, his wife died. He was again married in 1859, to Synthia Long, who died April 10, 1870, leaving three children—William G., John R. and Priscilla. His third wife was Lydia Shrake, and they were married in October, 1874. Five children have been born to them—Elsie, Edith, Florence, Alma and Adam. Florence died in infancy.

Oliver Fuller, a native of Cornwall, Conn., came in 1846, and settled on the southeast quarter of section 19. In 1850 he sold out and removed to Monroe, and later to Wiota, where he died in June, 1882.

Adam Shrake, a native of Licking Co., Ohio, came to the county in the fall of 1847 and settled in the town of Monroe. In 1869 he came to the town of Adams, settling on section 24, and remained until 1881 when he went to Brule Co., Dak.

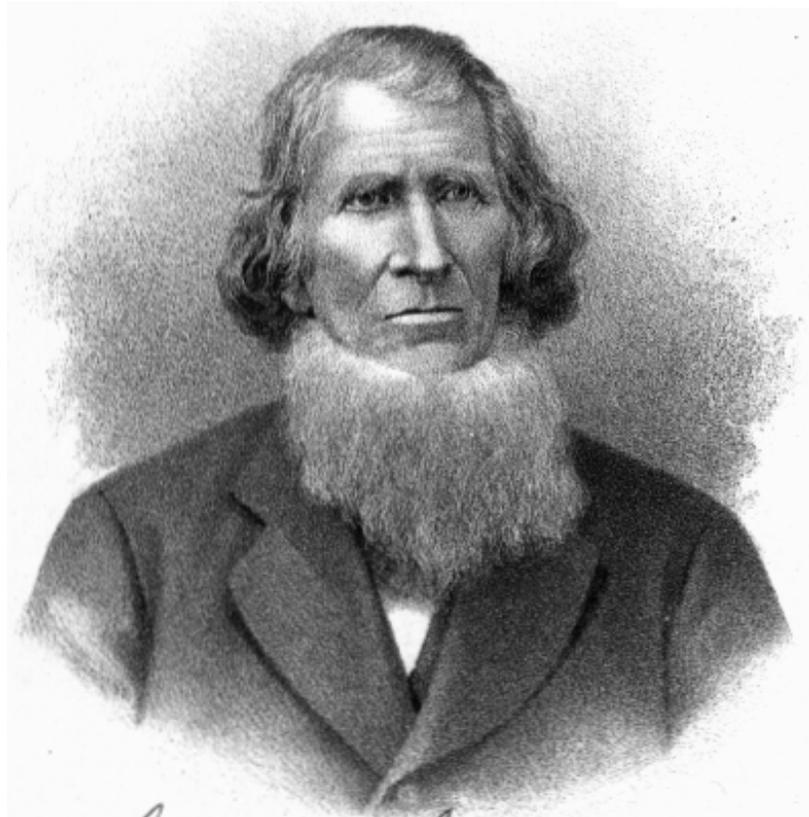

Orville Spaulding, a New Yorker, came in 1847 and entered land on section 1. In 1849 he built the first frame house in town. He remained here six or seven years, then sold out and went to Ohio, where he has since died.

Robert P. Grinnell, a native of New York, came here in 1847 and entered forty acres on section 1. He improved a farm and lived there several years, and then moved to section 12, where he died.

Robert P. Grinnell, one of the pioneers of the town of Adams, was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., July 16, 1795. When he was young his parents moved to Fulton county, where he grew to manhood and was married to Esther J. Montgomery, who was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1805. They lived in Fulton county until 1836, then removed to Monroe county in the same State, where they rented a farm until 1847. In that year they came to Wisconsin, traveling upon the Erie canal to Buffalo, and thence upon the lakes to Racine, where he hired teams to complete the journey to Green county. He entered land on section 1, township 3, range 6, now known as Adams. He built a log cabin and commenced improving the land. He soon after entered other land on section 6 of the town of Washington, a portion of which he improved. In 1859 he traded for land on section 12, to which he removed, and built a frame house and barn. He made this his home until the time of death which occurred in 1868. His widow lives with her son Amos, in Iowa. They were the parents of five children—Amos L., Willard E., Silas M., John F. and Elizabeth M.

John F. Grinnell is the only one of the children now living in the town of Adams. He was born in Fulton Co., N. Y., July 21, 1829, and was eighteen years old when he came with his parents to Green county. Here he was employed in farming in the neighborhood, in the summer seasons, and attended school winters. In the spring of 1849 he went to the pineries on the Wisconsin river and engaged in rafting lumber down stream to St. Louis. He was married in 1853, to Catharine Shook, who was born in St. Clair Co., Ill., Oct. 3, 1831. He built a log house on section 12, where he had previously purchased land, and commenced housekeeping. He has since improved a large farm and erected a good frame house and barn. he now owns 320 acres of land, and is engaged in raising grain and stock. He pays particular attention to the raising of fine horses, and always drives a good team. Mrs. Grinnell died Jan. 6, 1871, leaving two children—Garrett C. and Harry B. Mr. Grinnell was again married June 4, 1873, to Sarah Perkins, a native of the province of Ontario, Canada. By this union there are two children—Dorman M. and Edith.

George Georchick

Among the arrivals in 1848 were James Land, Giles M. King and E. D. Jackson, who came from Ohio. Mr. Land entered land on the south half of section 11, and improved a farm. About 1860 he sold out and removed to Cadiz. He died in Monroe in 1881. Mr. King settled upon the southeast quarter of section 2. He lived here until 1863, when he removed to Monroe, where he now lives. He is a carpenter and joiner. Mr. Jackson located on the southwest quarter of section 12. He improved, a portion of the land and lived there about twelve years, when he removed to Monroe. He now lives in Illinois.

George Smith, a native of England, came in 1850, and settled on the southwest quarter of section 17. He was a single man, and kept "bachelor's hall" in the little log cabin which he erected upon his place. He remained in the county a number of years, and then removed to Iowa, where he died.

Edmund Barry, a native of Ireland, came here in 1850, and lived nearly one year on Shook's Prairie, then settled on land he had entered on sections 20 and 21, erecting a house on the latter section, where he still lives.

Richard Scott came to Green county in 1851, and purchased 120 acres of land on section 31. Twenty acres of improved land, a log house and stable constituted the improvements on the place at that time. He now owns 280 acres of good land, and is engaged in farming and raising stock. He was born in that part of Wayne county now known as Ashland Co., Ohio, Nov. 2, 1819. In September, 1840, he was united in marriage with Sarah McCauley. They settled on his father's farm, and lived there six years, then removed to Illinois by team. They started on the 10th of May, and arrived in Stephenson county on the 9th of June. He purchased sixty-five acres of land, which he improved, living there until 1851, when he removed to Green county, as before stated. Mrs. Scott was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., July 26, 1821. She died Jan. 31, 1867, leaving five children—Jacob, Sarah J., Franklin P., James B. and Lizzie A.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

The first birth in the town was Julia, daughter of Gen. James and Angeline Biggs, who was born in 1835. She is now the wife of Jackson Andrews, of Lyon Co., Kan.

The first death was that of an infant daughter of William and Mary Brazel, in 1838. She was buried at Wiota.

The first election in the town was held at the house of James H. Bailey.

POSTOFFICES

Willett post office was established in 1848, with Jonas Shook as postmaster. It was on the route from Belvedere and Beloit to Mineral Point. Mr. Shook served as postmaster for eight and a half years, when he resigned and the office was discontinued. It was soon afterwards re-established, with Eliphalet Bray as postmaster. He served several years. The present postmaster, William Montieth, was appointed in 1884. Mail is received tri-weekly.

William Montieth, the postmaster of Willett, was born in Wigtownshire, Scotland, March 18, 1827. When he was eighteen years old, he went to England and spent two years, then returned home and engaged to learn the trade of stone mason, at which he worked in his native country until the fall of 1850, then came to America, first stopping in Caledonia Co., Vt., where he spent the winter, then starting west, spent some time in Ohio and Indiana, then come to Grant Co., Wis., where he worked at his trade for several years. His parents joined him there and he bought a farm on which they settled. In 1856, he went to Kansas, and was there two years of those stormy times preceding the "Great American Conflict" at arms. In 1858, he returned to Grant county and there remained until 1860, then went to the Carabou mines in British Columbia and lived two years, then to Oregon, California and Nevada, engaging in mining, principally, until 1864, when he came to Green county and engaged to build a flouring mill for Mathew Newkirk. After the mill was completed he was employed by Newkirk, to take charge of the farm and the mines. In 1868, he bought the place and has since made it his home. The farm contains 240 acres, all improved except twenty acres of timber. He was married in 1866, to Mary Bleiler, a native of Germany. They have eight children—Jessie, St. Clair, William, Henry, Robert, John, Edward and Isabella.

A post office, called "Walnut Springs," was established in 1848, with James Biggs as postmaster. The office was on a route from Madison to Wiotia, and mail was received once each week. It was discontinued after a few years.

ORGANIZATION.

The town of Adams was organized in the spring of 1849, at an election held at the house of J. H. Bailey, on section 23. There is no record of this election, but the following, it is learned, were among the officers elected at that time: Supervisors, Samuel Kelley, chairman, Mathew Cunningham and John Morrison; clerk, T. M. Biggs; treasurer, James H. Bailey; school superintendent, James Biggs; constable, J. F. Wescott; justice of the peace, Amos L. Grinnell.

At an election held on the 2d of April, 1850, of which Reuben Holcomb and Silas Grinnell were clerks, the following officers were elected:

Supervisors, Samuel Kelley, chairman, Russell Allen and John Morrison; superintendent of schools, James Biggs; clerk, R. M. Jackson; assessor, James Ticknor; justices of the peace, James Biggs, Amos L. Grinnell, Cutler Wilkins and Russell Allen; constables, Erastus R. Allen, W. E. Grinnell and Thomas Steele. For the office of treasurer there was a tie between Levi C. Allen and Samuel Kelley, which by lot, resulted in favor of the former. Among others who have been prominent in town affairs are the following: Jonas Shook, John F. Grinnell, William Monteith, Adam Shrake, Frank Mullin, Thomas Byrne, Fred Hunnell, Jonas Land, A. L. Grinnell, James Smith, Royal M. Jackson, Richard Scott, L. P. Duncan, Joel Kelly, T. M. Biggs, E. D. Jackson, C. M. Ball, Henry Gilligan and Gen. E. D. Bray.

A very sad accident occurred in the town of Adams, at the raising of a log house for a Mr. Morrison, which resulted in the death of James Brown. In fitting the logs at the end it became necessary to cut away a small portion, and in turning the log over Mr. Brown slipped and fell, the log following, striking him on the head and killing him. Mr. Brown was a young man, and well known, and the accident cast a deep gloom over the entire community.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school house in district No. 1 was erected on section 13 in 1848, before the district was organized. U. G. Bailey, Jonas Shook, R. M. Jackson and Matthew Cunningham furnished the logs, and Richard Gabriel helped them erect the building. Mr. Cunningham went to Milwaukee and got the shingles. Mrs. Ann Carr taught the first school in this district. The school house was in use but a few years when a frame school house was erected on the south line of section 14, in which Addie Newman was first to teach.

The first school in district No. 6 was taught by Elizabeth Brazel in 1866 in the house of Knud M. Lee. During the same year a stone school house was built in the northern part of section 10. Francis Cleveland was the first teacher in this house,

The first school house in district No. 2 was on section 35. It was built in 1864. The first teacher in this house was W. H. Morgan.

The first school house in district No. 5 was erected of logs on section 22, in 1854. Sarah Scott and Sarah Wilderman were the first teachers in this house. Since then another log school house—the only one in the town—has been erected on the northeast quarter of section 20.

The first school taught in district No. 7 was in a log cabin on the southwest quarter of section 24, in 1841. Jeff Wescott was the teacher.

The first school house in district No. 7 was erected in 1851, and was a brick building. The first teacher was Mrs. Freeman Derril. She went to the town superintendent for a certificate, and upon her return one of the neighbors asked if she had passed the examination, and she answered, "yes." The neighbor then enquired how many questions were asked and she replied: "Two; the first was "can you write?" and the second was "can you write your certificate?" She replied that she could, and did. The first school house was used until the present building was erected near the old site, in 1875.

The first school house in district No. 3 was erected in 1852 in the northern part of section 32. Sophia Scott was the first teacher in this building. The school house was removed to section 29 and used until 1879, when the present building was erected on section 32. William Dowling was the first teacher in this house.

The first school house in district No. 4 was erected of logs in 1851, near the centre of section 8. Miss A. Corbin was the first teacher in this house. The present school building was erected in 1881, on the same section. It is frame. The first teacher in this house was Clara Corson. Previous to the erection of the first school house, Altheda Corbin taught a term of school in Gen. Biggs' house.

MILLS.

In 1845 a saw mill was erected on section 21, by Charles and Chauncey Smith, the power being derived from Daugherty's creek. It was run by a scroll wheel with some reaction buckets. The mill did a good business for several years when it was washed away by a flood. At this time it was owned by Hilliard & Ball. Soon afterward they erected a woolen factory which was run successfully for several years. Leander Stevens bought the mill and put in two run of stone for grinding corn and wheat, and ran it for some time.

RELIGIOUS—LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The first meetings of this denomination were held at private houses by Rev. Monk, from Wiota, services were held at different private houses until 1865 when a neat frame church building was erected on section 3, Rev. J. Fjld, from Dane county, was the first preacher to hold services in the church. Since then Rev. Halend and Rev. C. Aas, have served as pastor, Rev. T. Reamstad, from Argyle, is the present pastor. There are, now about sixty families belonging to this church.

ST. FRANCIS CHURCH.

The first mass in the town of Adams was held at the house of Michael Crotty in 1852, by Father Dailey from Shullsburg. Services were held at other private houses for some years, including those of Martin Mullin, Edward Barry, Eugene Knight, Stephen Murphy and John Finn. In 1861, a frame church was erected on the southwest quarter of section 21, in which Father O'Conner was the first priest to say mass.

There is a cemetery in connection with the Catholic Church. The first burial in it was of the remains of John Gallagan.

LEAD MINES.

In early days the lead mines of Adams bore the names of Badger and Newkirk diggings. They were located on sections 4, 5, 8, 10, 11 and 24. This matter received further attention elsewhere in this volume,

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following are a few, of the representative and prominent citizens of the town of Adams:

Levi P. Duncan, an early settler in Green county, was born in Miami Co., Ohio, Jan. 18, 1827. When a young man he engaged with a brother-in-law, Steward McMillan, to learn the trade of wagon-maker. In 1847 they came to Monroe, Green county, where Mr. McMillan opened a wagon shop, and the subject of this sketch worked with him until 1851. In that year he bought a farm on section 31, of the town of Adams. The improvements upon the land, at the time of his purchase, consisted of a partly completed log cabin and a few acres of broken land. He now has a good frame house, and quite a tract of land under cultivation. He was married in 1850, to Adeline A., daughter of Amos and Elizabeth (Haynes) Doane. They have one daughter—Jennie. Mr. Duncan is a preacher of the Baptist denomination. He first preached, under special license, in the town of Jordan, in 1854. He was ordained at Juda, in 1858, since which time, he has been engaged in preaching at different points in Green, Lafayette and Dane counties. Their daughter, Jennie, was married to Alex. E. Patterson, who was born in Scotland, and came, when very young, with his parents to America. He grew to manhood in Lafayette county. In 1862 he enlisted in the service of the United States, and was mustered in as corporal. He served until the close of the war. He was with Sherman on his march to the sea and through the Carolinas to Washington, participating in many of the important battles of that memorable campaign. He was discharged in July, 1865, and returned home broken down in health. He never recovered his former vigor, and died April 7, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson had three children—John, Charles and George.

Eliphalet D. Bray came to Green county in 1851, and settled in the town of Adams. He purchased 640 acres of land on sections 5, 8, 8, 9, 13, 15 and 16. He built a log house on section 15, and commenced improving the land. He made his home, there until the time of his death, Sept. 5, 1860. He was born in Oxford Co., Maine, in 1798. When he was quite young his parents removed to Franklin county in the same State where his father bought timber land and improved a farm. There the subject of this sketch spent his youth. When a young man, he joined the State militia, and was commissioned as colonel and brevetted general. He was known throughout the State as "Gen. Bray." He became interested in lumbering, and for several years was prominent among the lumbermen of Franklin and Somerset counties. He was at one time a member of the legislature from his district. In 1834 he was married to Caroline Chipman, a native of Oxford county. They settled at the time of their marriage, in New Portland, Somerset county. He bought unimproved land and made a farm. They began housekeeping in a log house, but soon after built a frame house, in which they lived until 1848, when he sold his farm and removed to Franklin county, where they remained till 1851. Sixteen children were born to them, nine of whom are now living. Mrs. Bray remained at the homestead until 1863, when she was married to Benjamin Thompson, and lived on section 1. Mr. Thompson died a few years later and she returned to Maine, where she now lives with her youngest son, in Somerset county.

George Bray was born in Somerset county, Sept. 21, 1835, and is the son of Eliphalet and Caroline Bray. He was sixteen years old when he came to Wisconsin. He resided with his parents until his father's death. He was married in 1861, to Annie E Garrison, a native of Augusta, Maine, and settled upon the homestead farm, where he lived two years. He then built a frame house on section 16, upon land which his father had entered. He improved a farm and remained there until 1869. In that year he sold his farm and went to Maine and staid five months, returning at the end of that time, to the town of Adams. In 1870 he bought a farm on section 14, upon which he now resides. He owns 260 acres of land, and is engaged in raising grain and stock. Mr. and Mrs. Bray have two children—Norris E. and George W.

Erastus Mosher was a pioneer of Lafayette county, having settled there in 1845. He made a claim in township 3, range 5, now the town of Argyle. He remained there until 1854. In that year he sold out and came to Green county. He purchased ninety-three acres of land on section 7, of the town of Adams, upon which he built a log house and later a frame house, and resided here until the time of his death Aug. 10, 1882. He was born at Binghamton, Broome Co., N. Y., Oct. 11, 1807. When he was quite young his parents moved to Tioga county in the same State, where he grew to manhood and worked at farming summers, and at lumbering winters, rafting lumber down the Susquehanna river. He was married in Bradford Co., Penn., in 1832, to Polly Smith, who was born in Vermont in 1808. He bought a farm in that county and remained there until 1845. In that year they came overland to Wisconsin, traveling with a team of horses and wagon, and bringing a portion of their household goods. They were five weeks on the road, arriving in Lafayette county on the 12th day of June. Mr. and Mrs. Mosher had nine children—Alba D., Lucy C., Ezra, Lettie, Frank, Caroline, James D., Lucinda and Charles A. Mrs. Mosher died in April, 1882. Alba D., Lucy C. and Charles A. now live at the homestead. Ezra lives in Lyon Co., Kansas. Lettie is the wife of George Statser, of Argyle. Frank and James P. died in the service during the late War. Lucinda is the wife of Levi Helm, of Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Caroline died April 20, 1857.

Milo Smith is a native of Bradford Co., Penn., born Nov. 12, 1823. He was reared upon a farm, and in 1844, came to the Territory of Wisconsin and located in Lafayette county where he remained about a year. He then came to Willet and worked few months in his brother's saw mill. He was taken sick here, with fever and ague, and was unable to do any work for several months. He next went to Lafayette county and entered land near Fayette and engaged in farming. March 13, 1850, he was married to Caroline Kelley, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Henderson) Kelley, and settled at Moscow, Iowa county, where he operated a carding machine five years. He then moved to Mitchell Co., Iowa, where he entered 200 acres of land, and lived two and a half years, then sold out and went to Grundy Co., Mo., remaining there also three and a half years, after which he returned to Green county and settled near Monroe. In 1864 he rented a farm on section 34, of the town of Adams, and in 1866, purchased his present farm, in another quarter of the same section. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have nine children—Mary, Joel, Miranda, Amy, Ella, Lizzie, Kate, Esther A. and John.

Ezra and John Blumer, sons of John and Dorothy Blumer, settled on their present farm in 1867. It is located on sections 12 and 7, of the towns of Adams and Washington, and contains 348 acres. They erected a frame house and a frame barn with a stone basement and have since engaged in grain and stock raising, making a specialty of Holstein cattle.

Ezra Blumer was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 18, 1839, and came to America with his parents when fourteen years of age. He worked at farming in different parts of Green county until 1863. In that year he enlisted in company K, of the 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, went south and joined Sherman's army. He participated in the march to the sea and through the Carolinas to Washington, taking part in the many important battles of that memorable campaign. He was discharged in July, 1865, and returned to Green county. In 1867 he was married to Henrietta Grosse, a native of Germany. Ten children have been born to them—Rosa, John, Wilhelm, Ezra, Annie Edward, Ferdinand, Henrietta, Bertha and Caroline.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

John Blumer was born in 1840, and was thirteen years of age when he came to America with his parents and settled in Green county. He was employed in farming until 1861, when he enlisted in company K, of the 9th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He veteranized in 1863, and served until the close of the war. He was discharged with the regiment in February, 1866. He is unmarried and resides with his brother, Ezra. They came to this county poor, but were industrious and prudent, and at the time when they purchased their present farm had, each, $1,000 which they had earned. They now rank among the solid farmers of Green county.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

TOWN AND VILLAGE OF ALBANY.

The town of Albany is one of the eastern tier of Green county's subdivisions, comprising congressional township 3 north, range 9 east, except 320 acres of section 6, which has been annexed to Brooklyn. To the north of Albany lies the town of Brooklyn; its east line forms the Rock county boundary; and to the west and south are the towns of Mount Pleasant and Decatur, respectively. The surface is diversified. In the southwestern portion of the town the surface is made up of a gently undulating prairie. Along Sugar river—which stream crosses the town from north to south—a good deal of sand is found. In the northeastern part of the town the soil is a rich dark loam, underneath which is a subsoil of clay. Originally there was a good deal of timber covering this territory, much of which still remains.

The town of Albany is reported as having 22,412 acres of land, assessed at $15 per acre. The total value of real and personal property is assessed at $490,650. The population of the town in 1880 was 1,133. The principal farm products grown in the town during the year 1882 were as follows: 1,640 bushels of wheat; 89,250 bushels of corn; 84,810 bushels of oats; 1,070 bushels of rye; 6,755 bushels of potatoes; 4,000 bushels of apples; 15 bushels of clover seed; 65 bushels of timothy seed; 2,200 pounds of tobacco; 47,070 pounds of butter. The principal products growing in the town at the time of making the annual assessment in 1883 were as follows: 88 acres wheat; 3,308 acres corn; 2,811 acres oats; 5 acres barley; 78 acres rye; 96 acres potatoes; 130 acres apple orchard; 3,050 bearing trees; 5 acres tobacco; 2,273 acres grass; 2,850 acres growing timber. There were 635 milch cows, valued at $15,695. The live stock in the town was divided as follows: 585 horses, average value $50.70, total $29,290; 1,602 head cattle, average value $14.13, total $22,695; 2 mules, average value $35, total $70; 6,065 sheep and lambs, average value $1.63, total $9,935; 1,620 swine, average value $3.69, total $5,990.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler within the limits now comprising the town of Albany was James Campbell, a native of the State of Pennsylvania. As early as 1839 he came here and made a claim of the northeast quarter of section 32, and during that year he commenced improvements and hired some breaking done. During the winter of 1839—40 Mr. Campbell erected the first cabin in the town, locating it in the timber land on the southwest quarter of section 30. He had come here for the purpose of getting out rails with which to fence the land. He was accompanied by John Sutherland, who cut and split the rails while Campbell teamed them to his land. At that time they were both single men, and kept "bachelor's hall" for about six weeks in their little log cabin. In 1840 Campbell put in his first crop. Late in the fall of the same year, he was married, and the following spring they settled upon the farm. This family were the only settlers in the town until 1842. The Campbell family receives such elaborate attention in the general chapters, that it is unnecessary to mention them further in this connection.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Hiram Brown, a native of Massachusetts, came here in March, 1842, and entered the southeast quarter of section 22, and later, land on sections 23 and 26. He improved a large farm and lived here until 1874, when he sold out and removed to Nebraska, settling in Harlan county, where he still lives. He was an enterprising, well educated and informed man, and was prominently identified with all public moves in this region during his residence in Green county. At an early day he was admitted to the bar and was one of the first justices of the peace for the town of Albany.

John Broughton, a native of the State of New York, came here in 1842 and entered land on section 36, where he still lives.

John Broughton, one of the earliest settlers of the town of Albany, was born in the town of Hoosic, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and was there reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving his education in the district schools. When a young man he engaged with a carpenter and joiner to learn the trade, after which he became a contractor and builder. In 1841 he came to the Territory of Wisconsin, and located in Racine county, where he bought a farm. In June, 1842, he came to Green county and entered 120 acres of land on section 36, township 3 north, range 9 east now known as the town of Albany. At the same time he contracted with a party to build him a log cabin 15x20 feet, to be covered with shakes, the contract price being $10. He then returned to Racine county, where he lived until August, then moved here with his family and moved into the log cabin, which they occupied for about a year, then built, a small frame house, in which they lived until 1864, when he built the commodious frame house he now occupies. He has also erected a frame barn 36x73 feet, with a stone basement. He has made desirable and useful improvements, among which are shade and ornamental trees, and an orchard composed of a good variety of fruits. He is now the owner of 710 acres of land in one body, the greater part of which is in a good state of cultivation. He was married in 1838, to Amanda Griffin. She was also a native of Rensselaer county. They have eight children—John A., Russell, now practicing physician in Brodhead; Albert L., Delilah, William, Hannah Mary, Eugene and Harriet E. Mr. Broughton has been prominent in town affairs, and held offices of trust and honor. He has assessed the town a number of times, has served as chairman of the board and been justice of the peace. He is a public spirited man and has the respect and confidence of the community in which he lives. Politically Mr. Broughton adheres to the democratic party.

John Warner, a native of Germany, came here from Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1842. He entered the east half of the southeast quarter of section 36, and erected a frame house. In 1844 he sold to Jeremiah Brewer and moved to Rock county. He afterward started for California and was massacred by the Indians while crossing the plains.

John Snell, a German, also came in 1842 and "claimed" the northeast quarter of section 36. In 1843 he sold his claim and removed to the town of Sylvester, where he and his family were found by C. Meinert, in 1845, in very poor circumstances. The whole family were sick in bed, the fire was out and the water in the teakettle was frozen. Martin Sutherland and Mr. Meinert removed the family to Mr. Sutherland's house for better treatment.

Lathrop Abbott came in 1842 and settled on section 26. He fenced forty acres of the land and made other improvements. In 1850 he sold to Abel Peckham and moved west.

S. L. Eldred, another native of the Empire State, came here in 1843 and entered land on section 36, which he still occupies.

Rev. Stephen Leonard Eldred was born in the town of Petersburg, Rensselaer Co., N.Y., July 29, 1815, where his younger days were spent in school and on the farm. He made his home with his parents until November, 1836, at which time he was married to Roxanna Broughton, who was born in the town of Hoosic, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in February, 1818, and rented a farm in the town of Petersburg and there engaged in farming until 1843. On the 4th of January of that year, he started overland for Wisconsin with a team of horses, a wagon and a sled. Wherever there was plenty of snow, he loaded the wagon on to the sled, and when wheeling was the best, loaded the sled on the wagon, thus accommodating himself to all conditions of travel. They reached their destination in Green county February 8. He entered land on section 36, township 3 north, range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany. He erected a small frame house, drawing the lumber from Milwaukee. The family occupied this house a few years, when he erected another frame house in which they lived until 1879, when he built the more commodious house they now occupy. He also built a frame barn 40x60 feet, with a stone basement. He united with the United Brethren Church in 1853, soon afterward commenced preaching and continued in active service until 1874, and has since been engaged in preaching a considerable part of the time, traveling to various parts of the country and carrying the good tidings of great joy. In 1867 he left the farm in charge of his son and moved to Brodhead, where he lived until 1874, when he returned. He has made large additions to his landed estate, and now, owns 680 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Eldred are the parents of seven children—Hannah, Fernando C. now an Episcopal clergyman, now in Pierce Co., Nebraska; Stephen B., Mary R., Sarah L., Alonzo H. and Henry E. Mr. Eldred was one of the first justices of the peace in the town of Albany. Mr. Eldred was originally a Jackson democrat, but has long voted with the republican party.

Stephen R. Eldred, son of Stephen L. and Roxanna Eldred, was born July 31, 1843, in the town of Albany, and was the first male child born in the town. He grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his education in the district school. He was married Dec. 25, 1863, to Mary J. Douw, daughter of Cornelius Douw. She was born at Johnstown, in Rock county. They settled on the old homestead and lived there until 1875, when he located on his present farm on the north half of section 22. The farm contains 360 acres, upon which he has good improvements. Mr. and Mrs. Eldred have three children—Alfred L., Ina M. and Lillie J.

Joshua Whitcomb, one of the first settlers of Green county, was born in the town of Lisbon, Grafton Co., N. H., Jan. 17, 1797. He was joined in marriage to Hannah Clement. In 1836 they came to Green county and located five miles southwest of where Monroe now stands, and remained there until 1842, then moved to township 3 north, of range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany, and entered land on section 33. Mrs. Whitcomb died Dec. 4, 1874.

Erastus Hulburt was born in Onondaga Co., York State, June 18, 1803. He was married there Jan. 20, 1825, to Laura Webster, born Feb. 4, 1806. He came to Green county in 1839. He first entered land in township 2 north, range 8 east. He improved a portion of the land and lived in that township four years, then moved to township 2 north, range 9 east, and entered land on section 5, and on section 32, township 3, range 9 east. He cleared a farm here of about 200 acres, and lived here until 1865. That year he went to Iowa to visit his sons who were living there. He died there, December 11, of that year. His remains were brought back to Green county and interred in the Gap Church Cemetery. His wife died Sept. 6, 1863. Six children, that were born to them, grew to man and womanhood—John, Lydia, Hiram, Judson, Webster and Lorrain. Webster was a soldier in the late war, and died in the service.

Harry M. Purington came to the Territory of Wisconsin, in 1847, and settled in what is now the town of Albany, where he still resides.

Christopher Meinert came to this county in 1841. He was born in Pickaway Co., Ohio, July 18, 1818. His father was German, who came to this country when a young man, and located in New York city, where he found employment in a sugar refinery in which he worked until he had laid by enough money to buy a team. He then engaged in draying, and was also employed as night watchman. While living here, he made the acquaintance of Catharine Wonderly, to whom he was married. She was born in Germany and came with her parents to America, when quite young. In 1812 Mr. and Mrs. Meinert emigrated to Ohio and settled in Pickaway county, where they rented land and lived nine years, then removed to Indiana and located in Vermilion county, where he remained until the time of his death. The subject of this sketch grew to manhood in that county, and was married to Elizabeth Frazier, also a native of Pickaway Co., Ohio. In the fall of 1841, concluding to emigrate to Wisconsin, he started with a pair of horses and a wagon which contained his family, and household goods. They camped out upon the way, thus making an inexpensive trip. On his arrival in Green county he had $6.50, which with his team, comprised the sum total of his worldly wealth. He spent the first winter with a brother, and in the spring rented a piece of land of him, near Monroe, on which he erected a log cabin. In 1842 he raised a crop, also some flax which his wife spun and wove into cloth. In 1843 he came to township 3, range 9 east, now known as Albany, and took a claim on section 30, on the center of which he erected a log cabin. The following winter he entered forty acres of land, and some time later, purchased eighty acres more and moved his log cabin to the south line of the one-fourth section. In 1850 he built a frame addition to his cabin in which he lived until 1861, when he erected the brick house he now occupies. His farm now contains 240 acres, the greater part of which is improved. He has engaged in raising grain and stock, paying particular attention to sheep, and usually keeping a flock of 300. Mrs. Meinert died in 1851, leaving four children—Martha, Eli, Mary and Sarah. Martha, the eldest, was born in April, 1840, and died in Idaho Territory, April 7, 1878. Eli and Mary now live at Salmon City, Idaho. Mr. Meinert was again married in November, 1851, to Mrs. Abigail Dora Mead, widow of Amos Mead. They have five children—Statirah, Garet H., Irad C., Frances M. and Dora. Mr. Meinert was the first treasurer of the town of Albany, and has also served as supervisor. Originally Mr. Meinert was a whig, but is now a “national green-backer.”

James Spencer came at about the same time, and entered land on the southeast quarter of section 23. He was a “New Yorker.” He remained here but a short time when he sold to Jeremiah Corliss and left the country. Mr. Corliss was also a native of the State of New York. He improved the farm and made this his home until the time of his death.

In the winter of 1843—4 Thomas McVee came and entered the northwest quarter of section 28. He erected a log cabin near where the parsonage now stands, thus becoming the first settler on the present site of the village of Albany. He remained there until the time of his death, which occurred late in 1846. This was the first death in the town. His widow died some years later.

Jeremiah Brewer was an early settler in the town of Albany, having come here in 1844. He is a native of the Green Mountain State, born in Franklin county, Aug. 23, 1802. In 1819 he left home and went to Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and engaged in farming in the town of Petersburg. He was married there in July, 1834, to Mahala Croy. They remained in Petersburg until 1844, when he sold out and started overland for the Territory of Wisconsin, coming with two teams, bringing family and household goods. They started in the month of May and did not arrive at their destination until August having been detained in Ohio on account of the sickness of Mrs. Brewer. The family moved into the house that John Warner had partly built, and immediately commenced to clear a farm. He has since purchased other land until he now owns 430 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer are the parents of four children—John W., Peter W., Hannah M., now the wife of M. S. Milks; and George W. Mr. Brewer was the first and only postmaster of Hoosic post office, established as early as 1849.

Daniel Smiley, one of the settlers of Green county in 1844, was born in the town of Ellery, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., June 19, 1812. His father, Joseph Smiley, was an early settler in that county, where he bought timber land from the Holland Company, and improved a farm. There the subject of this sketch grew to manhood, assisting his father in clearing a farm and tilling the soil. He was married May 18, 1836, to Ellen Bemis, born in the same town Sept. 29, 1813. The following May he started west, leaving his bride with her parents. He was accompanied by Marcus Fenton, and they started with a pair of horses and drove to Cleveland, Ohio, where they took a boat for Chicago, thence went to Racine, where he sold his team. He then proceeded to Rock county and selected land a short distance from the present city of Janesville, now known as the Culver farm. He was joined the following winter by his wife. Her father, Charles Bemis, had accompanied her from New York, starting upon their journey in January with a sleigh, but fearing the snow would not remain long enough, they brought with them a wagon. At Freeport, Ill., they left the wagon, and made the entire journey from New York to Janesville on runners. Mr. Bemis stopped with them a short time and then returned to New York. Mr. Smiley made some improvement on the land and lived there until 1841, then came to this county, and located in the then flourishing village of Exeter. There they opened a boarding house, over which Mrs. Smiley presided, while he engaged in teaming. They remained there until the spring of 1844, then came to Albany. While in Rock county he was appointed by the governor a justice of the peace, and was one of the first officers of that description in the county. He entered 160 acres of good land on sections 29 and 30, of township 3 north, range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany. He was an enterprising, energetic man, and a great worker. He came here with but little means, but kept steadily at work and in a few years he was able to buy more land and erect large frame buildings for his extensive herds of stock. He managed the farm until 1874, when he gave it up to his sons, but still continues to make it his home. Mr. and Mrs. Smiley are the parents of six children—Lorinda, Sarah R., Charles B., Julia A., Florence E. and William. Mr. Smiley was for many years prominently identified with town affairs and has held many offices of trust in the town. The youngest son, William, now owns and occupies the homestead. He is largely engaged in raising cattle and sheep, paying special attention to the Merino breed, of which he has a large flock. In January, 1884, he, in company with others, bought two imported Percheron horses, paying for them $3,800. The farm is said to be one of the best in the county, and has many good improvements, among them two large barns, a large granary, and a windmill, which is utilized in pumping water, grinding corn, etc.

William Smiley was born Sept. 6, 1854. He grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his education in the district schools. He was married Oct. 8, 1876, to Ida May, daughter of Thomas and Mary Flint. They have three children—Arnold, Edna and one not named. William Smiley, like his father, possesses good executive ability and is a valuable citizen of the town in which he lives. He has been called upon to fill local offices of trust at different times, and has always discharged such duties with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. Another son, and brother to William, named Charles B., was born in the town of Exeter, Green county, Oct. 25, 1843. He grew to manhood in the town of Albany, receiving his education in the district school. He was married Jan. 14, 1869, to Anna E. Smith, who was born at Cape Vincent, State of New York, Dec. 13, 1846. Four children blessed this union—Nellie, Daniel, Anna and Weltha T. In 1873 he bought the Brown farm, located on sections 22, 23, and 24, town of Albany. In 1882 he sold that farm and purchased another near Janesville, Rock county, which he occupied until 1884. In February of that year he bought the Julius Hulburt farm, located on section 31, town of Albany, containing the north half of that section, with the exception of twenty acres. This is a fine farm, and thought by many to be the best in the county. The year previous his brother William had bought for him the farm adjoining on section 30, so that he now has 300 acres of choice land in a body, and in the neighborhood where he was brought up. His wife died at Janesville, July 25, 1882. His mother now presides over his household.

Another settler of 1844 in the town of Albany was A. S. Holmes. He still resides on sections 25 and 26, on the land he entered when he first came here.

Albert S. Holmes and Sarah A. Cass were one of the first couples married in the town of Albany. The ceremony was performed by Hiram Brown, justice of the peace, at the residence of S. L. Eldred, July 26, 1846. Mr. Holmes was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., Feb. 10, 1820. He was brought up on a farm, and in his youth learned the carpenter and joiner's trade. In 1844 he was engaged by James Eldred to come to Green county and build a house for him. He came with the expectation of returning, but was so well pleased with the county that he concluded to settle here, and accordingly entered eighty acres of land on sections 25 and 26, and commenced housekeeping in the log cabin that Snell built on section 36, where he lived until the spring of 1847. He then removed to his own land. He now owns 200 acres of land in one body, the greater part of which is improved. He has erected a large frame house and barn, and other farm buildings. In 1873 he went to Minnesota and purchased a farm in McLeod county, on which his son Ezra now lives. Mrs. Holmes was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y. She was one of the first school teachers in Albany. They are the parents of four children—Ezra S., Mary F., Vivus C. and Lee G.

Thomas Pryce, a native of Wales, came in 1845 and entered the southwest quarter of section 22 and the north half of section 27. He made this his home until the time of his death. Three of his sons are still living in the town.

Thomas Pryce, Sr., was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales. When a young man he learned the stone masons trade at which he worked in his native land. He was married to Elizabeth Evans, also a native of Wales. Nine children blessed this union, six of whom are now living—Edward, Caroline, Thomas, Eliza, Richard and Evan. In 1845 he emigrated to America, coming in a sailing vessel and was about three months on the way. He landed at Quebec and then came immediately to Green county and entered land, which he afterwards divided among his children. He made his home here until his death in 1865. His wife had previously died in 1847.

Edward, eldest son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Evans) Pryce, was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, June 22, 1824 and there grew to manhood, being brought upon a farm. He came to America with his parents, with whom he made his home until the time of his marriage, Sept. 9, 1848, to Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin and Jane Swancutt, also a native of Wales. At that time he settled on his present farm on sections 26 and 27, and they lived in a log cabin until he built the stone house he now occupies. They had ten children—Emma, Mary J., Martha, John, William, Delena, Elizabeth, Benjamin, Cora B. and Gracie.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Thomas Pryce, Jr., was born in Montgomeryshire, Wales, March 13, 1831, and was fourteen years old when his parents emigrated to America. He made his home with them until 1856. He was married in March of that year to Sarah Nichols a native of Canada. He then settled on his present farm on section 27. They lived there in a log house until 1883, when he built the commodious frame house they now occupy. They are the parents of three children—Addie, Thomas and Lettie. The daughters are teachers in the public schools.

John Chase came in 1845. He was a native of Pennsylvania. Entering the southwest quarter of section 13, he began improvements, and still occupies the place.

John B. Chase was born in Erie Co., Penn., Feb. 18, 1823. He is a son of Ambrose Chase, a native of Rhode Island. When he was about nine years old, his parents emigrated to Ohio and settled in Ashtabula county, where they remained one year, then went to Erie Co., N. Y. John B. Chase resided in that county with his parents until he was twenty years old, then came to the Territory of Wisconsin and spent one year in farming and carpentering in Walworth county. He then went to Dane county and purchased a farm, just on the line, in Rock county, which he sold six months later and went to Rock county. In 1845 he came to Green county and entered the southwest quarter of section 13, township 3 north, range 9 east. In November, 1852, he was united in marriage with Martha Baker, a native of Ohio. He has improved his land, and engaged in mixed farming, raising grain, stock and tobacco. He is something of a speculator, and is generally engaged in some kind of trade. In 1863 he bought tobacco and shipped it to the eastern markets, and has engaged at different times in shipping poultry to Boston, making frequent trips to that city. In 1876 he took the agency for the sale of the Waupon windmill in this and adjoining counties. The wife of Mr. Chase was the youngest daughter of Aaron and Anna Baker, and was born in Champaign Co., Ohio, Sept. 5, 1835. She removed from there with her parents, in 1836, to Stephenson Co., Ill. Her father dying in December, 1841, her mother and the remainder of the family one year later removed to the town of Union, Rock Co., Wis., where she lived until the fall of 1852, when she was married to John B. Chase, as before stated, and came to this county. Her mother died April 13, 1873. She was a native of Pennsylvania. Her father was born in Virginia. John B. and Martha A. Chase have four children. The eldest, Clark L., was born Dec. 14, 1853, and was married to Minnie Elemier in 1882. They are now living in Nebraska. The second child was a daughter (Phila A.) born Dec. 14, 1855. She was married to V. C. Holmes Jan. 26, 1881, and lives in Evansville, Rock county. He is treasurer of the Evansville Mercantile Association. The two remaining children—Franklin B. and William B., the former born Dec. 14, 1859, and the latter May 9, 1862—are living with their parents. Mr. Chase was formerly a member of the democratic party, and still adheres to the principles originally advocated by that organization, but now exercises the right of suffrage intelligently, voting for whom he considers the best men. He may be considered a democrat. Mrs. Chase is a member of the First Baptist Church at Albany. Mr. Chase received a limited education in the district schools, and has followed various occupations. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having been a member since about 1850.

Albert L., son of John and Amanda (Griffin) Broughton, was born in Albany, Wis., Dec. 28, 1845. Here his younger days were spent. He obtained his early education in the district schools, and afterwards attended Evansville Seminary one term and Milton College four terms. In the meantime he had engaged in teaching school during the winter season, teaching five terms in Green county and two in Rock county. He was married in 1868 to Hattie Bump, a native of Rock county. He then settled on section on 34, where he lived two years, then removed to his present location on section 36, on the place where his father settled in 1842. They have four children—Marvin E., Dora A., George E. and Floyd L.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

William, son of John and Armanda (Griffin) Broughton, was born in Albany, Oct. 22, 1848. He was reared upon a farm and educated in the district schools, and attended two terms at Albany. He engaged in teaching at the age of eighteen, teaching his first term in his home district. He was married in September, 1870, to Mary J. Coburn, born in Walworth Co., Wis. He then settled on section 34, where he resided until December, 1883, when he removed to section 35. Mr. and Mrs. Broughton have three children—Lena J., Walter J. and Jessie A.

Asa Comstock, settled in Albany in 1845. He was an early settler in Wisconsin, having located at Janesville in 1836. He was born June 8, 1800, in Chittenden Co., Vt. In his youth he went to Canada and spent some time with an uncle, then returned to Vermont, and made his home with his parents, until the time of his father's death. He afterwards went to the State of New York, where he was married to Clarissa Swan, and settled in Chautauqua county, where his wife died. On coming to Green county he entered land on sections 29 and 30, of township 3 north, range 9 east. Here he improved a large farm, erected good buildings, and made his home until the time of his death. He was again married in Janesville, in March, 1839, to Lydia Smiley, who was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1814. Eight children have blessed their union—Harriet, Mary, Charles, Alice, Jane A., Leander, Clara and Albert Bion. Jane Ann died at the age of seventeen years. Albert Bion, who now occupies the homestead with his mother, has managed the farm since the death of his father. He was born April 5, 1855, and married March 6, 1883, to Mary Lewis, a native of Mount Pleasant, Green county. Among the arrivals in 1846 were James Trow and William Reese, natives of Wales. Mr. Trow located on the northeast quarter of section 15, where he lived until the time of his death, in 1873. He was one of the first justices of the peace elected in the town. Mr. Reese settled on the southeast quarter of section 14. He still owns the place, but lives in Rock county.

During the same year Hezekiah Wheeler and his son Carquil, natives of the State of New York, came and settled on the southeast quarter of section 13. The old gentleman died there some years later, and the young man sold out and removed to Nebraska. James Townsend a son-in-law of Mr. Wheeler, came at the same time and settled on the northeast quarter of section 13. A few years later he sold out and removed to California, where he was murdered by the Indians.

Seth V. Peebles was a native of Massachusetts, born in the town of Petham, Hampshire county, May 1, 1803. When he was an infant his parents emigrated to the west and settled in Madison Co., N. Y., where he grew to manhood and was married to May Stevens, in 1828. She was born in Madison county, in 1804. They removed to Chautauqua county, where he purchased timber land. He hewed a farm out of the wilderness and made that his home until 1843, when he sold out and emigrated to Michigan, and stopped in Branch county, until May, 1845, then removed to Illinois and lived in Boone county until February, 1846, when he came to this county and entered land on section 24 of township 3 north, range 9 east, remaining here until death called him away, Feb. 21, 1884. His widow lives on the homestead. They were the parents of four children, all now living—William H., Edwin M., Diana E. and Hial. Mr. and Mrs. Peebles have lived together fifty-six years, and his death was the first break in the family circle.

William H., the eldest son of Seth and May Peebles, was born in the town of Arkwright, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., May 1, 1829, and came to Wisconsin with his parents, with whom he made his home until the time of marriage, in October, 1851, to Betsey Wheeler, also a native of York State. He then settled on his present farm on section 24. They commenced housekeeping in a log cabin in which he lived until 1868, when he erected the neat frame house he now occupies. His wife died in June, 1853, and in October, 1854, he was again married to Fanny M. Griggs, a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y. She died April 15, 1880, leaving three children—Lura D., Carrie A. and Watson.

Their first child, Orville, died when fifteen years old. His third wife, to whom he was married Dec. 16, 1880, was Emily A. Griffin, a native of York State.

Edwin M., another son of Seth V. Peebles, was also born in the town of Arkwright, April 14, 1834. He made his home with his parents until 1866. He was married April 8, of that year, to Sarah Kyes, who was born, in the town of Theresa, York State. He had purchased land on section 23, and erected a log house, into which they moved and lived until 1882, then built the fine frame house he now occupies.

Silas P. Wheeler, a "New Yorker," came during the same year and settled on the southeast quarter of section 23. He lived here for a few years, then removed to Iowa.

The northwestern portion of the town is mostly settled by Norwegians. The first of that nationality to settle here was Aslak Aarhus, who came in 1848, and bought land on sections 5 and 8. He lived here about two years, and then sold out and removed to Iowa.

The next Norwegian settlement was made in December, 1849, by Syver Gothompson and family, and his son Thomas and family. Syver entered 160 acres of land on section 17, and made this his home until the time of his death. Thomas also located on section 17, and lived there until his death in 1857, which was caused by an accident. He slid from the top of a haystack and fell upon the prongs of a fork which penetrated his vitals, causing death in twenty-two hours. His widow, married again, still occupies the old homestead.

Syver Gothompson, one of the first Norwegian settlers in the town of Albany, was born in Norway in 1800. He was married in January, 1826, to Barbara Halgerson, who was born in 1810. In 1849, he, with his family, consisting of his wife and ten children, emigrated to America. They landed at New York city, and proceeded up the Hudson river to Albany, thence by the Erie canal to Buffalo, where they took passage for Milwaukee. On their arrival there, he hired a team to take them to Rock county, where they remained until December of that year, then came to Green county and purchased 160 acres of land on section 17. There was a log house on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, to which he built an addition, making it a double house. This was, for a time, the stopping place for all Norwegian emigrants who passed this way. At one time there were sixty-five persons, including the family, who spent the night at this house. In 1856 he moved to another part of the section where he remained until his death, in December, 1880. He had erected good frame buildings, including a large house and barn. His widow still lives upon the farm. Thirteen children were born to them, all of whom attained an adult age, and eleven are now living—Harry, Sarah, Ann, Barbara, Peter, Mary, Bertha, Andrew, Ellef, Syver and Julia.

Peter was born in Norway in 1840, and was nine years old when his parents came to America. He grew to manhood in the town of Albany, receiving his education in the district schools. In 1862 he went to Minnesota and spent one year with his brother-in-law in Goodhue county. In the fall of 1864 he went to the pineries and engaged in chopping through the winter, and returned to Albany in the spring. He was married in 1866 to Bertha Gilbertson, and settled at that time upon his present farm on section 17, where he has 196 acres, and is engaged in raising grain and stock. He has erected a good frame house and a large barn, and is a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Gothompson are the parents of five children—Sophia, Lena, Laura B., Samuel G. and Henry A. Peter Gothompson is at the present time, and has been for several years, one of the town board in town of Albany.

Andrew was born in March, 1848, and was one year old when he came to America. In his younger days he attended the district school and assisted his father on the farm. He was married in January, 1875, to Josephine Swager, a native of Janesville, Rock Co., Wis. They have two children—Norman S. and Bennie A. He owns and occupies the old homestead.

Ellef Gothompson was born in the town of Albany, Jan. 4, 1851, and was one of the first children born of Norwegian parents in this town, where he grew to manhood, and was educated in the district school. He was united in marriage in November, 1879, with Cornelia Leverson, also a native of the town of Albany. They settled at the time of marriage upon his present farm, which is located on section 8 of Albany. They have two children—Bertha and Syver.

In 1850 the settlement was increased by the arrival of another party of Norwegian pioneers, consisting of Ole Harrolson, Haken Christiansen, Ole Johnson, Torkel Jacobson and his son Gilbert and their families. Harrolson settled on the southeast quarter of section 7. Two years later he sold out and removed to Iowa. Christiansen settled on the southwest quarter of section 8. He improved the farm and lived there until when he sold out and moved to the western part of the county. Johnson also settled on section 8, and is still a resident. Jacobson located on the same section and died there in 1853. His son, Christian, still occupies the homestead. Gilbert Jacobson settled on the southeast quarter of section 8, where he still lives.

Ole Mickelsen came here in 1851, and settled on section 17. He now lives in Minnesota. Among the Norwegian settlers who came in 1852, were Ole Gilbertson and son, Ole, Andreas Albertsen, Ole Leverson and Ole Broton. Ole Gilbertson Sr., bought land on sections 8 and 9. He died there in 1854. Ole Gilbertson, Jr., and Ole Broton bought the Dexter place, including land on sections 8 and 16. Gilbertson still lives there. Broton has since moved to the Red River Valley, in Minnesota. Albertsen settled on section 5, where he died in 1854. Leverson purchased the Harrolson place on section 7, where he still lives.

Reuben Fulson, familiarly known as "Old Ruby," a native of Canada, came to the county in 1841, and first stopped at Mr. Baxter's in the town of Spring Grove. He was soon employed by Erastus Hulburt, whom he served eighteen months. He resided in the county until his death, in 1875. Previous to his coming here he had served in the regular army. He was a very peculiar man and spent a great portion of his time in hunting and trapping. He no doubt killed more wolves than any other man who ever lived in the county, and on this account he became known through Green and Rock counties as "Old Ruby, the Wolf Hunter." He had no family and his many peculiar whims furnished many a hearty laugh for those who knew him.

In 1845, "Governor" Ford made a claim on section 16, erecting a cabin on the corners of sections 8, 9, 16 and 17, and his claim surrounded it. He remained here for about three years, then left the county. All of the old settlers will remember "Gov." Ford, as he was known. He was accompanied by a son-in-law, and they supposed by building their cabin as they did, they could claim on either section.

John B. Preston purchased the "Gov's.," claim and remained until 1857, when he removed west.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first birth in the town was that of Stephen, a son of Stephen L. and Roxanna Eldred,

H. C. Witmer

born July 31, 1843. He is still a resident of the town.

About the first marriage in the town, was that of Albert S. Holmes to Sarah A. Cass. The ceremony was performed by Hiram Brown, justice of the peace, July 26, 1846, at the house of S. L. Eldred. The couple still live in the town.

ORGANIC.

The town of Albany was organized April 3, 1849. When the first town meeting was held, E. O. Pond, Asa Comstock and Joshua Whitcomb were inspectors of the election. The following were the first town officers, chosen at this election: Aaron Broughton, chairman; James Campbell and George W. Bagley, supervisors; S. P. Wheeler, assessor; Christopher Meinert, treasurer; Gilbert McNaught, clerk; Samuel F. Nichols, superintendent of schools; Erastus O. Pond, S. L. Eldred, James Trow, Jephtha Davis, justices of the peace; S. T. Bagley, H. Purrington and John Jones, constables. The record states that "Old Ruby" received three votes for constable.

At the first town meeting it was voted to raise $75 for the support of schools; $125 for contingent expenses.

RELIGIOUS.

At an early day a Methodist Episcopal class was organized at the school house on section 35, by Elder Hussey. The following were among the first members: Jeremiah Brewer and wife, B. Davenport and wife, John Ash and wife, and Thomas Ash and wife; John Ash was the first class leader. Among the preachers who at different times filled the pulpit for this class were: Revs. White, Hazeltine, Wheeler, Bradley, Ferguson and Allen. As nearly all of the members of this class have moved away, the organization has been abandoned.

UNITED BRETHREN.

In 1852 a United Brethren class was organized at the school house on section 35, by Rev. William Haskin. Among the first members were: S. L. Eldred and wife and two children; Washington Adams and wife, fathers mother and two daughters; William Murray and wife; Alexander Murray and wife; William Webb and wife, and Mrs. Cyrus Phillips. S. L. Eldred was the first class leader. Among the pastors who preached for the class were: Revs. S. L. Eldred, James Johnson, Elisha Bovee, S. A. Potts and W. Reed. This class has long since been discontinued.

NORWEGIAN EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The first meetings of this denomination were held in Syver Gothompson's log house in 1850, by Rev. Clauson, from Rock county. The Norwegian element met at the same place, and, during pleasant weather, under the shade of a burr oak tree near by, until the log school house was erected, when that building was used as a place of worship. In 1864 a neat stone church was erected on section 8. Rev. Derrickson was the second preacher. He was succeeded by Rev. Magelsen, who was pastor for twenty-one years. Succeeding him, came Rev. Thorvildsen, the present preacher. There are now (1884) nineteen families belonging to this Church, besides several individual members. Meetings are held once a week. The present officers of the Church are: C. Jensvald, deacon; Ole Gilbertson, Sr., secretary; Andrew Gothompson and Ole Gilbertson, trustees.

HOOSIC POST OFFICE.

Hoosic post office was established in 1849. Jeremiah Brewer was appointed postmaster, and kept the office at his house on the southeast quarter of section 36. When first established, it was on a route from Beloit to Mineral Point, mail being received tri-weekly. During the war Brewer resigned and the office was discontinued.

EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

The first school in district No. 4 was taught by Martha Taggart, at Syver Gothompson's house, in 1853. During the same year a log school house was erected on section 8. Martha Taggart and Ellen Turmin were the first teachers in this house. This building was in use for some years, when a more substantial building was erected on the old site. Martha Magoon and Ellen and Syver Gothompson were early teachers in this house.

The first school house in district No. 5 was built about 1849. The people of the neighborhood held a "bee," and cut and drew the logs together and thus erected the building. It is located on the northeast quarter of section 15, and is still in use. Orisna Higday was the first teacher in the house. David Jones was the teacher in the winter of 1883—4.

The first school in district No. 6 was taught by Susan J. Taggart, in a log house belonging to James Spencer. This was as early as 1850. Lydia A. Abbott and Phebe Rockwell were also early teachers in this district. In the fall of 1852 a log school house was built on section 23, in which Phebe Rockwell was the first teacher. This house was in use until 1864, when a frame building was erected on the south line of the northeast quarter of section 23. Warren Gardner was the first teacher in this house.

The first school house in district No. 7 was erected in 1846. It was a log building and was located on the southeast quarter of section 35. Sarah A. Cass, now the wife of A. S. Holmes, was the first teacher. The first building was in use for a number of years, when it was superseded by the present school house, which was erected on the old site. Irene Hall was one of the first teachers in this house.

Joint district No. 9 was organized in 1845 or 1846, and embraced a great deal of territory. The first officers were James Campbell and Daniel Smiley. The first teacher was Mary Parry. The first school house in the town was erected the same year that this district was organized. It was located on the northern part of section 32. It was a log building erected by the people of the neighborhood. The cracks were filled with mud and the roof covered with shakes. This house was only in use for a few years, when school was held for a time in a house belonging to Daniel Smiley, which was located on section 29. In 1855 the present house was erected on the northwest quarter of section 32. It is a substantial stone building and is in good repair.

The first school in district No. 10 was taught in a house belonging to William Rolfe on section 16, in 1853—4. Emily Gleason and Ellen Stanley were the first teachers. The first school house was erected about 1855, on the northeast quarter of section 16. It is still in use. Carrie Lockwood taught the term of 1883—4.

District No. 11 was organized in 1865, and the first term of school was taught during the same year in William Frances' house, on section 1, by Peter P. Pierson. In 1866 a stone school house was erected on the southwest quarter of section 1, in which Sarah Carle taught the first school. This building is still in use.

REMINISCENCES.

[BY HIRAM BROWN.]

In this connection is presented a series of letters regarding events of early days from Hiram Brown. The correspondence was directed to Hon. C. Meinert. As far as possible the letters are given verbatim, only being altered where it was necessary to leave out purely private or personal matters. Mr. Brown has a peculiarly interesting style of writing; and his graphic description of things and relation of events will be read with pleasure by his many friends throughout Green county.

The first letter bears the date of "Orleans, Harlan Co., Neb., Feb. 27, 1884." It is as follows:

"Seeing a notice in the newspapers from Green county that a history was about being published, I concluded to write some facts to you, and if anything can be gathered from it of benefit to you or, worthy of a place in the history, you are at liberty to use it or any part of it. Mine I think was the second family in the town of Albany but perhaps Samuel Mitchell was a few days in advance of me. I located there about the 20th of March, 1842, Mr. James Campbell being the first there. I put up a small shanty to camp in whilst getting a set of logs for the house. Mr. Campbell, Samuel Mitchell, Laurie True and Justus Sutherland was at the raising from the west side of the river, and Mr. Fox and Mr. Foshler from the east side of the river. Mr. Mitchell sold his claim to Daniel Smiley, who soon came and still lives on it. "The winter of 1842—3 was one of the severest I ever saw; snow fell on the night of November 8, from four to six inches deep, and did not go off till the next April; most of the winter the snow was four feet on the level and cattle suffered severely, many dying by sheer starvation and I lost a few myself. Mr. Brown lost a large number. The ground was unfrozen when the first snow came and remained so during the winter. In the latter part of May or 1st of June a very severe and long, rain storm filled the ground with moisture and in many places covered the surface of the ground with a sheet of water, making it very difficult for teams with even a light load to pass along. Brown's Marsh, in particular, was then and for some time after an eye sore to loaded teams, as you well know.

"In August 1844, I shot and killed the first bear known to be in that section of country; afterward there were several killed in Green and Dane counties.

"The first case of litigation arising in what is now known as Albany, was between James Campbell and Joshua Whitcomb, originating in Mr. Whitcomb's entering a piece of land on which Mr. Campbell had a fence near his land, and he supposed said fence and improvements were on his own land, but by tracing lines closely it was found to be on government land, and Mr. Whitcomb entered it and claimed the fence and the crops then growing on it. Mr. Whitcomb employed as his attorney the Hon. John W. Stewart, of Monroe, and Mr. Campbell employed your humble servant; the court, Jacob Linzie of Exeter. The case was almost one like that of David and Goliath. Mr. Stewart, the Goliath, a well read lawyer, and myself a perfect stripling in legal lore; but after some two or three adjournments there was an agreement to arbitrate the matter which closed that suit with some pro's and con's on both sides. The next suit was before the writer and between Samuel Mitchell and another party, in which Mr. Mitchell came out second best or rather Mr. Mitchell did not have the best witnesses.

"Wolves, deer and wild honeybees were quite plenty, say from 1842 to 1850, deer going first.

"As to the further settlement of Albany, I leave to better hands, except that the first year of my residence in Green county, Justus Sutherland was road supervisor and his district included Albany, Sylvester and other territory now forgotten. He came and notified me to work on the bridge across Allen creek at or near where the bridge now is leading towards Attica, soon after known as Winneshiek."

"ORLEANS, NEB., FEB., 28, 1884.

"In haste I wrote you some facts relative to the early history of Green county. After sleeping over the matter, I recollect some other facts and jottings of the people, and first, some facts of its natural history. First, you can probably recollect of William Dysert undertaking to dig a well about half way between my house and that of Joshua Flint's, and dug in what is now the highway some forty-three or forty-four feet, but found no water. He expected to strike the vein that supplied the spring at my house, and get an overflowing artesian well—but having hurt his hand he was prevented cutting off the supply to my spring. On the last day of his digging, near night fall, I was there, and he sent up the bucket of dirt, he asked me to look at some things he had found in digging a short time before. On examination it clearly appeared to be originally some pieces of bark, one piece, say 2x3 inches surface size, two other pieces less size, but where they were recently broken, they had to me every appearance of coal, and were afterward also declared to be coal by the principal of the high school at Milton. There coming a rain soon after, filled his well with water to within three or four feet of the top, and there ended the fame of that well.

“Mr. Holmes, west of Mr. Philips, dug a well a little way from his present house, and at, or near the bottom, some twenty-five to twenty-eight feet, he found some splinters of wood, grass roots, and the appearance of that place being once the surface of the ground.

“Julius Hulburt, (I think, if not him, some one near by), in digging a well, found, as told me, about thirty feet below the surface, a root of some tree, laying in a nearly horizontal position about the size of a man’s wrist. I had a piece of it for some time. (There were several black walnut pieces.) Another report was of a person digging a well somewhere near Footville, when some twenty-five or more feet down, he came across a stick of wood laying across the well a little one side of the middle of the well, and about eight to ten inches in diameter, partly decayed. When at a later day I was living at Attica, there was on my land there a limestone quarry, and in breaking through pieces of sound rock, we once in a while found pieces of good galena or lead ore of different sizes—one piece I saw about as large as a hen’s egg and somewhat of that form; the stone was broke so as to leave about one half of the ore in each part of the stone. How and when did it get there? Echo answers, how did it get there? The petrifications of the Mollusk tribe are too common about there for me to say anything about, but will barely mention that at a time Thomas Fenton’s hired man, while plowing west of his house, plowed up the image of a duck carved out of hard flint like stone, and gracefully formed as any live duck and neatly polished. Mr. Fenton’s brother from Ohio took it back with him with a promise of return, and if he returned it, I was to have it. I never got it. Perhaps Dr. Person’s widow knows about it, or possibly has it.* I at one time found in the road going toward

*It is now in the Cleveland Ohio Museum.

Madison, a little north of Mr. McLaughlin’s, a piece of native copper, weighing between one quarter and one half a pound, and have it yet. Another piece was found, before that, not far from Francis Stockburn’s, weighing about eight pounds, and afterward sold to a tin-peddler for some forty to fifty cents.

“We will now change the matter. The first wedding in Albany was of Mr. Holmes before spoken of, and celebrated at Mr. Eldred’s, the second one between Benjamin Broughton and Hannah Valentine at my house, in 1846, in both of which the writer acted the part of the grand mogul. The third one, I think, was between Daniel Baxter and Jeanette Nichols. Of other and further weddings, this deponent saith not. If anything more is required to be known about the Baxter wedding, call on Adi Whitcomb.

“Following events reveals an instance of meanness that has scarcely a parallel, in which your honor was made an unwilling actor. I allude to that cuss who entered a part or the whole of claims improved by their owners. He, like some others I know of, pretended to all virtue, but practiced all sin—so far as he knew, by first staying on your free generosity for a few days, and then snake like, turned around and entered a portion of your claim, if I recollect aright, also a part of D. Smiley’s, Erastus Hulburt’s, all of Price Hill’s, claim forty acres, and I think some of Samuel Bagley’s, but after one year, he sent a stool-pigeon from Rockford to come and sell you the land.

“After consulting together, the persons who had their claims taken, or a part thereof, went to Monroe to try and make some arrangements by which they could recover their land again, and your humble servant was also one of the party. When at Monroe we found that the stool pigeon had a valid power of attorney to convey the land in question. His first price we could not think of paying, and after arguments and statements pro and con, getting him to lower the price several times, till it was thought best to comply with his reduced offer. We then began to cast about for the money, and succeeded in making a raise. But some of the people of Monroe who sympathized with us, thought it would only be right to pay him some of the "queer," and as we had a right to consider that the people of Monroe knew better than what we did in the county as to what was the just rule of morals between him and us, and they actually furnished us some $8 to $10 worth of the "queer," by count, which he packed off, and I never heard any one say but that is morally right to thus take the advice of the citizens of Monroe in the matter. God bless them."

ORLEANS, NEB., MARCH 2, 1884.

"Well, here it goes again. Being somewhat crowded as to time, I forgot some things, as some folks will do, and first I will say that I have a stone pipe supposed to be an Indian relic, found near Sugar river by Mr. Fenton, on the north part of the town of Albany; color of stone, red and hard; bowl of pipe about one inch long, and stem of same length—no comparison to a large sized meerschaum pipe of the present day. I also have a stone about three inches long, of an oval form, with ends cut off. It has a hole through it near one end, and is counter-sunk on both sides, and about one fourth of an inch in thickness, or a little over; the ends cut off square and beveled on both sides; stone hard, of a light brown color. And I have seen two other ones here, of a like description and similar rock, one a little larger than mine, and one a little smaller. Have never seen any other rock of a similar kind. I also have two round and flat pieces of flint rock, of a dark color, except some lighter cloudy parts, one stone about six and a half inches in diameter, the other about five inches in diameter, and say one and a fourth inches thick at the center, and then becoming thinner to near or quite the side. It appears to have its shape or form by scaling off pieces from the sides, leaving them somewhat irregular, breaking as all or most all flints do. They were found by Benjamin Swancutt near where he lived, and he gave them to me. What their use, I cannot conceive. Perhaps others can tell.

"The year I first moved into Green county (1842), Mrs. Robert Taylor, living in the very west part of Rock county, on the road from Decatur to Janesville, almost weekly for some time would take a pail of butter on her arm, with cool grass on top of the pail, and carry it on foot to Exeter, and sell it and return home, making a journey of sixteen miles, more or less, each way. My wife would frequently have tea about the time Mrs. Taylor got back, and they took tea together. If such acts of Mrs. Taylor do not fulfill the old adage of 'Time, patience and perseverance overcome all things,' I no not know where to find such.

"There was another incident I desire to say something about. In early times there was a mail route from Janesville to Mineral Point by way of Monroe. The mail carrier's name was Mr. Downs. But at a certain time, say in 1840 or 1841, in coming from Mineral Point to Janesville, coming to the Sugar river east of Decatur, he found the stream so much swollen as to prevent his crossing, and he turned back to John Moore's, about one and a half or two miles, where he put up for the night; and he found there Charles Stevens, who kept the only hotel in Janesville, and who had been to Galena for some groceries. In the morning they started for Janesville, but found Sugar bank, or over bank, full of water, with anchor ice and other pieces of ice running quite freely. But they attempted to cross, and the mail carrier deposited his mail bag on Mr. Stevens' load, and hitched his horse to the hind end of the wagon, pulling off his pants and boots to keep the mail company. They undertook to cross, but the current and shape of the ford prevented their making the outcome aright, the team being drifted down stream some, but the mail carrier got across by jumping ashore when the wagon was near the bank, but with difficulty. Mr. Stevens got back to the ford, and barely managed to get out of the river on its west side, and the mail carrier on the east side, with no house between there and Janesville, for which he started in his stocking feet and a pair of drawers on—ground frozen and a cool wind. He finally, before the day was gone, came to Janesville; but on the west side of the river there was no house, and the ice running so much in Rock river, with the height of the water prevented their crossing to get him, but told him to go down to Judge Holmes', about one-half or three-fourths of a mile down the river, which he did, introducing to two young daughters of the judge's family, sans boots and pants. Here he staid several days, their guest, with frost bitten limbs."

"Yours of a late date received yesterday, and in answer I begin by saying that I thought, and still think there are others in your vicinity who are better able, both by talent and a better knowledge of the early part of the residence of R. Folsom than I have, but at your request will say something. I think that when I first knew anything about him he was living or staying about Mr. Thompson's, Justus Sutherland's and others in that neighborhood; though he built (if I have been informed aright) a sort of a shanty near, or at the spring on the road to Monroe, not far beyond Mr. Sutherland's, in a southwesterly direction, where he would lay in wait for deer that came there to drink. Don't know if he absolutely killed any, though he made some fair reports of badly wounding some. Probably others can correct this as to facts, and if so, get them to do it by all means. Now I wish to refer you to John Broughton and Stephen Eldred for correction of facts, dates and names. Mr. Broughton and Mr. Eldred were threshing in the winter of 1842—3, at Capt. Hulburt's, south or southwest of the aforespoken spring about half or three-quarters of a mile—threshing with flails for a share of the grain; the floor they used they must describe if anything different from the threshing floor so famous near where King Solomon built his temple at Jerusalem. According to my memory from Mr. Broughton's statement, Reuben was stopping there and hunting, and to get the family up so as to get breakfast, so that he could go out hunting by daylight, he would get up by 3 or 4 o'clock, and go towards the henhouse, and there begin to crow lustily, and the roosters in the henhouse would set up a general crowing, but could not beat Reuben. That worked like a charm for a few days, giving him time to hunt and the threshers more time to thresh their grain in. But the crowing dodge did not last but a few days.

"One day Reuben went out with his dog and gun in regal style, and after no long time he shot at a deer, and at night reported the deer badly wounded, and at any rate Reuben and his dog followed the deer that day, there being some crust on the snow, and the chase came so near that the threshing party could see it. Reuben would cut corners off so as to be in advance of the dog sometimes, and then the deer, by some turning, would give the dog a fair chance again. He and the dog barking nearly alike might have sometimes deceived the deer. At night he came in and made a good report that the deer had bled profusely, and was weak and could hardly ever get up again. Reuben, next morning remembering the adage that the early bird was the one who got the worm, was after his deer in good season, and the chase continued as the day before, till 2 or 3 P. M., when the deer exhausted, Reuben came up and killed it with a club, but on close examination no break of the skin could be found except on one of the fore legs below the knee which might or might not have been made by the ball. These are the statements of the case as related to me by Mr. Broughton, not long after the event.

"It is said that every person has a penchant for something, and if properly cultivated will make the owner famous in that particular. I think Reuben's must have been hunting, and the climax was reached by killing wolves. At least he 'beat all of my first wife's relations in that way.' William Webb can tell you something about his penchant for wolves. I am sorry that I could not give a better and more extended detail of his career as a wolf hunter.

"I will here make some further statement relative to the year when the snow was deep and fodder became scarce. I was clean out, say by the 20th of February, or before, with sixty-three head of cattle old and young. James Campbell told me he had some straw under the snow where he threshed in the fall previous, and that I might have that and welcome, and could take my cattle there to eat it, and he would take no pay for it although offered. I accordingly drove my cattle there; but the next day about noon he told me they could not stay there longer than that night at any rate. I then went to John Dawson's and got a chance to dig out the straw at his threshing floor for my cattle to which place I drove my cattle; and here let me say that there was one of the best Christian families I ever met with. Him, his wife and Ed Fleck. When that straw was gone I got hold of a little money and went down to Mr. Bowen's, some six or eight miles southwest of Monroe, and bought some corn for my cattle, at twenty-five cents per bushel, but the snow was so deep and the roads drifted so full as to make them higher than the snow on either side, and I could not get my cattle to work, as they would crowd each other off the track. After upsetting some two or three times, I hired a man by the name of Starr and gave him a sow to draw me up about three loads of twenty bushels each load of ears. With that and cutting burr-oak trees for the cattle to browse upon, I carried my stock then on hand, through, and in May began to kill some and take the meat to Exeter; sell what I could there, and then on to Madison, where I usually arrived on or before sunrise; sell what meat I could for from two to four cents per pound, and then start for home, usually getting near Belleville to stay over night, and next day home. Chose rather to do that way than to have a visit from the sheriff. This I done, driving cattle for the team, till the first of July when I sold my team in Madison, and left off carrying meat to Madison.

"Exeter at that time, and for a time after was our post office address and our place for holding elections including the now town of Albany as a part of Exeter precinct."

ORLEANS, NEB., MARCH 24, 1884

"I think of one more fact that may have some interest for the history of Green county. It is this. Perhaps you will remember an oak tree of large size standing close by the spring, on the south side of it, into which a swarm of my bees went (into a limb). The tree was so near the house that if blown over in the right direction would strike the dwelling pretty hard, and I cut it down, say in 1838, for safety and bees and honey. When near the center, say when the tree might be ten, or possibly twelve inches in diameter, I found old ax marks and a part of an upper chip, in the tree, after counting the consecutive rings from there outward, I found them to be 184, showing the mark to have been made 184 years previous."

The following interesting reminiscence of one of the pioneer settlers of Green county was written by H. B. Jobs, a well known citizen of this town:

"The history of Green county would be incomplete without mention of Reuben Fulsom, one of the early pioneers of the county, familiarly known and recognized by the first settlers as 'Old Reuben' the hunter, who came from the State of New York, and settled in Green county about the year 1842. There was nothing remarkable nor prepossessing in the make-up of this strange individual that should single him out as more noted than his fellow man, but his eccentricities and peculiar mode of living gave him notoriety, and his success in his chosen pursuit, soon made him famous as a daring and sagacious hunter. But little is known of his early history. His ancestry are reputed as highly respectable—a brother having attained celebrity in the practice of medicine.. Though not strictly confined to the chase, having performed odd jobs of work from time to time, living here and there, principally, however, in the neighborhood of Albany. Still it was natural for him to hunt, and his happiest moments would seem to be when he was on the trail with dog and gun. Disappointed hopes and blighted love it has been thought led him to lead the life of a partial recluse and to become an habitu  of the woods and caves, gaining a livelihood in the traffic of furs and scalps of wild beasts. Kind and hospitable people gave him shelter and a home when the inclemency of the weather rendered it impracticable for him to follow his chosen pursuit, but when everything was favorable he was off on the trail, and the scalps of captured denizens of the forest would do honor to the wigwams of many a brave.

“From Mrs. F. Lewis we learn that he was a hunter at five years of age. His education was limited. One day while at school, he saw from the window, a fox, making tracks across an adjoining field. Without excuse or leave of absence he rushed from the room with a whoop, and after the fox with his favorite dog, and succeeded in capturing the fox. This completed his education and he was free to pursue the, to him, more pleasant calling. Reuben was three times married. The marriage ceremony was performed the fourth time but the process was afterwards found to be illegal and the contracting parties agreeing to disagree took different paths in life; Reuben seeking a home in the west. In an early day when the country was sparsely populated, game was more abundant than at the present time; wild deer made this section their favorite haunt, until the rapacity of over greedy huntsmen thinned them out and drove the remainder further north. Wolves were quite numerous in those days, and were a source of great annoyance to settlers, especially stock raisers whose flocks became decimated by oft repeated raids. As a means of ridding the country of a miserable pest, bounties were offered for the scalps of these animals. This stimulated our hunter to carry on a war of extermination by which to realize on that class of booty. He was measurably successful in thinning out a portion of these destructive animals, probably to a greater extent than most men of his time.

“He seemed to live and move in a world of wolves, became wolfish in nature, looked and talked like a wolf. He could out walk any ordinary man, taking great strides as though some phantom form was dogging his footsteps. A story is told of Reuben in connection with early reminiscences of the county. If not an adept, our old friend was not slow at the game of poker. On one occasion he was invited to take a hand with one of our prominent bankers, who was suspicioned by him of tricking with the cards. As the game progressed, without a word of warning, he jumped to his feet and with a well directed blow tumbled banker, merchant and table and all in promiscuous confusion on the floor.

“Tradition has it that Reuben was partial to young wolves, as the scalps secured by him were mostly of that class, from which we infer that he had a keen eye to the future in the exigency of supply and demand. This may account in part for the lingering traces of a subdued but by no means extinct species. Be this as it may, however, it can truly be said of Old Reuben, the hunter, he was a harmless, inoffensive man whose sum of usefulness would over-balance all the harm he ever did.

“On the left bank of Little Sugar river to the northwest of the village of Albany may be found the cave, which has become historical as ‘Reuben's Cave’—a hollow cavern in the massive rocks where slept the hero of our tale many a lone night through, while round him prowled the wolves. Time whitened his locks as the years went by, and the once elastic step, enfeebled, bore him to that home which charity had kindly provided for the unfortunate of earth. Years have passed since the veteran hunter passed from earthly scenes, but the incidents of his life and early exploits are still fresh in the memory of the old settlers of Green county."

VILLAGE OF ALBANY.

This is the third village in importance in Green county. It is located on section 28, of the town of Albany, on the banks of Sugar river. A branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, extending from Brodhead connects Albany with the main line of railway, and affords excellent shipping facilities. The Sugar river at this point furnishes a valuable water power, which is now fully utilized and improved. About the village lies some of the most valuable farming and stock raising lands in Wisconsin. The farmers, as well as the inhabitants of the village, are well to do, as a rule, and this is a guarantee of permanent, ever increasing trade.

THE BEGINNING.

The locality which is now known as the village of Albany was first called "Campbell's Ford," the land having been entered by James Campbell and Thomas Stewart. The excellent water power at this point they agreed to donate to any one who would erect a saw and grist mill, and it was this proposition which first attracted Dr. Samuel F. Nichols and Capt. Erastus O. Pond to this place. Of these two gentlemen, Dr. Nichols was the first to move his family, He came in March, 1846, and erected a double log house on what is now block 13, and thus became the first settler. Capt. Pond arrived with his family the following June, and lived in the log cabin with Dr. Nichols until he could build a frame house. With a yoke of oxen, S. A. Pond, a son of E. O. then sixteen years of age, hauled the lumber for their new house from Amos Sylvester's mill, being obliged frequently to first cut the logs, then take them to the mill to be transformed into lumber. But notwithstanding the attendant disadvantages, in about three weeks the building, which was 16x24 feet in size, was completed and the family moved into the same. This house was also located on what is now block 13. In one corner of the building Mr. Pond opened Albany's first store, having brought the limited stock of goods all the way from Newark, N. Y.

Erastus O. Pond, one of the founders of the village of Albany, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., Aug. 4, 1799. When a young man he was a sailor on the lakes, and finally became master of a ship. He was married Aug. 6, 1826, to Margaret L. Bartle, who was born in Chenango Co., N. Y. They settled in Wayne county, where he purchased a woolen mill and operated that twelve years. He then moved to Newark, in the same county, and engaged in the manufacture of carding machines, remaining there until 1846. In that year he came to Wisconsin. He stopped a few weeks in Rock county, then came to Green county and settled on the present site of the village of Albany, of which he was one of the founders. He was the first postmaster and merchant, and was prominently identified with the interests of the town and village until the time of his death, Oct. 19, 1854. Mrs. Pond died Feb. 19, 1881. They were the parents of three children—Maria, now the wife of C. S. Tibbetts; Chloe, wife of R. H. Hewitt, of St. Louis, and Samuel A., now of Janesville.

Another family named Hills, came with the Pond party, but after shaking with the ague for a few months they returned to the place from whence they came.

There was no further additions to the settlement in 1846; but in 1847 several families arrived, and it was not long until Albany had taken a position of importance among the villages in this region.

VILLAGE PLAT.

In 1847 Dr. Samuel F. Nichols and E. O. Pond, assisted by J. V. Richardson, a surveyor, made the necessary survey and laid out twenty blocks into village lots. The population increased rapidly and it soon became necessary to make additions to the plat, which has been done from time to time. Of the several additions there were annexed by Pond and Nichols, one by J. H. Warren and one by the Railroad Company.

The village was governed by the same laws and under the same authority as the town of Albany, until 1883, when the territory which comprises section 28 was incorporated as a village, and the first village election held on the 17th of October, 1883, resulted in the election of the following named officers: L. H. Warren, president; William Green, W. W. Hill, E. Van Patten, W. H. Knapp, D. Osborn and F. J. Carle, trustees; J. B. Perry, clerk; T. G. Mitchell, treasurer; H. B. Jobes, supervisor; C. S. Tibbitts, marshal; Warren Howard, police justice; Gabriel Jackson, justice of the peace.

The trustees elected would not grant liquor license and thus the newly incorporated village started out on temperance principles.

EARLY EVENTS.

The first building on the plat of the village was erected on what is now block 13, in March, 1846. It was a double log cabin, and was erected and occupied by Dr. Samuel F. Nichols. The first frame building was erected in June, 1848. It was also located on what is now block 13. It was occupied as a store and dwelling by Erastus O. Pond.

The first brick building was the dwelling house of Zebina Warren, which was erected by him in the spring of 1851. It was located on lot 4, block 13. In 1884 it was owned and occupied by C. S. Tibbitts.

The first marriage in the village was solemnized in 1847. The contracting parties were Daniel Baxter and Chloe Nichols. The ceremony was performed at the house of the bride's father, Dr. Samuel F. Nichols, by Hiram Brown, a justice of the peace. Mrs. Baxter is still a resident of Albany.

The first birth was that of Philander Nichols; son of Dr. Samuel F. and Julia A. Nichols, born Sept. 6, 1846.

The first death was that of Thomas McVee, which occurred in 1846. His remains were buried in the grounds now occupied by the village cemetery.

The second was the death of a daughter of C. Meinert, which took place in 1847.

BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT.

The first general store in the village was opened in June, 1846, by Erastus O. Pond. He kept groceries, dry goods, drugs, etc., and remained in business for about two years. The next general store was established by R. H. Hewitt.

Shortly afterward R. J. and William Richardson established a general mercantile business and made arrangements to open a large stock of goods; but on the 1st of June, 1851, William was drowned, after which R. J. became disheartened and closing out his business left the place.

In 1851 James Campbell opened a store in a building on lot 10, block 10.

In 1852 Zebina and John Warren were engaged in general merchandising in a building located on block 13.

J. T. Chapman opened a store in 1853 in the south part of the village. In October, 1861, Mr. Chapman enlisted in company A., 13th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers. He was commissioned major, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and served until November, 1864.

Many changes have taken place during the past twenty-five years and it is impossible to trace with any degree of accuracy the history in detail of any line of business. Among others who have been prominent in the general mercantile trade here, are the following: Troy & Kellogg, E. Bowen, Jobes & Dolson, H. B. Jobes, Burt & Harris and Charles Campbell. In 1884 this line was represented by W. H. Knapp & Co., J. F. Litel, William Green and Benkirk Brothers. The last named firm deals principally in gents furnishing goods and boots and shoes.

The first hardware store on the present site of Albany was established by Zebina Warren in 1853. E. B. Noble was the second hardware merchant and continued in trade about twenty-five years, then closed out and left the State.

R. H. Hewitt, the third hardware dealer, continued in trade until he enlisted in the army. When Mr. Noble closed out his business, Roach & Bloom, of Monroe, established a branch store at this place. They were succeeded in turn by C. O. French, French & Lemuel and French & Brodrick. The latter firm sold to John Lemuel, who continued until the disastrous fire of 1883. In 1884 the hardware trade was represented by Lemuel & Clemons and Osborne & Howard.

Warren Howard, of the firm of Osborne & Howard, dealers in hardware, farming implements of all kinds, wagons and carriages, also dealer in leaf tobacco, was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., Feb. 27, 1849. His parents emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in Rock county, when he was but an infant. He received his education in the district school and at the Evansville Seminary. When twenty-one years old he engaged in teaching, and followed that occupation during the winter season for ten years, being engaged in agricultural pursuits and manufacturer of spring bed bottoms the rest of the time. In 1881 he came to Albany and established his present business. He was married Dec. 25, 1871, to Jane E. Budlong. They have three children—Ella, Alice and Emmett B.

The first man to deal in drugs at this place was E. O. Pond, who kept a few necessary drugs in connection with his general stock of goods. S. A. Pond succeeded him in this line and also kept books, after which the following firms were in the business: Dr. Shavalia Fayette, Parker & Drake, H. Medbery, Robinson & Dodge, C. Robinson, Gillett & Dolson; Winston & Roberts, Winston &, Hudson, Hudson & Bartlett and Bartlett & Roberts. This business is now (1884) represented by G. W. Bartlett, successor to Bartlett & Roberts and J. W. Hicks, successor to G. W. Roberts.

G. W. Bartlett, druggist, was born at Schuylersville, Saratoga Co., N. Y., April 10, 1845. He is a son of L. C. Bartlett, who is now a resident of Brodhead. G. W. Bartlett was thirteen years old when he came with his parents to Wisconsin. They located in Beloit, where they remained two years, then came to Albany. At the age of sixteen years, he began clerking for Freeman Lewis. He afterward clerked for other parties, and was thus employed until 1869, when he engaged in trade in company with W. H. Hudson. Mr. Hudson afterwards sold out to Dr. G. W. Roberts, with whom Mr. Bartlett was associated until 1879. He then purchased his partner's interest, and has since carried on business alone. He was burned out by the fire of November, 1883, but soon resumed business. In addition to drugs, he carries a stock of groceries, books, stationery and notions. He was married in 1865, to Kate A. Dolsen, and they have had three children—Franky, who died in infancy, Robert E. and Willie.

J. W. Hicks, druggist, commenced business in Albany, in August, 1883, and in March moved into the Murray block, where he is at present located. He keeps a full line of drugs, toilet articles, paints and oils, also a stock of groceries. He was born in the town of Rushford, Winnebago Co., Wis., Dec. 18, 1856. He obtained his early education in the schools at Eureka, graduating from the high school in that place, in 1875. He then taught until 1876, when he entered the State University at Madison, where he graduated in 1880. He then again engaged in teaching, which he continued until 1883. He was married in June, 1882, to Edith Stearns, a native of Green county. Mr. Hicks' father, Oliver Hicks, was a native of New York. He was married to Sarah Powell, a native of the same State, and in 1846 came to the Territory of Wisconsin, and settled in Winnebago county, where he purchased land of the "Fox River Improvement Company," and improved a farm, making it his residence until the time of his death in 1882. His widow resides in the village of Omro.

Sampson and Edward Tilley, in 1852, erected a slab building, 14x20 feet in dimension, with a thatched roof, and here opened the first wagon shop in the village. After a space of three years they erected a better building, and in 1884 they were still enjoying a large patronage, being engaged in the manufacture of wagons, buggies and sleighs, besides running a general repair shop.

The first blacksmith was Charles Barton; the second was Peter Parsolon; the third was E. B. Dorr. Mr. Dorr opened a shop in 1851, also worked as a millwright, and continued in business until the fire of 1883. This trade is now represented by J. S. Smith.

Daniel S. Smith was born in Orleans Co., Vt., Jan. 7, 1807. When a young man, he learned the blacksmith trade in his native State. When twenty-two years of age, he located in Madison Co., N. Y., opened a shop and worked at his trade. He remained there until 1836, then removed to Pennsylvania, and settled in the city of Erie, where he followed his trade for eleven years. In 1847, he removed to the Territory of Wisconsin, and located in Beloit, where he was joined by his family one year later. He was one of the first blacksmiths in that town. He remained there, working at his trade, until 1850, when he came to Green county, and located in Clarence, remaining there until 1854, then removed to Albany and opened a shop. His health becoming bad, he had to stop work. In a few years he removed to Kansas. His home is now in Springfield, Dak. He was married in 1830, to Algina Wentworth, a native of Vermont. This union was blessed with nine children, eight of whom are now living.

James S. Smith, eldest son of Daniel Smith, was born in Madison Co., N. Y., in July, 1833.

He came to Wisconsin with his parents, and made his home with them until seventeen years of age. He had learned the blacksmith trade of his father, and engaged in that business in Beloit. He remained in Beloit four years, then went to Janesville. In 1854, he removed to Albany and commenced work at his trade. In 1864, he went to Idaho and Montana, working at his trade while there. After remaining there about a year and a half, he went to Michigan, and located in Plain well, Allegan county. He run a shop there for about two years, and returned to Albany, where he has since resided. In 1868, he was united in marriage with May J. Hess, born in Herkimer Co., N. Y. This union has been blessed with two children—Nellie and Frank.

The first livery barn was opened in 1855, by Harry Van Wart. It was located on block 17. In about 1857, Mr. Van Wart closed the barn and took his horses across the plains to California. This line of business is now represented by Frank Warren.

The first shoe maker to locate in Albany, was William Lee. The second was J. A. Hahn, who came in 1855, and, in 1884, was still in business. Austin Darling also runs a shop.

The first meat-market was kept by Freeborn Lewis; but before his time a Mr. Nipple had peddled meat about the town.

The first coopers were Samuel DeLaps and a Mr. Shaw.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Samuel F. Nichols was the first to administer medicine to the sick at this place. Since then the following have been located in the village and practiced medicine: Shavalia Fayette, Dr. Lewis, E. H. Winston, William Fayette, Horace T. Persons, Robert Van Dusen and Marvin Bemis. The present physicians are: G. W. Roberts and W. E. Ziegenfuss.

Samuel F. Nichols, one of the pioneers of the town of Albany, and one of the founders of the village, was a native of the Green Mountain State, born at Bennington, Nov. 14, 1801.

His father was a sea captain, and an early settler in Bennington. Samuel was educated in the common schools, and at the age of seventeen years he engaged in teaching, thus obtaining money with which to advance his education, and entered Castleton Seminary, from whence he graduated. He then turned his attention to the study of medicine, and graduated from the Castleton Medical Institute. He then went to Newark, Wayne Co., N. Y., and commenced practice. He was there married in 1826 to Julia Bartle, born in Newark, in 1811. He continued to reside in Newark until 1845, then came to Wisconsin and engaged in the practice of his profession at Janesville, one year. He then came to Green county and settled on the site of the present village of Albany. Soon after coming here, he was obliged, on account of failing health, to discontinue his practice, and he engaged as mail contractor, and did an extensive business in that line, his routes extending to four different States and Territories, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. He employed hundreds of men and horses. This business he continued until 1868. In 1866 he purchased a fruit farm in New Jersey, and spent the fall and winter seasons there. In September, 1874, he visited Colorado Springs, in the hope of finding relief from asthma, from which he was suffering, but he grew steadily worse and died there on the 14th of November following. His remains were brought back to Albany, and placed in the family vault. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols had seven children—Chloe J., Martin V., Louisa A., Bartle W., Philander K., Louis A. and Maggie. Dr. Nichols was one of the Presidential electors of district No. 2, in 1848, in the State of Wisconsin, and was chosen to transmit the result to the seat of government.

Louis A. Nichols, their youngest son, was born at the Nichols House, Albany, Feb. 3, 1849. His early education was obtained in the common schools of his native town, after which he spent five terms at Evansville Seminary. In 1870 he went to Philadelphia and entered Philadelphia College, and studied one year. He then went to Madelia, Minn., where he remained one year, and from thence to Chicago, and was clerk in a real estate office until 1874, when he went again to Philadelphia and graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College. He went to St. Louis and commenced practice, but, his health failing, he remained but a short time. He went from there to Colorado and spent nearly a year, then returned to Albany, where he was married, in 1875, to Ella Warren, daughter of Zebina and Maria (Pond) Warren. He has erected a fine residence on the west bank of the river, and has his office in his house.

LAWYERS.

The first attorney in the vicinity of Albany was Hiram Brown. The second was J. B. Perry, who is still in practice; the third, E. L. Warner; and the fourth, H. Medbery.

HOTELS.

During the first few years of the settlement, of course every one who had a home was willing to entertain strangers without money or price. But as people came flocking in faster and faster, it became necessary to establish some public stopping place. In 1847 John B. Sawyer and A. K. Stearns erected a building on what is now lot 2, block 18, corner of Mill and Main streets, it now forming the upright part of the Nichols House. In 1848 Dr. Samuel Nichols purchased the property, completed the building and opened it to the public for hotel purposes, and it is still used as such. In 1881 the building was enlarged by a brick addition, and it now presents quite an attractive appearance. The property is now owned by M. V. Nichols and Mrs. J. H. Warren. It is leased by S. S. Hills, a gentleman well qualified for the place, and under whose management the Nichols House has become a favorite of the traveling public and the pride of the citizens of the village.

Sylvester Hills was a native of Connecticut, born March 7, 1790. When a young man he went to Onondaga Co., N. Y., where he engaged in farming until 1838. He then started with two teams for Wisconsin, taking his family and household goods. He drove to Buffalo, where they embarked upon the lake and went to Toledo, completing the journey from that point to Green county with the teams. He bought government land in what is now the town of Sylvester, erected a log house and commenced improvements. He was a natural mechanic, and manufactured many of the articles of furniture used by his own and his neighbors' families; also built a loom and spinning wheel, which were used by the women of the family for weaving cloth from flax, which was raised upon the farm. There were maple trees upon the place, from which they obtained sugar, which, with the wild honey that they gathered, furnished the sweets used by the family. Game and fish were abundant at this time, and nearly all the articles they were obliged to buy were tea and tobacco. He lived upon this place two years, then bought a prairie farm in the same town, on which he built a log house and frame barn. The latter was built in 1841, and the boards with which it was covered were hauled with teams from Chicago; the shingles were made of oak and rived by hand. In 1856 he sold this farm and removed to section 29, in the town of Albany, where he purchased land and remained several years, then sold his farm and removed to the village, and there remained until his death, which occurred Feb. 25, 1881. He was twice married. His first wife was formerly Chloe Webster, and they were married in Onondaga Co., N. Y. Eleven children blessed this union, nine of whom are now living—William, Ashael, Price, Lorinda, Miranda, Nelson, Elizar, Betsey and Electa. Mrs. Hills died March 6, 1832. Mr. Hills' second wife was Hannah Sutherland, a native of Vermont. She was a woman of much ability, and in her youth was a school teacher, which occupation she followed in her native State, and afterwards in New York, where she became acquainted with Mr. Hills, to whom she was married, Dec. 27, 1832. She was noted for her kindness in cases of sickness or distress, and seemed to feel the misfortunes of others more than her own. She lived to a ripe old age, each succeeding year adding new acts of kindness and generosity to her children and friends. Her memory, always remarkable, was especially so in her old age, and up to almost the day of her death she retained a perfect recollection of past events, and of the names and ages of all the people residing in the neighborhood where she was brought up. She died Oct. 27, 1882. Her children were—Sylvester S., born Dec. 17, 1833; Chloe P., born Jan. 28, 1836; and Isabelle M., born June 6, 1838.

Sylvester S. Hills is the present landlord of the Nichols House, at Albany. He was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Dec. 17, 1833, and was but four years old when he began pioneer life in Green county, where he grew to manhood. In 1852, in company with a brother and cousin, he opened a tin shop in the village of Monticello. Soon after he purchased the interest of his partners and then purchased a stock of merchandise from Mathias Marty, continuing in business there until 1857. He then sold out, and the following year went to Mitchell Co., Iowa, and opened a tin shop at St. Ansgar, where he remained but a short time, then sold out and went to Minnesota, stopped there a short time and entered 160 acres of land in Freeborn county, after which he spent one year in Kansas and Nebraska. He then returned to Green county and was there married April 18, 1861, to Sarah A., daughter of Jephtha and Harriet (Conger) Davis. She was born in Varysburg, Wyoming Co., N. Y., Oct. 28, 1838. After marriage, Mr. Hills went to Cross Plains, where he engaged in buying and shipping produce one year, then went to Woodman, Grant county, and engaged in the same business, also acted as station agent. He continued to follow the same business at different points on the Chicago, Milwaukee St. Paul Railroad for a number of years, after which he was employed by the Victor Scale Company as general agent, and traveled in the interest of that firm two years in the northwestern States. He then resumed railroading, becoming station agent at Plainfield, on the Wisconsin Central road. In 1880 he leased the hotel at Evansville and engaged in hotel keeping, which he continued there three years, then came to Albany and leased the Nichols House. As a landlord Mr. Hills is a decided success, his house bearing the reputation of being the best hotel in Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Hills have had three children, only one of whom is now living—Elmer E., who was born Oct. 27, 1867. Erwin F. was born July 13, 1866, and died Sept. 9, of the same year. Their eldest son, Arthur, was born Nov. 10, 1862. He was an unusually precocious child and when twelve years of age became messenger boy in the State Senate of Wisconsin, which position he filled during two sessions. He was so honest and trustworthy that, at the age of fifteen, he was appointed station agent on the Wisconsin Central Railroad, having entire charge of the station, including express and telegraph business. He resigned this position to accept a situation as telegraph operator in the city of Milwaukee, in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, where he soon after met his death, Oct. 13, 1879, in a railroad accident. This young man was universally esteemed, and the High School at Evansville, of which he had been a member, thus expressed themselves:

Since God has, by a mysterious providence, allowed death to come into our midst and has taken away one, who, but lately, went in and out among us, we, the members of the High School, desire to express our sorrow and deep sympathy with the family so suddenly bereft, and to add our testimony that, while with us, Arthur was always cheerful in spirit, of obliging disposition, and faithful in the performance of duty.

By wish of the school.

L. N. BUSHNELL, Assistant.

Mr. Hills was for twenty years a republican, but joined the greenback party at its organization, in 1876, and was a member of the first State central committee, also a delegate to the Chicago convention in 1880 that nominated Weaver for President.

Ashael Hills, son of Sylvester and Chloe (Webster) Hills, and pioneer of Green county, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., March 31, 1815. He was married in 1837 to Julia A. Shults, a native of Montgomery Co., N. Y. In 1839 they removed to Steuben county and lived until 1849. They then came to Green county and purchased a farm on sections 29 and 32, of the town of Albany. There was a log house on the place, in which the family lived two years. He then erected a frame house. He improved a large farm here, and erected a large frame barn. He still resides upon the place. Mrs. Hills died Feb. 12, 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Hills were among the first members of the M E. Church at Albany. They had one child—Helen, now the wife of William H. Hudson.

The second hotel was built in 1850, by J. B. Perry and Aaron Kellogg. It was located on lot 3, block 19. When first opened, it was known as the "Green County House," and J. B. Perry was the accommodating landlord. In August, 1853, Z. Warren purchased the property and it was used as a dwelling until 1879, when William Hayden bought the same and again opened it as a hotel. The building was enlarged and neatly refitted in 1882, and in 1884 it was owned by Peter Benston. It is known as the "Central House" and is an excellent place to stop at.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

The water power furnished by Sugar river at this point was purchased from the government by James Campbell and Thomas Stewart. From them it passed to Dr. S. F. Nichols and E. O. Pond, in 1846, and the following year these gentlemen improved the power. During the fall of 1847 they erected a saw mill, putting in one of the old fashioned sash saws, and thus for several years furnished the settlers with lumber. In 1848 Z. Warren purchased an interest in the water power and during the winter following erected the first grist mill. The mill used three run of stone and was operated as a custom mill by Mr. Warren until his death in 1854. After this it was owned by his heirs until washed away by the flood of 1867. After the flood the property was purchased by E. F. Warren and C. W. Tomkins. These gentlemen rebuilt the mill, and in 1881, enlarged the same, so that it is now 30x74 feet in size, two and a half stories high. It has three run of stone and is equipped with all modern machinery for doing first-class work. It is still owned by Warren & Tomkins, who operate it as a custom and merchant mill.

Charles W. Tomkins, manager of the Albany flour mills, of which he is a one-half owner, is a native of Ireland, born in county Wicklow, Feb. 29, 1832. His father was the owner of a flour mill in which the subject of this sketch went to work as soon as large enough to be of assistance, and continued to work until he was eighteen years old, when he came to America. He first located at Janesville, where he engaged at his trade until 1852, when he came to Albany, where he had been previously engaged by Zabina Warren to operate his mill. In 1853 he went to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., and lived one year, then returned and engaged again in the Warren mill, which he continued to operate until 1860, when he rented the "Kellogg mill" and operated that on shares two years, then again returned to the Warren mill and run it until it was washed away in 1867. In 1868 the firm of Warren, Tomkins & Erole was formed, and the present mill was built, and has since been under the supervision of Mr. Tomkins, who bought Erole's interest in 1879, since which time the firm name of Warren & Tomkins was adopted, and has secured for it an enviable reputation. He was married in 1860, to Lucy A. Hoyt, from the State of Maine. They have had three children born to them—Estella, Warren and Arthur. The former, Estella, was the only daughter, she was born in 1861 and died in 1873. The second grist mill was erected in 1857 by T. Kellogg, and was located on the west side of the river. This mill was 40x60 feet in size and used three run of burrs. Mr. Kellogg owned the mill about ten years then sold to William Nye and J. Montgomery, who, in 1871, removed the machinery and sold the building and water privilege to the Albany Woolen Manufacturing Company. This company put in the necessary machinery and established the "Albany Woolen Mills." In 1881 E. F. Warren, then superintendent, purchased the property and has since operated the same. The line of goods manufactured embraces flannels, blankets, yarns and skirts. The mill furnishes employment to about eighteen operatives.

In the fall of 1883 Lemuel Warren added a saw mill to the woolen mill, which is also in operation. Thus it will be seen that the water power is being well utilized; but there is still room for more as Sugar river is a never-failing stream and at this point furnishes an eight foot head of water.

Prominent among the names identified with the history of Green county, that of Warren stands conspicuous from the early history to the present time. The ancestors of these Warrens were natives of New England for a number of generations. Their great-grandfather, a blacksmith by occupation, having served as a soldier in the French and Indian War, participating in the battle of Quebec. The grandfather, Lovewell Warren, was born in Marlborough, Mass., Oct. 2, 1764, and was of a family of Howes, and was married to Ama Holden. She was born at Charlestown, N. H., in 1794 and was of a family of Adams. Lovewell Warren removed from Leominster, Mass., and settled at Montpelier, Vt., purchased government land, and became a pioneer in the place. The land he improved is still owned by a family of Warrens—his descendents. It was there that Lemuel Warren was born Oct. 27, 1791, and his early life was spent on his father's farm. When a young man he went to Franklin Co., N. Y.,

where he formed the acquaintance of Betsy R. Richardson, to whom he was married in 1817. She was born in Granville, Washington county, Aug. 1, 1793. Lemuel Warren was overseer of Hogan's mills, and remained a resident of Franklin county until 1836, then removed to Chautauqua county, and two years later with his family emigrated to Wisconsin, landing at Milwaukee on the 5th of July, 1838. They proceeded to Janesville which was at that time but a small town, where, although times were hard, they succeeded in making a living. In 1841 they settled on a farm in the town of Union, now known as Center, situated on the Madison road at a distance of twelve miles from Janesville. At that time there were eight children, five sons and three daughters, of whom several had attained their majority, and the older boys—William, Zebina and John H., left home to battle with the world on their own account. Sept 13, 1846, the father died, and a few years subsequently the family were stricken with grief by the death of the three daughters. Those of the family who remained could hardly recover from such a blow, but they struggled on and finally succeeded in paying for the farm by hard work and prudent economy. The mother afterwards came to Albany, this county, to reside with her sons, where her remaining days were spent. She died Aug. 17, 1870.

Zebina, the second son, was born at Hogansburg, Franklin Co., N. Y., May 2, 1821. When sixteen years old he went to Michigan, and lived one year in Kalamazoo; then in 1838 joined his parents in Rock county and lived with them two years, then made a claim of government land in the town of Center, Rock county, but not having money to pay for it, started out in search of employment. He drove to Milwaukee, and arrived there with money enough to pay for one horse feed. He soon found employment at various things, among others he took a contract from the government to dig a well at the light house, and by winter he had made enough money to enter his land. In December of that year he engaged as bookkeeper for the firm of Holton & Goodell, and remained with them three years, then returned to Rock county and settled on his land, where he continued to live until 1847, when he came to Albany and erected a grist mill. In 1851 he engaged in the mercantile trade in company with his brother. His death occurred in December, 1854. He was married to Maria, daughter of Erastus and Margaret (Bartle) Pond. Two children blessed that union, one of whom is now living—Ella, now the wife of L. A. Nichols. Mr. Warren was a man of good education and fine business qualifications. He was prominently identified with the interests of both town and village, and was in office from the time of the town organization.

Lemuel H. the fourth son, was born at Hogansburg, Franklin Co., N. Y., Sept. 30, 1830, and was but eight years old when the family came to Wisconsin, and he grew to manhood in Rock county. In 1850 he came to Albany and engaged in clerking for his brother two years, then in 1854 he engaged in mercantile trade in company with his brothers, J. H. and E. F., and continued that business until 1865, when he sold his interests and engaged in the lumber trade five years. He then became a mail contractor and has, while attending to that business, traveled extensively. In 1882 he bought a farm near Madison, where he lived one year and then returned to Albany. He was married March 26, 1854, to Martha Stanley, who was born in Susquehanna Co., Penn. Four children blessed this union—Frank, Carrie, Fred and Eva. The former, Frank S., was born in the village of Albany, where he grew to manhood, his younger days being spent in school and assisting his father in the store. When eighteen years old he was engaged as clerk in E. F. Warren's store. At twenty years of age he was married to Clara Trousdale, who was born in the village of Fayette, Lafayette Co., Wis. They then went to Monroe, where he engaged as clerk for F. S. Parlin a few months, then went to Yankton, D. T., in company with his father, who was going there to look after his stage interests. In 1878 he had full charge of the stage line from Yankton to Sioux Falls, and remained there until 1879, when he returned to Monroe, bought a livery stock and managed a stable two years, then, in the spring of 1881 he started west and visited Colorado, Kansas and Nebraska. Returning in the fall, he bought the omnibus line at Monroe and ran that during the winter of 1881—2. In the spring of 1882 he went to Dane county and purchased a farm in company with his father, and lived there one year, then returned to Albany, and during the summer was in the employ of the Western Stage Company. In the fall of 1883 he bought the livery stock of E. F. Warren, and is now engaged in the livery business. Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Warren are the parents of two children (twins)—Bessie and Jessie. He is a good business man, accommodating and affable, and has many friends.

Of the five sons, Eugene F. Warren was the youngest. He was born at Fort Covington, N. Y., June 30, 1833, came with the family to Wisconsin, and at an early age commenced those minor duties of farm life which his extreme youth could compass, and in which he displayed great energy and facility. He was but thirteen years old when his father died, but as his older brothers had left home, the care of the farm naturally devolved on him, and he found little time or opportunity to attend school, spending but three months each winter, in that manner. Fortunately his mother was a woman of refinement and education, and he received from her the most important elements of early instruction. After acting one year as express messenger on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, at the age of twenty-one, with a capital of $500, he came to Albany and entered into a co-partnership with his brothers, John H. and Lemuel, in mercantile business, which he pursued for sixteen years, when he bought out the interests of his partners, and continued in the trade alone for five years. Meanwhile, in 1861, he assisted in recruiting company E, 13th Wisconsin Volunteers, and was mustered in as 1st lieutenant of the company. In 1862 he was in the army of Kansas, where there was no hard fighting, but long and tedious marches to be endured, over the ice and snow clad prairies, and the following year being sent to the army of the Tennessee, he was engaged in fighting "bush-whackers," and in scouting most of the time at Forts Henry and Donelson. While there, he was detailed as judge-advocate of a general court-martial which continued in session for three months, fifty-two cases being tried, and five men receiving the sentence of death. In the fall of 1863, he was ordered to Huntsville, Ala., thence to Stephenson, Ala., where after a long and weary march, on short rations, he remained until November, when he left that place and encamped in the village of Edgeville, opposite Nashville, Tenn., where he remained until the summer of 1864, and then returned to his family and business. He had been at home but one week, however, when he received, from the secretary of war, an appointment to a captaincy, in Major-Gen. Hancock's corps, but as one of his brothers had accepted an appointment to the position of United States revenue collector, and the other was in very poor health, and his business in consequence was left entirely in the hands of employees, he was obliged to decline the appointment. Mr. Warren was a brave soldier, competent for any position, and repeatedly refused promotion, having promised to remain with the boys with whom he enlisted and among whom he was a great favorite. In 1869, he built the flouring mill of Warren & Tomkins, and in 1881 purchased the Albany Woolen Mill. He has, also with his brothers, been engaged in the mail and stage business, which furnishes employment to hundreds of men, and requires hundreds of horses, their lines extending from the Great Lakes to the Pacific Slope. Mr. Warren is a republican in politics, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in his religious views, broad and liberal, holding to the belief of universal salvation. His business success is attributable to honesty, industry, perseverance and the good advice early given him by his parents. Mrs. Warren was formerly Sarah S. Gleason, and was born in Tioga Co., N. Y., and was married to E. F. Warren, Sept. 9, 1855. In the year 1863, she shared equally with her husband the hardships and privations of camp life, thus showing that constancy and affection, which has rendered their union one of happiness. They have been blessed with five children—Mary, Nelly, Willie, (who died in 1867, aged three years) Grace and Charles.

POST OFFICE.

The post office at Albany was established in 1848, Erastus O. Pond being appointed the first postmaster. The office was kept in his store, on block 13. Mr. Pond was succeeded as postmaster by E. F. Warren, and he in turn by Andrew Burgor, Hiram Brown, Charles Campbell, Ferdinand Eldred, Hamilton Coates and John Lemmel, the present incumbent. Mr. Lemmel took the office on the 7th of August, 1866. In 1868, the office building was destroyed by fire, but Mr. Lemmel was successful in saving all mail records and postage stamps. Nov. 27, 1883, the office building was again consumed by fire. Mr. Lemmel, this time, succeeded in saving the mail, but some postage stamps and the old records were destroyed. The office became a money order department Oct. 28, 1878, and up to March 18, 1884, had issued 9,286 orders. The income of the office is about $500 annually.

John Lemmel, postmaster at Albany, and a prominent citizen of this county, was appointed to that position in 1866, and has since continued to serve the people in that capacity in a satisfactory manner. He is a native of France, born in Hiertigheim, near Strasburg, Nov. 2, 1825. He attended school as he had opportunity, until sixteen years old, when he was apprenticed to an older brother to learn the trade of tailor. After serving his time, he went to Strasburg and worked as journeyman for some time, then opened a shop at Hiertigheim, and continued in the business until 1853, when he left his native land and came to America, landing at New York, October 29, of that year. In June, 1854, he came west to Madison, Wis., and thence to New Glarus, where he purchased a farm, on which his father and only daughter settled. He then went to the town of Sylvester and worked in the store of C. F. Thompson seven months, then engaged with S. S. Hills, at Monticello a few months, then came to Albany and had a position with Charles Campbell until 1862, when he opened a shop and carried on the business of merchant tailor until the fall of 1864, when at his country's call, he enlisted in the old 5th Wisconsin Volunteers, company I, Capt. Thomas Flint being his captain. He belonged to the sixth army corps, Army of the Potomac, Gen. Meade commanding. On the 2d day of April, 1865, he was seriously wounded at the battle of Petersburg. After being seven months in the hospital, he returned again to his family, who had in the meanwhile lived in the country with his father-in-law he settled again in the village of Albany, and engaged in his old trade—merchant tailor—and did a flourishing business. In 1882, he sold out and only retained the post office. He has been twice married. His first wife was Eva Baszler, who bore him two children, one of whom is now living. Mrs. Lemmel and an infant son died on the ocean while on the way to America. His second wife was Orphia Stauffacher, born in Switzerland, coming to this country when six years old. Six children blessed this union—Lydia, Mary E., William T, Emma, Ella and John. Mr. Lemmel has the confidence and esteem of his fellow men to a goodly degree, and belongs to the best class of Green county citizens.

CIVIC SOCIETIES.

There are several societies represented in this village, and the most of them are in a prosperous condition. The A. F. & A. M. and the I. O. O. F. fraternities had the misfortune of having their charters and all records destroyed by the fire on Nov. 27, 1883, and thus in order to obtain their history, the historian is obliged to rely on the memories of the older members. Albany Lodge, No. 75, I. O. O. F., was organized on the 19th of February, 1854, with the following named charter members: Hiram Brown, J. H. Warren, Ira S. Dexter, C. S. Gleason, Yates Lacy, Charles Robertson, E. L. Warner and A. Thomas. The lodge was in a flourishing condition, and in 1861, its membership numbered nearly ninety. But when the Civil War broke out, and our Nation was calling for brave and patriotic citizens, so many of the leading members responded, that the lodge had its last meeting on the 20th day of July, 1861. In October, 1865, the members returning from the field of battle, re-organized, and the lodge in a short time regained its former vigor. Their lodge room, with contents, was destroyed by the fire. But as they had money in their treasury, they at once rebuilt without calling for or accepting aid from other lodges. Their present room cost them about $750, which amount has been fully paid. The following named members of the lodge are past noble grands: John H. Warner, Thomas Flint, J. B. Perry, C. W. Burns, M. T. Gleason, Ira S. Dexter, S. A. Pond, C. S. Gleason, L. A. Nichols, L. H. Warren, E. F. Warren, C. S. Tibbitts, W. H. Howard, Thomas Gravenor, Richard Glennon, N. B. Murray, A. L. Weston and J. F. Carle. The officers in 1884 were: A. W. Murray, N. G.; A. L. Whitcomb, V. G.; C. S. Tibbitts, secretary; Thomas Gravenor, treasurer; and J. B. Perry, John Lemmel and J. F. Carle, trustees. Regular communications every Tuesday evening. The present membership is fifty.

Albany Lodge, No. 36, A. F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation March 1, 1851, and was granted its charter June 9, 1852. H. B. Jobes is the present W. M., and Thomas Gravenor, secretary. Regular meetings are held on the first and third Wednesdays in each month.

Hiram B. Jobes, a native of the town of Brant, Erie Co., N. Y., was born Jan. 30, 1838. In his childhood he attended the district school until twelve years of age. He then entered a printing office in the village of Gowanda where he served three years. In 1855 he came to Albany and engaged as clerk with his uncle, E. Bowen, by whom he was employed nine years; then in company with E. W. Persons bought his uncle's stock of goods and they carried on business together one year. His partner then sold his interest to Hiram Bowen, who was succeeded one year later by Gilbert Dolson, with whom Mr. Jobes continued in business until 1871. In that year they were burned out, and Mr. Jobes purchased his partner's interest in the stock that was saved. He continued business alone until September, 1883, when he sold out to J. F. Litel. He has been three times married., His first wife, Ophelia H. Stetson, of Erie Co., N. Y., was born March 8, 1837, and died July 19, 1870. He was again married in 1871 to Sarah Van Curen, who died in the spring of 1873. He was married the third time in July, 1874, to Mrs. Frances Usher Banks, who was born in Alexandria, Licking Co., Ohio. Mr. Jobes is a member of Albany Lodge, No. 36, of A. F. & A. M. and has been connected with temperance work for a number of years.

Thomas Gravenor, the present clerk of the town of Albany, is a native of Wales, born March 17, 1840. He attended school in his native country until eleven years old, was then apprenticed to a shoemaker to learn the trade. He served four years, then at the age of fifteen years he came to America with his parents, with whom he remained until the death of his father, which occurred in Monroe Co., Wis., Feb. 9, 1859. The family then came to Green county, where he traded for a farm in the town of Mount Pleasant and engaged in farming. In 1864 he went to Colorado, and engaged in mining three years, then returned and resumed farming. In 1876, on account of failing health, he moved with his family to California and remained one year. He then went to New Mexico and engaged in the livery business, while his family returned to Green county. A few months later he returned to Albany and engaged in the grocery and provision business, in which he still continues. He still owns his farm in Mount Pleasant, which he rents. Mr. Gravenor has been twice married, first to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Ann Pryce who died Aug. 21, 1872, leaving one child—William J. He was again married April 25, 1875, to Araminta Dorman and they have one child—Jesse Thomas. Mr. Gravenor's father, William Gravenor, was born in the southern part of Wales. In 1855 he emigrated to America and first settled in Mount Pleasant, Green county, where he purchased a small improved farm, and lived there three years. He then sold out and moved to Monroe county, where he died in 1859, soon after which his family returned to Green county where his widow, Margaret Gravenor, died in 1866. They had four children—William, Jane, Thomas and Margaret. William is dead; Jane is the wife of W. L. Baldwin and lives in Minnesota; Margaret is the wife of Amos St. John, and lives in Mount Pleasant.

Erastus Hoyt Post, No. 69, G. A. R., was organized on the 24th day of March, 1883. The officiating officer being L. O. Holmes of Baraboo; mustering officer deputy of Wisconsin. He was assisted by comrades James Brown, Wallace Eastman, Delos Williams and Wilson Brown of Evansville. The following were elected as the first officers: Capt. Thomas Flint, commander; Capt. C. W. Burns, S. V. C.; Capt. J. F. Annis, J. V. C.; F. J. Carle, adjutant; John Gillett, quartermaster; N. B. Murrey, officer of the day; Peter Benson, officer of the guard; S. F. Smith, sergeant-major. Erastus Hoyt, after whom the lodge was named, came to Albany in about 1860. He was a young man, and soon became a favorite among his associates. He entered the employment of Timothy Kellogg, as teamster, and in a short time united in marriage with Betsy Kellogg, a sister of his employer. When the Civil War broke out he responded to the call of his country by enlisting under Capt. C. W. Burns, in the old company F., 31st regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, in August, 1862. While on duty as a soldier, he contracted that dreadful disease, chronic diarrhea, which resulted in death, while he was yet in service, and his body now lies mouldering by the side of other brave comrades in the village cemetery. He is justly entitled to the tribute of respect shown him by his surviving comrades. He was born in 1840, and died in 1863.

In the fall of 1859, the first literary society was organized in the village of Albany, Wis.—the Albany Lyceum, which held its first meeting on Nov. 2, 1859, at high school building on east side of Sugar river, It was presided over by J. H. Warren, who was chosen president and William Gould, secretary. A constitution and by-laws were submitted and adopted. Prominent among the members who took an active part in the deliberations, may be mentioned the names of H. Medbery, Jr., C. W. Tomkins, Ira Dexter, J. B. Perry, E. R. Rockwood, H. B. Jobes, William Gould, J. H. Warren, J. H. Barnes, Gustave Klaesy, N. D. Tibbitts, H. A. Elliott, E. F. Warren and Warren Osgood. The following question chosen for discussion at a subsequent meeting of the society, reflects great credit for the mark of appreciation and esteem bestowed on the gentler sex:

Resolved, "That the education of females is of greater importance to society than that of males."

The society expended its forces in a little over two years, and was known as an event of the past. October 15, 1880 witnessed a re-organization, and a new membership, virtually a distinct society, as it embraced only three of the original members—J. B. Perry, C. W. Tomkins and H. B. Jobes, but retained the name and adopted the same constitution and by-laws which governed the first. H. Medbery, Jr., again became a member in the winter of 1883. The present membership includes the above, also Prof. J. L. Sherron, Aaron Broughton, Warren Howard, S. S. Hills, Richard Glennan, Warren Tomkins and others. The society has made rapid progress in the pursuit of useful knowledge. It holds regular meeting each week, in Grange Hall, Albany.

The leading citizens of Albany have always opposed the liquor traffic, and have thus kept up a continual battle with the demon alcohol. The first temperance society organized was Albany Lodge, No. 38, I. O. G. T., which was chartered Dec. 25, 1856. This was succeeded in June 10, 1857, by Rescue Lodge, 117, I. O. G. T. Among the charter members of Rescue Lodge were : Mr. and Mrs. L. Warren, E. F. Warren, Mrs. Maria Warren, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Tibbitts and Mrs. Werner. This lodge surrendered its charter after a few years, as likewise did several succeeding Good Templar lodges and was repeatedly resurrected. The lodge, in 1884, was known as Crystal Fountain Lodge.

Sons of Temperance, Drunkards' Friends, No. 198, was organized Nov. 22, 1882, with nineteen charter members. The following were the first officers elected : H. B. Jobes, W. P.; Nellie Warren, W. A.; J. F. Carle, W. R. S.; Charlotte Roberts, W. A. S.; Freeman Roberts, W. F. S.; V. D. Burt, W. T.; Rev. Tyacke, W. Chaplain; C. M. Lockwood, W. Cond; Mrs. Ella J. Kellogg, A. C.; Mrs. Tyacke, J. S.; George Owens, O. S.; Mrs. John Lacy, P. W. P.; Nellie Warren, D. P. The lodge is now in a flourishing condition and numbers seventy-five members. Weekly meetings are held at the Grange Hall.

Crystal Fountain Lodge, No. 478, I. O. G. T., was chartered Jan. 25, 1879, with twenty-one members. The first officers elected were as follows: N. B. Murrey, W. C. T.; Erva Maynard, W. V. T.; Rev. S. E. Sweet, W. C.; J. F. Annis, W. S.; Eddie Dorr, W. A. S.; G. H. Turner, W. F. S.; Mrs. A. Burt, W. T.; D. Atkinson, W. M.

Viola Burt, W. D. M.; Mrs. Alba Murrey, I. I. G.; F. L. Roberts, W. O. G.; Mrs. Olive Annis, W. R. H. S.; Mrs. Susan Alverson, W. L. H. S. V. D. Burt, P. W. C. T. Meetings are held every Wednesday evening. The present membership of the lodge is eighty-seven.

RELIGIOUS.

There were no ministers of the gospel among the early settlers, but through the untiring efforts of Chloe Pond, Louisa M. Nichols and Maria I. Pond,* who canvassed every family in the neighborhood, a Sabbath school was organized in 1846. The meetings were at first held in a log school house west of the village. But when cold weather set in they met in the village. The people all took an active interest, and by prompt attendance, a wide-awake and instructive Sabbath school was continued for several years.

Rev. J. D. Stevens was the first Congregational preacher to hold services at Albany. He came here first in 1853. Elder G. R. Patton, a Baptist preacher from near Juda, was the first minister of the gospel to preach west of the river in Albany. He held services in the little log school house in 1847. Rev. Church, a Presbyterian, preached the first sermon in the village of Albany proper, in 1848, in a small frame building located where J. B. Perry's office now stands. This was his only visit to this place.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Albany was organized at the stone school house in 1855. Among the first members of the class were:

Mrs. Ann Eliza Jobes, V. H. Vancuren and wife, D. S. Smith and wife, Ashael Hills and wife, and Henry Dickinson and wife. Among the preachers who have filled the pulpit for this class are the following: Revs. Cauley, Ferguson, Wheeler, Coleman, Budlong, Butler, Wilde, Hammond, [The last named served during the war as chaplain of the 5th Wisconsin regiment. He is now post chaplain in the U. S. Army.] Russell, Smith, Allen, Benedict, Haskins, Lewis, J. J. Walker, Pengilly, Clifton, Evans, Briggs, Tull, Allen and Rev. Mr. Tyacke. The last named is the present pastor. The class met for worship in the Congregational church until 1883, when they erected a frame church building, valued at $2,000. Francis Atkinson is the present class leader.

Francis Atkinson was born in Yorkshire, England, May 28, 1837. He is a son of Richard and Mary (Nelson) Atkinson, pioneers of Green county. In 1842 they emigrated to America and located in Champaign Co., Ohio. In 1846 they removed to Wisconsin, locating in the town of Albany, this county. Francis helped his father and older brothers fence and clear a farm; working on the farm in the summer and attending school in the winter, until the winter of 1859—60, when he commenced work for himself. He was married in the spring of 1860 to Sarah, daughter of John and Sarah (Wilding) Jones. He rented a farm in the town of Decatur, and at the end of one year, purchased the same farm. In 1871 he bought 145 acres more. He followed teaching in the winter time for five years. In 1882 he purchased 170 acres in the town of Albany, adjoining his old farm, and moved thereon, and in 1883 erected a new barn. He is engaged in raising grain and stock. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson were both converted in early life, and joined the Church. He joined the United Brethren Church, when meetings were held in the old log school house. He served as class steward for a number of years. In 1877 he joined the M. E. Church, and has since been appointed class-leader. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson are the parents of eight children—Owen O., William F., Russell B., Mary A., Annie M., Lillian M., Nellie W. and. Ettie May.

On the 11th of June, 1854, a Congregational society was organized by Rev. J. D. Stevens in the old stone school house. Among the first members were: Everett Dodge and wife, John Flint and wife, Thomas Flint and wife, Mrs. Julia Nichols, Mrs. Dr. Fayette, Mrs. Chloe Baxter, Mrs. John Burt and E. S. Gillies and wife. The first deacons were Everett Dodge and John Flint. For a number of years the society met at the school house, and then a frame church was built. This church was erected by the people as a union church and was to be open to all denominations. Rev. J. D. Stevens was the first pastor of the Congregational Church. After him came Revs. James Jameson, Mr. Webb, Mr. Foot and Mr. Jameson. As most of the members have left, this organization has been abandoned.

A union Sunday school was organized at about the same time that the Congregational society was organized. Chauncey Hurlburt was the first superintendent. This Sunday school is still in existence and is in a flourishing condition. The following named have acted as superintendent: Chauncey Hurlburt, James Barnes, Thomas Flint, Marshall Kellogg, Thomas Flint, G. W. Roberts and Thomas Flint. The latter is the present superintendent.

ALBANY CEMETERY.

Albany cemetery is located in the southwestern portion of the village plat between Warren's addition and the Monroe road. It is triangular in form and contains about five acres. The ground was donated to the village for burial purposes in 1851, by Erastus O. Pond and Dr. Samuel F. Nichols.

OUR NATION'S BIRTHDAY.

The first celebration of our Nation's birthday, at Albany, took place July 4, 1846. On that day the people from miles around met on the east bank of Sugar river, near the residence of Erastus O. Pond. There were present at this gathering, counting old and young, large and small, just seventy-five souls. Dr. Samuel F. Nichols was orator of the day, and the young ladies furnished the music, which consisted of singing the "Star Spangled Banner." All present enjoyed themselves and went to their respective homes feeling that the day had been well spent.

The second celebration took place July 4, 1853, at which time there was a much larger crowd than at the first, and a pleasant time was had.

LOSS OF LIFE BY ACCIDENT.

The first fatal accident in the town, occurred on the 1st of June, 1851. On that day William Richardson, a merchant, was drowned in Sugar river while attempting to cross in a small boat. He was accompanied by S. A. Pond. When they reached the river, Richardson said he would return to the house for his rubbers, as he didn't want to wet his feet, "if he did get drowned." In the middle of the stream the current was too strong for them and they were swept over the dam. The boat went over all right, but the under current drew it back under the falls and it was then capsized. Pond was a good swimmer and struck out for the shore, but the current was swift and he was carried below the bridge before he could reach shore. Richardson could not swim and was drowned. Although every possible effort was put forth, his body was not found until June 21, when it was accidentally discovered, lodged against some drift-wood a few miles below the village.

Isaac T. Armsbury, a farmer by occupation, was missed from his home in 1858. Diligent search was made in the surrounding country and the river was dragged with grapples and after unceasing efforts, his body was found in Sugar river.

In 1858 a son of William Firm, age, thirteen years, took off his clothes, jumped into the river and was drowned. It is thought the boy did not know that the water was deep enough to drown him.

In 1872 a party took a boat to go fishing, and were carried over the dam. One of the party, a Norwegian, was drowned.

Gabriel Baglinger, a tailor by occupation, was drowned while bathing in 1874.

Aaron Peckham was drowned in 1874, while washing sheep in the river about two miles below the village.

In 1866 Herbert Atkinson was accidentally shot with a revolver in the hands of John Pace, Jr. The shooting took place in a saloon. Mr. Atkinson was a promising young man; about nineteen years of age.

Eddie Dodge, son of J. M. Dodge, was killed by falling walls at the fire, Nov. 27, 1883.

John McFarland, while in the employ of the C., M. & St. P. R. R. Co., as brakeman, was killed near the depot, on Dec. 8, 1883. He was in the act of coupling cars, when he was caught between the locomotive and a flat car, the coupling link passing through his body, causing death in a few hours. He was thirty-four years of age, and left a wife and two children.

FIRES AT ALBANY.

Few towns have been so unfortunate with fires as Albany. For, although only a village of about 400 inhabitants, it has suffered the loss of over $100,000 worth of property by fire.

The first large fire occurred in 1866, when the Charles Campbell block, at the time occupied as a hotel, was destroyed; loss, about $2,500. Two years later five stores, including post office, were consumed; loss, nearly $20,000. In 1872 five more stores were destroyed, and a loss of about $20,000 sustained, and in June, 1880, the Warren block, occupied as a hardware store, was laid in ashes, causing a loss of $8,000. But the largest and most destructive of the conflagrations occurred in 1883, and was accompanied by loss of life.

ALBANY'S GREAT FIRE.

At an early hour Tuesday morning, Nov. 27, 1883, the family of J. A. Lockridge, who were occupying rooms on the second floor of Murray's block, were startled by discovering that their rooms were filled with smoke so dense as to almost suffocate. The family had barely time to give the alarm to J. E. Flood's family, occupying an adjoining suite of rooms, clothe themselves and beat a hasty retreat, before the flames were on their track.

The cry of "Fire! Fire! Fire!" rang out on the night air, and before many minutes nearly all the inhabitants of the village were at the scene of disaster. The flames spread with such rapidity that all efforts to stay their progress proved futile, and the work of saving goods was begun, but this was soon cut off by the fire breaking through the upper floors.

While the citizens were performing efficient work in the store of John Lemmel, carrying out goods, an explosion occurred from gunpowder stored on the premises, tearing down a portion of the walls of Murrey's building, throwing the end walls into the street and instantly killing Eddie Dodge, a promising son of J. M. Dodge, who, with others, was occupied in carrying out goods. He had just reached the sidewalk when the crash came, and he was almost buried in the debris. His skull was crushed and a terrible gash cut in the right side of his neck, thus causing instant death. The iron columns in front of the building remained standing, otherwise the loss of life would have been much greater. However, a number of persons were precipitated into the cellar and narrowly escaped with their lives. Some would have perished had they not been extricated from their perilous position.

Excitement now ran high. Union block and Murrey's block were one sheet of flames. The fire crossed the street and destroyed several wooden buildings, and it was with herculean efforts that the mill of Warren & Tomkins was saved.

The financial loss by this fire was about $60,000; insurance, $20,000. Those who suffered the loss were: N. B. Murrey, Murrey block; John Lemmel, hardware and building; J. A. Lockridge, restaurant; J. F. Litel, general store; G. W. Bartlett, drugs and building; J. Benkirk, clothing; John Hahn, boots and shoes; C. S. Tibbitts, harness; A. Darling, boots and shoes; Albany Journal; Albany Vindicator; S. A. Pond, Pond's Hall; A. F. & A. M. Hall; I. O. O. F. Hall; E. B. Dorr, blacksmith; Parker Dodge, J. F. Maynard, furniture; Humes & Bliss, harness;

Charles Humphrey and E. Bagley. The following sustained bodily injury: Thomas Dorman, collar bone broken; Charles Mathews, bruised about the head; Thomas Gravenor, face cut; Richard Glennan, Fred Roberts, Will Roberts, John Lemmel, Charles Roberts and others, sustained more or less injury. How the fire originated is a mystery, but was no doubt accidental.

ON THE DEATH OF EDDIE DODGE.

[By Mrs. Nellie Jacobson.]

Little Eddie was killed in his heroic efforts in the great fire at Albany, on the night of Nov. 28, 1883. Just after returning from ringing the church bell, to arouse the citizens.

Oh! the cruel, cruel fire!
"Tis a hungry, raging fiend,
Sweeping with it worldly treasures
By hard hours of labor gleaned.

"Tis a sight to touch the heart cords,
Even of the direst foe;
Gazing on those smouldering ruins,
Burying treasures in their glow.

Many heads are bowed in thinking
Of hard spent, toilsome days,
Gathering that which, in a moment,
Vanished in that awful blaze.

The future seems all cheerless,
To many hearts to-night,
Thinking of the toils and crosses,
To bring back those treasures bright.

Yes, Ah! many a lonely hearth-stone,
Has been sadly robbed of bliss,
And the cruel, cruel fire fiend,
Is the only cause of this.

But while mourning worldly losses,
Cast your eyes, dear friends, around,
See ye that no vacant chair
At your fireside can be found.

Then in thankfulness, for mercy,
Breathe within a silent prayer,
That this cruel grief has spared you
All the dear ones gathered there.

Then think ye, of a lonely home
Where lies a boyish form,
Which, but a few short hours ago,
With life, was pulsing warm.

He hastened with the many,
 To lend a helping hand,
 To quell the fiery monster,
 That rose so wild and grand.
 But ah! how brief the moment,
 Till sadly, back they bore
 A crushed and mangled body,
 A breathing form no more.
 Think of the lonely father,
 And hear his anguished moan,
 Say, do you bring my darling thus,
 My jewel, has it gone?
 In what, is life worth living now.
 The stricken parent cries,
 My idol, it is broken,
 And here in ruin lies.
 He seeks to clasp the mangled form,
 That once had been his joy,
 As if to warm the frozen blood,
 And wake to life, his boy.
 The sad and weeping sister,
 Bathes the cold face with tears,
 Gazing on the dear companion,
 Of her happy childhood years.
 No more, as in the happy past,
 His coming shall she wait,
 Or gladden at the welcome sound,
 His foot-fall at the gate.
 Among his young companions,
 And his many, many friends,
 His name is softly spoken,
 In the tone that sorrow lends,
 For to know him was to love him,
 And his presence all shall miss,
 Oh! the cruel, cruel fire fiend,
 Its most cruel work was this.

FLOODS.

In the spring of 1867 the ice in Sugar river was thirty inches in thickness, and when the thaw came it broke up and went out with a rush causing high water. The ice went out with such force as to destroy everything it came in contact with. Thus all the bridges in the town were swept away, outbuildings were removed and the "Albany Grist Mill" was destroyed. The damage done in the town of Albany amounted to at least $40,000. The mill destroyed being valued at about one-half that amount. The greatest flood, however, occurred on the 30th of June, 1880, on which date Sugar river was about eight feet above low water mark and thus flooded nearly all of the streets in the village. But as there was no ice no serious damage was done, further than wetting the buildings and inconveniencing the inhabitants.

ALBANY IN 1854.

The following article was published in the Janesville Gazette in 1854, and has been preserved by J. B. Perry, Esq.:

"In regard to population, Albany ranks as the second town in Green county—Monroe being the first—yet Albany is a small village and one would get but a very inadequate idea of its business importance from the number of its inhabitants. The population of Albany is greatly disproportionate to the amount of its business. In fact it can be safely said that there is no other town, of its size, in the State of Wisconsin whose business transactions equal that of this village. The reason of this is found in a great measure in the extremely favorable position this village occupies. It is a central point in reference to a large and populous section of country whose trade is best accommodated here, being sufficiently distant from any surrounding village which can pretend to offer this place any effective rivalry. This village possesses another advantage the importance of which cannot be overlooked by business men. It has a capital water power. It is with no desire to make invidious comparisons, or with any unfriendly feelings toward other villages that the statement is made, that, all things considered, the hydraulic power of this place is superior to any other on Sugar river. There is one large flouring mill already in operation and there will probably be another erected here the coming season. There is also a good saw mill at this place, and there is to be a cabinet and carriage manufactory built here the ensuing spring which will make use of some of this water power. But all of the above will fall far short of exhausting it.

"In regard to the country immediately surrounding Albany, no higher praise can be accorded it than to say, it is as good, as rich, and as productive as any in Wisconsin. It is such a country as demands and guarantees the growth and prosperity of the place.

“That Albany is bound to increase rapidly in wealth and population there can be no doubt, unless, indeed, some unwise policy, or rather, obstacle is interposed to avert for the time its ‘manifest destiny.’ The statistics given below have been carefully collected by J. B. Perry, Esq., and they can be relied upon as correct. They will be found, we think, to substantiate the claims we have made for Albany:

“The Albany dealers have purchased since November last:

Pork	236,337 lbs.
Wheat	25,876 bu.
Corn, since October last	18,800 "
Oats.....	6,500 "
Quails	1,166 doz.
Poultry	2,050 lbs.
Number of Prairie Hens.....	400
Wheat ground at mill for customers ...	8,622 bu.
Oats and other feed.....	3,933 "
Flour packed.....	2,000 lbs.
Capital invested in trade outside of the above	$41,250.00

PIONEER SETTLERS AND PROMINENT CITIZENS.

The following named are those composing the bone and sinew of the town and village of Albany. If not early settlers, they are citizens who by their enterprise and general popularity are deserving of mention in the annals of progress. Their names occur in order of their settlement as near as possible:

William P. Murrey, one of the pioneers of Green county, was a native of New York, born in the Mohawk valley, July 16, 1814. When a young man he emigrated to Michigan and settled in Hilldale county, where he was married to Susan A. Wright, a native of Oneida Co., N. Y., born in 1821. They lived in Hilldale county until 1844, then came to the Territory of Wisconsin. He rented land in Waukesha county and put in a crop, then came to Green county and entered land on sections 2 and 11, township 2, range 9 east, now known as Decatur. He then returned to Waukesha county and harvested his crop. In the fall he came back to Decatur and built a log cabin, and worked through the winter at rail-splitting. In the spring of 1845 he was joined by his family. He continued to live upon this farm until 1861. In September of that year, he enlisted in company E, of the 13th Wisconsin regiment, and served until after the close of the war. He was discharged in the fall of 1865, when he returned home and resumed farming. He died in April, 1881. In the fall of 1882 his widow removed to Colorado where she resides at present. Five children were born to them—Napoleon B., William H., Albert W., Lou P. and Emeline A. Napoleon B. Murrey was born in Michigan, Aug. 29, 1840, and was four years old when he came with his parents to Wisconsin. His early life was spent in the town of Decatur. He enlisted on the day that he was twenty-one years old, in the 5th Wisconsin Light Artillery, and served until the expiration of his term of enlistment. Among the more important battles in which he participated are: Island No. 10, siege of Corinth and Jackson, in Mississippi; Perryville, Ky., Stone River and Chattanooga. He was taken sick at Chattanooga and sent to the hospital, where he remained three months. He was then sent to Murfreesboro and was there one year, then again joined his command at Atlanta, where, after participating in the capture of that city, he was honorably discharged, and returned home. He engaged in farming until 1871, when he went to Texas and remained two years, then returned to Green county. In 1874 he removed to the village of Albany, where he now lives. In 1881 he erected a business house on block 13, which was destroyed by fire Nov. 27, 1883. He then built a brick block, 40x90 feet, with a hall in the second story. He was married in June, 1865, to Abby Caleff, a native of Dixon, Ill.

Daniel Hill started, in 1845, from Pennsylvania for Wisconsin, with one horse and a wagon. He was accompanied by his wife and four children. Mr. Hill was taken sick the day he started, but kept on until he reached Trumbull Co., Ohio. There he stopped, and a few days later, died. His remains were there buried. After the funeral, the family again started on their lonely way for the Territory of Wisconsin. Having cooking utensils with them, they camped and cooked by the road-side. After a long and tedious journey, they reached Green county and located in the town of Sylvester, where three of the children had previously settled. The family lived there for several years. In 1874 Mrs. Hill went to Monticello to live with her daughter, Mrs. Hanford Selleck. She lived with her until the time of her death. Mr. Hill was born in Northumberland Co., Penn., in 1796. Mrs. Hill's maiden name was Margaret Shaner. She was born in Northumberland Co., Penn., in 1798. There were eleven children born to them, six of whom are now living—Eliza, married to Nathaniel Edgar, lives in Iowa; Mary, wife of A. White, living in Monroe; Julia A., wife of J. T. Sutherland, resides in Grant county; Sarah J., wife of H. M. Selleck, of Monticello; William, born in Northumberland Co., Penn., June 9, 1833, and Henry, born in Northumberland Co., Penn., in 1855. The two boys went to work for an older brother, to raise means to keep the family together. They remained with him between two and three years, then William engaged to work at $10 per month, for J. J. Dawson, of Decatur, on his farm. At the end of fourteen months, Henry rented the farm, and his mother and two sisters moved thereon. They remained there six years, when the two brothers purchased a farm on section 4, in the town of Sylvester. In about four years afterward, William purchased Henry's interest in the farm, and continued farming until 1875, when he removed to Brodhead and engaged in the lumber business. He remained there in business until 1883, when he removed to Albany and engaged in the same business, with H. E. Burnham as partner. He was married on the 17th of November, 1863, to Miss F. L. Whittier, born in Greenfield, Franklin Co., Mass. They had three children—Harry B., Charlie and Willie H. Henry now lives in Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. He was a soldier in the late war, serving in an Iowa regiment.

Arden H. Colton, son of Pliny and Rizpah Colton, was born in the town of Ripley, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1822. When he was three years old his parents moved to Erie Co., Penn., where they lived ten years, then moved to Mercer county in the same State. When the subject of this sketch was twenty-two years old, he started for the west. He traveled by way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to Belleville, Iowa, thence to Jackson county, of the same State. He engaged in driving a breaking team until harvest, then worked at harvesting until fall. He then returned to Pennsylvania and worked through the winter in an iron furnace. In the spring he went again to Jackson Co., Iowa, rented land, and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1845 he came to Green county and drove team from Exeter, to different points, which business he continued fourteen months. He was married March 22, 1847, to Margaret J. Rima, daughter of John and Armelia (Fuller) Rima. She was born in Pennsylvania. At this time he bought a piece of timber land on section 10, and soon after traded twenty acres of this land for forty acres of prairie land on section 10, where he erected a log house and commenced housekeeping. They lived there two years, then traded for forty acres one mile north, to which they removed. One year later he sold that land and bought eighty acres in the town of Exeter, erected a log house and lived there one year, then sold, and in the fall of 1854, removed to Richland county and bought 240 acres in the town of Willow. He built a log house in which he lived four years, then erected a frame house, and lived there until 1859. He then traded his farm for land in Floyd Co., Iowa, returned to Green county and rented land in the town of Mount Pleasant. He lived there through the summer and then bought fifty acres on section 11, which he lost. He lived there through the winter and in the spring rented a farm adjoining, and worked that summer. In the fall he removed to Monticello and rented a house during the winter, then went to look after his Iowa land. He lost pretty near all he had there, and traded what interest he had left for forty acres in the town of Jefferson, Green county, built a frame house and lived there two years, then bought eighty acres in the town of Washington, on which he lived six years, then sold and bought a farm on section 11, of Mount Pleasant, where he remained ten years, then traded for a farm of eighty acres on section 10. He lived there one year, then rented out his land and removed to Albany, where he rented a farm three years, then bought a farm on sections 16 and 20, also the lots in block 18, of the new addition to Albany, and sold his farm on section 10, town of Mount Pleasant. He erected a frame house and barn and has since made this his home. Mr. and Mrs. Colton have five children—Rizpah A., Mary E., Armelia, Sarah J. and Phebe D.

Richard Hamer, a pioneer of Green county, was born at Glanravan, in the parish of Llanbadarn-ffynydd, Radnorshire, South Wales, March 23, 1817. He was reared to agricultural pursuits until he was eighteen years old, when he was apprenticed to Benjamin Davis, of Moughke, blacksmith, with whom he served two years. He afterwards worked at Dolver and Llanbadarn, as journeyman. He, however, returned to farming, at which he remained until he emigrated to America. On the 1st of May, 1845, he was married to Mary Iarman, daughter of Ezekiel and Maria Iarman, of Bryngwain, in the parish of Liandinam, Montgomeryshire, North Wales, and on the 7th day of May, in the same year, they took passage across the Atlantic from Liverpool, in the sailing ship, John Bentley. After a voyage of six weeks and three days they landed at Quebec, Canada. He, however, was for two weeks laid up in the quarantine, suffering from rheumatism. From Quebec he started and traveled by steamer to Kenosha. They then traveled by ox team from Kenosha to Burlington and Green county, to the same spot where he has ever since resided. The first night in his new home was one that will ever be remembered by him and his wife, they having to encounter a terrific thunder storm, the like of which they had never seen before or since. The only shelter was a wagon, and the vivid flashes of lightning served them as a lantern. Mr. Hamer pre-empted land on section 14, of township 3, range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany. He erected a log cabin and covered it with hay; the next summer he undertook to cover it with boards, but having only half enough, a portion of the original hay roof remained on through the summer. A blanket was hung in the doorway which answered the purpose of the more modern and substantial wooden door. He found employment in the neighborhood, working for fifty cents a day. At harvest he undertook to cut grain by the acre, getting fifty cents an acre. in this way he cut 109+ acres. That same year (1846), a Dutchman named Shomaker cut 111 acres, it taking him three days longer than Mr. Hamer. In the fall of 1846, Mr. Hamer and his wife had the ague very bad, Mrs. Hamer suffering with it for seven months; at this time they felt the necessity of having a good house, for their house had no door, and the roof only half covered, and no stove whatever, only a little fire on the ground in one corner and the smoke finding its way out between the logs as best it could. Mr. Hamer did considerable work digging out cellars and wells and fencing. He made 11,000 rails in the winter of 1847. He also undertook to cut out a cellar 18x24 feet and six and one half feet deep, for $5, which task he completed in four and one half days. It was that winter that he assisted to build the first house (which belonged to Dr. Nichols) ever raised in Albany. He also worked out, earning $9 a month. In the spring of this year, by his saving and industry, he had been enabled to buy his second forty acres, giving twenty-five per cent for the money with which to pay for it. The following season he raised the first crop of wheat, at the same time working out whenever an opportunity offered itself. In this way he was soon able to get a little stock, and an ox team, with which he worked his farm for twenty years or thereabouts. At the present time he has a good, new house standing on a splendid farm of 160 acres, fitted up with all modern improvements. Richard and Mary Hamer have been blessed with thirteen children, eight of whom are now living—Henry G., Mary Ann, John R., Ada Eliza, Thomas D., Eli M., James A. and Willie R.

George W. Bagley, one of the early settlers of Green county, was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., May 12, 1818. There he made his home until twenty-one years old, then went to Michigan and located in Jackson county, where he was engaged in railroading and farming. In 1842 he came to Wisconsin making the greater part of the way thither on foot. He entered eighty acres of timber land, forty acres of which was on section 30, township 3 north, range 9 east, and forty acres on section 25, township 3 north, range 8 east. He returned to Michigan and there remained until 1846, then came back to Green county and entered land on section 32. He erected a frame house, and commenced to improve the land. In 1848 he returned again to Michigan, and was married to Mary A. Weed. She was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., July 15, 1821. He then returned with his bride to their new home. Here he improved a farm, erected a good set of buildings, and made his residence until the time of his death, which occurred June 1, 1883. He has been prominently identified with the county and its interests, and was a member of the first board of supervisors of the town of Albany, and later held other offices of trust. He left a widow and three children to mourn his death. The children were—Hattie, Orastus P. and Lorrain L. The son, Lorrain L., now occupies the homestead. He had charge of the farm some time previous to his father's death. He was born in the town of Albany, May 30, 1856, and always made his home with his parents, his younger days having been spent in school, and in assisting his father on the farm. He was married in 1876, to Susan Reese, also a native of Albany. They have one child—Harry J.

John Flint, a pioneer of Green county, was a native of New Hampshire, born in the town of Antrim, Hillsborough county, May 26, 1800. There he grew to manhood, and was brought up on a farm, and taking advantage of every opportunity secured a fair education. He was married in his native county, to Sally Atwood. She was born in the town of Antrim, Oct. 20, 1803. In 1828 they started west to seek a home, and first located in Erie Co., N. Y., and remained two years, then removed to Chautauqua county, which at that was attracting the attention of settlers, and there they were pioneers. He purchased a tract of timberland built a log cabin and went to work to hew out a farm, and cleared about 100 acres. In 1844 he again started west, coming to Wisconsin and locating in Rock county, where he rented land until the fall of 1846, when he came to Green county, as before stated. Here he cleared a good farm, erected a comfortable house with good outbuildings, and made it his home until the time of his death, Nov. 18, 1878. Mrs. Flint died Feb. 16, 1884. Eleven children were born to them, eight of whom reached an adult age, six now living—Thomas, Joshua, Lynda, Caroline, Sanford H., and Elsie. Lynda married Aaron Broughton, and now lives in Rock county. Caroline, now Mrs. Swancutt, lives in Dodge Centre, Minn. Elsie married G. Lockwood, and lives in Brooklyn. Their oldest son, Thomas, was born in the town of Antrim, Hillsborough Co., N. H., July 31, 1822. He grew to manhood in Chautauqua county. In November, 1843, he came to Wisconsin, and in 1845 visited Green county and purchased government land on section 19, of township 3 north, range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany. He did not make a settlement at this time, but returned to Rock county, where he was married July 2, 1846, to Mary Simmons. On the 4th day of that month they started with a team of horses and wagon for their new home. They remained about two days, then returned to Rock county and engaged in farming. Jan. 2, 1848, they again came to this county and made a permanent settlement, built a log house 16x16 feet, and commenced to open up a farm. The first season he broke up about twenty acres and raised a good crop of wheat. Not having money to make improvements he spent a good deal of the time the first two seasons in breaking land for others. The second year he broke twenty acres more, and secured a good crop. Thus from a small beginning he has by industry and frugality secured a good property. In August, 1864, he enlisted as a private in the United States service, and was appointed captain of company I, 5th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service at Camp Randall, September 29. On the 2d day of October they started for the front and joined the army of the Potomac in the Shenandoah valley. He served with the regiment until the close of the war. The following are among the more important of the many engagements in which he participated:

Hatcher's Run, Petersburg, Fort Steadman and Sailor's Creek. During these engagements seventeen of his men were lost. After his discharge he returned home and resumed farming. He has been an industrious man, has had good health and been able to accomplish much, and is now the owner of 600 acres of land. The farm which he now occupies contains 240 acres, the greater part of which is improved. His log cabin has been replaced by a frame house that cost $3,000. He also has two frame barns, one for horses and one for cattle, and all other necessary farm buildings. Mr. and Mrs. Flint are the parents of six children, five of whom are now living—Ella, Alta, Merlin, deceased; Myron, Floyd and Ida. Ella was born Feb. 22, 1850; Alta was born Aug. 3, 1851; Merlin was born Oct. 13, 1852, and died Sept. 13, 1853; Myron was born March 13, 1854; Floyd was born July 9, 1855, and Ida was born Nov. 21, 1859. Mr. Flint has assessed the town several times, and has served on the board of supervisors. He has been connected with the Congregational Church and the Sabbath school since their organization. He is a man of energy and perseverance, and has the respect and confidence of the community in which he lives, and is a representative man of the best class of Green county citizens.

Their son, Sanford H. Flint, was born in the town of Ellicott, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., March 24, 1836, and was but ten years old when he came to Green county with his parents, with whom he made his home until 1860. He was married in November of that year to Harriet Comstock, daughter of Asa and Lydia (Smiley) Comstock. She was born at Janesville, Rock county. After his marriage he settled on a tract of unimproved land on section 20, town of Albany, where he cleared a farm and lived until 1878, when he purchased his present farm, located on section 19. Mr. and Mrs. Flint are the parents of seven children—Bertha, Grace, Charlie, Lenora, Nettie, Perley and Coyla. Frankie, their first child, died when about two years old.

Israel Phillips, present chairman of the board of supervisors, was one of the pioneer settlers of Green county, having come here in the year 1846. He entered the east half of the northeast quarter of section 26, in what is now the town of Albany, and at the same time pre-empted the northwest quarter of section 25. He erected a log house on the west half of the northwest quarter and occupied it for a few years, then moved it to the south line of the east half of the same quarter and lived in it there until 1864, when he built the frame house he now occupies. He is a native of York State, born in the town of Grafton, Rensselaer county in 1820. In 1840 he went to Genesee county and was there employed in farming, two years, then returned to Rensselaer county and remained one year, then went to Vermont and lived in Rutland county, where he was married to Miss L. S. Hill, a native of that county. They remained there until 1846, then started west to seek a home, and came directly to Wisconsin by the way of Champlain and Erie canals, thence by Lake Erie to Cleveland. They remained in Cleveland two weeks, then embarked on a steamer for Milwaukee, and there hired a team to take them to Green county. Here he stopped with John Broughton until he had erected a log cabin. Like many other early settlers, his means were limited, and he could enter but eighty acres of land at that time, but was enabled to purchase more, soon after. His farm now contains 440 acres, the greater part of which is improved. He is engaged principally in stock raising, and has a farm adapted to the business, well improved, and well located. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have but one child living—Marcella, who is the wife of W. H. Kelley, and lives in Smith Co., Kansas. Their son, Charles, was born Nov. 15, 1847, and died March 22, 1878, and was married to Elizabeth A. Gear. Two children blessed that union—William J. and Charles E., who live with their grandparents. Mr. Phillips is among the substantial citizens of the county, has been chairman of the board for a number of years, and has the respect of the community in which he dwells.

Robert Thomson, a pioneer of the town of Brooklyn, was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, in June, 1815. When he was ten years old, he went to work in a cotton mill. His father had been in good circumstances, but in consequence of signing notes for other parties, lost the whole of his property, and Robert, at the age of twelve, was entirely dependent upon, his own exertions for a livelihood. He continued to work in cotton and silk mills until 1842, when he left his native land and came to America. He first engaged in a carpet factory at Amsterdam, N. Y., where he remained until 1846, when he came to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled in Green county. He had purchased a land warrant from a Mexican soldier, which called for 160 acres of land, for which he paid $130. When he arrived in Green county he had $14 in cash, and his land warrant, which constituted the sum total of his worldly wealth. He had, at this time, a wife and five children. He made a "dug-out" to live in, and with the $14 purchased a cow, which, three days later, broke into a neighbor's wheat bin and ate so much wheat that she died. He had no money or team with which to improve his land, and was obliged to work for his neighbors. He engaged a great part of the time, in digging wells. The family felt the need of a cow, greatly, and one morning he started from home, promising not to return without one. He took the road leading to Madison, and when about three miles from home, met a man who was coming after him, who wished to employ him to dig a cellar, and to take a cow in part payment for it. This seemed providential, and he proceeded to the place, about three miles from Madison. He was absent from home nine days, then returned with a cow and $4 in money, which he had earned by digging the cellar. He then began building a house for his family. He quarried stone moonlight nights, made a wheelbarrow, in which he wheeled the stone from the quarry to his building spot, ten rods distant. He had no hammer, but used an old ax instead, and a wooden trowel of his own manufacture. By the time cold weather came on, the house was ready for occupancy, he having done all the work himself, and assisted a man to burn a kiln of lime. The house was 18x24 feet, and one story in height. Their furniture was homemade, except the table, which was a dry goods box, and also served as a cupboard. The chairs were made of slabs, with sticks for legs, and the bedsteads were made of poplar poles. By this time his clothes were wearing out, particularly his overalls, and it was a serious question how to get another pair. He finally killed two dogs and tanned their hides, which were made into a pair of overalls. He continued to work out, the greater part of the time, at ditching, for three years. He then had some stock which he had taken in payment for work, and a pair of calves he had bought when he first came here, were then large enough to work, so he broke them and commenced to improve his land. The first wheat that he raised, he took to Janesville, and there sold it for twenty-five cents per bushel. He worked out a portion of the time for some years, until he had seventy-five acres broken, after which he devoted his whole time to his farm. In 1872 he sold his farm and moved to Albany where he purchased village property and engaged in carpet weaving, but for the last few years he has lived at ease, having earned a fortune, which places him beyond the reach of want. His marriage took place in 1837. His wife was formerly Janet Laury, a native of Scotland. Their children are—Agnes, Ann, Janet, Mary J. and Kittie. Mrs. Thomson died in 1872.

Walter Tait, an early settler in the north part of the town of Albany, was born in Staffordshire, England, in November, 1819. When eighteen years old he left his native land for America, landed at New York and went directly to Saratoga county, where he engaged in farming a few years, then returned to England and spent a year in visiting. In 1843 he returned to America, and came directly to Wisconsin and settled in Rock county. In 1847 he sold out and came to Green county, where he entered land on section 9, township 3, range 9 east, now known as the town of Albany. He has opened up a farm, erected buildings, and still makes that his home. He was married, Jan. 1, 1844, to Susan Green. She was born in the town of Hanover, Luzerne Co., Penn. Nine children were born to them, seven of whom are now living—Sarah A., Nancy M., Clara L., Almira H., Albert D., Charlotte M. and Myron J. Sarah is the wife of Charles Purrington; Nancy is the wife of Theodore Shaffer; Clara is the wife of Frank Gilbert;

Almira is the wife of Frederick Shaffer, and Charlotte is the wife of Eugene Andrus.

Daniel N. Shaw, an early settler of Green county, is a native of Vermont, born in the town of Jericho, Chittenden county, Feb. 2, 1815, where his younger days were spent in school and on his father's farm. In 1837 he started west and spent three years in Indiana and Michigan, then returned to Vermont. He was married in his native State to May Jordan, and in 1846 they started for the Territory of Wisconsin. They took passage on a boat at Burlington, and went down Lake Champlain to the Champlain canal, thence by that route and the Erie canal to Buffalo; thence by way of the lakes to Milwaukee, then hired a team to Whitewater. He left his family at Whitewater and started out on foot to seek a suitable location. He bought a claim and entered land in township 4 north, range 10 east, now known as the town of Union, Rock county. He then went back to Whitewater, and soon returned with his family. He built a small frame house and lived there two years, then sold out and came to Green county. He purchased a claim on section 18, township 4, range 9 east, now known as the town of Brooklyn. He went on to the land and built a log cabin, in which the family lived one summer, when he built a frame house. He improved quite a tract of land and lived there seven years, then sold out and bought a partly improved farm on section 17. There he erected good buildings and made many improvements. In the fall of 1882 he sold this farm, and the following May removed to Albany, where he purchased a residence and now lives a retired life. He met with an irreparable loss in the death of his wife, which occurred Feb. 12, 1884. She was born in the town of Underhill, Lamoille Co., Vt., Sept. 1, 1822. They were the parents of six children—Mary J., now the wife of J. R. Devlin, and living in Sauk county; Adney N., Erwin D., Eva A., Euseba A. and Elmer F. Adney, the oldest son, enlisted in company F,

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south. While at the front he was taken sick. His father was sent for and went to see him, and obtained a furlough for him, and they started home, but the young man died at Chicago, while on the way. The youngest son, Elmer, died at two and a half years old.

William Webb was a pioneer of Green county, having settled here in 1848. He purchased government land on section 25, township 3 north, range 9 east; also bought land adjoining, on section 30, township 3 north, range 10 east, in Rock county, making 312 acres in all. He erected a frame house on section 24, and made this his home until 1882. During that time he had improved the land, made an addition to his house, and built two commodious frame barns, one for cattle, the other for horses; also a large granary, and other smaller buildings. In 1882 he purchased land near the village of Albany, and now within the corporate limits, and built on it a good frame residence, where he is now living a retired life. He is a native of (New) York State, born at Utica, Oneida county, May 16, 1819. He made his home with his parents until eighteen years old, then went to Painesville, Ohio, and spent two years with an older brother, thence went to Green Bay, Wis., and engaged in lumbering two years, then went to Walworth county, thence to Rock county. He was married April 27, 1841, to Fanny Rice. She was born in the town of Boston, Erie Co., N. Y. He bought some land in Johnston county, put up a log cabin and commenced improvements, remaining until 1848, when he came to Green county, as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Webb have five children living—Albert A., Jennie A. Roswell, Charles and Emma. Mr. Webb has always been a member of the democratic party, although he exercises the right to vote for the best men.

Capt. Charles W. Burns is a veteran of two wars. His first enlistment was in 1847, in an independent company of cavalry that was organized at Newark, Ohio, by Capt. John Duncan. He went to Mexico and served exactly one year, then returned and was honorably discharged and mustered out at Cincinnati. In 1862 he was commissioned as captain and raised a company which was designated as company F, and attached to the 31st Wisconsin regiment, Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in Oct. 9, 1862, at Fort Crawford, Prairie du Chien. They remained in the State until the spring of 1863 then went to Columbus, Ky., and performed garrison duty at Fort Halleck through the summer. From there they went to Nashville, thence to LaVergne, and did guard and picket duty two months, then went to Murfreesboro, where the company was detailed to do provost duty, and in January, 1864, Capt. C. W. Burns returned to Wisconsin for State duty at Camp Randall, Madison, where he with his company, were discharged in July, 1865. The subject of this sketch was born in Wheeling, W. Va., July 18, 1825. When quite young his parents removed to Licking Co., Ohio, where he grew to manhood. When he was seventeen years old he engaged with a blacksmith to learn the trade, and served three years. After his return from the Mexican War he formed a business partnership with his former employer at Newark. In the spring of 1840 he came to Green county, and in company with Daniel Counet opened a shop at Monroe. There he carried on business seven years, when he removed to Clarso and engaged in farming until 1860, when he came to Albany and opened a blacksmith shop, where he continued to work until the time of his enlistment in the army. He returned from the service, with health impaired to such an extent that for some time he was unable to engage in active business. In 1875 he opened a blacksmith shop in Albany, and continued in the business until October, 1883, when he sold out, and is now retired from active business life. He was married in 1852, to Mary Counet. Seven children blessed this union—Ellen, Hester, Frank, Carrie, Gertie, one son who died in infancy and Edward, who died at the age of three years.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

James Hudson, a pioneer of Green county, was born on the south branch of the Potomac river, in Virginia, Feb. 17, 1796. In 1802 his parents moved to Wheeling, where his father built a hotel, and kept it until the time of his death, in 1812. The subject of this sketch was soon afterward apprenticed to a wheelwright to learn the trade, at Chillicothe, Ohio. He served three years, then worked as journeyman three or four years, and then engaged in farming. He was married to Mary L. Bobeau, Oct. 28, 1819. They began life together at Chillicothe, and remained there till 1842. The county was very new at that time, and he often had to crack corn with a pestle, for food, as there were no mills. In 1842 they started west and located in Miami Co., Ohio, lived there three years, then again started westward and went to Marshall Co., Ill. He purchased land on which he made a small improvement and remained until 1849, then sold out and came to Green county on the 10th of June the same year, making the trip overland with a team. He bought land in the town of Decatur and improved a farm upon which he lived until 1863, when he sold and removed to Brodhead, where he died two years later. Mrs. Hudson lives with her eldest son's widow, at Fulton, Whitesides Co., Ill. Her son's name was John, and he was killed on Sunday morning at 2 o'clock, March 17, 1879, by three burglars who had entered his house. A reward of $15,000 was offered for their capture, but the villains escaped. The reward still remains standing should they ever be brought to justice. He was an old and highly respected citizen of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson were the parents of ten children, six of whom are now living—Sophia, William H., Mary L., George W., Jared B. and Elza.

William Hudson was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, June 17, 1833, and he was sixteen years old when he came to this county with his parents, with whom he made his home two years, then went back to Marshall Co., Ill., and was engaged in agricultural pursuits two years, when he returned to Green county. He was married in 1858 to Helen, daughter of Ashael and Julia (Shultz) Hills, who was born in Plattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y. At the time of his marriage he settled in Albany, (January, 1864,) and engaged in buying, selling and shipping live stock, and continued the same until 1879. In 1886 he purchased land on sections 17 and 20. In 1881 he removed to his father-in-law's farm, where he now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson have one daughter—Ada E., born at Albany, July 11, 1866.

Abel Peckham came to Green county in 1851 and bought a farm of Lathrop Abbott, on section 26. He then returned to New York State, and remained until the following year when he came back, bringing his family with him, and settled upon his farm. There was a log house on the place, into which they moved and lived in until 1856. In that year he erected a commodious brick house, in which he lived until his death in 1864. He was born in Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1798. He was reared upon a farm, and in his youth learned the cooper's trade. He was married in 1820 to Ada Brown, who was born in Petersburg, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1800. In 1822, they moved to Trenton, Oneida county, where he worked at his trade until 1852, then moved to Chautauqua county, and purchased land and cleared a farm, living there until 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Peckham were the parents of eleven children, ten of whom are now living—Sally W., who was born in Rensselaer county; Rhoda D., John F., Nelson A., Winfield S. and Ada, born in Oneida county; Joshua, Obadiah, Lucy J., Polly R., and Halsey, born in Chautauqua county.

Winfield S. Peckham was born March 19, 1829. He made his home with his parents until 1849, then started for the Territory of Wisconsin. He stopped near Milwaukee, where he worked four years at the cooper's trade, then in 1853, came to Albany and purchased eighty acres of land on section 35, which he improved and also worked at his trade. He was joined in marriage, Jan. 1, 1862, to Eleanor Bailey, widow of Merritt Turner. She was born in Luzerne Co., Penn. He erected a small frame house on his land, in which they lived one year. He then purchased eighty acres of land on section 27, and removed to it. Since 1866 he has occupied the homestead, where he has erected good buildings, including hog and stock barns. Being a natural mechanic he did the work himself. He has a shop upon the place, which is furnished with the necessary tools for doing wood and iron work. His farm now contains 500 acres, all under fence. Mr. and Mrs. Peckham have two children—George T. and Lydia M.

Judson M. Purinton, son of David H. and Chastina (Messinger) Purinton, was born in Allegany Co., N. Y., Nov. 20, 1829. When he was fifteen years old his parents emigrated to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled in Waukesha county where they remained two years, then came to Green county. The subject of this sketch, however, remained in Waukesha county until 1851. In that year he came to this county and purchased land on section 4, where he erected a log house and immediately commenced to make improvements. He was married in 1854, to Isabella, daughter of Sylvester and Hannah (Sutherland) Hills. She died in 1856, leaving one son, Sylvester. Mr. Purinton was again married in 1857, to Chloe Hills, a sister of his first wife. Seven children blessed this union, four of whom are now living—David, Edith, Amy and Agnes. Mr. Purinton was killed by lightning, Feb. 27, 1876. He was an industrious man and had improved a good farm and erected a comfortable frame house, thus leaving his family in comfortable circumstances. Since his death, his son David has successfully managed the farm.

Ole Gilbertson an early settler in the town of Albany, was born in Norway, in 1796. He was reared to agricultural pursuits in his native country. He was the oldest son of his parents, and at his father's death inherited his farm. He was married in 1817, and in 1827, his wife died, leaving four children. He was again married in 1828. In 1851 he sold his farm in Norway, and in the spring of 1852, started for America with his wife and eleven children. With them came seventeen of his neighbors, whose passage he assisted in paying. They took passage in the sailing vessel, Fedrenesminde, at the port of Holmestrard, and landed at Quebec after a voyage of six weeks and three days. They remained a short time at Quebec, then took passage on a steamer up the St. Lawrence river to Niagara, thence by land to Buffalo, where they shipped to Detroit, thence by rail to Chicago and to Milwaukee by water. There he hired teams to take the family overland to Green county, while the men followed on foot. He brought with him from the old country a wagon and harness which were curiosities to the natives here. He purchased land on sections 8 and 9, bought stock and made preparations to open a farm, but the climate did not agree with him, and his health continued to fail until he died in 1854. Of his first wife's children, three are now living—Gulbrand, Elling and Thorra. His second wife is still living, and also eight of her children—Jacob, Ole, Thorra, Andreas, Bertha, Anne, Karine, Anton and Johan.

Ole Gilbertson, Jr., son of Ole Gilbertson, one of the pioneers of Albany, was born in Norway, July 25, 1833. He received a common school education, and was nineteen years old when he came with his parents to America. He was married on the 12th of October, soon after his arrival here, to Guri Brondbakke, who was born in Norway, Dec. 16, 1832. He bought land in company with his brother-in-law on sections 8 and 16 and began housekeeping in a log cabin, which was partially furnished with home-made furniture. This humble abode was their home until 1864, when he erected a good frame house. In 1868 he built a good frame barn. He has engaged in raising grain and stock, including cattle, sheep, horses and hogs. He has been prominent in town affairs, and has served as justice of the peace and member of the board of supervisors. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbertson are the parents of seven children—Guri, Ole, Beret, Simen, Tonetta, Johanus and Hans Oscar.

Sampson Tilley, Sr., was a native of Shropshire, England, born in 1798. He was reared upon a farm, and married to Martha Hintz, also a native of Shropshire. Nine children blessed their union, four of whom are now living—Sampson, Edward, Martha and Mary. In 1852 he left England and came to America and settled at Albany, Green Co., Wis., where he resided until his death in 1862. Mrs. Tilley died in 1859.

Sampson Tilley, Jr., was born in Shropshire, England, March 31, 1830. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to a wagon maker to learn the trade. He served five years, then worked as journeyman until 1852. In that year he came to America and located in the village of Albany where he opened a shop and has continued in the business since that time. He was married in 1859 to Eliza Tompkins, who died Dec. 25, 1869.

Edward Tilley was born in Shropshire in 1833. He was reared to agricultural pursuits and came to America with his parents. He engaged with his brother to learn the trade of wagon maker, and has been associated with him since. He owns land which he works during the summer season. He was married in 1854 to Elizabeth Williams. They have two children—Belle and Fanny.

John Wood, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in the city of Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1818. When he was quite young his parents moved to Northampton county, and lived a short time, then moved to Center county and remained until fifteen years of age, then moved to Preble Co., Ohio. There Mr. Wood was employed on public works for some time. When sixteen years old he took a contract to grade on a turnpike from Hamilton City to Eaton, a distance of twenty-four miles. It was in 1839 that he first came to Wisconsin and located in Green county. He first engaged in the lead mines for six months, near Monroe, then engaged with Vansant, Deniston & Irion to operate their saw mill, and continued in their employ three years, then went to Browntown, and in company with William Brown and Henson Irion, erected a saw mill. He was married in 1844 to Clarissa, daughter of Joshua and Hannah (Whitcomb) Wood. In 1850, he left his family at Mr. Whitcomb's and went to California across the plains, and was about five months on the trip. Upon his arrival, he engaged in mining. In 1852 he sent home money, and his people purchased a tract of land on section 31, Albany township. He continued to mine in California until 1856, then started on his return, not across the plains, but across the Isthmus, thence to New York. On his arrival here he settled on his land on section 31, and now has the place in a good state of cultivation, and is engaged in mixed farming. Mrs. Wood died in 1865, leaving seven children, six of whom are now living—Robert Emmett, John Q., Flora A., Anson C., Joshua W. and Frank. His second wife, to whom he was married in 1868, was Jane Miller, widow of John Bell. Formerly Mr. Wood was a whig, but became a republican upon the organization of that party. Religiously, he has no settled belief.

James W. Carver came to Green county in 1853, and purchased a tract of unimproved land on Jordan prairie, town of Decatur, for which he paid $450. He broke and fenced about twelve acres, built a log cabin, raised one crop and then sold out for $800, and went to Mount Pleasant, where he purchased eighty-two acres, raised one crop, then sold that at an advance of $60, and returned to Jordan prairie, and bought land. Sickness and bad luck generally had so depleted his purse, that for this land he was obliged to go in debt. A failure of the first crop, upon which so much depended, was disastrous, and instead of selling out at an advance as heretofore, he lost the whole thing, and was in debt besides. Then with characteristic energy and pluck, he rented land, went to work, raised a good crop and paid off his obligations. In 1859, he went to Iowa, and settled in Linn county, where he had previously bought ninety acres of land. This place he had tried to sell, but could not do so to any advantage, so concluded to improve it. He enlisted Aug. 5, 1862, in the 20th Iowa, company I. During the same month he was elected 2d lieutenant, and went to St. Louis, thence through the State of Missouri to Arkansas in pursuit of Gen. Price and his command. The roads were rough and the march almost continuous, with numerous skirmishes from time to time on the route. On the 7th of December they participated in the battle of "Prairie Grove," Arkansas, where he was wounded. His haversack was probably the means of saving his life, the bullet passing through it, thus breaking its force. The regiment remained in Missouri and Arkansas until May, 1863, then went to Vicksburg, and participated in the siege and capture of that city, then went to Texas to operate with Banks, on his Red River expedition, remaining there eleven months, then went to Alabama and participated in the siege of Forts Morgan and Gaines, then returned to Arkansas again, pursued Gen. Price, and remained there three or four months. They then went to the Peninsula of Florida, thence to Alabama, and engaged in the siege and capture of Fort Blakely. He served until after the close of the war, and was honorably discharged July 26, 1865, and joined his family in Albany. In 1867, he bought a farm on Jordan prairie for $3,000, and lived there until 1873 when he purchased a place on section 31, town of Albany, for which he paid $11,000. In 1875, he sold his Jordan prairie farm for $4,500. He lived on section 31 until 1883, when he rented the farm and bought a place in the village of Albany, which is his present home. In February, 1884, he sold his farm for $16,000. He was married Jan. 11, 1853, to Almira, daughter of Zebulon and Rebecca (Burt) Sutton, who was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio. They have four children living—Thomas M., Julius H., Addie May and Carrie R. One child, Alice M., died in 1863. In 1852, Mr. Carver voted for John P. Hale, subsequently he voted with the republican party, and affiliated with that organization until 1883. He still adheres to the principles of the republican party, but is a strong prohibitionist, and will vote for the interests of that principle. Mr. and Mrs. Carver are members of the Baptist Church.

Zebulon Sutton settled in the town of Albany in 1853. He purchased at that time a tract of land on section 31, and built a frame house upon it, for which he brought the lumber from Sauk City, and did the work himself. He was born in Washington Co., Penn., Oct. 14, 1801. His early life was spent in his native county. When eighteen years old he was apprenticed to learn the cabinet maker's trade. After serving three years he returned to his home and opened a shop, and did custom work five years, then removed to Cornersburg, Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1828. On Jan. 24, 1831, he was appointed postmaster of the place, and ran his shop and office till 1838, at which time he sold out, resigned his office and moved to Delaware county, remaining there until 1853. He then came to Green Co., Wis., where he now lives in the enjoyment of good health and plenty to eat. Since coming to Green county he has devoted his time principally to agricultural pursuits. He has since resided on section 31, where he at first settled. At his trade he is a skillful workman, and has in his house some fine specimens of his handiwork, done since he was eighty years old, and without the aid of glasses, as his eyesight has not yet failed. He is also able to read and write without glasses. He was married in 1827 to Rebecca Burt, who was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., May 27, 1807. They have three children living—Almira, George and Sarah. Mr. and Mrs. Sutton have been married fifty-seven years, and are in the enjoyment of good health and in possession of good mind and memory. On the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage their friends and relatives, to the number of eighty-two, gathered at their residence to congratulate them on their long and happy wedded life, and on their departure left many valuable tokens of their respect and esteem. Their son, George, was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, Sept. 9, 1835, and came to Wisconsin with his parents, with whom he made his home until 1870. He then went to Kansas and settled in Pottawattamie county, and remained until 1876, when he returned to Albany, where his wife died in 1880. He now lives with his parents and carries on the farm.

Jacob Abley was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, in February, 1823. He attended school until sixteen years of age, and was then employed in farming. In 1847 he came to America and settled in Montgomery Co., N. Y., where he engaged in farming four years. He then went to work at the carpenter and joiner's trade, at which he was employed two years, then came west to Indiana and spent eighteen months in Lafayette, working at carpentering. In 1854 he came to Monticello, Green county, and worked on the mill there one winter. He continued to work at his trade in different parts of the county until 1860, when he bought land on section 30, of the town of Albany, upon which was some slight improvement, consisting of forty acres broken and a log house, in which he lived seven years, then built a commodious brick house. He has since erected a frame barn and other farm buildings. He owns 180 acres of land. He was married in 1859 to Angeline Meinert, and they have six children—Maria, Cassie, Lizzie, Ida, Willie and Vena.

Even Kittelson Lee came to Green county in 1854, and purchased a farm on sections 5 and 8. There was a log house standing upon the place, into which he moved and lived for a time. He then built a more substantial one, which was his home for a number of years when he erected a good frame house, which he still occupies. He was born in Norway, in 1810, and spent his early life upon a farm. He was married to Aaste Olson Falkestad. They remained in Norway until 1854. They then decided to emigrate to America, where some of his relatives had preceded them. They embarked in a sailing vessel and arrived in Quebec after a voyage of six weeks and three days. From Quebec they traveled by water and rail to Beloit, where they hired a team to complete their journey to Green county. He had a brother living in the town of Decatur, with whom they stopped. His brother Ole was living in Albany, and came to Decatur with an ox team and conveyed them to their new home. They have three children—Ole E., Halvor and Even.

Ole E. Kittelson was born in Norway, April 17, 1841, and was thirteen years old when he came with his parents to America. He grew to manhood in the town of Albany, and received a good education in the public schools. At the age of twenty-three he went to Chicago, and was there employed to drive a carriage for a private family. He there made the acquaintance of Randena Anderson, to whom he was married. She was a native of Norway, but came to this country when six months old. Her parents were early settlers in the town of Greenwood, McHenry Co., Ill., where they still reside. After an absence of three years, Mr. Kittelson returned to Albany and settled on a farm that he had purchased in company with a brother, two years previously. He located on section 6, where he has erected a comfortable frame house and now owns 140 acres of land, and has sixty-five acres in a good state of cultivation. Mr. and Mrs. Kittelson are the parents of seven children—Charles Edwin, Anna O., Augusta M., Olen B., Carrie M., Andrew A. and Ingelbert R.

Lewis Comstock settled in Green county in 1854, at which time he purchased a tract of land on section 4, town of Albany, but as there was no improvement there, he rented a farm one year in the town of Brooklyn, on section 33. During that year, he built a small log cabin on his place and broke up and farmed ten acres. in the spring of 1855 he erected a frame house and settled on the place. He has, at the present time, eighty-five acres improved and fenced. He also has seventy-two acres on section 2, meadow and pasture land. In 1865 he erected a more commodious frame house, which he now occupies. He is a native of the "Old Bay State," born at Williamstown, Berkshire county, Sept. 23, 1825. When he was seventeen years old he went to (New) York State and found employment on a farm in Herkimer county, remaining there until 1850, when he came to Wisconsin and spent four years in Waukesha and Walworth counties. In 1854 he came to this county, as before stated. He was married March 19, 1846, to Louisa Cross, who was born in Fulton Co., N. Y., in March, 1826.

William Lewis came to Green county in 1860, and lived for a time with his father-in-law on section 12, Albany township. He there purchased eighty acres of unimproved land on section 14, erected a frame house and commenced improvements. He now has the greater part of this land in good condition and under fence, has built a good frame barn for stock and purchased other land until he has 160 acres in his farm. He is a native of Wales, born in the parish of Lanyre, Radnorshire, July 30, 1839, and was there reared on a farm. He was married May 6, 1857, to Mary, daughter of Thomas and Jane (Boundford) Lloyd. They remained in Wales until 1860, then, in company with Mr. Lloyd and his family, came to America to seek a home and settled in the town of Albany, as before stated. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are the parents of six children, now living—Eliza A., John L., Mancel W., Mary J., Maud E. and Edwin T. A son, William T., died when four years old, and one child died in infancy.

John A. Hahn, custom boot and shoe maker at Albany, established business here in 1855, and has carried it on continually since that time, also dealer in hides, pelts and raw furs. He is a native of France, born Feb. 20, 1833. He attended school until fourteen years old. He was then apprenticed to a boot and shoe maker to learn the trade, and served eighteen months. He then went to Paris and did journeyman work two years. From there he went to Lyons, worked at his trade there and in other places until 1853, when he left his native land and came to America. He landed at New York and worked at his trade in the city three months, then went to Chicago and worked at his trade there one year, then went to Milwaukee and worked nine months. From there he went to Janesville and spent three months, then in July, 1855, he came to Albany and established himself in business, as before stated. He was married in Milwaukee, in 1854, to Teresa Nipower, a native of Bavaria. Two children blessed this union—Katie and William J. Mr. Hahn has been successful in his business. By honest dealing and good work, he has merited and received a good patronage. In 1856 he was unable to purchase a house and lot. But in 1884 he was the owner of seven dwelling houses in Albany, besides his commodious shop. Like many other inhabitants of the village, he suffered from the fire in November, 1883, losing at that time his store building and his shop, including stock and tools.

Harlow T. Boughton came to Green county with his parents in 1855. He continued to reside with them in the town of Spring Grove until 1862. In August of that year he enlisted in company K, of the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south, joined the army of the Tennessee, and participated in the battles of Spring Hill and Brentwood Station. At the latter place he was taken prisoner and conveyed to Libby Prison. After thirty days he was exchanged, and joined his command at Nashville, Tenn., and from there went to Chattanooga and started for Atlanta, participating in the many engagements on the way. He was wounded at the battle of Peach Tree Creek, July 22, 1864, and sent to the hospital at Lookout Mountain, and then to Nashville. He joined the command again as soon as able, and went to Hilton Head, thence to Charleston, S. C., his command being the first to enter that city. From there they pushed on to Raleigh, where they joined Sherman's army and with it went to Washington, attended the grand review with the regiment, and was discharged in Milwaukee in June, 1865, and returned to his home. He was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in January, 1837, and remained there with his parents until 1855, when, as before stated, he came to Green county. He was married in the fall of 1865 to Sarah, daughter of Zebulon and Rebecca (Burt) Sutton, pioneers of Green county. They have one child—Harvey. In the spring of 1866 Mr. Boughton rented a farm in the town of Sylvester, where he lived four years, then bought his present farm on section 31, of the town of Albany. He has the land well improved, and has erected a fine house and barn.

Harry Van Wart, Sr., son of Bishop and Lydia Van Wart, was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Jan. 10, 1830. His father was a native of Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and went to Chautauqua county when a young man. He was married there to Lydia Gordanier, who was born in Jefferson county, of the same State. He purchased land of the Holland Purchase Company, upon which he settled and lived until 1844, then, taking his wife and family of eight children, started with a pair of horses and wagon for the Territory of Wisconsin. They took their cooking utensils with them and camped out on the road, and were thirty days in reaching Janesville, Wis. It was in the fall of the year, and they spent the following winter four miles north of Janesville. In 1845 he rented land of Lovewell Warren, in the town of Center, Rock county, and in 1846 bought land in the town of Porter, where he improved a farm and resided until the time of his death. His wife also died there. Of eleven children born to them, four are now living—Harry, David, Orrilla and Newton. Harry resided with his parents until 1852, then started for California overland with a team, and was four months in reaching his destination. He was employed by the California Stage Company until November, 1854. He then returned to Wisconsin by way of the Isthmus and New York city. He was married Jan. 10, 1855, to Lucy Schofield, a native of Erie Co., N. Y., born April 18, 1832. They lived in Janesville one year, then removed to Albany, where he engaged in the livery business until 1859. He then took his stock of horses to California and sold them in Sacramento. He immediately returned to Albany and engaged in keeping a board and feed stable in connection with the American (now Nichols) House. He continued here but a few months, and in 1860 went to Rock county and leased the old Ball Tavern one year, then engaged in farming one year. In 1862 he went to Mitchell Co., Iowa, and bought land in the town of St. Ausgar. There he improved a farm and resided three years, then again returned to Albany, purchased village property and has continued to reside here since. Mrs. Van Wart died Sept. 29, 1871, leaving four children—Kasie May, Annie, Bessie and Helen. Mr. Van Wart was again married April 23, 1875, to Louisa Hamilton, a native of New York city.

Albert L., son of Ephraim and Mary (Treaster) Berryman, was born in Stephenson Co., Ill., Dec. 14, 1851. He was six years old when his parents came to Green county and settled in the town of Sylvester, where his younger days were spent. He obtained his education in the district school. Feb. 8, 1877, he was married to Ida A., daughter of Jacob and Eliza (James) Hammond. The following spring he rented a farm in the town of Clarno, where they lived one year, then removed to the homestead in Sylvester and remained one year. He then rented a farm in the town of Mount Pleasant, upon which they lived until 1883, when he purchased his present farm, the west half of the southeast quarter of section 20, and the west half of the northeast quarter of section 29, township 3, range 9 east, containing 160 acres, in the town of Albany, near the village. He has the land well improved and good frame buildings. They have two children—Gertie M. and Stella E.

Richard Glennan was an early settler in the town of Stark, Vernon county, having entered land at the mouth of Otter creek in 1854. He erected a log cabin there, and assisted in the organization of the town in 1856, and was its first town superintendent of schools. He also surveyed the village of Viola, in Richland county. In 1857 he traded for land in the town of Forest, Richland county, and during the winter of 1857—8, taught school near the county line, being the first school in that section of country. In the spring of 1858, he sold his land in Richland county and came to Green county and located in the village of Albany. He bought a carding machine, the first ever operated in the town, which he set up in a small building near the saw mill, running it by water power. The next year he put the machine into the Kellogg flour mill, where he operated it one year. He then sold it. In 1860 he went to Cedarville, Stephenson Co., Ill., and in partnership with J. F. Jackson, set up a woolen mill, the first one in the county. In the spring of 1861, he sold his interest there, and went to Belleville and operated a carding machine until the fall of 1863. He then enlisted in battery D., 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and served until the close of the war. He was discharged Aug. 30, 1865, having been stationed at Fort Jackson, La., and at Brashear and Fort Berwick, the greater part of the time. In 1866, he helped to start a woolen mill in the town of Adams, Green county. He was employed there until the spring of 1867, when he sold his interest, and accepted a position as clerk in the surgeon general's office at Washington, where he remained three years, then returned to Albany. Since that time he has followed his trade, in different places. In 1878 he assisted in starting the Albany woolen mills, of which he has since had charge. He was born in county Meath, Ireland, Dec. 25, 1823, and when four years old, came to America with his parents, who located at Rochester, N. Y. When quite a young man, he went to work in a woolen mill and learned his trade. He lived in the State of New York, until 1850, then went to Springfield, Ill., where he remained a short time. In the spring of 1851, he engaged in a woolen mill at Beloit, and worked there one and a half years. During the winter of 1852—3 he taught school at Spring Grove, and the following winter, taught in Waukesha county. He was married, in 1852, to Cynthia Jenks, a native of Erie Co., N. Y. They have five children—George, Emma, Sarah, Mary and Richard. George is a young man of good education and possessed of superior talent and ability.

Thomas Lloyd settled in Green county in 1860. He purchased at that time, the north half of the northeast quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, of section 12, in the town of Albany. A portion of, the land was improved and there was a log cabin on it. He commenced making further improvements, but the climate did not agree with him and his health failed in consequence. He died Dec. 28, 1863. He was a native of Wales, born in 1815; and was married, in 1841, to Jane Boundford. He rented land and engaged in farming in his native country until 1860, then with his wife and family emigrated to America. They made the voyage in a sailing vessel and were five weeks and three days in reaching New York city. They came directly to Wisconsin and settled, as before stated, in the town of Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd had ten children—Mary, Jane, Martha, Thomas, James, William, Elizabeth, Sarah, Joseph and Edwin T. Their oldest son, Thomas, was eighteen years old at the time of his father's death, and for two years, took charge of the farm. James now manages the farm successfully. The land is well improved and fenced, and the log cabin has been replaced by a neat frame house.

Rev. Edward J. Meredith was born in north Wales, March 7, 1833, where he grew to manhood and was brought up on a farm. In June, 1853, he enlisted in the British service, and served five years in the Scotch Fusileer Guards. He was honorably discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment. He was drill sergeant the first four years, and the last year was color sergeant. After his discharge he opened a store in Newtown, Montgomeryshire, north Wales, and was in trade until 1865 when he sold out and came to America, locating at Albany, Green county and engaging in the shoe business. In 1867 he bought land on section 2, southwest quarter, where he settled and engaged in farming. He joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church in 1855, and commenced preaching during the same year. In 1866 he joined the M. E. Church at Albany and commenced preaching for that denomination, since that time up to Feb. 26, 1884, he has officiated at 179 funerals in Green county, including people of all denominations. He is now a local preacher of the M. E. Church and resides at Albany. He was married in 1852 to Mary Evans. Eight children have been born to them—Mary A., Jane, Edwin, Polly, Thomas, James, Annie and Rosa B. Mary A. died in Wales; James died in Brooklyn. All were born in Wales but Anna and Rosa B.

William John Way was born in Summit Co., Ohio, Jan. 31, 1847. When two years of age his mother died and he was adopted by Timothy Mills, who soon after removed to Marquette Co., Wis. There he grew to manhood, being educated in the public schools. He enlisted in the 7th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and joined the army of the Potomac. He lost his left arm in the battle of the Wilderness. He was discharged from service on account of disability and returned to his home in Marquette county. In May, 1868, he was married to Martha J. Lawrence, born in Onondaga Co., N. Y. They made their home in Marquette for one year, and then removed to Indiana. They remained there six months. He then spent six months in Milwaukee at the soldier's home, where he was under medical treatment. In 1869 he came to Albany and located about a mile north of the village, remaining there three years. He then removed to the village, living there until the time of his death, which occurred on Feb. 27, 1876. Mrs. Way purchased a residence in the new addition to Albany, which is an excellent location. She occupies this residence, but still retains the old home. She has an adopted daughter—Etta.

John J. Putnam, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in Hampshire county, in what is now West Virginia, July 3, 1801. He grew to manhood in his native State, being reared to agricultural pursuits. He was married in 1823 to Mary Magdaline Fleck, a native of the same county, born July 7, 1803. In 1825 they went to Ohio, and lived a short time in Lancaster, Fairfield county, then removed to Athens county and purchased timber land and cleared a farm. In 1832, he sold out and moved to Licking county, where he bought land and cleared two farms. He made his home there until 1849, then sold and again started for a new country, taking his family, which consisted of his wife and six children, with two teams of horses, and bringing a portion of their household goods with them, and shipping the remainder to Milwaukee. They arrived in Green county after twenty-five days travel, and settled in Sylvester upon land which he had purchased the previous year. They lived there but a short time, and removed to another tract of land which he had also purchased previously. It was located in the town of Decatur, where he opened a farm of 300 acres, and erected good buildings and made his home until the time of his death, which occurred in 1856. His wife died in 1876. They left a family of seven children, all of whom are now living—Hiram D., Ann E., John J., Oliver S., Olive E., Henry C. and Virginia. The last named was born in Green county, where they are all living at present, except John J., who lives at Fort Worth, Texas.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Hiram D. Putnam was born in Lancaster, Fairfield Co., Ohio, May 31, 1826. He assisted his father in clearing the land, and tilling the soil. Taking advantage of such opportunities as offered, he obtained a good education. He came to Wisconsin with his parents, where he engaged in teaching school winters and farming the remainder of the year. He was married Dec. 18, 1856, to Sarah Cannet, who was born in Licking Co., Ohio. They settled upon land that he had previously bought, on section 4, of the town of Decatur, where he improved a farm of 400 acres, 155 of which is on section 33, town of Albany. In 1871 he came to Albany and purchased land which is within the village limits, on which he built the fine brick residence he now occupies. Mr. and Mrs. Putnam are the parents of three children—Charles W., Lutie V. and John H. The sons, Charles W. and John H. carry on the farm. Upon the place is a large spring, which was in early times called “Indian spring,” from the fact that nearly all the farm was formerly an Indian camping ground. About four rods west of the spring are five mounds, near which are traces of an Indian burial ground. The bottom lands were their corn field. Many relics have been picked up here.

Samuel Mitchell removed from Boone Co., Ill., to Green Co., Wis., in the spring of 1842. He made a claim on the southwest quarter of section 29, which, a few months later he sold and bought the west half of the northwest quarter of section 23, and entered the east half of the same quarter, also the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28. He erected a log cabin near the spring, and broke some of the land. In 1844 he went to the pineries at Little Bull Falls, where he engaged in lumbering, and kept tavern awhile, then went to Warsaw, where he was also engaged in lumbering and hotel keeping. He remained in the pineries fifteen years, with the exception of one summer. He then returned and settled in Green county, upon his land. He afterwards erected a brick house upon the farm, which he occupied until 1874. He then rented the place and removed to Albany and bought the Green County House, and occupied that one year, then removed to Clark Co., Iowa, where he bought land and improved a farm, upon which he lived three years, then rented, and returned to Albany. Soon after he traded his Iowa farm for a farm on sections 4 and 5 of Decatur. He also sold the Green County House and bought a lot near by, to which he moved a frame house from his farm. He has since made this his home. He was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Jan. 15, 1816. He spent his younger days upon a farm in his native State. When he was twenty years old, his parents removed to Indiana and settled in Fountain county. He remained with them until 1838, when he was married to Jane Frazier, a native of Pickaway county, born in 1814. They lived in Fountain county until 1839, then removed to Boone Co., Ill., where they remained until 1842. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have two children—Thomas and James.

Thomas Mitchell was born in Boone Co., Ill., March 19, 1841, and was one year old when he came with his parents, to Green county. He resided with them until 1868, when he was married to Lura West, better known as Ida Pond. He had purchased the Campbell farm on section 32, which was the first place settled in the town of Albany. Here he settled and engaged in raising grain and stock, and later, in the dairy business. In 1881 he rented the farm and moved to Albany, where he bought village property and erected a nice frame house which he now occupies. In 1882 he engaged in the lumber business and also deals in coal and wood. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell are the parents of two children—Jennie and Louie.

Henry Brockway, station agent at Albany of the C. M. & St. P. R. R., was born at Milan, Erie Co., Ohio, June 4, 1846, where in his youth he attended the public schools. When he was eleven years old he went with his parents to Wisconsin and located at Palmyra, Jefferson county. In 1862 he entered the United States service as teamster, went south and served the government in that capacity one year. In August, 1863 he enlisted in company B, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and went to Forts Jones and Terrill, at Munfordville, on the Green river, Kentucky, and performed garrison duty one year. His company was detached from the regiment and went in pursuit of Morgan, having frequent skirmishes with that notable band in Kentucky, Virginia and Tennessee. He was discharged with the company at Fort Clay, Lexington, Ky., in September, 1865, and returned home. Soon afterwards he commenced the study of telegraphy in the railroad station, at Whitewater, and since that time has been in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company. He has had charge of the telegraph office at Whitewater, Madison, Boscobel, Monroe and other places. He went to Monroe in 1878, and remained until 1883, when he came to Albany. He was married in 1868 to Lydia A. Barlow. They have three children—James F., William H. and Ada A.

CHAPTER XXIX.

TOWN OF BROOKLYN.

The town of Brooklyn forms the northeastern corner of Green county, comprising congressional township 4 north, range 9 east, and the north half of section 6, township 3 north, range 9 east, of the fourth principal meridian. Dane county bounds the town of Brooklyn on the north. Rock lies adjacent to the east, while to the west and south lie the towns of Exeter and Albany. The surface of this town is gently undulating, except along some of the small streams where it is low and flat. The soil on the uplands is a sandy loam, mixed with decayed vegetable matter; on the prairie it is a rich dark loam; and on the low lands it is of a black mucky nature. There is an abundance of natural timber in nearly all parts of the town. Sugar river, the principal stream, enters the town by way of the northwest corner of section 30, and flows in a southerly direction to enter the town of Albany. At the present day the inhabitants are principally American born, but there is a large foreign element, among which the Irish predominate. As a class, the inhabitants are very intelligent and industrious, and have made many valuable improvements. Fine farm houses and large substantial barns are found on every hand, showing that the citizens are proud of their homes, and wish to have them surrounded with all the comforts of the best social life.

The assessment rolls show that the town of Brooklyn has 22,895 acres of farming lands, assessed at $14 per acre. The total valuation of real and personal property was $459,984. In 1880 the population of the town was 1,176.

The principal farm products grown in the town during the year 1882 were as follows: 822 bushels wheat; 82,475 bushels corn; 58,945 bushels oats; 7,172 bushels potatoes; 3,015 bushels apples; 13 bushels clover seed; 36,300 pounds tobacco; 1,530 tons hay; 33,070 pounds butter; 18,800 pounds cheese. The acreage growing in the town at the time of making the annual assessments for the year 1883, was as follows:

74 acres wheat; 2,495 acres corn; 2,135 acres oats; 2 acres barley; 44 acres rye; 83 acres potatoes; 78 acres apple orchard; 3,183 bearing trees; 30 acres tobacco; 1,809 acres grass; 3,877 acres growing timber. There were 814 milch cows in the town, valued at $26,420. The live stock in the town was as follows: 648 horses, average value $54.69, total $35,440; 1,755 head cattle, average value $15.05, total $26,419; 2 mules, value $120; 2,645 sheep, average value $1.99, total $5,278; 2,048 swine, average value $4.87, total $9,992.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The honor of being the first settler in the territory which now comprises this town belongs to W. W. McLaughlin. He was born near Urbana, Ohio, in 1807, and was converted and joined the M. E. Church when sixteen years of age. He united in marriage with Sarah Robinson in 1830; went to La Porte Co., Ind., in 1836, and, in 1838, married as a second wife, Emily Hazletine. In the fall of 1842, he came to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled on the south half of section 3, township 4 north, range 9 east, of the fourth principal meridian, now in the town of Brooklyn. Here he resided until his death, April 2, 1877. The winter of 1842—3 was very severe and is known among old settlers as the "hard winter." Mr. McLaughlin moved into his log cabin about the 1st of November, and on the 6th inst., winter began with a fall of six inches of snow, and continued until the 23d of April following. During this long and severe winter, he struggled with great difficulties and hardships, drawing straw fifteen miles. Out of a stock of thirty-four head of cattle, he had but few left, and an entire flock of sheep perished before spring. Such hardships as he endured would now appall the stoutest heart. During the following spring he organized the first Methodist class in the neighborhood—there being neighbors in the adjoining counties. The meetings were held at his house, and he was the leader for many years. During the Civil War he was active and efficient in raising men, thereby avoiding drafts on the town for soldiers. He twice represented his district in the assembly, and often held town offices. In all positions he acquitted himself with credit. He was never known to use a profane word.

J. F. Egglestone was born in Oxfordshire England, June 2, 1799. He emigrated to the United States in 1838, arriving in Milwaukee, Wis., in May. He was a stone mason by trade and worked on the capitol building in Madison for a short time, but not liking the wild-cat money with which he was paid, he left there and returned to Milwaukee, where he worked on the light house for a short time. He and his brother then erected a light house at Racine Wis. He then removed to Waukesha, where he and his brother had each taken a claim of 160 acres of land. He there worked at his trade during which time he took a contract to build a school house, which was the first erected in the town. He afterwards sold his farm, and in September, 1841, removed to Exeter, Green county. He was soon after appointed by the county board to open up a road from Rock county to Exeter. He served as road supervisor for two years, and took his pay in county orders. In 1844 he removed to the farm he now owns. He has 235 acres, well stocked, and also has good buildings. He was married to Jane Gomm, in June, 1820. She died Feb. 19, 1857, leaving eight children, five of whom have since died. He was married to Alice Brombert, Oct. 18, 1859. For a man of his age, he has most excellent health. When he first removed to this county, it was no uncommon sight to see deer and wolves every day.

Leonard Doolittle came into the county in 1843. He was a young man, and being poor, worked at whatever he found to do. As soon as he had earned a little money, he entered eighty acres of land on section 10, in this town, and in 1845, had some breaking done. He also made a claim on section 10, on which, assisted by his brother Ezra, he erected a good hewed log house in 1846. But as he was absent from home for a short time, his claim was "jumped" and entered by Daniel Northrup. Mr. Doolittle then erected a frame house on his own land, united in marriage with Adaline Simmons, of Dane county, and followed farming in this town until 1855. He then removed to Lake Co., Ill., where he has since become a prominent and well-to-do farmer.

Charles Sutherland settled on section 1, in 1844, and was there engaged in farming for about ten years. He was afterwards engaged in a general mercantile business in Rock county, but finally returned to the State of Illinois, where he had formerly resided.

Martin Flood entered land on section 17, and settled on the same in 1844. He was a native of New England, a good citizen and possessed many warm friends. He was elected the first treasurer of the town of Brooklyn, afterwards served as chairman, and in 1856 represented his district in the assembly. When the Civil War broke out, he responded to the call by enlisting in company C, 3d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, was elected captain and served as such until mustered out of service. He then returned to his home, but soon moved out of the State.

Sylvester Gray, wife and five children—Charles S., Oscar A., A. A., D. A., and Mary L.—settled on section 9, town of Brooklyn, in 1845. Mr. Gray at first entered forty acres, purchased forty acres and pre-empted eighty acres; the pre-emption claim he also entered soon afterwards. He built a log cabin and engaged in farming. He subsequently removed to section 3, where he resided at the time of his death. Mr. Gray was born in Syracuse, N. Y. He was married to Louisa B. Judd, removed to Pennsylvania, thence to Ohio, and from there came to Wisconsin. Mrs. Gray, in 1884, was still living on the old homestead.

C. S. Gray was born in Warsaw, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1827, and came with his parents to Wisconsin in 1845, and at once entered land on section 4, of what now is the town of Brooklyn. In 1851 he married Emarilla Smith, daughter of Stephen Smith. He followed farming until April, 1871, then removed into the village of Brooklyn, where he has since been manager of the branch store of the Evansville Mercantile Association. Politically he is a republican. He has been a member of the town board and served as treasurer. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have three children—O. C., E. H., and Luta.

O. P. Stowell, a blacksmith by trade, settled at Attica in 1845. When the town of Brooklyn was organized, he was elected the first town clerk. He afterwards removed to Nebraska.

Alonzo Fenton joined the pioneers in this town on the 4th of July, 1845. He resided near W. W. McLaughlin's for a few months, then settled at Attica, and has lived in that vicinity ever since. Mr. Fenton is a native of Chenango Co., N. Y., and was bred to farm life, which occupation he still pursues. Mrs. Fenton was formerly Ann Whipple.

J. W. Hazeltine settled on the north half of section 3 in 1845, he having entered the land on the 26th day of December, 1839. Mr. Hazeltine still resides on the site he first chose.

Harvey P. Starkweather came to the Territory of Wisconsin in June, 1845, and stopped in Rock county until the year following, when he came to this county. He was at that time unmarried, and worked out for $10 per month. In 1848 his parents, Anson and Lucretia Starkweather, came to the county, and Harvey then resided with them. Aug. 22, 1850, he was married to Sarah Ryan, then of Rock county, but a native of New Brunswick. Her parents, Philip and Susan (Howell) Ryan, settled in Rock county in 1844. Mr. Starkweather has given his attention to farming, and now owns 110 acres, with first class improvements, and is considered one of the well-to-do men of the town. He was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., March 7, 1825, and resided in his native county until he came to Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Starkweather have had six children, five of whom are now living—Ellen P., Joseph P., Harvey R., Kate and Mabel. Susie May is deceased. Politically Mr. Starkweather is anti-monopoly. His father, Anson Starkweather, was the oldest person in the town of Brooklyn in 1884. He was born in Rutland Co., Vt., Feb. 25, 1796. In 1822 he went into the State of New York and soon afterwards purchased land in the town of Clymer, Chautauqua county, where he was the first settler. In September, 1823, Lucretia Price became his wife. She was born in Pennsylvania, Jan. 5, 1807. In 1848 they emigrated to Wisconsin, and settled where he now resides. They reared twelve children, two of whom were living in 1884—Harvey and Emma, wife of F. S. Warner. They had two sons enlisted in the United States service. Melvin in company D, 7th Wisconsin. He was killed in battle May 24, 1864. Erastus A., enlisted in company E, 13th Wisconsin, and died at Fort Donelson, March 28, 1864, aged eighteen years.

W. R. Smith came to Wisconsin in the spring of 1845, and in the fall of that year entered eighty acres on section 22, and has since been a resident of this town. He was born in Canada on the 11th day of August, 1827. He united in marriage with Ann D. Foster in October, 1845. She was born in Essex Co., N. Y., on the 24th of May, 1829. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had three children—Henry, Warren and Artimissa.

Robert Godfrey and his two sons, G. G. and Clark, settled on section 32 in 1845. He afterwards removed to Monticello.

William R. Smith, Sr., in the fall of 1845, settled on section 15, and there resided until his death in 1856. Mr. Smith was born in London, England. When a mere youth he went on board a ship as cabin boy, and for many years subsequently followed the life of a sailor. While in Canada he was married to Catharine Eldridge. He subsequently lived in the States of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, coming from the latter to Wisconsin. Mrs. Smith died on the 22d of July, 1880. Of the eight children born unto Mr. and Mrs. Smith, six are now living—William R., Caroline, George L., Lucy Ann, Cyrus and Mary.

James Nelson Patterson became a resident of the town in 1846, in October of which year he pre-empted the northwest quarter of section 22. The first town meeting was held in his log cabin. He remained a resident of the town until April, 1881, then removed to Evansville and retired from active life. Mr. Patterson was born in the State of New York, removed with his parents to Ohio, then united in marriage with Harriet VanDusen, thence came to Wisconsin, making the journey with a team, and became a resident of Green county.

Emerson Patterson, a young man and brother J. N. Patterson, also came in 1846. He, however, remained but a short time, then went into the pineries. He died at Necedah in 1868.

Jeremiah Anderson in 1846 settled on section 23, and was there engaged in farming for many years. He afterwards resided in the village of Brooklyn, where he died. He had a son—Amos, who went to California.

Ezra Doolittle is one of the pioneers of 1846. He was born in Washington Co, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1817. His parents, Leonard and Anna Maria (Atwater) Doolittle, were natives of Connecticut. In 1824 the family moved to Mercer Co., Penn., where Ezra grew to manhood, and united in marriage Dec. 17, 1840, with Jane Potter. He followed farming and lumbering. His wife died Dec. 20, 1843, leaving one daughter, Margaret Jane, born Oct. 31, 1843, who is now the wife of D. H. Glidden, living in the town of Brooklyn. In June, 1846, he came to Wisconsin. His brother Leonard, who came here before Ezra, settled on section 10, where he lived until 1854, then moved to Lake Co., Ill., where he now lives, engaged in farming. Here Ezra took an invoice of his worldly goods and found that his capital amounted to $23.60. He went immediately to work at whatever he found to do. In 1847 he made a claim on section 10, now in the town of Brooklyn, and hired some breaking done, and a few acres of wheat put in. In the fall of the year he returned to Pennsylvania, where he had a small sum of money due him, but he was unable to collect it and was obliged to remain there all winter. On his return to Wisconsin he found his claim entered, but he bought the claim, paying 25 per cent. interest for three years for the money. Here Mr. Doolittle settled and followed farming for several years. March 16, 1854, he was married to Caroline M. Mack. In November, 1859, he moved to his present home, located on section 9. His wife died April 6, 1862, leaving one daughter, Ida. Jan. 6, 1868, he was married to Sarah A. Jones. He now owns 200 acres, and his improvements are among the best in town. He is engaged in general farming. In politics Mr. Doolittle was formerly a democrat, but since 1860 has voted with the republican party, and has held local office. Mr. Doolittle's present wife was Mrs. Sarah Jones, previously Sarah A. Roberts, and formerly Sarah A. Melvin. She was a native of Maine, and came to Wisconsin in 1856. She was first married in Ohio, then moved to Rock county, where her husband died. She then returned to Ohio and was again married and removed to Illinois, where her second husband died. She then moved to Sheboygan Co., Wis., thence to this county, where she was married to her present husband. William E. Doolittle also came here from Pennsylvania, about 1852, and settled in the town of Brooklyn and engaged in farming, where he lived fourteen years, then moved to Jones Co., Iowa, where he now resides on a farm. The two daughters of Mr. Doolittle—Margaret Jane, was born Oct. 31, 1843; and Ida was born Dec. 16, 1859, and is now living at home. Samuel Doolittle came to the county in the spring of 1848, remained a few years, then went to Janesville and learned the painters trade. He was married to Frances Arnold. When the war broke out he enlisted in the 12th Wisconsin Battery and was killed at Allatoona, Ga. His only daughter is now the wife of Herbert Gray. Alfred Doolittle came to the county and remained about two years, then went to Minnesota.

Jonathan Smith was born in Ohio, March 7, 1820, and came with his parents, Stephen and Philura (Love) Smith, to Wisconsin, in July, 1843. He resided with them in Walworth county until December, 1846, then came to Green county and entered land on section 11, of the town of Brooklyn, where he has since resided with the exception of eighteen months spent in Iowa. He owns eighty acres of land. He was married in January, 1878, to Mrs. Mary A. (Thompson) Anderson. They have one son—Forest A. Mrs. Smith has one daughter by her former marriage.

George Lozer came in 1846, and resided on section 18 for about twenty years, then left the State. - One of his daughters is now the wife of James Root.

Rev. John Sawin and three sons—Alvin, Ethan and Lorenzo—settled on the southwest quarter of section 12, in the spring of 1846. He was born in Willington, Tolland Co., Conn., and at the age of eleven years removed with his parents to Washington Co., N. Y., and afterwards to Herkimer county in the same State. His early life was spent on a farm. He received a good common school education, and spent a part of his time in teaching. He was united in marriage to Orrel Tennant, June 25, 1813, in Herkimer Co., N. Y. She was born in Springfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., April 28, 1793. He was ordained a Baptist minister in the town of Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y. In 1828 he moved to Springfield, N. Y., where he resided four years, devoting his time to the ministry. In 1832 he went to Ripley, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., where he also labored as a minister of the gospel. On Feb. 19, 1846, he started with a team and three of his children, and emigrated to Wisconsin, then a Territory, and arrived in Walworth county. He returned to New York by steamer, starting from Racine, Wis., and reached home May 7. June 10, of the same year, he bid farewell to his relatives and friends, and with the remainder of his family, started from Erie, Penn., up the lakes, reaching Racine, Wis., June 14. From there he went to Walworth county, where he remained until the following September, when he located at Brooklyn, Green county. Hauling lumber from Racine, he built a shanty 18x30 feet in size, on section 12, township 4, range 9 east, and moved his family there. He was the first Baptist minister in the Territory. Here he labored until the weakness of old age suspended his work as a minister. His death occurred in 1866. His wife died in 1878. They were the parents of thirteen children, eleven of whom are now (1884) living—Aurilla, Ann Eliza, Alvin J., Clarissa, Ethan P., Lucinda, Lorenzo D., Mary Jane, Marinda, Eleanor M. and Julia.

Alvin J., son of John Sawin, was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1819. He came to Wisconsin in 1844, and settled on Spring Prairie, Walworth county. In 1846 he came to Green county in company with his father. The old homestead is owned by Aurilla, Alvin J., and Marinda, who have retired from the farm, and are residing in Evansville, Rock Co., Wis.

Amos D. Kirkpatrick came from Ohio and took up his abode in this town in 1846. He settled on section 18, and was the first to improve what is now known as the Dalrymple farm. Mr. Kirkpatrick at once became prominent among the pioneers, and at the first town meeting he served as one of the judges of election, and was elected chairman of the board of supervisors. In the fall of 1854 he was elected to the legislature and thus served his district in the assembly the following year. In 1864 he sold his farm and removed to Missouri.

William Kirkpatrick came with his brother Amos and settled on section 7, where he was engaged in farming until his death.

Ralph Ray came in 1846 and resided on section 20, for about twenty years. He then removed to Dayton and afterwards to Iowa.

Abram Stopp, a wagon maker by trade, located on section 18, in 1846. He died in about 1856, and his widow subsequently went to California.

Edward Klace settled on section 18, in 1846, and resided there until after the war.

Charles Snow came in 1847, and settled on section 17, where he resided until his death in 1856. His wife, formerly Ellen Paylor, still resides on the place, and is now married to Stephen Lewis.

Robert Tomson, familiarly known as "Scotch Tomson," came to the United States in 1842, and in 1848 became a resident of Green county, settling on section 34, Brooklyn. He was a poor man and experienced many hardships of pioneer life. He resided in this town for about twenty-five years, then removed to Albany.

Edward N. Kerby, a native of England, who possessed considerable of this world's goods, became a resident of the town in 1848. He purchased considerable land and was afterwards engaged in a general mercantile business at Attica.

John Henderson settled on section 20, in 1848. He was a carpenter by trade. In the fall of 1849 his house was destroyed by fire, after which he left the county and when last heard from was a soldier in the Civil War.

William Carter came from New York and resided on section 18, until his death in about 1860. He had a large family of children, all of whom have left the county.

George Henderson and family were among the pioneers who came in 1848.

Monroe Carpenter, an early pioneer, resided on section 17. He died in November, 1848.

The following named persons voted at the election in the town of Brooklyn, in 1850, and again cast their ballots at the election in this town twenty-five years later: Davis Fenton, Jonathan Smith, C. D. W. Leonard, Franklin Patterson, J. N. Patterson, Alonzo Purinton, David Heathman, John Pace, D. N. Shaw, Ezra Doolittle, C. A. Montgomery, O. P. Stowell, Otis Tompson, J. F. Eggleston, Joel Smith, J. W. Hazeltine, Jeremiah Anderson, W.R. Smith, Jr., Charles W. Gray, William Kirkpatrick, Powell Shell, W. W. McLaughlin and Sylvester Gray.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first child born within the territory, which now comprises the town of Brooklyn, was Delila Victoria Gilbert, the date of her birth being Jan. 1, 1846. The first marriage ceremony was performed by Jacob Linza, Esq., at the residence of W. R. Smith, Sr. This was in February, 1846, the contracting parties being D. R. Corsaw and Caroline Smith.

The first religious services were held at the house of W. W. McLaughlin. There was a Methodist Episcopal class organized at this place in the spring of 1843, and Mr. McLaughlin was the first class leader.

The first death was that of Henry Montgomery, which occurred in 1846. His remains were first buried on section 13, but afterwards removed to their final resting place in the Brooklyn cemetery. Mr. Montgomery had settled on section 13, in 1845. He was a native of Vermont, and served as a soldier in the War of 1812.

ORGANIC.

In 1849, a meeting was held at the house of Robert Godfrey, for the purpose of selecting delegates to send to Monroe, and have congressional township 4 north, range 9 east, of the fourth principal meridian, organized as a civil township. The delegates were: J. W. Patterson, W. B. Patterson and Addison Barton. They chose the name "York." But when they arrived at Monroe, they found a delegation from the northwest part of the county had already presented the name of "York," and thus the gentlemen who were a little late, contented themselves with the name of "Brooklyn."

The first town meeting was held at the house of James Nelson Patterson, on the 7th of April, 1849. Amos D. Kirkpatrick, Wilson I. Day and Daniel A. Dustin, served as judges, and G. G. Godfrey and J. W. Hazeltine as clerks of this meeting. The following named were elected as the first officers: Supervisors, Amos D. Kirkpatrick, chairman, D. A. Barton and Sylvester Gray; town clerk, O. P. Stowell; treasurer, Martin Flood; assessor, W. W. McLaughlin; superintendent of schools, G. G. Godfrey; justices of the peace, Leroy Hudson and William Kirkpatrick; constables, Leonard Doolittle, Allen Whipple and Joseph Atwood.

J. W. Hazeltine carried the election returns to Monroe, the county seat. The county board of supervisors in equalizing the assessment of the several townships, fixed the valuation of all the real and personal property in the town of Brooklyn at $34,415. The amount of State tax to be raised was four mills on the dollar. The amount of school tax was two and one half (2 1/2) mills on the dollar, and the amount of county was six mills on the dollar. The following amounts were charged the town treasurer: Town tax $250, State tax $137.66, school tax $86.04 and county tax $206.89, the total amount of tax $680.19. The following is the roster of officers from 1849 to 1884, as copied from the record: Chairman, Amos D. Kirkpatrick; Chester Witter, H. M. Allen, Martin Flood, W. W. McLaughlin, Levi Crawford, J. A. Sawin, D. N. Shaw, H. R. Allen, C. D. W. Leonard, James Root, F. R. Melvin, John Dalrymple, E. J. Andrew, Stephen Swan. Town clerks: O. P. Stowell, Edmund Hill, W. B. Patterson, H. M. Allen, James McCoy, Tracy Montgomery, E. J. Andrew, Edward Netherwood, J. W. Hazeltine, M. F. Ross, B. S. Axtel and Henry Smith. Assessors: W. W. McLaughlin, Andrew Bennett, Thomas Kelley, William Kirkpatrick. Zelo Benningham, H. B. Capwell, Jacob Deremer, D. N. Shaw, C. D. W. Leonard, Harvey Church, James Root, W. W. Young, L. D. Dalrymple and O. F. Walliham. Treasurers: Martin Flood, D. N. Shaw, C. S. Gray, F. B. Patterson, A. Z. Bennett, A. Leonard, F. R. Melvin, C. A. Montgomery, Henry B. Lay, S. Andrews, D. O. Lockwood, C. M. Fuller, Hiram Patterson, Frank Pratt, A. G. Ellis and John Bell.

BROOKLYN CEMETERY.

For several years after the first settlement was made, there was no regular cemetery and thus the remains of those who died were buried in various places. Every time the people were summoned to bury one of their number they regretted that they had not a regular burying ground. This continued until March 26, 1853, on which day, W. W. McLaughlin, H. M. Allen, George Fletcher, W. B. Patterson, Thomas King, Andrew Bennett, Daniel Northrum, Stephen Smith, E. Collier, Otis Tompson, Jeremiah Anderson and J. N. Patterson met at the school house in district No. 10, and formed the "Brooklyn Cemetery Association" for the purpose of procuring and holding land to be used exclusively for a cemetery. H. M. Allen was chosen as chairman and W. B. Patterson, as secretary of the meeting. W. B. Patterson, W. W. McLaughlin, Thomas King and Stephen Smith were chosen as a committee to select and purchase a suitable ground. They chose three acres located on the southeast corner of section 15, and the same has since formed the Brooklyn cemetery. The first burial took place in 1853, a daughter, Amelia, of Thomas Campbell, of Exeter. The first trustees of the association were: Stephen Smith, H. M. Allen and W. W. McLaughlin. The annual meetings are held on the first Saturday in March.

The pioneers in the territory which now comprises Brooklyn were an intelligent and wide-awake class of citizens, who realized the necessity of education. Thus, as soon as a few families had settled in a neighborhood a school house was built and a teacher employed to give instruction to the young. The teacher's wages was usually paid by subscription, or by a tax levied upon the patrons of the school in proportion to the number of days their children had attended.

The first school house was erected in the spring of 1846. it was located on section 3, and Lavina Godfrey was the first teacher.

The second school house was built in the fall of 1846. It was located on what is now district No. 11. To build this house each citizen in the neighborhood furnished three logs and willing hands soon had the building complete. The first teacher at this place was Mrs. Caroline Corsaw. There was also a school house erected on section 13, in 1846.

In 1884 there were ten school districts in the town, and educational facilities here are equal to those of any town in the county.

In 1849 the town of Brooklyn was organized into school districts and the people in district No. 10 erected a stone school house on the southwest corner of section 14. The first teacher in this building was Kate Kilroy.

The people in the northern part of the town of Albany and those living in the southern part of the town of Brooklyn organized a joint district for school purposes in 1850, and the first school was taught in a claim shanty located on section 32, Brooklyn, Mary Barnes being the first teacher. The money necessary to defray the expenses of the school was raised by a per capita tax which was collected by Alonzo Purintun.

VILLAGE OF ATTICA.

In 1845 a traveler passing through the vicinity of Attica—then called Winneshiek—would have found a saw and grist mill, owned and operated by Newell Dustin; Elijah Thompson, a son-in-law of Dustin, assisting about the mill; Ben Cross, working at the cooper's trade; Chester Whitler engaged in farming; Lorenzo Barnes doing the blacksmith work, and a man by the name of Doane assisting Mr. Cross.

The village was first called Winneshiek, then Milford, but soon changed back to Winneshiek. When the post office was established it was called Attica, as there was, at that time, one post office in the State named Winneshiek. The name, Attica, was suggested by Jephtha Davis, formerly from Attica, N. Y. The village did not grow very rapidly, although for several years it received the trade from quite a large scope of country. In 1884 we find a good flouring mill owned and operated by Joseph Bartlett; one general store kept by S. A. Scott; a wagon shop by Joshua Clark; a blacksmith shop by Benjamin Cleveland; a hotel by Oscar Persons; a school house, one Church society and a post office.

S. A. Scott, son of Amos Scott, was born in Livingston Co., N. Y., on the 16th day of September, 1827. He was reared upon a farm, and remained in his native State until 1852. He then went to Ohio where he was married to Martha Archer. In 1856 he came to Green county, and followed farming in the town of Exeter until 1879. In that year he engaged in general merchandising at Attica. Mr. Scott was formerly a democrat in his political preference but is now a liberal. He has held the office of assessor, and in 1884, was postmaster at Attica. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have four children—Benjamin, Orrin, Emmett and Adelbert.

Joshua Clark settled at Attica on the 12th day of May, 1857, and has since given his attention exclusively to his trade, wagon making, and is therefore one of the oldest wagon makers in the county. He was born in Washington Co., Vt., and in 1833 made a claim on land now occupied by the city of Janesville, and in the same year helped erect the first log cabin at that place.

In 1846 Jephtha Davis purchased of Newel Dustin an interest in the water power. A new dam was built, and in the fall of that year Mr. Davis built a wool carding mill, and also operated a dye house. He expected to afterwards build a large woolen mill, but as his sons did not like the business and he was getting old, he gave up the project. The carding mill was afterwards owned by James Crompton, and was operated for thirty years.

Jephtha Davis, a pioneer of the town of Brooklyn, was born in Massachusetts, in 1795. He remained in his native State until twenty-three years of age, then went to Wyoming Co., N. Y., and was married in Varysburg, in 1820, to Harriet Conger, a native of Paris, Oneida Co., N. Y. He built a woolen mill in Varysburg, also owned a saw mill. He engaged in operating the former about twenty-five years. In 1846 he came to Green county and settled in Brooklyn, where he entered about 400 acres of land, and engaged in farming. He built the first frame house in Attica, also erected a woolen mill in which he carried on carding and cloth dressing. He continued in business here until 1858, when he sold out and retired from active business. He resided in Attica until the time of his death, which occurred in 1863. He was prominently identified with the business interests of the town of Brooklyn for a number of years, and was a highly respected citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Davis had eight children, five of whom are now living—Corintha, now Mrs. Hill, and living in Lincoln, Ill.; Truman P., living in Allens Grove, Walworth county; Romanzo E., Of Middleton, Dane county; Amanda, now Mrs. Best, of Washington, D. C., and Sarah, wife of S. S. Hills, of Albany. Alvira, wife of Everett Dodge, an early settler of Brooklyn; Louisa, wife of Alpheus Laird, of Attica, and Electa, wife of Henry L. Hyde, of Middleton, are deceased. Mrs. Davis is still living, at the advanced age of eighty-two, and resides, the greater part of the time, with her son Romanzo E., at Middleton, Dane county.

At the point where Attica is located on section 31, Sugar river furnishes a good mill privilege, a six foot head of water. This power was first utilized in 1845, in which year a man named Lytchfield, generally known as "the Wild Yankee," built a dam across the stream and erected a saw and grist mill. He operated the mill but a short time, then sold to Newell Dustin. In 1846 he sold to Lucius and Wilson Day, and Chester Whitter, who added a whisky still, established a store and carried on a large and paying business. In about 1850, Wilson Day went to California, and one year later was followed by Chester Whitter, thus leaving Lucius Day sole proprietor. He afterward sold the property to Mr. McKinney. In 1854 Welton & Bartlett purchased the property, rebuilt the mill in 1855, and operated it until 1866, since which time Joseph Bartlett has been sole proprietor. The mill is 30x50 feet in size, has two run of stone and is operated as a custom mill.

Joseph Bartlett, proprietor of the Attica Mills, is a native of Wiltshire, England, where he was born on the 1st day of August, 1825. He learned the miller's trade in his native country. In 1849 he emigrated to the United States and first stopped in the State of New York. He also spent one winter in Canada, then came to Wisconsin and stopped a few months at Janesville; and in 1851 chose Green county as his future home. He first worked at Albany, but in 1854, in partnership with Mr. Welton, he purchased his present mill Property. Mr. Bartlett is a good financier and has accumulated considerable of this world's goods. The children are—Henrietta, Elizabeth, Chauncy, Charlotte, Sarah, Lillie, Myrtie and Gertrude.

The post office of Attica was established at an early day and E. N. Kerby was the first postmaster. He was in turn succeeded by J. E. Hunter, Nelson Evans, Joshua Clark, David C. Heathman, C. D. W. Leonard and S. A. Scott. Mail is received daily by stage, Attica being on the route between Albany and Belleville.

An M. E. class was organized at this place at a very early day in the history of the county, and meetings were held quite regularly for many years. The present class was organized in 1874 and in that year the people built the present church edifice. It is a stone building and cost $2,250. The house of worship is to be free to all denominations, but the Methodist Episcopal are to have the preference. The society now has a membership of about thirty-five and the pulpit is supplied from Albany, the same pastor officiating at both places.

VILLAGE OF BROOKLYN.

No sooner was the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad completed, than H. B. Capwell platted a village on the northeast corner of the town. The railroad company proposed to call the station Capwell, but as Mr. Capwell objected to the use of his name, that of Brooklyn was chosen.

H. B. Capwell, the founder of the village of Brooklyn, became a resident of the State of Wisconsin in October, 1854; the following winter he taught school at Union, Rock county, and in the spring purchased the land now occupied by the village of Brooklyn, this county. The land was covered with timber, but he soon cleared a portion and engaged in farming. In 1864 the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad was completed through this section of country, and the company, upon the request of Mr. Capwell and others, established a depot in Green county. They proposed to call the station "Capwell," but as Mr. Capwell objected they gave it the name of "Brooklyn." He was the first station agent and resided here until 1868, then sold out and went to Fayette Co., Iowa, where he died in 1881. Mr.

Capwell was born in Wyoming Co., N. Y. He was married to Elizabeth Lockwood, daughter of Horace and Maria Lockwood. He was a republican in politics, and served one term as sheriff of Green county and one term in the same position in Fayette Co., Iowa. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the M. E. Church.

The first building erected was a warehouse built by H. B. Capwell, D. O. Lockwood hewing the first stick of timber for the same.

The second building was erected by B. S. Axtell and was occupied by him for store purposes.

The village has made a steady growth and in 1884 we find four general stores, one drug store, one hardware store, a large elevator, two hotels, a graded school, one church, post office, two blacksmith and wagon shops, harness shop, meat market, lumber yard, creamery, shoe shop, and barber shop.

FIRST THINGS IN THE VILLAGE OF BROOKLYN.

First settler, H. B. Capwell, 1855; the first merchant was B. S. Axtel, 1864; the first postmaster, H. B. Capwell; first blacksmith, T. B. Conradson; first shoemaker, Thomas Qualley; first warehouse, H. B. Capwell; first elevator, E. J. Andrew; first lumber yard was owned by J. C. Carpenter.

PHYSICIANS.

H. C. Leach was the first physician to locate at this place. He came here a number of years ago, and practiced for several years. In 1884 he was proprietor of the Northwestern Hotel. The second physician was Dr. H. R. Bulson; he located here in 1878. He was well liked and had a good practice. In 1880 he removed to Evansville. The third and present physician is Dr. W. F. Howe, who located here in March, 1880. He is a graduate of Rush Medical College, Chicago.

RELIGIOUS.

The Methodist Episcopal society is represented here, but their place of worship is located in the eastern part of the village and is consequently in Dane county. The society was organized in 1854, and services were held at Union, Rock county, until 1866, when the church was removed to its present location. Rev. Chadeen was the pastor at that time. He was a wide-awake gospel worker, and at the same time he was not afraid of manual labor, for during the rebuilding of the church he took the part of a common laborer and assisted in whatever he found to do. During the winter of 1866—7, he conducted a series of revival meetings through which the membership of the society increased to nearly forty. The society at present has a good membership and holds meetings regularly.

BROOKLYN GRADED SCHOOL.

A school was taught at the residence of H. B. Capwell, at an early day, the teacher being Miranda Smith. But the first teacher who taught within the present limits of the village of Brooklyn was Julia Wheelock. A joint district was formed, comprising territory in Green, Dane and Rock counties, and in 1883 the present school building was erected. It is a two-story edifice, veneered with brick, and cost about $3,000. The first teachers in this building were Nellie Gillis and Nellie Drown. The school is well graded and furnishes every opportunity necessary in receiving an education, which will fit the young for any of the common walks in life.

FIRE AT BROOKLYN.

On the 2d of April, 1882, at about 10 o'clock P. M. a fire was discovered in the elevator of E. J. Andrew. The flames spread rapidly and soon the elevator, ice house, depot and a saloon building were destroyed. The people had just returned to their homes when, at 4 o'clock A. M. the cry of fire again rang out. This time smoke was seen issuing from the store of E. W. Whitmore. In a few moments the flames burst out and in a short time E. W. Whitmore's clothing store, A. G. Ellis' drug store, and a meat market were burned to the ground. The loss by this fire was about $25,000. Insurance, $15,000. This was a severe blow to the citizens, but they went manfully to work and soon rebuilt.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The first merchant in the village of Brooklyn was B. S. Axtel, who erected a small building and opened a store in 1865. As his business increased, he enlarged his store and continued in trade until his death, in October, 1880, since which time the business has been owned and conducted by Mrs. Axtel.

The second store was opened by Samuel Andrews, who, in 1867, established a hardware business. Mr. Andrews sold to E. J. Andrew, he to Joseph H. Wood and he in turn to O. O. Gordon, the present owner.

The third store building was erected by Mr. Turner, but the firm of L. J. Wilder & Co., was the first to occupy it. The firm consisted of L. J. Wilder, W. F. Smith and A. Eager. They established their business in 1872. In 1875 L. J. Wilder became sole proprietor and still conducts the business.

The Evansville Mercantile Association established a branch store here in 1876. The store is still owned by the association, and has a good trade. C. S. Gray is the business manager.

A. G. Ellis was the first to embark in the drug trade. He established business in the spring of 1879. One year later he added a stock of jewelry, which he has since carried in connection with drugs, books and stationery.

E. W. Whitmore became a resident of the town of Brooklyn, in March, 1865, where he was engaged in farming until 1879. He then established a clothing business at the village of Brooklyn. Unfortunately his store and goods were destroyed by fire, but he at once rebuilt, and has since carried on a general mercantile business. He was born near Attica, N. Y., June 26, 1832. His parents were James and Margaret (Edwards) Whitmore. He assisted his father, who was a contractor, in building the bridges and cattle guards on the New York & Erie Railroad, between Attica and Warsaw, and afterward served as locomotive engineer for a number of years. He was married July 29, 1853, to Miss L. A. Lockwood, daughter of Horace and Maria (Brainard) Lockwood.

The first lumber yard was established by J. C. Carpenter. He was succeeded by Hiram Graves, and then in 1875 came the present proprietors, Lovejoy & Richards, both of whom are non-residents. The business is conducted by J. W. Blair. About 1,500,000 feet of lumber are handled annually.

The first public house opened under the pretentious name of "Hotel," was kept by Mr. Ames, but H. B. Capwell had, for several years, kept a boarding house. D. H. Glidden built a hotel and ran the same until 1879. It is now owned by Mr. Berg. The Northwestern Hotel is owned and run by Dr. H. C. Leach.

The first blacksmith shop was opened in 1865, by T. B. Conradson, who is still in business. The second was Robert Clough. He remained but a short time, however. The shop is now owned by A. J. Leonard.

WAREHOUSES AND ELEVATORS.

The first warehouse was erected by H. B. Capwell, in 1864. He sold to L. Parker, he to D. H. Glidden and he to E. J. Andrew. E. A. Foot, of Footville, also built a warehouse, which was afterward purchased by E. J. Andrew.

The first elevator was built by E. J. Andrew & Sons, in 1874. It was destroyed by the fire in 1882. They then built the present elevator, which has a capacity of nearly 100,000 bushels, and is considered the best elevator between Chicago and Winona. It is now owned by Andrew Bros. This firm is the successor to E. J. Andrew & Sons, and the members are: Homer, W. W., and G. H. Andrew. They are all wide-awake business men, and through their energy Brooklyn has become noted as an excellent market for all kinds of farm products. The firm handles about 150,000 bushels of grain and 200 car loads of live stock annually, besides dealing extensively in wool, poultry, game, butter, eggs and mill feed.

E. J. Andrew was born Oct. 31, 1821, in Herkimer Co., N. Y., three miles east of the city of Utica, on the "Mohawk Flats." At the age of twenty-one he became a student at Clinton Seminary, receiving an academic education. In 1846 he was married to Martha E. Bettinger, of Little Falls, N. Y., by whom he had eight children, four sons and four daughters. In 1860 he removed to Wisconsin, and settled at Footville, Rock county. In January, 1863, he formed a co-partnership with Hon. E. A. Foot in the grain and produce business at Oregon, Dane county, taking charge of the business at that place, under the firm name of Foot & Andrew. After carrying on the business at that place for three years he removed to the village of Brooklyn, his present place of residence, the firm having first established a warehouse at that place. In 1870 he bought out the entire interest of his partner (E. A. Foot), and formed a new partnership with three of his sons—Homer Andrew, William Wallace Andrew and George Howard Andrew—continuing the business under the name of E. J. Andrew & Sons. In 1882, after establishing branch warehouses at Footville and Oregon, he retired from active business, owing to failing health, first, however, turning over the entire business to his three sons, who still carry it on under the firm name of Andrew Bros.

BROOKLYN CHEESE FACTORY.

This factory was built in 1873 by F. R. Melvin and Hiram Graves. These gentlemen operated under the firm name of Graves & Melvin two years, when Mr. Graves sold his interest to A. A. Melvin and J. W. Blair, and the firm became Melvin & Blair. In 1880 F. R. and A. A. Melvin sold their interests to L. J. Wilder, and the firm became Wilder & Blair. This firm continued in business until 1883, in which year the property was purchased by E. Devereaux, who, in the spring of 1884, transformed the factory into a creamery, and is now operating it as such.

POST OFFICE.

The Brooklyn post office was established with H. B. Capwell as the first postmaster. He was succeeded in 1865 by B. S. Axtel, who held the office until his death in 1880, when it passed into the hands of Mrs. B. S. Axtel, the present incumbent.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The following named are a few of the enterprising citizens of the town of Brooklyn who deserve notice in the history of their town and county.

A. C. Purington is a son of H. M. and Eunice Purington. He was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 4th day of December, 1842. When he was five years old his parents emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in Albany. He was married Dec. 4, 1873, to Julia Trow, daughter of James Trow. They now reside on section 33, of Brooklyn, where he owns 140 acres. They are the parents of three children—Albert J., Andrew H. and Lura May. Mr. Purington is politically a republican.

James Root, a prominent farmer of the town of Brooklyn, was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., April 27, 1841. He came to Wisconsin with his parents, Francis and Permelia (Spaulding) Root, and now owns the land entered by his father and Mr. Shell. Farming has been his occupation, and he now has 186 acres, with good improvements. Feb. 5, 1865, he enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin, and served until mustered out. He was married in 1861 to Barbara Lozar, daughter of George Lozar. They have four children—Fred, Plinney, Homer and Ida. Francis Root, wife and two children, and Powell Shell, settled in the town of Brooklyn in 1847, the former on section 20 and the latter on section 29. Each of them entered forty acres. They dug a well and erected their cabins near the section line. Mr. Root died in 1848, leaving two children—James and Harriet. Mrs. Root subsequently was married to John McClarrinon, and by this union gave birth to seven children. She died in 1871.

Stephen Smith is mentioned among the pioneers of 1847, having come here from Walworth county in May of that year, accompanied by his wife and six children. He settled in what is now the town of Brooklyn, and entered the southwest quarter of section 11, where he erected a log house. Here he resided, giving his attention to farming until the time of his death, in 1856. Mrs. Smith died in August, 1877. They were the parents of six children—Jonathan, Charles, Emmarilla, Euphrasia, Emory and Caroline. Stephen Smith was born in Massachusetts in 1798. He removed with his parents to Ohio, where he was married to Philura Love, a native of the State of New York. After his marriage he followed farming in Ohio until he came to Wisconsin in 1843 and settled in Walworth county. In politics Mr. Smith was formerly a whig, and afterwards a republican. He would not accept office, but always attended elections and voted. His religious preferences were with the Congregational Church, but after coming to Wisconsin he did not unite with any Church.

Emory Smith was born in Ohio, May 12, 1833, and came with the family to Wisconsin in 1843, and in 1847 to Green county, since which time he has been a resident of Brooklyn. He is still living on the land entered by his father, of which he owns 120 acres, and has first-class improvements. In November, 1856, he was married to Almira Smith, daughter of Roswell and Jane (Brown) Smith. She is a native of Michigan. Mr. Smith is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry. He is a member of the republican party and has held local office.

Charles Smith, son of Stephen Smith, came with his parents to Green county. He was married to Sarah Earl, and afterwards moved to Iowa. He now resides in Missouri.

Alonzo Purintun was born in the State of New York, Nov. 23, 1825. His father, David H. Purintun, was also a native of the Empire

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

State, and his mother, Chestina (Messenger) Purintun, was born in Connecticut. Alonzo attended the district school and for four years worked on the Rochester and Olean canal. At the age of eighteen he came to Wisconsin, first stopping in Jefferson county, and later in Waukesha county, and followed teaming as a business, drawing freight to and from Milwaukee. In 1847 he came to Green county, his parents having preceded him. Here he helped to till the soil, also followed teaming. On the 14th day of April, 1850, Nancy Young became his wife. She was born in Erie Co., Penn., Dec. 25, 1827. He has since been engaged in farming in the town of Brooklyn. In 1884 he resided on section 29 and owned 200 acres of land. Feb. 4, 1865, he enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until mustered out of service. He is a member of the G. A. R., and is a Royal Arch Mason. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Purintun are—Elvira A., who married M. X. Sisson, and died leaving one daughter; Talburt G., Elliott E., Leander A., Seymour J., Bertha, wife of James P. Ingals; Lois, wife of James Davis, Jr.; Hiram B. and Archilles.

Talburt Purintun, son of Alonzo and Nancy Purintun, was born in Green county, Nov. 16, 1852. He was educated in the common schools, and is a farmer by occupation. In 1875 he was married to Viola E., daughter of L. W. P. and Sarah A. (Boyles) Morton. They had three children—Emerald L., (deceased,) Everett L. and Lewis V. Mr. Purintun resides on section 32, where he owns a farm of eighty acres.

Franklin Patterson is numbered among the pioneers of this county. He left Norwalk, Ohio, during the month of September, 1844, and assisted in driving 1,000 head of sheep to Elgin, Ill. He then visited friends at Geneva Lake, Wis., where he joined two of his cousins and a young man from Massachusetts, and the four started westward on foot. On the third day they dined at Monroe, and then continued their journey to Galena. There had been high water in the Mississippi river, and they expected to find employment consequent upon the damage occasioned by a flood, but they were disappointed. Then they went to Dubuque, from which point they started down the river, finding occasionally a few days work chopping wood, and thus continued their journey to New Orleans. March 5, 1845, they left New Orleans on the steamer John Aha, and after a trip of fourteen days' duration arrived at St. Louis. There they went on board another boat and went up the Illinois river as far as Ottawa, and from there they returned on foot to Geneva Lake. Mr. Patterson then worked for a farmer in Racine county until January, 1846. He then went to Manitowoc county, where he met a friend with whom he took a circuitous route, and soon again brought up at Geneva Lake. He then went to Ohio, but returned again to Wisconsin, accompanied by his brother James Nelson Patterson and family. They made the journey with teams, and in October arrived in Green county. They pre-empted the northwest quarter of section 22, in the territory now comprised in the town of Brooklyn. The following summer Mr. Patterson worked at Geneva Lake, and then again went back to Ohio, and was married to Maria McCreedy, a daughter of Thomas and Catharine (Holt) McCreedy, and again came to Wisconsin. He resided with his brother one season, then with a younger brother, Emerson, he purchased 200 acres located on sections 27 and 28. He built a log cabin on section 28, where he may now be found. The log cabin, has, however, given way to a good brick house, and Mr. Patterson now owns 260 acres. He was formerly a republican, but is now a national green-backer. The children are—Hiram, William and Lawrence. Mr. Patterson was born in the State of New York, April 17, 1823. His father died in the State of Ohio in 1840, five children surviving him. The mother, in 1847, came to Green county, and in 1884 resided with her son, the subject of this sketch. Although now eighty-three years old, yet she is in good health and sound mind.

Francis B. Stockburn has been a resident of Green county since 1848, with the exception of four years spent in Madison, during which he was engaged in draying. He is a native of England, born Nov. 8, 1805. His early life was spent upon a farm, but he afterwards engaged in various occupations, among the rest, published a newspaper four years. In 1841 he went to France, and in 1843 came to the United States. He stopped, for a short time in New York city, then visited other localities, but was not favorably impressed with eastern people as a class, and emigrated westward. He first located in Milwaukee, and there worked at shoemaking. In 1846, in company with E. M. Kerby, he purchased considerable land in Green county, but resided in Sheboygan county until 1848. He then settled at Attica, in the town of Brooklyn, where he at first worked at the shoemaker's trade, but soon drifted into farming, which he has since continued with the exception before mentioned. He was married in 1845 to Ann Walker, who died March 15, 1882. They had reared nine children, three of whom were living in 1884—Clara, wife of Samuel Watkins; Isabel, wife of Thomas George, and Maria, wife of Frank Butts.

Frank Butts is a son of John and Susan Butts. He was born in Rock Co., Wis., Sept. 5, 1857. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and educated in the common schools, in 1880 he was united in marriage with Maria Stockburn, and they have two children—William F. and Olive.

James McCoy settled on section 17, of Brooklyn, in September, 1848. He at first purchased 160 acres, to which he has added until his farm now contains 360 acres. He is engaged in stock farming, in which he has met with marked success. He has a good dwelling, four fine large barns, and other improvements. Mr. McCoy was born in Ireland June 23, 1821. He received a good education and at the age of eighteen engaged as bookkeeper until May 10, 1848, when he was married to Margaret Galligan, and the same day sailed from Dublin for the United States. On reaching New York city, he intended to engage in his former occupation, but, as no opportunity presented itself, he left his wife with his brother who lived in that city, and started westward. At Milwaukee he found employment a few weeks as copying clerk in the office of John L. Doran. He soon became tired of this occupation and came to Green county and bought a farm. He had not worked on a farm since he was quite young, and his young wife was unaccustomed to the labors of housekeeping, and consequently getting a start on the frontier was somewhat difficult, but they did not despair, and are now enjoying the fruits of their labor. Mrs. McCoy is a self-educated woman, refined in her tastes, and highly esteemed by all who know her. They are the parents of ten boys and one girl. Those living in 1884 were—Joseph, bookkeeper at Burkhardt's, St. Croix county; John, cashier in the New Richmond Bank; Mary, wife of Charles Burnham, who is cashier in the bank at Edgerton; Edward F., who is engaged in farming in Dakota; Robert H., bookkeeper for the New Richmond Lumber Company; and Charles, George and Arthur, who are still attending school. Politically, Mr. McCoy is a republican. His first ballot was cast for Gen. Winfield Scott. He served as town clerk for eleven years, and has been elected justice of the peace.

Andrew Bennett was born in Scotland. In 1828, he being then a young man, he emigrated to the United States and first stopped in the State of New York, where he was married to Lucinda Baxter, daughter of Zebulon and Lucinda Baxter. In 1848 they came to Wisconsin and settled in Green county. He engaged in farming in the town of Brooklyn until 1864, then removed to Austin, Minn., where they have since died. They reared five children—A. Z., Christie, Thomas, (deceased) George and Isabelle.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

A.Z. Bennett, oldest son of Andrew and Lucinda (Baxter) Bennett, was born in Franklin Co., N. Y., Feb. 25, 1831, and came with the family to Green county in 1848, since which date he has been a resident of the town of Brooklyn. He now resides on section 14 and owns ninety-nine acres of land. In February, 1854, he was married to Marion Hickok, a native of Ohio, born March 29, 1835. Their children are—Lucinda, (deceased) Carrie E. and Fred E. Mr. Bennett belongs to the republican party and has held the office of town treasurer and supervisor.

Zebulon Baxter was a native of Vermont, where his early life was spent. He served as a soldier during the War of 1812. He was married to Lucinda Oglesby and resided in Canada, where his wife died, leaving two children. He subsequently was married again in the State of New York, and came to Wisconsin about 1830. He first stopped in Milwaukee, and afterwards followed mining at Mineral Point. In 1848 he came to Green county and resided in the town of Brooklyn until 1854. He then went to Austin, Minn., where he died at the age of 103 years.

C.D. W. Leonard was a pioneer of 1848, in the fall of which year, with his wife, he came to the county and chose the town of Brooklyn as a location. He was also accompanied by his brother Arah, then an unmarried man, and together they entered three quarter sections of land and improved the same. They also, for a few years, carried on a general mercantile business at Dayton. Arah Leonard was married to Mary Day, and in 1866 emigrated to Webster Co., Iowa, where he is now a prominent citizen, having held the office of county treasurer four years. C. D. W. Leonard continued farming; also for some time carried on a store at Dayton and finally moved to Attica where he was engaged in the general merchandise business until 1884, when he sold out his business and moved to Rockton, Ill. Mr. Leonard was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1818. His parents being Arah and Lavisa (Slocum) Leonard. The father died in Ohio and the mother and one daughter came with her sons to Wisconsin. She died in Green county, in 1860. The daughter married John Utley and died in 1867. Mr. Leonard received an academic education and taught school. He was married to Margaret Widrig and in 1842 emigrated to Ohio from whence he came to Green county. His wife died in 1866, leaving four children—Ella, Hattie, Ardella and Charles. In 1867 he was married to Mary Ann Wood and by this union one child was born—Vernie. In politics Mr. Leonard was a republican until after the war, when he became rather liberal in his views. He represented his district in the assembly two terms, was superintendent of schools in Brooklyn under the old town system, and was chairman of the town several terms. Thus it can be seen that he is not alone an early pioneer, but his conduct was such that he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens.

Lorenzo Amidon came to Green county, July 10, 1848. At first he followed the trade of carpenter and afterwards that of cabinet maker at Monroe. In 1850 he came to the town of Brooklyn and purchased land on section 13 and has since been a resident of the town. In 1884, he resided on section 12 and owned 160 acres of land. Mr. Amidon was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., July 7, 1825. He learned his trade and resided in his native State until he came to Wisconsin. He has been twice married. In 1850 to Olive Starkweather, daughter of Anson and Lucretia Starkweather. She died in 1874, leaving four children—William A., Etta, Ella and Emma. In 1879 Mr. Amidon was married to Fannie Lord and by this union two sons have been born—Gilbert and Byron. Politically he is a national greenbacker but was formerly a republican. He is not, however, a strict partisan, and believes in casting his ballot for a good man rather than a good party.

John Flood and family, in 1849, came to Green county, and, June 6, entered 160 acres of land on section 21, of Brooklyn, upon which he settled. He was born in Ireland, and was there married to Elizabeth Mahar. In 1847 they emigrated to the United States and first located in the State of New York, where Mrs. Flood died, leaving eight children—James, Edward, Mary, Anna, John, Betsey, Ester and Nora. In 1849 Mr. Flood came with his children to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Brooklyn, where he resided until his death, March 26, 1871.

Edward Flood was born in Ireland in 1826. He came with the family to the United States, and in 1849 to Green county, which has since been his residence. He is now the owner of 146 acres of land, located on section 16, of the town of Brooklyn. In 1857 he was married to Bridget Flannigan, also a native of Ireland. They have had eight children, four of whom are now living—Lizzie, William, James and Maggie. Mr. and Mrs. Flood are members of the Roman Catholic Church.

Austin Melvin was born in Geauga Co., Ohio, Aug. 10, 1842. He came with his parents to Wisconsin and became a resident of the town of Brooklyn. In 1865 he enlisted in company C, 49th Wisconsin, and served until the regiment was mustered out of service. He was afterward engaged in the manufacture of cheese in Fayette Co., Iowa. The remainder of his life has been spent on the farm he now owns, consisting of 200 acres adjoining the village of Brooklyn. He has good improvements on his land, and is engaged in general farming. He was married April 18, 1880, to Amy M. Blair. They have one son—Maurice B. Mr. Melvin is a Royal Arch Mason, a republican in politics, and has held local offices.

Alonzo Melvin was a native of Cummington, Mass., born Oct. 2, 1794. He grew to manhood in his native State, spending one summer in New York. The year following, accompanied by John Bryant, a brother of William Cullen Bryant, he went to Ohio. One year later he went to Mississippi, where he remained five years. He then returned to his native State and persuaded his parents to remove with him to Ohio. In 1825 he was married to Roenna Lyman. She was at that time a resident of Geauga Co., Ohio, but was born in Massachusetts. In 1851 Mr. Melvin came to Wisconsin and purchased land in the town of Brooklyn, where he resided until his death in 1873. Mrs. Melvin died in March, 1880. They reared a family of thirteen children, twelve of whom grew to maturity. Those living in 1884 were—Fidelia, Addison S., F. R., Sarah, E. O., Austin A., Edward P. and H. N. Mr. Melvin was a good citizen and a successful farmer. At his death he owned a farm of 475 acres, with excellent improvements. Physically he was slim built, and tall, being over six feet in height. Politically he was a republican but took no more interest in politics than to perform his duty as a citizen. His religious connections were with the Presbyterian society.

Samuel Cole was born in Gloucestershire, England, in 1814, learned the trade of bricklaying and was married to Winnefred Henshaw. He emigrated to the United States in 1852, came to Wisconsin and settled on section 4, town of Brooklyn. His wife died in 1878. They had two children, both now deceased. In May, 1880, he was married to Mrs. Catharine Shell. They now live on section 29.

S. W. McCreedy is numbered among the pioneers of 1853. He was married in 1859 to Amarancy Purintun, daughter of David Purintun. In 1861 he enlisted in company E, 13th Wisconsin, and served three years, since which time he has followed farming in the town of Brooklyn and now, owns the land entered by his father-in-law. The children are—William and Sarah. Mr. McCreedy was a republican during the war, subsequently voted with the national greenbackers. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, of the G. A. R., and has many friends.

Stephen Swan became a resident of Brooklyn in the fall of 1853, at which date he purchased 200 acres of unimproved land on section 19, erected his log cabin and started in life anew. He has devoted his time and attention entirely to his farm since that time, and is now the owner of a fine farm of 280 acres and has good improvements. He is largely engaged in stock raising. Mr. Swan was born in Cheshire, England, July 12, 1827, and with his brother, Taylor, emigrated to the United States in 1845. He first purchased land in Rock county where his brother still resides. In 1851 he was married to Isabel Taylor and came, two years later, to this county. He is a republican politically and has held the office of chairman of the board. Their children are—Robert, Frances, Mary, Eliza, deceased; William, John, Archie, Ralph, Armna, Sarah, Walter, James and Charlie. Mrs. Swan is a member of the Presbyterian society.

Henry Kingdon, Sr., was born in Devonshire, England, in 1815. He was married, to Mary Caroline Snow, and emigrated to the United States, first stopping in Illinois, from whence became to the State of Wisconsin. He resided in Dane county one year, then settled in Green county. His death took place in 1875, at which date he resided on section 32, town of Brooklyn, and owned an improved farm of 130 acres. Mrs. Kingdon died in 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Kingdon left five children—Henry, Jr., Mary, James, and John and Jessie, twins. Mr. Kingdon became a citizen of the United States in 1868, and afterwards voted the democratic ticket. He was a kind father and good neighbor.

Henry Kingdon, Jr., was born in Green county on the 2d day of November, 1854, and resided with his parents until the death of his father. In August, 1875, he was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Eliza Swan. She is a daughter of Stephen and Isabel Swan. He now resides on his father's estate. The children are—Isabel, Willie, Harry and Robert.

Thomas Crompton came to this county in April, 1854, and first resided in the town of Mount Pleasant, next in Exeter, and subsequently settled in the town of Brooklyn, where he now resides on section 30. He owns 200 acres and is engaged in general farming. He was born in Lancastershire, England, July 3, 1830. His parents were James and Betsey Crompton. The father emigrated to the United States in 1847, and one year later the mother with two of her children followed. They first lived in Ohio, from whence they came to Green county. In 1854 Thomas Crompton was married to Magan Miley, a native of Ireland. The children are—Rachel, Thomas, Mary Ann, Charles, Robert, James, (deceased) Jessie and Helen.

D. O. Lockwood was born near Attica, N. Y., July 28, 1830. His parents were Horace and Maria Lockwood. July 28, 1850, Mr. Lockwood was married to Maria E. Andrews. He resided in Wyoming county until 1855, when he came to Wisconsin and became a resident of Brooklyn. He gave his attention to farming until 1875, when on account of failing health he moved into the village of Brooklyn and engaged as clerk in a general store. His wife died March 19, 1879, leaving three children—Serepta P., Mary E and Fred S. In 1878(?) he returned to his farm, and in March of that year, was married to Hannah M. Slauson, then of Rock county, but a native of Orange Co., N. Y. By this marriage two children have been born—Edith L. and Frank M. In 1879 Mr. Lockwood sold his farm and again removed into the village, and has since been engaged as a traveling salesman. Politically he adheres to the republican party. He has served as town treasurer and has been a member of the M. E. Church since 1857.

William Darkin came to this county in December, 1854, and settled on section 21, of the town of Brooklyn, where he has since given his attention to farming. He now owns 140 acres of land. He was born in England, in October, 1816, where in his youth, he learned the trade of plumber, glazier and painter. He was married to Mary Ann Candler. He left England on account of poor health, being afflicted with the gout, and came to America. He returned to England, on a visit in 1880, but found that great changes had taken place during his absence, and he even failed to recognize his own brother. Mrs. Darkin died in the fall of 1881, leaving one daughter—Mary Ann. Mr. Darkin is a member of the M. E. Church, and a republican in politics. Mary Ann was married to William Winter, who died in the United States service, during the War of the Rebellion. She was afterwards married to William Buff.

E. T. Wing came to the State of Wisconsin, in 1854. He first stopped in Evansville, where he worked at his trade, (carpenter) building the Congregational church and other buildings in that place. In January, 1855, he became a resident of Green county, settling on section 2, of Brooklyn, where he had previously purchased eighty acres of unimproved land, upon which he has since resided, engaged in farming, and also, at different intervals, working at his trade. He now owns 205 acres of land, adorned with good improvements. Mr. Wing is a native of Addison Co., Vt., born Nov. 13, 1822. He grew to manhood, and learned his trade in his native State; He subsequently lived in various places previous to his coming to Wisconsin. In September, 1847, he was married to Sarah A. Ward, also a native of Vermont. They have three children—Allen J., Genie, now the wife of Willis Searles, and Ada. Mr. Wing is a republican and has held local office.

George Winter came into the county in 1855, and purchased sixty acres on section 12, of Brooklyn, and eighty acres in Rock county. This land was entered by A. Tupper, but Mr. Winter purchased it of Harvey Church. There was some of the land broken, but the improvements were very meager at that time. The place is now adorned with a fine residence and good barns. Mr. Winter now owns 200 acres, and his son, Alfred, forty acres. Mr. Winter was born in Suffolk, England, Jan. 12, 1827. His parents were John and Sarah Winter. He remained in his native country until 1854, then emigrated to the United States and first settled in Rock Co., Wis. In 1855, he was married to Elizabeth Winter, also a native of England. They have four children living—Alfred, Walter, Nellie and Earnest. Mr. Winter is a member of the M. E. Church.

J. W. Brewer came to this county with his parents, Jeremiah and Mahala (Croy) Brewer, in 1844. At this time, he was but nine years old. He was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., Jan. 20, 1835. He resided with the family in the town of Albany, and in 1857, was united in marriage with Lucy Jane Peckham, who is a daughter of Abel and Adah Peckham, and was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., June 19, 1837. In January, 1858, Mr. Brewer settled on section 33, Brooklyn, where he has since followed farming, and now owns 214 acres, the greater part of which is nicely improved. Politically he is a republican, but not a strict party man. The children are—Lettie, Elmer E., Eddie L., J. Grant, Janie M., Rufie J. C., deceased, and an infant son.

Gaylord Lockwood came to this county in 1857, and in 1858 was married to Elsie A. Flint, daughter of John Flint. In 1873 he went to Minnesota, and remained eighteen months, then returned to Green county and now resides on section 32, of Brooklyn, where he owns eighty acres. Their children are—Fred, Mary, Carrie, Frank and Ellen. Mr. Lockwood was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., Feb. 24, 1834. He went to Ohio in 1852, from whence he came to Green county. He is a member of the democratic party.

W. W. Young came to this county in 1859, and the same year was married to Margaret Dobbs, a daughter of Jeremiah and Susannah (Loring) Dobbs. He was then engaged in farming in Spring Grove. In 1866 he came to Brooklyn and purchased a farm near Attica, upon which he settled. He subsequently rented his farm and engaged for about three years in a general mercantile business at Attica, being in partnership with C. D. W. Leonard a portion of the time. He then returned to his farm, and has since been extensively engaged in stock raising. His farm contains 317 acres, and his improvements are among the best in town. Mr. Young was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1837, and is a son of Robert and Jane Ann (Beam) Young, who came to Wisconsin in 1839, and settled in Walworth county, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The subject of this sketch went, in 1856, to Waupaca county, from whence he came to Green county. Politically he is a national greenbacker, but was formerly a democrat. He has been chairman of his town, and held other local offices. He is a member of the United Brethren Church. Mr. and Mrs. Young have had six children, five of whom are living—Porter H. Jerry R., Frank, Ida May and Willie H. Their third child, William W., died Jan. 21, 1864. The children are all at home except his eldest son, Porter, who went to Idaho in the spring of 1881, where he has been engaged in the milling business up to the present time.

George Gabrey, in 1860, purchased eighty acres on section 32, land formerly owned by Edward Walker, where he has since resided and followed farming. In 1865 he enlisted in company G, of the 49th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until fall. He was then discharged on account of sickness, from the effects of which he has not recovered. He is a native of Canada, born in November, 1823. He learned the trade of mason and stone cutting in the State of New York. At the age of nineteen years he went to the State of New York and was married in Oneida county, of that State, in 1840, to Jane Kelley, a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth Kelley, who afterwards became early settlers of Green Co., Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Gabrey have two children—Nancy, wife of James Fryer, and Emogene, wife of William Lormer.

George Hollerbush settled on section 18, town of Brooklyn, in where he still resides and owns 180 acres. He was born in Pennsylvania, Jan. 8, 1816. In 1830 the family removed to Ohio. In 1843 George came to Wisconsin, and first stopped at Fort Atkinson. He afterwards purchased a farm near Madison, from whence he came to Green county. He was married in 1846 to Susanna Fascett, born in Allegany Co., N. Y., in 1818. They have nine children—Jacob, George, John, Sarah, Elliott, Caroline, Violette, William and Rosanna.

John Dalrymple is a native of Green Co., Penn., born Nov. 25, 1819. His parents, Lewis and Mary (Headley) Dalrymple, were natives of New Jersey. In 1827 they removed to Jefferson Co., Ohio, and engaged in farming. Here the subject of this sketch was educated in the common schools, and on the 3d day of February, 1842, was united in marriage with Selina L. Newell, who was born in Ohio Aug. 14, 1826. Mr. Dalrymple was at that time engaged in farming, but a few years later he commenced dealing in horses, buying in Ohio and selling in Philadelphia. He was thus employed until 1850. Then, accompanied by his wife and four children, he came to Wisconsin, making the journey with a good team and carriage. He chose Belleville, Dane county, for a location, and in the fall of said year erected a dwelling house, which was built of pine lumber hauled from Milwaukee. This was the first pine house in Belleville. in the fall of the same year he purchased 400 acres of land, for which he paid $1,500, and which increased in value so that in a few years he sold a portion of it for $100 per acre. In 1859 he sold his property and purchased a farm near Madison. At the breaking out of the war he commenced buying horses for the government, which he continued about four years, in which enterprise he was successful financially. In 1864 he purchased 360 acres on section 18, town of Brooklyn, upon which he settled. It was covered with timber, but he made numerous improvements, and soon had one of the finest stock farms in the county. Here he resided in 1884, surrounded by all the comforts necessary to make home pleasant, but he has become weary of farming and therefore sold his farm for $35 per acre, agreeing to give possession in 1885. Mr. Dalrymple is a man who tips the scales at 190 pounds, and possesses a vast amount of energy. He is prompt in the fulfillment of his obligations, and always does with all his might whatever he undertakes. He became a Mason when twenty-one years of age, and is at present a member of Dayton Lodge, No. 198. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F. In his religious views he is liberal. Politically he has always been a democrat, although his father was a strong whig. He has never aspired to office, but has been chosen chairman of the town board, which position he accepted more to please his friends than to gratify his own desires. Mr. and Mrs. Dalrymple have had nine children, three of whom died in infancy, and their eldest son, Lewis, died in June, 1882, at the age of thirty-two years, leaving a wife and four sons. Their five children living at present are—Harriet E., Mary E., Sarah J., D. S. and J. F.; all married and settled for themselves, leaving their parents in their old age in prosperity, peace and quietness.

D. H. Glidden became a resident of the State when but five years old. He was born in Orleans Co., N. Y., in 1836, on the 14th day of June. His father, Andrew Glidden, was a native of New Hampshire. The farm on which he was born has been owned by Gliddens, his ancestors, for more than 200 years. Andrew Glidden was married in the State of New York to Mahala Crosby, a native of that State. In 1842 the family came to Wisconsin and were pioneers in Kenosha county. Eight years later they removed to Dane county and settled near Oregon, where the parents died, the father in 1867, and the mother in 1864. They reared nine children, three of whom were in the service during the War of the Rebellion—D. H., Jacob N. and Lysander H. Jacob N. died at New Orleans from the effects of wounds received at the battle of Vicksburg, twelve balls piercing his clothing. Lysander H. died at St. Louis from sickness while in the service. D. H. enlisted in the same company and regiment, company B, of the 11th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded at the battle of Vicksburg, May 22, 1863. On his recovery he was transferred to the veteran corps and served until September, 1864. He then went to Clermont, Iowa, and engaged in general merchandising one year. In the fall of 1866 he came to Brooklyn and dealt in grain for eight years. He also built the hotel and ran the same until 1879. He then purchased his present farm of 142 acres, located on sections 10 and 11. Mr. Glidden has been twice married, first in the fall of 1865, to Elizabeth Thomson, of Madison, who died May 23, 1869, leaving one daughter, three days old at the date of her mother's death. Her name is—Lizzie A., and she now resides with her father. July 10, 1870, Mr. Glidden was married to Jennie M. Doolittle, daughter of Ezra and Jane (Potter) Doolittle. They have three children—Ida May, Burton H. and Ezra A. Mr. Glidden is a member of the republican party, and has been justice of the peace nine years.

C. M. Fuller, son of M. H. and Mary E. Fuller, was born in North Ferrisburg, Vt., March 21, 1849, and resided in that State until 1868. In that year he came to Wisconsin with his parents, and has, since that time, been a resident of Green county. Feb. 17, 1875, he was married to Maggie Montgomery, daughter of C. A. and Mary Montgomery. They have one daughter—Florence Ina. Mr. Fuller now resides on section 14, of the town of Brooklyn. He is a republican politically, and has served as town treasurer and supervisor.

M. H. Fuller became a resident of this county in 1868, and soon after purchased 160 acres of land on sections 11 and 14, of Brooklyn, and has since been engaged in farming. He was born in Bristol, Vt., where he grew to manhood. In his youth he learned the carpenter and joiner's trade, which he followed in his native

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

State until he came to Wisconsin. He was married in 1846 to Mary Ward, a native of Albany Co., N. Y. They have three children—Cassius, Euphemia M. and Ella G.

Henry Smith, son of W. R. and Ann D. Smith, was born in the town of Brooklyn, Green Co., Wis., Oct. 6, 1849. He has always been a resident of his native town. June 22, 1871, he was married to Mary Dean, of Brooklyn, but a native of Pennsylvania. They have one daughter—Effie A. Mr. Smith is a republican and has served two years as town treasurer, and seven years as clerk.

Peter DeRemer has resided in the State of Wisconsin since 1843. In that year his father, Jacob DeRemer and family, stopped in Racine county, and in the fall, settled in Walworth county. In 1847 they removed to Rock county, from whence they came to Green county and located in the town of Brooklyn. Jacob DeRemer was born in the State of New York, where he spent his younger days, and was married to Gittie Runkle. After his marriage he remained in New York until 1843. They had nine children, eight of whom came with them to Green county. The following named were living in 1884—Margaret, Mary, Peter, Cornelius, John and James. Peter, the subject of this sketch, was born in New York, and, as before stated, came with his parents to Rock county, where in 1853 he was married to Clista Domy, a native of Vermont. On the 12th of September, 1855, his son Peter was born, and on the 27th of the same month his wife died. In October, 1856, he was married to Rosa Domy. Nine children have been born to them, of whom seven are now living—Jennie, Albert, Frank, Gittie, Philip, Rosa and Queenie. Mr. DeRemer is independent in politics, but takes little interest in political affairs. He now resides in Brooklyn, where he owns 340 acres of land, with first class improvements.

Edwin P. Blair, when but a lad of thirteen years, accompanied by his brother, James W., two years younger than he, came with an uncle to Oregon, Dane Co., Wis., in April, 1850, followed by his mother, Mrs. Polly Blair (a widow) and sister Amy M., in June of the same year. As a resident of Oregon, Dane county and Brooklyn, Green county and vicinity, Edwin P. grew to manhood, and in June, 1881, married Mary J. McPherson, who was born and reared in Spring Dale, Dane Co., Wis., Mr. Blair is engaged in insurance and agency business, and now resides on a beautiful eminence just north of the village of Brooklyn, where he owns five acres of land; it being in the extreme northeast corner of Green county. Edwin P. was born in Girard, Erie Co., Penn., March 2, 1837. His father, Robert Blair, died July 1, 1841, leaving his mother a widow, who reared her three children and now lives with them. Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Blair have one child, a daughter—Clara McPherson.

CHAPTER XXX.

TOWN OF CADIZ.

The town of Cadiz comprises the southwest corner of Green county, embracing congressional township 1 north, range 6 east, of the fourth principal meridian. It is bounded on the north by the town of Jordan; on the east by Clarno; on the west by Lafayette Co., Wis.; and on the south by Stephenson Co., Ill. The surface of the town is somewhat broken, the soil generally consisting of a rich black loam. Some clay is found in portions of the town, and in the northern part the soil is of a lighter quality, containing much sand. As a whole the town is scarcely excelled in the county for fertility of soil. Along the streams the land is frequently low, and liable to overflow in times of high water. These lower lands afford excellent pasturage, and an abundance of hay. The general excellence of this town for agricultural purposes is indicated by its large assessed valuation. This town excels in the quantity and quality of its timber. Nearly the entire surface of the town east of the river was originally heavily timbered. About all of the deciduous native timber of the county is found here. A large proportion of the timber, of course, has been removed, as is attested by the large number of beautiful farms that are found here, and especially since the advent of the railroad which furnished a ready and convenient market for wood and timber, has the destruction of the timber been carried on.

The streams of this town are numerous and important. The principal water course is the Pecatonica river, which flows across nearly the entire western portion of the town. This stream enters the town from the west by way of section 6, flowing in an irregular southeasterly course to the south-central part of section 5, where it receives the waters of Skinner creek. It then flows due west for a short distance, and from thence in an irregular southerly course to leave the town by way of section 33, near the village of Martin, where its waters are utilized for milling purposes. This stream received several branches in this town, the most important of which is Skinner creek, which flows across sections 3, 4, 5 and 8. From the latter section it flows back to section 5, and makes confluence with the Pecatonica. Numerous springs, giving rise in some instances to considerable streams, are found.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The earliest settlers of this town were from the mining regions of this State, farther west. The first settler of Cadiz was George Lot, who settled on the southeast quarter of section 36, in 1834. Lot came directly from the mines, where he had gone previous to the Black Hawk War. He was originally from the State of Pennsylvania. He remained here but a short time then moved to near Winslow, Ill., where he built a saw mill. Later he became crazy and hung himself.

Soon after Lot, came the ex-miners William Boyles, formerly from Indiana, and Stephen G. Hale, Nicholas Hale and Bennett Nolan from Illinois.

Jesse W. Shull, one of the earliest settlers in this town, was born in Philadelphia in 1786. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He came west and followed the business of an Indian trader at Dubuque and Prairie du Chien, years before the Black Hawk War, in which he served. He established a trading post at what is now Shullsburg, in 1828, where he remained several years. He had, at the same time, trading houses at other points. In 1836 he bought the claim of George Lot, on section 36, in the town of Cadiz, to which he removed with his family and lived for many years. He afterwards removed further north in the town, and settled where he died in 1875. His widow, whom he married at his trading post at Shullsburg, in 1827, is now living with her daughter at Winslow, Ill.

In the fall of 1838 Mordecai Kelly settled on section 1, where he still lives. He was born in the State of Ohio in 1808, and came to Monroe with his family in the spring of 1837, where he lived until his settlement in Cadiz.

William Bridges also settled on section 1 the following year, where he lived until the time of his death. His widow still lives in the town at the advanced age of eighty-three years.

In 1840 Martin Burt and Felix O'Fling located on section 3, and began the erection of a saw mill on Skinner creek—the first in the town. The mill was finished by Gardner & Burt in 1841 and was known as their mill.

In 1841 came John Billings, Philip, Michael and Elias Deyo.

In 1843 John W. Deniston and Abner Van Sant, the former a son-in-law of the latter, came from Clarno and settled on the southwest quarter of section 23. They built a saw mill on Honey creek at that point which was the second one built in the town. Here, soon afterward, they laid out the village of Cadiz.

David Cline soon afterward located at Cadiz, and a little later John Saucerman.

Henry Rush, the present chairman of the board of supervisors of the town of Cadiz, in which capacity he is serving his fifth term, was born in Bavaria, Germany, Feb. 24, 1822. In 1830 his father emigrated to the United States with his family, but before they reached their destination, which was Seneca Co., Ohio, the mother died in Canton, Ohio. The family settled in Venice, Seneca Co., Ohio, where the father died about two years later. Henry Rush was brought up in the family of Michael Oustine, who settled in this county at the time that Mr. Rush came here, but soon after removed to Minnesota, where he died Feb. 14, 1863. Mr. Rush was a volunteer soldier of the Mexican War. He enlisted at the beginning of the war, in May, 1846, in company F, of the 3d Ohio Volunteers, which was commanded by Samuel R. Curtis, who became quite noted during the War of the Rebellion. He served about fourteen months under Gen. Zachary Taylor, and took part in the battle of Buena Vista, in which he was wounded. At the expiration of his term of service he returned to Ohio, and the following spring came to this county. His first wife was a native of Ohio, and by that union he has three children—Lusetta E., Nancy J. and Rufus H. He was again married, and by the second union had two children—R. E. and Flora B. Mr. Rush is the owner of 433 acres of land. Soon afterward came Andrew Rabb and son, Samuel, who located on section 19, and Reuben Tuttle on section 20. The former removed to Dakota, in the spring of 1883, and the latter remained but three years, when he removed to Sheboygan.

Tracy Lockman came with Tuttle and also settled on section 20. He removed to Helena, Iowa county, and from thence to the State of New York.

Jonathan Robinson settled on section 7, in 1854. Ezra Wescott settled on section 6, at about the same time. He lived there until the time of his death. His widow and family still occupy the place.

EVENTS OF INTEREST.

The first mill in the town of Cadiz was a saw mill, erected by Martin Burt and Felix O'Fling, which was finished in 1841. It was located on Skinner creek, on section 3. It was afterward known as Gardner & Burt's mill. In 1848 it was burned to the ground. It was rebuilt immediately, by Joseph Wilford, who owned the property at the time it was destroyed. It was afterward owned by Brown & Williams, and later by Arabut Ludlow, who sold to Divan & Michael. Mr. Michael soon bought Divan's interest, and in 1884 sold the property to Mr. Woodle.

The second mill was a saw mill, erected by John W. Deniston and Abner Van Sant in 1843, on Honey creek. One year later, a run of buhrs was added for grinding corn and feed. This mill burned in the spring of 1848, and the saw mill part was rebuilt, but the "corn cracker" was not resurrected. The ruins of the saw mill still mark the spot.

The "Buck Horn Tavern" was the first hotel in this town. It was built by Joseph Paine in 1847. It was a hewn log building, located on section 6. It was on the mail route from Monroe to Wiota—a road much traveled in early days—and this was a noted stopping place for the traveling public for many years. Paine ran the hotel until the winter of 1849—50, and it continued to be used for tavern purposes for about ten years afterward. Paine sold to John Bringold, and in April 1850, killed him, as is related elsewhere.

In 1850 William Dale erected a large frame house on lot 13, section 3, which he opened as "Dale's Tavern." This was on the road from Monroe to Galena, which was much traveled in those days. He also had a large frame barn to accommodate teams, and erected a shingle mill, which he ran with horse power. He was an enterprising man, and did an extensive business here for some time. Two of his sons are now in business at Browntown.

The first child born in the town of Cadiz, as near as can now be ascertained, was Marietta Shull, a daughter of Jesse W. and Melissa Shull, born in the fall of 1838. She died at the age of twenty-one years.

The first wedding in the town of Cadiz, and the second in Green county, was that of James Hawthorne and Massy R. Boyles, which occurred in August, 1836.

The first death in this town was that of Christopher Curdner, in 1837. He died at the house of Jesse W. Shull, and was buried on the farm of Mr. Shull, where several other bodies were interred. This was the first burying ground in the town.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in the town of Cadiz—and it is claimed the first in Green county—was taught by Ralph Hilderbrant, in January and February, 1837, in Bennett Nolan's smoke house on section 36.

The first school house in the town was a log one erected on section 3, in 1840. Miss Churchill, a sister of Norman Churchill, of Monroe, taught a term of school in this building in the summer of 1841. She afterward married John A. Bingham, (now deceased). She now lives in Monroe. Her school was the first taught in the northern part of the town.

The second school house in the town was built on the northeast quarter of section 11, in 1842. James Cowan taught school in this building the following winter.

In 1884, there were eight full and four joint districts in this town.

District No. 1 has a frame school house, valued at $600, on the southeast quarter of section 3. There are forty-four pupils in this district.

District No. 2 is the Browntown district. It has a small frame school house, valued at $400, on section 4. There are eighty-four pupils here.

District No. 3 has one of the best houses in the town, valued at $945. There are seventy-eight pupils here.

District No. 4 has a white frame house, valued at $825, located on the northeast corner of section 21. There are seventy-one pupils here.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

District No. 5 has a school house in the south-central part of section 27, valued at $260. There are fifty-eight pupils here.

District No. 8 has a school building on the northwest quarter of section 36, valued at $285. They have sixty pupils here.

District No. 9 embraces the village of Martin, and has an old stone school house, valued at $200, on section 32. There are seventy-four pupils here.

District No. 13 has a school house on the southwest corner of section 9. It is a white frame building, valued at $454. There are forty-four pupils here.

Joint district No. 1 embraces territory in the town of Jordan, the school house being located in that town. There are eight scholars of this district residing in this town.

District No. 7, joint with Clarno, has a school house located on section 1, valued at $150. There are sixty pupils belonging to this town. Joint district No. 10 embraces territory in the town of Wayne, Lafayette county. The school building is located on the northeast corner of section 30, and is valued at $310. The number of pupils belonging to this district residing in Cadiz is forty-one.

Joint district No. 12 also embraces territory in the town of Wayne. The school house is an old building located on section 7. There are twenty-two scholars in this town.

RELIGIOUS.

The first public religious services in the town were held at the school house on section 11 in 1843, by the Rev. Mr. Mast, of the United Brethren denomination. He was a traveling minister, and held services here occasionally for some time. Rev. Connor, a Methodist preacher and a son-in-law of Martin Burt, held services at Burt's house at about the same time, and perhaps as early as 1842. Many of the early settlers in the northern part of the town belonged to the United Brethren Church. Rev. Riley Curry, now of Monroe, was among the early and frequent preachers of that denomination here.

A Methodist Episcopal church edifice was erected on the southeast quarter of section 15, in 1870. It is a frame building, 32x46 feet in size, eighteen feet high, and painted white. The first preaching of this denomination in this part of the town was held at the house of Hugh Hastings, on section 15, in 1854, by Rev. Dyer. At that time a class was formed. A school house was afterwards built on the same section, at which services were held until the church was built. Rev. Hurd followed Dyer. Other preachers here have been: Revs. Gould, Brainard, Jacob Miller, Jackson, Smith, and others. This was called the Cadiz circuit. The class formerly numbered seventy. There are now only about a dozen. The present preacher is W. H. Kellogg.

In the fall of 1879 a church building was erected at Martin by what was called the "Church Society of Martin." The greater part of this society was made up of United Brethren people, but the church was intended for all denominations. The building is frame, and cost, including bell and furniture, about $1,800. It is used principally by the United Brethren and evangelical denominations, although other societies occasionally occupy it.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

The first regular town meeting in the town of Cadiz was held on the 3d of April, 1849, when the town was organized. At this election there were fifty-one votes cast and the following officers were elected: John Wood, chairman, John Kennedy and John Billing, supervisors; Wesley Swank, clerk; Philip Michael, treasurer; Elisha Ullom, assessor; John Kennedy, superintendent of schools; John Kennedy, John Wood, Isaac Diven and Benjamin Buchanan, justices of the peace; John Denney, George Michael and Stephen Vanhorn, constables. The clerks of this election were: John Kennedy and John

Wood, and the judges were: John Saucerman, John Billing and Hiram Smith.

In 1884 the officers of the town were as follows: Henry Rush, chairman, Thomas Crow and N.C. Tyler, supervisors; John W. Lynch, clerk; Michael Shank, assessor; B. C. Curtis, E. Vanhorn and Gustav Shultze, justices of the peace; James White, John A. Black and W. D. Sanders, constables; J. W. Montgomery, sealer of weights and measures.

A building for town purposes, known as the town house of Cadiz, was built in 1867 at a cost of $685. It is a frame building, located on the northwest quarter of section 22. All town elections, meetings of the board, caucuses, etc., are held here.

CEMETERIES.

The first burials in the northern part of the town were made on the southeast quarter of section 3. The first burial there was Thomas Michael, youngest son of Philip and Lovicy Michael, who died in January, 1843, aged three months. This was the usual place of burial in the town before grounds were regularly laid out. In 1851 Philip Michael, on whose ground the burial ground was located, laid out grounds for a cemetery, which were surveyed by the county surveyor, Samuel Spangler. The cemetery includes four acres, and is still used for burial purposes.

The cemetery on section 1, which is in use at present, was laid out many years later than the one just mentioned. It is kept in good condition.

A private cemetery was laid out on section 31, on the farm of N. Martin, a number of years ago.

A cemetery at the village of Cadiz was laid out and used at an early day. But few burials are made here at present, the cemetery in connection with the Cadiz Methodist Church being generally used.

VILLAGE OF BROWNTOWN.

The original plat of the village of Browntown contained twenty acres, embracing the north half of the northeast quarter of section 9, township 1 north, range 6 east. It was laid out and platted by James Dale on the 3d and 4th of March, 1882. He had owned the land two years previous to that time. An addition known as Sullivan's addition, consisting of about nine acres, was made by James White in May, 1882. The addition joins the original plat on the west, and was called Sullivan's additions from the fact that the land comprising the addition belonged to the estate of John Sullivan, and Mr. White was the administrator of the estate, the addition being made in the interest of the heirs.

This has been a place of some local importance since 1846. Attracted by the excellent water privilege at this point, Messrs. William Brown, Henson Irion and John Wood in 1846 purchased the east half of the southwest quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 4. This was purchased of Washburn & Woodman, who were agents of the owners. The new proprietors began at once to improve the water power, and began the erection of a saw mill that year. In 1847 they built a dam and finished the saw mill, and also put up during that year a corn mill or "corn cracker." The first dwelling house was erected by Mr. Brown in 1846, and, in the fall of 1848 he erected another building which is still occupied as a dwelling. These gentlemen ran the mills and owned the same until 1853, when Brown purchased Wood's interest. In 1862 Mr. Brown's was sold on mortgage to Arabut Ludlow. Mr. Irion disposed of his interest to Mr. Ludlow in 1863. The latter gentleman owned the property until 1875, when he sold it to Emanuel Diven, and from thence it passed into the hands of Emanuel and Henry Diven, who put in the mill the present improved machinery during the winter of 1875—6. The original saw mill and "corn cracker" disappeared many years ago, and the present mill building was erected, in 1875, by Mr. Tobias. The mill property is now owned by Andrew Sutherland, having been purchased of Green Brothers, who succeeded Diven & Son. The mill contains three run of buhrs and is doing an extensive business. The mill is located just outside the plat, on section 4.

This point for many years was known as Brown, Irion & Wood's mill. It afterwards came to be called Browntown, when the village was laid out. This name was applied to the village after William G. Brown.

Mr. Brown came from Missouri, where he was born, although he was reared in New Orleans. His early life was passed on the Mississippi river and its branches, first as cabin boy and afterward reached the position of second mate. Later in life he learned the business of a millwright, working with Abner Van Sant for a number of years. He was an uneducated man, but was possessed of much natural ability. He held the office of county commissioner in 1847—8, and later was chairman of the board. In 1858 he was elected to the assembly branch of the legislature. In 1859 he started to Pike's Peak, but at Fort Laramie he abandoned the project and went to California. He is now in Idaho Territory. He went to California first in 1849. Previous to that time he was known as William Brown; but afterward took the name of "William Grizzly Brown." He was a peculiar character and his characteristics almost became proverbial. Mr. Wood now resides in the town of Albany.

Henson Irion is still living in the town of Cadiz. He is a native of Ohio. He came to what afterwards became the State of Wisconsin, in 1832, and served in the Black Hawk War. In 1837 he came to what is now Green county and settled in the town of Clarno. Not until 1854 did he become a resident of the town of Cadiz, although, as stated, he owned an interest in Browntown in 1846.

The first store at what since become Browntown was opened by Henson Irion, in 1856. He kept a general stock of goods and continued in business until 1859, when he closed out and accompanied Mr. Brown to California.

After Brown & Irion went to California there was no business carried on here except running the saw mill for two years, when it was closed and has not been reopened. After this there was a period of several years when nothing was done. After the grist mill was erected, in 1876, Alfred Kelly opened a small store, and business has gradually increased until the present time.

The advent of the railroad, in 1881, gave a new impulse to business; the village was laid out and Browntown became an important point.

In 1884 the business of the village was represented as follows:

General merchandise—Diven & Frisley.

Groceries and drugs—James Dale.

Groceries, hardware, boots and shoes—Dawson & Tomlinson.

Blacksmiths—Erickson & Meighen.

Steam saw mill and lumber dealer—Samuel Kelly.

Grist mill—Sutherland, Ball & Jackson.

Hotel—James White.

Billiard Hall—Joseph Stover.

Physician—J. H. Stealy.

Postmaster—Henry Frisley.

James Dale, dealer in groceries and drugs at Browntown, is a son of William Dale, who came to the town of Cadiz, July 9, 1850, and located on section 4, where he bought forty acres of land of William Van Horn. Mr. Dale erected a building and kept hotel three years, then sold and bought a farm adjoining on the west, where he lived until his death, Oct. 23, 1857. He was born in Manchester, England, and came to the United States in 1838. He lived in Niagara Co., N. Y., and then in Ashtabula Co., Ohio, remaining in the latter place till he came to Green county. At that time his family consisted of himself, wife and five sons —George, Joseph, John, James and Abel. The youngest three are now residents of this town. George and Joseph are deceased. George enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin Battery in the fall of 1861, and died the following year at Iuka, Miss. Joseph served in the same regiment for nearly four years. He died March 23, 1874. John served one year in the 1st Wisconsin regiment, company A, was then transferred to company A, of the 21st regiment, in which he served eight months. He was born in the State of New York in 1840, and came here with his parents in 1850. James Dale was born in Niagara Co., N. Y., in 1843. He enlisted in February, 1864, in the 5th Wisconsin Battery, and served eighteen months. He has lived in this county since he came here with his father, except one year in Kansas and one year in Minnesota. His wife was Orpha M. Loomis, daughter of John Loomis, an early settler in this town, but now living at Walnut Grove, Red Wing Co., Minn. Mrs. Dale was born in this town, Jan. 19, 1848. They have two children—Nettie and Effie.

The Browntown Hotel was built by the present proprietor, James W. White, in 1881. It is located on the main street of the village, and is a frame building, two and a half stories high. Including the furniture, its cost was about $3,000. Mr. White purchased the location on which was then a small building, of Samuel Kelly, in 1881, for $600. It includes five lots. Mr. White is a genial and popular landlord, and is esteemed by both his neighbors and the traveling public.

James W. White, landlord and proprietor of the Browntown Hotel, was born at Plattsburg, N.Y., in May, 1851. He came to this town with his parents, Michael and Fanny White, in 1854. They settled on section 5. When James opened the hotel at Browntown, his parents came here and resided with him. His father died in June, 1883. His mother is still living here. James W. was married to Elizabeth Stover, daughter of Thomas Stover, an early settler in this town. They have one son—Michael. Thomas Stover was of English descent, born in Virginia. His wife, Sarah Heltman, was a native of Pennsylvania. They were married in Ashland Co., Ohio, and removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., and settled near Freeport, where they remained till 1854, when they came to this town and located on a farm of 160 acres. He was a blacksmith by trade and an excellent workman. He carried on blacksmithing at his farm. He was fatally injured by a threshing machine. His widow still lives in this town, and her mother, who is nearly 100 years old, resides with her.

VILLAGE OF MARTIN.

In 1849 Edward S. Hanchett obtained a right of Cyrus Woodman, who was agent of the owners of the land, to improve a water power on the Pecatonica river, at the point where Martin is now located, and began the construction of a dam across the stream. In the spring of 1850 Nathaniel Martin came here and joined Mr. Hanchett in the enterprise. The same season they finished the dam and erected a saw mill. They worked together for one year, when Mr. Martin bought out Hanchett. The saw mill was operated for many years, when it was removed and replaced by the present mill. The next improvement of importance here, was the erection of a grist mill in 1854, by Mr. Martin. The grist mill now contains three run of buhrs and still does a good business. Isaiah Martin, a brother, was associated with Nathaniel for a time.

Nathaniel Martin, of the village of Martin, in the town of Cadiz, was born in West Virginia, in 1816. When twenty years old, he went to St. Louis, and one year later, came to Cadiz, in the year 1849. He was married to Hannah Strader, daughter of Jacob Strader, an early settler in Stephenson Co., Ill. She was born in Vermilion Co., Ill. They had fourteen children, six of whom are living—Elias, Nellie, Horatio, Emma A., Mary L. and Julia. Mr. Martin was, in early life, a whig, later a republican.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY

He has been for many years a member of the United Brethren Church. He is an unqualified temperance man, and strongly favors prohibition. Mr. Martin's father settled at what is known as Richland Timber, in Stephenson county, and afterwards removed to Jordan, in this county, where he died in February, 1864. His widow is still living at the age of eighty-five years. In 1868, Mr. Martin laid out the village, having it surveyed by surveyor Dodge. According to the record the plat contains forty-seven acres of the southeast quarter of section 32.

J. W. Mitchell kept the first store in the village after it was platted. He was succeeded by Hodges & Hodges, and then by Martin & Hodges.

Jacob Hodges and W. H. Martin kept a store for a time.

The present merchants are Wright & Edwards, who established their business in April, 1875.

The other branches of trade represented here are as follows:

Saw and grist mills—Nathaniel Martin.
Cabinet maker—Carl Haase.
Wagon maker—Frank Luke.
Blacksmith—Gustav Schultze.

William Edwards, of the firm of Wright & Edwards, general merchants at Martin, was born at Guilford, Surrey, England, Aug. 10, 1827. He came to the United States in July, 1855. He learned the trade of miller, in his native country, and after coming to the United States, worked at that trade in Franklin, Sussex Co., N. J., one year. He then came west and worked in a mill near Galena, Ill., one year. He came to Martin in 1858 and engaged in working in the mill at this place. In 1876 he began mercantile business. He was married to Nancy Shull, daughter of Jesse W. and Malisse Shull. She was born near Louisville, Ky., in March, 1836. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards have five children—Thomas P., William, Morgan G., Eliza M. and Nora Ida. They have lost one son—Miller, at the age of two years and seven months.

The post office at Martin was established in 1865. The first postmaster was William Hodges, who was succeeded by Mrs. Mary Ann Tyler., She was succeeded by the present incumbent, W. W. Wright.

VILLAGE OF CADIZ.

In 1846 a village was platted by Deniston & Van Sant, on section 23, called Cadiz. But it never acquired any importance. A small store was kept by David Cline at his residence for a time, and later, Asbury Brown was proprietor.

The first post office in the town was established here in about 1850, which is still continued. The first postmaster was Wesley Swank, who kept the office at his residence. He was the postmaster until the fall of 1855, when he was succeeded by Charles R. Deniston. The latter gentleman held the office until 1860, when he was succeeded by Philip Ward. On the 11th of July, 1864, Brant C. Curtis, the present incumbent, was appointed, and has held the office since that time, a period of twenty years. The post office is all that remains of Cadiz.

Brant C. Curtis resides on the southwest quarter of section 23, where he settled in March, 1864. He came to the county in April, 1861. He was born in Schuyler Co., N. Y., in November, 1820. He lived in the same house in which he was born forty years. His father, Charles Curtis, was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y. His mother was Margaret (Bennett) Curtis, a native of Schuyler county. They lived in that county until their decease. Brant C. Curtis came here directly from Schuyler county. He was employed by Mr. Deniston, in a saw mill, for eighteen years. He has been engaged in lumbering much of his life. His wife was formerly Sarah Stone, a native of Kingston, Canada East. They have seven children—Elmira, Jane, James S., Samuel D., Addie, Edith and Oscar.

MILLS.

The saw mill, known as Shattuck's steam saw mill, on the southeast quarter of section 1, was erected in 1855 by Barber & Chenoweth. Henry Barber owned and operated the mill for a number of years. Roberts & Land then owned it until 1866, when it was purchased by the present proprietor, J. E. Shattuck. The mill has been improved very much by Mr. Shattuck, and is now equipped with a forty horse power steam engine. It does mostly custom work in hard wood, and has a capacity for 5,000 feet per day.

There are three grist mills in the town of Cadiz. Those at the villages of Browntown and Martin are mentioned elsewhere.

The third is located on Honey creek, on section 34. It was erected in 1868 and 1869, by D. Klasey, the present owner. The mill has two run of stone, and is a good mill, but it does less business than in former years. As there is at times an insufficient supply of water, a steam engine has of late years been added.

A few years after the erection of the grist mill, Mr. Klasey built a saw mill which is operated by the same power and does an extensive business.

POST OFFICES.

The second post office in the town was known as "Skinner," and was located on section 3. It was established in 1854, and Isaac Williams was the first postmaster. The next postmaster was Isaac Phillips, who held the office for a number of years, when he was succeeded by George Michael. Mr. Michael was postmaster for sixteen years, until 1881, when the office was discontinued and the post office at Browntown was created.

The first postmaster of the Browntown office was Henry Diven. He was succeeded by Henry Frisley, the present postmaster.

A post office called "Wausemon" is kept by Mrs. N. L. B. Wescott, on section 6. This office was established in 1871, when the present incumbent was appointed postmistress. Mail is now received here daily from the eastern bound train; a catcher being employed to receive and give mail.

THE PAINE-BRINGOLD TRAGEDY.

Joseph Paine was one of the earliest settlers in Green county. He first located in what has since become the town of Clarno; but in 1836, entered land where the city of Monroe now stands, and erected a tavern which he ran for several years. From Monroe he came to the town of Cadiz, and at one time owned an interest in Michael's mill. In 1847 he erected the well known "Buck Horn Tavern" on section 6, in connection with which he owned a farm of 175 acres. In the winter of 1849-50 he sold this property to a German, named John Bringold, and purchased the farm adjoining, on the west, now owned by Augustus Picket. Bringold was a peculiar man. Hard to get along with, never pleased with anything, and never losing an opportunity to give a neighbor a dig. On the 4th of April, 1850, a dispute arose between Paine and Bringold, regarding the removal of a rail fence. It appears that this fence had been built by Paine while he owned Bringold's farm; but through some mistake regarding the exact line of division between the two farms, the fence had been laid by Paine on the land he had recently purchased. Bringold claimed the rails as his own and determined to move this fence and rebuild it on the line between the two farms. To this Paine objected and wanted the fence to remain where it was. He offered to give Bringold newly split rails, instead, if he would let the fence remain where it was. But Bringold stubbornly refused; he would not take new rails, but was bound to tear down the fence to get these particular rails. Paine appears to have been a man quick to take offense, and of uncontrollable temper when aroused. He told Bringold that if he attempted to remove the rails he would shoot him; but the latter, disregarding the threat, proceeded to remove the rails, when Paine, going to the house, procured his rifle and came back. He again warned Bringold and then shot him through the body inflicting a wound which produced death in a short time. Paine afterward claimed that he did not intend to kill Bringold, but simply to "burn him" as he expressed it; but that a sudden movement of his body just as the shot was fired, produced a fatal result. Paine gave himself up and was indicted for murder; but just before the time set for his trial, in March, 1851, he succeeded in eluding the guard and escaped. Today there is an impression that the sheriff, who was related to Paine, aided the prisoner; but this is erroneous and unjust. Paine was in charge of a deputy. As he stated it afterward to a pioneer of Green county, who met him in California, his escape was effected in the following manner: There being no jail here at that time, a room in the court house (later known as the American Hotel) was fixed up for a cell. Mrs. Paine accompanied her husband to the cell, and the deputy locked them both in. No sooner had the jailor locked the door (which had a common lock), than Paine picked it open. He got to the head of the stairs in time to see the deputy sheriff vanish in the darkness. He then made his way to the northwestern part of town where he found a horse, which he mounted and struck out southwest. He was met by a relative who furnished another horse and took the first one back. A few miles further he was met by George Paine, who furnished him with a race horse, and the following morning at daybreak, he crossed the Mississippi river at McGregor. From there he made his way to California, where his wife joined him the following year. His whereabouts were known for years; but no effort was made to re-capture him. On the morning following his escape the deputy sheriff went to the door to awake his prisoner. After rapping several times a husky voice inquired:

"What's the matter?" "Time to get up," was the reply, and the deputy left. This was repeated several times until finally the deputy unlocked the door and entered, to find Mrs. Paine alone. The hue and cry that was raised is remembered by all old settlers, but no trace could be found, until several years had elapsed. when all inclination to punish had disappeared Joseph Paine died in California, in December, 1875.

ANOTHER SHOOTING AFFAIR.

Another sad and fatal shooting affair occurred in this town on the 20th of February, 1871. Joseph Morton and Libbie Gorton, who had been recently married, were staying temporarily at the house of Mordecai Kelly. A sleigh load of boys and young men, four of whom were brothers of the bride, went to the house of Mr. Kelly, on the evening of the day mentioned, to charivari the newly married couple. Kelly, after making some threats, which were not heeded by the boys, took down his shot gun and deliberately discharged its contents into the sleigh load of boys. Augustus M. Gorton, a young brother of the bride, but twelve years of age, was almost instantly killed, and Matthew Curran and "Lane" Campbell were slightly wounded. Kelly delivered himself up and was indicted for murder, but through some compromise the principal prosecuting witness did not appear, and the case never came to final trial.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

James Morton came with his parents to Cadiz in 1843. They settled on section 1, where James Morton still resides. His father, James McConnell Morton, was born in Nashville, Tenn. He removed to Kentucky with his parents when about eleven years of age. There he grew to manhood, and was married to Mary Montgomery, who was born in Kentucky. They removed from Kentucky to Indiana, and thence to Illinois, coming from there to Green county in 1840, when they settled in the town of Clarno. He had come there the previous year and put in a crop. He remained in Clarno till 1843, when, as before stated, he came to Cadiz. His wife died here in 1864, and his death occurred in 1869. They had twelve children, five sons and seven daughters, all of whom grew to maturity, but only six are now living. James was born in Indiana in 1827. He served in the 16th Wisconsin regiment during the Rebellion, and spent two years in California and Oregon. He has owned the homestead farm since 1852. It contains 141 acres. He was married to Sophia Kelly, daughter of Mordecai Kelly, and eleven children, six boys and five girls, have been born to them.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

George Michael is the eldest living son of Philip Michael, who settled in the town of Cadiz with his family in 1841. Philip Michael was born in Bedford Co., Penn., March 12, 1791. He removed with his father to Ohio when a boy, where he grew to manhood. He served in the second war with Great Britain. After the war he was married to Laviey Hall, who was born at Harper's Ferry, Va., Aug. 1, 1799. She is still living, and resides with her children in the town of Cadiz. She draws a pension for services of her husband in the War of 1812. Philip Michael removed to Indiana with his family in 1829, where he resided until he came to Green county in 1841. His first location was on section 2, in this town, where he lived several years. He then purchased a farm on the northeast quarter of section 10, where he resided until his decease in September, 1852. He died from a cancer, from which he suffered a number of years. The family, when they came here, consisted of the parents, nine sons and three daughters. All of the children are now living except the oldest son, William. One son was born here, and died in infancy. Three sons and two daughters are living in Nebraska. The others reside in this town. Like most of the early settlers, Mr. Michael came here poor, but by industry and economy secured a competence, owning at the time of his decease 320 acres of valuable land. He was a man much respected for his excellent traits of character. George Michael was born in Ohio, in 1820. He came to Cadiz with his father in 1841, being then in his twenty-second year. He was married in 1848 to Jane Bridges, daughter of William Bridges, who settled early in this town. Mr. Michael resided at the homestead until after the death of his father, when he received a part of the homestead estate, on which he settled and remained until 1866, when he settled where he now resides on section 3. Politically, Mr. Michael was a whig until the formation of the republican party, since which he has been identified with that party. Probably no man in the town has held official positions for a greater number of years than he. He has been in town office almost continually for thirty years. Mr. and Mrs. Michael have six children—Charles H., Philip B., George A., James E., Ellen and Emma.

Jarvis W. Montgomery was born in the town of Saybrook, Ashtabula Co., Ohio, in 1831. He removed with his parents to Erie Co., Penn. He came to this county in May, 1842, in company with his brother-in-law, Samuel Ball, traveling all the way from Pennsylvania with teams. He lived in the town of Sylvester until seventeen years old, then went to work for himself. In 1865 he settled on section 7, in the town of Cadiz, where he purchased a farm of Joseph Briggs. This was the first farm he ever owned, and he has made all the improvements upon it. It contains 100 acres. He was married to Amanda Ball, a daughter of Gary Ball, who died in Illinois. She came to Green county with her mother from Erie Co., Penn., in 1844. Her mother died at the residence of Mr. Montgomery in March, 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have six children—Robert and Marion, born in the town of Monroe; and Louisa, Grace, Frank and Leroy, born in the town of Cadiz.

John V. Roberts came to the town of Clarno in 1842, but is now a resident of section 12, of the town of Cadiz, where he removed in 1863. He was born in Preble Co., Ohio, in 1825. His father, Isaac Roberts, was a native of Pennsylvania, and removed to Ohio with his parents when a boy. He came to Green county with Elmer Clark and David Bridge. Mr. Clark still lives in the town of Jefferson, where he then settled. The latter located near Mr. Clark and is now deceased. Isaac Roberts entered land at that time in the town of Clarno, and returned to Ohio, where he died in 1840. Christiana Roberts, his wife, removed with her twelve children to the land which her husband had entered in Clarno, in September, 1842. The family consisted of eight sons and four daughters, the eldest about twenty-five years old. On reaching their destination their worldly goods consisted of a team, three cows and $2 in money. They put up a log house that fall. The following winter was a severe one, yet, although the family was a large one, they managed to pass the winter with but little suffering. The family continued together for a number of years, working by the month during the summer season, till most of them reached maturity. The mother removed to Monroe about 1862, where she died in 1864. Eight of the children are now living, six sons and two daughters. One of the sons served in the 21st Wisconsin regiment, Volunteer Infantry, during the War of the Rebellion. He is now in Texas. John V., subject of this sketch, is the only one of the children now living in Green county, the others being scattered throughout the different States of the Union. He remained at the homestead until 1854, when he went to Monroe, where he operated a saw mill for eight years, after which he came to Cadiz. He returned to Ohio in the fall of 1849, and in the spring of 1850 was married to Sarah Ann Brooke, a native of Ohio. They have four children—John W., Harriet Beecher, Sarah C. and Naomi O. They have lost three children. Mr. Roberts' farm contains 400 acres.

Augustus Pickett settled in December, 1867, in Green county, where he purchased a farm. This farm in an early day was owned by Joseph Paine, and it was here that the old "Buck Horn" tavern was located, and here that the noted "Paine—Bringold" tragedy occurred. Mr. Pickett's father, Hiram Pickett, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., March 30, 1809, where he was reared and married. After marriage he removed to Geauga Co., Ohio, and thence to Hancock Co., Ill., and was there at the time the trouble occurred with the Mormons at Nauvoo, previous to their removal to Salt Lake. In 1843 he removed from Illinois to Green Co., Wis. The following year he settled at Wiota, where he resided till the spring of 1867. He then moved to Monroe, where he died Dec. 12, 1872. His wife was Harriet Pulsipher, a native of New York. She died at the residence of her son, in 1878. They had seven children, five of whom are living. Augustus, the subject of this sketch, is the only one of the family residing in this town. He was married to Sarah E. Connor, a daughter of Samuel Connor. They have three children—Clarence U., Asa S. and Myrtie L. Mr. Pickett's farm is situated on section 6, township 1, range 6, and consists of 235 acres.

Hiram Smith, of Browntown, came to Cadiz in 1845, since which time this has been his home. He was born in Langdon, Cheshire Co., N. H., in 1810. He removed with his father to Vermont when he was six years old. When he was nineteen years of age, he went with his father and family to Canada, where his parents continued to reside until their decease. In 1835 he left home and went to the Territory of Michigan, and two years later to Wisconsin. He located in the town of Gratiot, now in Lafayette county, where he took government land. On coming to Cadiz he entered about 600 acres of land, and has always dealt largely in real estate. He owned, at one time, 640 acres in this town. He has no family, and has been quite liberal in disposing of a considerable part of his real estate, by gifts to friends. He still owns 548 acres. He has been assessor of this town four terms, three terms in succession. He has never sought office, but was induced to accept the office of assessor, and is said to have made one of the most faithful, efficient officers that the town has ever had. He has never tasted of any intoxicating drinks since he was eighteen years old. Never joined a secret society, nor had an account against him in a store.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Miles Smith settled on the northeast quarter of section 36, in 1846, although he first came to the county in 1845. He purchased forty acres of land, to which he has since added enough to make 100 acres. He was born in Highland Co., Ohio, Nov. 12, 1822, where he was reared to manhood. He was there married to Ruth Wright, and came to Green county in 1845, as before stated. He enlisted in the 37th Wisconsin and served through the 'War of the Rebellion. He was at the siege of Petersburg, and at the surrender of Gen. Lee. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have had nine children, three of whom are living—Chester, Amerida and Isabelle. Mr. Smith owns 100 acres of land. His father, Daniel Smith, now lives in Oneco, Stephenson Co., Ill. He was born in 1783, in North Carolina. He is now 101 years of age.

William Binger resides upon section 10, of the town of Cadiz, where he purchased forty acres of land in 1846. The following year he built a log house upon the place, in which the family lived for twenty-six years, and which is still standing where erected. He was born in the State of Ohio, in 1815. He grew to manhood, and was married in his native State, to Susan Diven, a native of Green Co., Ohio, born in 1818. Mr. Binger's family, at the time of their removal to Green county, consisted of his wife and four children. They had six children born in this county, making ten in all, six of whom are now living—Jeremiah, Polly, widow of Joseph Dale; Solomon, Hiram, Maranda and Elmira. Solomon was born in Licking Ohio, in 1845. He enlisted in the 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company K, Dec. 25, 1863, and served until the close of the war, being all of the time in active service, he took part in the siege of Atlanta and Sherman's march to the sea. He was in about thirty battles and skirmishes. He is now married to Mary L. Snow, daughter of John C. Snow, and resides at the homestead. They have five children.

Emanuel Diven is a settler of 1846. He was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Jan. 9, 1813. His father, Henry Diven, was born in Washington Co., Penn., and when a young man removed to Belmont Co., Ohio, where he was married. The subject of this sketch, with his parents, removed to Coshocton county in his native State in 1815, where he was reared to manhood. His early life was spent on the farm. In November, 1846, he came to Green county. He purchased 160 acres of land on the southeast quarter of section 10, on which he resides; and entered forty acres on section 15, adjoining. His homestead consists of 280 acres. He also has 100 acres on section 4. This is one of the best farms in the town. It was formerly heavily timbered, and has required an immense amount of hard labor to improve. As his surroundings indicate, he is a successful farmer, he has been married three times. His first wife was Jane Delong. She died in Ohio. By this union there were seven children, three of whom are living. His second wife was Sally A. Morehead, whom he married in Ohio, just previous to coming to Wisconsin. She died in July, 1854. By this union there were two children, one of whom is living. He was married the third time on the 15th of April, 1855, to Mary Beitler, born in Buck Co., Penn., in 1833. When eight years of age she moved with her parents to Ohio, and from there to Grant Co., Wis. The result of this union was ten children, eight of whom are living. Two sons, James and Walter, served in the army. The latter, a son by his second wife, was killed at the battle of Jonesboro, Jan. 28, 1865, at the age of seventeen years.

Henry Diven is a son of Emanuel Diven, who came to Green county in 1846. Henry Diven was born in Ohio, in 1839, and came to this county in 1846, with his father. He engaged in the mercantile business here in the fall of 1880, and has continued it ever since that time, with the exception of one year. He was married to Catharine Carrothers, a native of Illinois, where her parents died. She came to this county about 1854. They have three children—Emeline, James M. and Elmer E. Isaac T. Williams resides on section 14, where he settled in the fall of 1864. He has been a resident of this town since 1847. He was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., in 1824. In 1832 he removed with his parents, John L. and Nancy (Colestock) Williams, to Maryland, he being then seven years old. In 1844 the family moved to Rock Island, Ill., and then to this county, settling in the town of Sylvester. They afterwards removed to Mount Pleasant, where the father died, in 1846. His wife was again married to Capt. R. R. Jennison, and died July 24, 1873. John L. Williams brought four children with him to Green county—Isaac, Sidney, Joseph and Charlotte. All are living except Charlotte who died in 1846. Sidney is the widow of Albert Jennison, Joseph is in California. Isaac, on first coming to Cadiz, worked on the construction of the mill at Browntown. He afterwards bought an interest in a saw mill of Mr. Brown, and was employed in running that from 1854 to 1859. In 1859 he went to California and was absent from the county three years. He was married to Martha J. Johnson, a native of Pennsylvania. She came to this county with her father in 1851. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have eight children—Mary, Joseph, John, James, Abner, Jasper, Homer and Edith.

Mason Palmer, upon section 8, entered a part of his farm in April, 1847, and bought the remainder of Joseph Jones. He has 140 acres. It was heavily timbered, but is now well improved, and has all been plowed except thirty acres that is still timber. He was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, in 1819. There he grew to manhood and was married. He came to Green county in 1846, with his family, and settled upon his present farm the following year. His first wife was Eliza Maxwell, a daughter of George Maxwell. She was born in Ohio, Nov. 7, 1818, and died in the spring of 1856. His present wife was Elizabeth E. Day, a daughter of Daniel Day, who came to the town of Clarno with his family, from Coshocton Co., Ohio, in the fall of 1845. Mr. Day died three weeks after his arrival in Wisconsin, leaving a wife and seven children. Elizabeth Day, the present Mrs. Palmer, was born in Ohio, in 1837. Mr. Palmer had, by his first marriage, five children, two of whom are living—Ellen and Maria. By his second marriage he had fourteen children, seven sons and seven daughters. William Palmer, a brother of Mason Palmer, formerly lived in this town, but now lives in Missouri. Another brother, James, lives at Browntown.

William Clarno, proprietor of a restaurant at Browntown, is a son of Andrew Clarno, the first settler of the town of Clarno. William Clarno was born in the town of Clarno, July 6, 1841. He enlisted in company C, of the 3d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and took part in the battles of Winchester, Gettysburg, and many others. He lost his right leg at the battle of Pine Knob, Ga., June 16, 1864, and remained in the hospital till July 25, 1865, when he was discharged. He was married to Elizabeth Peregoy daughter of John Peregoy. This union has been blessed with six children, four of whom are living.

Jesse Raymer settled upon section 14, April 13, 1849. He first bought forty acres of Henry Downs, who entered it, and afterwards twenty acres on the east, of David McKibbin. At the time of his purchase this land was covered with timber and underbrush, only two acres of which was improved. Mr. Raymer was born in Maryland in 1816, and removed, when a child, to Pennsylvania, with his father. He lived in Green county, of that State, until he came to Green Co., Wis. He was married in Pennsylvania, to Maria Kelley, a native of Green county, in that State. They have had seven children, four of whom are living—John, Jesse, Freeman and Jane. Mr. Raymer is a cooper by trade, and was poor when he came here. He paid his last half dollar to a guide to conduct him to the village of Cadiz. He began at once to work at his trade, making sixteen barrels the week after his arrival. He followed his trade here for seven or eight years. He now has a good farm and comfortable buildings. In 1883 Mr. Raymer visited Green Co., Penn., to review the scenes of his early life, and was absent several weeks.

Nathaniel Binger is a son of Solomon Binger, who was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, and was a brother of William Binger of this town. He (Solomon Binger) came here with his family, in the autumn of 1850, and settled upon forty acres on section 15, but afterwards removed to section 9, which he sold, and moved to Kansas with his family. He returned and located on section 17, where he resided until his death in September, 1881. His widow, Harriet (Lynch) Binger, still lives in the town. She owns 284 acres of land. They had eight children. Those now living are—Nathaniel, Emily, wife of Edmund Weldon; Francis Oliver, Sarah A., wife of Thomas Tomlinson, Brant W. and Sidney Ulysses. Nathaniel was born in the town of Cadiz, Nov. 29, 1850. He was married to Charlotte E., daughter of William Austin, an early settler in this county. They reside upon section 8.

Simon P. Lynch settled in 1850 on section 15, where he purchased 200 acres of unimproved land of C. C. Washburn and Cyrus Woodman, agents for the sale of lands. He built a log house and barn upon the place in the fall of that year. He has resided here since that time. He now owns 320 acres. He was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, in the town of West Bedford, June 15, 1824. He remained in his native county until twenty-six years of age, when he came to Green county. His father, William Lynch, was a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. Lynch, subject of this sketch, was married to Margaret Divan, daughter of Henry Divan, and they have eight children—Mary E., Thomas A. who now resides on section 21 in this town; Mattie J., wife of Frank Ullom; John W., Ellen, Annie M., wife of John Howe; Simon P. and Hester. They have lost five boys, three of whom died in Ohio. Mrs. Lynch was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, Feb. 25, 1824.

Lyman Lockman resides on section 33, where he settled in 1860. He first settled on section 16 in 1855. Mr. Lockman was born in Madison Co., N. Y., in 1828. When ten years old he went to sea as cabin boy, taking a trip around the world on his first voyage. He was on the sea fifteen years. During the war with Mexico he was in the naval service, and was present at the capture of Vera Cruz. He came to Wisconsin in 1851, since which time his home has been in Green county. He was married to Elizabeth Hastings, daughter of Hugh Hastings. She was born in Pennsylvania. They have six children—John, Hugh, Acta, Benjamin, Eda and Arthur. One son, William, was drowned while bathing in the Pecatonica river, June 20, 1880. He was in his eighteenth year. Mr. Lockman's farm contains eighty acres.

Lorenzo Fuller lives on section 32, where his father, W. M. Fuller, settled Feb 22, 1854. The latter was born in the State of Massachusetts about 1805. When a young man he went to Canada and from thence to Wisconsin in 1853. He bought this farm of Josiah Martin, which was then unimproved. He died Aug. 11, 1879, and his wife has since died. They had six children, three boys and three girls. Lorenzo owns the homestead farm, having bought the interest of the other heirs. He was born in Canada in 1844. He was married to Lana Chawgo, a native of the town of Clayton, Jefferson Co., N. Y. They have four children—Walter, Frank, Clark and Collie.

Henry Shank, upon section 36, owns the homestead where his father, J. B. Shank, settled in 1855. J. B. Shank was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., in 1809, where he grew to manhood and in his youth learned the trade of miller. He was married to Catharine Bambergar. In 1855 he left his home in Pennsylvania and came directly to this county and purchased the farm before mentioned, of George Shaffer. He first bought 240 acres, which he increased to 400 acres. He died in October, 1875. His widow now lives in Stephenson Co., Ill. They had ten children, six of whom grew to maturity, and five of whom are now living—J. B., Malinda, wife of Jared Wahlford; Michael, Henry and John H. Michael, Henry and J. B. are residents of Cadiz. Henry, who lives at the homestead, was born in Lebanon county in 1848. He was married to Elmira, daughter of Elisha Ullom, of this town. They have one son—Willie A., born Jan. 20, 1874.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

John A. Meacham came to Green county with his father, Hosea Meacham, in 1857. He was born in Crawford Co., Penn., in 1841. In 1863 he enlisted in the 4th Wisconsin Cavalry, and served in the department of the gulf, until the close of the war. He was married to Mary E. Robb, a daughter of Andrew Robb, and they have four children—Ed. L., Nellie, John Arthur and Alta. Mr. Meacham was a teacher in Green county for a number of years, teaching fifteen winter terms. He now resides on section 21, where he settled in 1867. He owns 120 acres, upon which he has made all of the improvements, and has a good farm. He has served as town clerk seven years, member of the town board one year, and town treasurer one year in the town of Cadiz. His father, Hosea Meacham, lives on section 16, where he settled in 1857. He was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1807. His wife was Mary Nichols. She died in 1882. They had six children, four sons and two daughters.

William Bratley lives upon section 14, of the town of Cadiz, where he settled in 1859. He was born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1824. He came to the United States in 1840, as a sailor on board of an English brig called Streetlam Castle. On reaching New York he left that ship and shipped on board an American vessel. He continued to follow the sea until 1850. He then located at Savannah, Ga., where he kept a restaurant four years. In 1854 he removed to the State of New York and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1857 he returned to Savannah and again engaged in the restaurant business. In the spring of 1859 he came to Green county. His wife was Mary C. Cain, who was born at Newburg, N. Y. They have eight children, three sons and five daughters. Mr. Bratley's farm on section 14 contains 120 acres, and is an excellent farm. He also owns land elsewhere. In consideration of the fact that he spent so much of his life at sea and in following other pursuits, he is an exceptionally successful farmer.

John Whitehead first settled on sections 13 and 24, town of Cadiz. He was born in Ohio, Aug. 20, 1825, and died at his home in this county, Jan. 6, 1879. He was in good circumstances and in an apparent condition to enjoy life, and be a blessing to his family, and a valuable member of the society in which he moved. At the time of his death he owned 280 acres of land, and also 100 acres of his father's estate, who soon after died. His farm was formerly covered with a fine body of timber, a good part of which he had cleared off and put the land in good condition. He was married to Sarah Iseminger, a native of Ohio, who removed to Green county with her parents. They have six children—Emma, William J., Isaac E., Minnie M., Effie J., and Milton. William J. lives with his mother on the old homestead and carries on the farm. Mrs. Whitehead is a member of the United Brethren Church.

Frederick M. Bradford was born at Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 27, 1834, and is a son of John Bradford, a native of Plymouth, and direct descendant of Gov. William Bradford, who came over in the Mayflower, and was the second governor of the Plymouth colony. He, Frederick M., came west with his father's family in 1840, and settled in Stephenson Co., Ill., where he remained until he came to Cadiz, in 1861. His farm consists of 120 acres on section 31. He was married to Cynthia V. Peters, a daughter of Comfort Peters. She was born in Bradford Co., Penn. They have two children—Blanche, born April 95, 1862, a teacher of music for the past four years; and John, born Dec. 24, 1868, and is now owner of the baptismal blanket brought over in the Mayflower. Every oldest son is named John, and takes the blanket. Frederick's oldest brother, John, a private of Capt. Silas W. Field's company A, 11th regiment of Illinois Infantry died, unmarried, June 4, 1862.

John Bradford, father of Frederick M., now a resident of Winslow, Stephenson Co., Ill., was a machinist by occupation, and came west in 1838. He erected the shot tower at Helena for C. C. Washburn and Cyrus Woodman, and invented the machinery for finishing shot at Helena, and put the same in operation in the shot tower at Chicago, that he superintended the building of, for E. W. Blatchford. While there he invented a machine for cutting, printing and folding shot sacks, ready for sewing, also a machine for manufacturing buck shot, both of which are in operation at the present time.

Thomas Crow, on the southwest quarter of section 13, has eighty acres on that section and forty acres on section 15. He was born in Park Co., Ind., in 1842, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, and remained until 1864. He came to Green county with his father, Abraham Crow, who settled one mile west of Monroe, in the town of Clarno, where he still lives. Thomas Crow and his father bought the farm where he (Thomas) now lives, in 1870. He also owned eighty acres on section 2, which he sold in 1884. He was married to Margaret, daughter of John Hartwig, of the town of Jordan. They have three children—Frederick M., Frank L. and Mary Edna. Mr. Crow is a member of the town board of supervisors for 1884, and has also served a preceding year.

George W. Stites settled upon section 34 in the fall of 1868. He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1831. He remained in that State till October, 1852, when he came west and located in Stephenson Co., Ill., living there until he came to Cadiz, where he owns 150 acres of land. Mr.

Stites was married to Martha J. Graves, daughter of Hubbard Graves, who settled in Stephenson county about 1834.

Michael Kratzer was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., about 1823, where he was married to Rebecca Fessler, born Nov. 14, 1824, also a native of Lebanon county. They removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., about the year 1852, and in the spring of 1868 came to the town of Cadiz, settling at that time on the southeast quarter of section 23, where Mr. Kratzer died May 7, 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Kratzer were the parents of two sons—John, born at Cedarville, Ill., Sept. 13, 1855, and married to Sarah M. Whitehead; and Daniel, born June 14, 1859, Mr. and Mrs. John Kratzer have one child.—Viola. They all reside at the homestead farm, which contains 160 acres.

William M. Rinehart purchased the farm on which he now resides, of John and C. R. Deniston, in 1868. It contains ninety acres and was then unimproved, Mr. Rinehart being the first resident upon it. He now has eighty acres improved. He was born in Champaign Co., Ill., in 1841, where he lived until fifteen years of age. He then came to Green county with his parents. His father, Martin Rinehart, a soldier of the Black Hawk War, settled in this town in 1857. He was a native of Green Co., Ohio. In 1880 he sold his farm here, and since that time has resided with his children, here and elsewhere. His wife died Aug. 19, 1878. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Rinehart had nine children, seven of whom are living. William M. and Albert are the only ones residing in this town. William M. was drafted, in 1864, in company K, of the 16th Wisconsin regiment, and served till the close of the war. He participated in Sherman's march to the sea, and was at the battle of Bentonville. He was married to Mary C. Trickle, daughter of Ashford Trickle, of Monroe. They have five children—Ira, Nettie, Anna Bell, Myron and Leroy.

M. P. Rhoades settled, in 1874, upon section 11, of the town of Cadiz, where he purchased land of Ashford Trickle, which was at that time heavily timbered. Mr. Rhoades was born in Champaign Co., Ill., in 1838. His early life was spent in his native county. His father, Walter Rhoades, a native of Maryland, removed to Ohio, and thence to Illinois. From Illinois he removed to Iowa, where he died. The subject of this sketch came to this county first in 1863, remaining here then only a few weeks, and then removing to Iowa. In 1870 he removed to California, and returned in 1873 to this county. He served three months in the army, in 1862, as a member of the 71st Illinois regiment. He was married March 4, 1863, to Julia A. Trickle, daughter of Ashford Trickle, of Monroe, and they have eight children, four boys and four girls. Mr. Rhoades owns a portable saw mill, and is engaged in running the same. His father, Walter Rhoades, was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, also in the War of 1812.

Frank Long located on section 4, in 1874. He was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, in 1838. His father, Abner Long, died in Ohio. Frank removed to Illinois with his step-father when ten years of age, and came to this State in 1860. He was married to Julia Craig, daughter of James Craig, an early settler of Stephenson Co., Ill., where Mrs. Long was born. Mr. and Mrs. Long have had nine children. He owns 160 acres of land.

William G. Morse, residing on section 23, was married to Mrs. Malissa (Raymond) Robb, widow of James Robb, on the 26th of July, 1883. Mrs. Morse was born in Pennsylvania, April 26, 1838, and removed to Illinois with her father, Calvin Raymond, who now lives in Minnesota. She was married to James Robb, who, on the 16th of January, 1871, was killed by a runaway team while returning from Church. This union was blessed with four children—Clara E., wife of Joseph McGill; Eva May, Jaspar C. and Lester.

CHAPTER XXXI.

TOWN OF CLARNO.

The town of Clarno is in the southern tier of towns; bounded on the south by Illinois, on the west by the town of Cadiz, on the north by Monroe, and on the east by Jefferson. It embraces township 1 north, range 7 east, containing 23,222.87 acres of land. The surface of this town is considerably diversified. In places it is quite broken and inclined to be bluffy, yet in but very few localities is it sufficiently abrupt to make it useless for agricultural purposes. Interspersed with the timber land is found patches of prairie and clearing, and the town contains many of the finest farms in Green county. A local writer in speaking of this town says:

“One of the things worthy of notice in this vicinity is the noted spring on section 11, on the place now occupied by F. H. Smock. It is famous for once having been the headquarters of Black Hawk, the noted Indian chieftain. By the side of this fountain of sparkling water, the dusky warrior gathered his braves around their council fires, to plan the midnight raids against the pale-faces who had raised their solitary cabins here and there on the hunting grounds of the red man. The spot is lovely and romantic, sloping gently to the south. Near the spring stands an oak tree, whose deep foliage casts a dark shade over the water.”

It is estimated that there are over 23,000 acres of farming lands, in this town, of average value of $23.06 per acre, and total value $536,834. The total value of real and personal property in the town is $693,073. The population of the town in 1875 was 1,510; in 1880 1,429.

The stock in the town is as follows: Horses 674, average value $59.09, total $39,831; 3,132 head of cattle, average value $17.91, total $56,111; thirteen mules, average value $75.76, total $985; 2,339 sheep, average value $2.41, total $5,674; 3,283 swine, average value $5.30, total $17,418; there are 1,047 milch cows, valued at $21,789.

The principal farm products grown in the town in 1882 were as follows: 4,163 bushels of wheat, 161,546 bushels of corn, 84,325 bushels of oats, 540 bushels of barley, 6,050 bushels of rye, 6,772 bushels of potatoes, 723 bushels of root crops, 23 ½ bushels of cranberries, 3,735 bushels of apples, 49 ½ bushels of clover seed, 146 ½ bushels of timothy seed, 31,000 pounds of tobacco, 4,880 ½ tons of hay, 64,169 pounds of butter, 61,500 pounds of cheese. The acreage of the principal farm products growing in the town of Clarno at the time of making the assessment in 1883 was as follows: 451 ½ acres of wheat, 4,206 acres of corn, 2,545 ½ acres of oats, four acres of barley, 623 ¼ acres of rye, 119 ¾ acres of potatoes, four acres of root crops, 1 ½ acres of cranberries, 159 acres of apple orchards, 5,088 bearing trees, six acres of tobacco, 2,878 acres of growing timber and 3,288 acres of grasses.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The territory which now comprises the town of Clarno was first explored by whites, with the view of settling, in 1827. During this year, Andrew Clarno came from Illinois, and traveled all over this portion of the State in search of a suitable home for himself and family. In passing through the territory now included in

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Green county, he was much impressed with the beauty of the locality, the fertility of the soil and unequalled natural advantages, and finally selected land which afterward became a portion of section 30, township 1, range 7 east. After prospecting for some time he returned to Illinois. In 1832, accompanied by his two sons, O. H. P. and Stephen E., he again came to Wisconsin—this time to stay. Cabins were erected and pioneer life was commenced in earnest. They all settled together on section 30, where the old gentleman, Andrew, remained until the time of his death in 1850. Stephen E., after a few years, entered land on section 29, and remained until 1840, when he went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa; later he returned to Illinois, and located in what is now Logan county, where he lived for a number of years. He is now a resident of McLean Co., Ill. O. H. P. Clarno, at the time of his arrival with his father and brother, was but a lad of fourteen years.

O. H. P. Clarno is a resident of the town of Clarno, where he has resided since 1832. He was born in Sangamon Co., Ill., near Springfield, March 10, 1818. He was reared upon a farm and remained in that county till fourteen years of age, when he came to Clarno. He was married to Lucy Huffman, who died May 11, 1853, leaving four children, all of whom are deceased. His second wife was Catharine Solomon, a native of Union Co., Penn. She died Nov. 24, 1876. He was again married to Polly Starr. Mr. Clarno owns 320 acres on sections 29 and 30. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, serving as a private. Thurman Crago is an adopted son of Mr. Clarno, with whom he has lived since six years of age. He (Mr. Crago) was married to Emma Clarno, who died June 6, 1881, aged twenty-two years and eleven months. She left two children—Kittie M. and Lewis P. Mr. Crago was again married to Minnie B. Wickwire and they have one child.

Although the Clarno party were the first actual and permanent settlers, just before they arrived in 1832, another little party of pioneers had made their appearance and selected homes. The party consisted of Hugh Wallace and family, Joseph Paine and family, and Josiah R. Blackmore. Upon their arrival, early in the spring of 1832, Wallace located on section 19; Payne selected land just east of him, on the same section; and Blackmore took a claim on section 20. Before the pioneers had fairly got settled the Black Hawk War broke out, and upon the news reaching the settlement that the Indians were coming, the entire population fled to neighboring towns, where preparations had been made for defense. In the fall the party returned, to find that the only two cabins in the town had been burned by the red men. However, the cabins were soon rebuilt, and pioneer life began anew. Wallace and Blackmore remained here until 1835, when they removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., where the former hung himself a few years later in consequence of land troubles. Blackmore remained in Stephenson county, until 1838, when he moved to, and erected a mill on Rock Run, the first in that region. He remained there for a number of years and finally removed to Warren, Ill., where he still lives. Joseph Paine remained in the town of Clarno until 1836, when he removed to the present site of the city of Monroe, and made a claim, erecting a cabin near the present residence of Dr. Byers. Paine opened his house as a tavern, and many were the weary travelers who were sheltered and fed under his hospitable roof. Later he erected the first frame house in the town; it is still standing, now forming a portion of the planing mill. In 1850 Paine got into trouble and left the county.

In 1833 Stephen Hale, a Tennessean, came here from Lafayette Co., Wis., and settled on section 31. He remained until 1835 when he sold his place to William Bowen, and moved across the line into the town of Cadiz. He is now dead. Nicholas Hale came a year or two later, and also removed to Cadiz. They were twins and to some it was hard to distinguish one from the other.

James Hawthorn, a native of New York, came here in 1838, from the mining regions near Blue Mounds, Wis., and settled on a farm on sections 9 and 10. He erected a log cabin and for a number of years kept bachelors hall. "Many a time have we eaten mush and milk with him from the old black kettle," says an old settler in speaking of the lonely, yet pleasant days, which "Uncle Jimmie" passed upon the old homestead. Mr. Hawthorn still owns the land. Four of his children still live in this town.

W. B. Hawthorn was born in this county, in the town of Clarno, Sept. 5, 1842. When twenty-four years old he went to Montana and engaged in stock dealing. He also traveled through all the western States, California, New Mexico and Arizona; in the latter place he was in the lumber business. In Idaho he was railroading six years. He spent about ten years in traveling, then returned, and in 1876 went to the centennial, and afterward traveled through the west until 1878. He then bought a farm on section 4, containing 160 acres. He now owns 300 acres of choice land and is extensively engaged in stock raising. He was married at Elk Point, Dak., to Mrs. Hattie (Chenoweth) Jones, a native of Indiana. This event occurred Feb. 3, 1878. They have one child. Mr. Hawthorn is a member of the I. O. O. F., a good citizen and an industrious man.

Andrew J. Hawthorn, a prominent citizen of the county, was born in the town of Clarno, this county, on the old Hawthorn place, where he lived with his parents until twenty-six years old. He is the son of James and Mersey (Boils) Hawthorn. His father is now living in the town of Clarno with his daughter, and his mother is dead and buried in Bethel cemetery. At one time Mr. Hawthorn moved to the town of Cadiz and lived three years, then returned to Clarno and bought eighty acres of land from Isaiah Starr. He now owns 240 acres of superior land and is engaged in mixed farming. He has a fine flock of Shropshire-down sheep. He was married Oct. 19, 1862, to Abigail Chamness, of Monroe. They have four children—Cora L., William I., Edwin E. and Andrew R. The entire family, except the youngest, are members of the Evangelical Church.

John Hawthorn, a brother of W. B. and Andrew, is also a native of this county, having been born here April 10, 1855. He has spent all his life in Green county. Although a young man, he seems to have had business qualifications above the average, and has a good property, consisting of 307 acres of choice land. He has this season erected a tasty farm house, at a cost of $3,000. He has given considerable attention to stock, and now owns some of the best breeds of Durham cattle in the county. His farm is excellently watered.

John W. Deniston and wife and his father-in-law, Abner Van Sant, came from Missouri in 1834. They settled on section 17, and erected a cabin on the northwest quarter. Their cabin turned out to be on section 16, so on section 17 they built cabins, three in number, all connected together, and this for several years was the favorite place for neighborhood gatherings, dances, meetings, etc. In 1837 they erected a mill on Honey creek, putting up a good building, throwing a brush dam across the stream and putting in one run of stone. For ten years they ran the mill and it finally went into disuse. Messrs. Deniston & Van Sant remained here a few years and then removed to the town of Cadiz where they both died.

James Campbell and Cutler Wilkins also came with the Deniston and Van Sant party. Campbell worked about here for a few years and then started a colony in the northeastern part of the county. About ten years later he removed to Madison where he died. He is noticed at length elsewhere in this volume. Wilkins was a cousin of Deniston's wife, and was a mere lad. He remained ten or twelve years and then removed to Missouri where he died.

During August and September, 1835, a large number of settlers arrived and found homes in this town among them were: O. J. White, William Bowen, William Baird, Mathew, William, and Peter Wells, Joseph and James Kelly and Judge Jacob Andrick.

O. J. White and William Bowen came from Illinois and settled on section 30. Mr. Bowen remained here until 1855. when he went to Richland county, where he died in 1858. Mr. White still resides upon the old homestead.

William Baird selected land in what was then called "Richland Timber." He lived there for several years and then removed to the town of Sylvester, where he still lives.

The Wells family all settled near together in Richland Timber. Mathew, the old gentleman, died many years ago. William died in Iowa, to which State he removed at an early day. Peter Wells now lives in Monroe.

James Kelly was a single man. He remained here until a short time before the war, when he went to Minnesota where he died.

Joseph Kelly settled with his family on sections 3 and 4, where he lived for a number of years.

Judge Andrick came from Indiana, and selected land adjoining the present site of Monroe, on the south. He brought his family in 1836. He remained here for about twenty years, when he went to Kansas. He is now dead.

Late in the fall of 1835 William Blunt, Jacob Stair, Mr. Draper and John Owen came.

William Blunt was a native of Ohio. He came here from Illinois, with his family, and settled in Richland Timber. He remained here for about twenty-five years, when he went to Missouri. He returned a few years later and met his death in Clarno, as the result of an accident. Mr. Blunt was a Campbellite preacher, and in early days frequently held services in his neighborhood. Before the war broke out he was a bitter democrat; but while taking a trip through Texas he made a speech or delivered a sermon, which displeased some of his hearers, and he was taken in hand by the crowd and brutally whipped. It was a long time before he recovered from the injuries inflicted by the beating. This changed his politics, and when the war broke out he was very anxious to go into the service and get "some revenge on the southerners." It was with difficulty that he succeeded in being mustered in as he was too old; but hair dye and lively actions accomplished his object, and he went south with one of the regiments of Wisconsin volunteers. Whether he succeeded in getting the "necessary revenge" is a matter of conjecture. He was honorably discharged, unharmed.

Jacob Stair located on section 34. He was a Virginian, but came here from Indiana. He married here and remained until the time of his death, which occurred shortly after the close of the war.

Mr. Draper came from Illinois, and located upon a farm on section 2, where he died a few years later.

John Owen did not become an actual settler. He came from near Dubuque, and only remained a short time.

Joab Enos, an "eastern man" was another of the settlers who came in 1835. He settled in the Richland Timber, and lived there for several years; then moved to the town of Monroe, and a number of years later, started for California; but died on the road.

A man named Brandenburg, came from Ohio in 1835, and for a short time, worked for James Hawthorn, devoting considerable time to hunting deer and bees. He was a single man but was earnestly searching for a wife. He proposed to each of the Deniston girls—the only marriageable ladies in the town—and upon being refused, married an Indian squaw. He only remained in this vicinity about one year, and then left the country.

Father Asa Ballinger, a Methodist preacher, and a Kentuckian, came here in 1836, and bought land in the towns of Clarno and Cadiz, and also some adjoining in the State of Illinois. In 1837 he came with his family. There was a beautiful spring on his land in Illinois, and he built a log cabin convenient to that. He held services in the neighborhood, and soon became popular, both as a citizen and preacher. About 1859 he sold out and moved to Winslow, Ill., where he has since died.

In March, 1836, T. S. Bowen came from New York, and located on section 33. His family arrived in May. Mr. Bowen made this his home until the time of his death in 1883, and his widow still occupies the old homestead.

The Chilton family came from Sangamon Co., Ill., early in the spring of 1836, and also found homes in this town. The father, William, bought the claim of Joseph Paine. His wife and son, James, died here, and he finally removed to Missouri, where he died. The other son, Gus, removed from here to Illinois, where he died.

Ashford Trickle came during the same year, and located in Clarno. He still owns a farm here but now lives in Monroe.

Joshua Whitcomb came from Ohio in 1836 and bought the Blackmore claim. He now lives in the town of Albany.

Julius and Seth Austin, and Rev. Robert De Lap were also settlers of 1836. The Austin's settled west of the city limits. One of them died a few years ago; the other as early as 1852 removed to Minnesota, where he still lives.

Robert De Lap was a Methodist Episcopal preacher. He located near the Austin's and remained in this vicinity for a number of years, when he removed to Richland county, where he died in 1883.

Adam Starr came in the spring of 1836, with his family, and bought the Owen claim. There he and his wife died. One son, Solomon, still lives in the town.

John Cameron, and his brother-in-law, A. DeHaven, came in 1836. The latter entered government land on section 33, and then returned to Ohio, leaving Mr. Cameron, who entered land near by. Mr. DeHaven came back in the spring of 1839 and settled upon the land he had selected. Here he lived until 1882, when he moved to Monroe. He still owns the farm. Mr. Cameron yet resides on section 33.

For a number of years the settlement of the town progressed slowly, but a good and industrious class of people came and so this fact, that the development was measured, has proved beneficial. Among others who came in prior to 1845 are the following: Hezekiah Blunt, George Adams, Samuel Raymer, Robert Trickle, Abner, Samuel, and Jeff Drake, Joseph Smith, William Brown and Henson Irion

William McDowell came here from Portsmouth, Ohio, about 1839 and settled on section 30, where he still lives.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first birth in the town of Clarno was a girl, born to Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Hale, in the fall of 1833, at the residence of Andrew Clarno. The girl is now in Texas.

The first death in the town was that of Mrs. Jacob Stair, in the spring of 1836, of consumption.

The first marriage in the town, as well as the first in Green county, was that of Josiah R. Blackmore, to Nancy Wallace. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's parents, in June, 1834.

The second marriage, in which residents of Clarno were interested, was that of James Hawthorn to Massey Boyle. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Harcourt, a Methodist preacher, at the residence of the bride's parents, in the town of Cadiz. In those days it was fashionable to "put the bridegroom to bed," and in this case that part of the ceremony was performed by O. H. P. Clarno and O. J. White. They undressed Mr. Hawthorn and tucked him in bed beside Mrs. Hawthorn amid a good deal of sport on their side and blushes and stammers on the part of the bride and groom.

The second wedding to occur within the limits of the town of Clarno, was that of Crawford Million to a young lady who was stopping at Mr. Deniston's. The ceremony was performed in 1838, at the residence of J. W. Deniston.

The first religious services in the town were held at the house of Mathew Wells, by Rev. Robert De Lap, a Methodist preacher. The first camp meetings in Green county were held at the same place.

The first school in the town was taught by a Mr. Jones, during the winter of 1837—8, in a building that had been erected for the purpose, on section 30. This building was a primitive affair. It was of logs 16x18 feet in size. In the side a hole was cut which was covered with one pane of glass. This served as a window.

The first grain in the town was raised by Andrew Clarno, in 1833. Seed wheat was purchased at Galena for $3 per bushel, and ten acres was sown, which yielded thirty-five bushels per acre. This was what was then called "velvetwheat." In those days such a yield as this was not considered remarkable. In 1843—following a winter in which there was an average of three feet of snow covering the ground—O. J. White raised forty-five bushels of wheat per acre, and many of the early settlers report similar yields.

Andrew Clarno also raised the first corn in the town. They "deadened" the trees and chopped seed into about two acres.

The first blacksmith was Calvin Hale, who opened a shop on section 9, in 1837. He improved land there and remained five or six years, when he sold and moved to the timber, where he died a few years later.

Abner Van Sant made the first fanning mill manufactured in Green county. In 1838 [or 1839] a man named Bean settled on the Deniston place. He was a good mechanic and made a business of manufacturing fanning mills, which he used to peddle through the country.

In 1844, John Shober erected a mill on section 24, near the town line. He put up a frame building, put in an old fashioned "up and down saw," and run the machinery with horse power. For several years he operated the mill, and then sold to Fritz & Beckman; Charles Timms finally purchased the property, and now runs it with steam power.

Charles Timms, a native of Prussia, was born near Doelitz, Oct. 15, 1845. He is a son of Christ and Mary (Maltzke) Timms. His mother is now living in Nebraska, and his father is dead and was buried in Prussia. The early life of Charles was spent upon a farm, that being the occupation of his father. At the, age of sixteen years he concluded to learn the miller's trade, and was engaged in a saw and grist mill until twenty years old, when he came to America. He first stopped in New York, where he was occupied in running a steam saw mill, thence he came to Juda, in this county, worked on a farm three months, and then removed to Waukesha county, where he ran a grist mill one year. He then hired out to Messrs. Fritz & Beckman to run their saw mill, where he has since been engaged. He thoroughly understands the business, and has succeeded in changing this mill from an old style inferior machine to one of the best of its size in the country. Mr. Timms was married Oct. 17, 1872, to Augusta Fritz. They have had six children, three of whom are now living—Lydia H., Mary M., and Hattie A. Mr. Timms owns 140 acres of land where he lives, upon which is a saw mill and cheese factory. He has been a successful business man, and is now in the enjoyment of a competency.

THE BLACK HAWK WAR.

In the spring of 1832 there was only one cabin within the present limits of the town of Clarno. This had been erected by—or at least for—Andrew Clarno. It was at that time occupied by Joseph Paine, Hugh Wallace and Josiah Blackmore, as well as the Clarno family. Early in the summer of 1832 the news was received that the red men were coming. The news raised the greatest excitement among the little band of pioneers, and a "council of war" was at once called. After talking the matter over it was decided that the best plan was to flee. It was understood that the Indians were coming with their war paint, and were murdering and burning everything that came in their path. Joseph Paine and Hugh Wallace went to Willow Springs, while the Clarno party fled to Wiota. Upon the same day that they left the Indians arrived and burned the cabins. They came from the Rock river country, swimming the Pecatonica river. Previous to this there had been some trouble between the Indian tribes and the whites, and also among the Indians themselves. The friendly and hostile red men were distinguished by the fact that usually the friendly ones wore a rag or cloth tied about their foreheads. As near as the little band of Clarno pioneers could learn, the depredations through this region and the destruction of their homes was the work of those Indians whom they had supposed were friendly. It was supposed that the Winnebago's were responsible for it, and the excitement was intense all through this country, as will be seen by the fact that the settlers in township 1 range 7, all fled from twenty-five to fifty miles to escape the impending danger. In the fall they all returned, having spent the summer at the fort. At least that is where the Clarno party remained, while the others may have scouted through this region more or less. Mr. Clarno and his son, O. H. P., or "Perry," were on soldier duty most of the summer, guarding the fort; and Perry, notwithstanding the fact that he was only fourteen years of age, was drafted twice. Upon the return of the party in the fall of 1832, they found where there had been a large Indian encampment on section 19. There had been a large spot cleared, and it seemed as though when the Indians had crossed the Pecatonica they had scattered, and then found their way to this spot, which is secluded. They had cut a considerable portion of the brush and thrown it back for breastworks. Although much discouraged at finding their former home in ruins, they at once rebuilt, and set about making permanent improvements. The Black Hawk War did not cease, but this was the extent to which Clarno was affected by it.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services in the town of Clarno were held at the house of Matthew Wells in the fall of 1835, by Rev. D. Harcourt, a local Methodist preacher, who had located here. He gathered the settlers together and his meetings were attended by many from "clear across the timber."

The first class was formed at the same place, in 1836, by Rev. James McKane, from Ogle Co., Ill. Among the members at the time of organization were: Matthew Wells, Sarah Maria Blunt, Jane Wells, wife of Peter Wells, and William Baird. All these had been members in the eastern States. Rev. De Lap was the first resident pastor after Dr. Harcourt. He came here in 1837. This was then a part of the Rock River Conference. In 1838, Rev. T. W. Pope was sent here. Then came Rev. McKane. Among others who preached for the class were:

Revs. Pillsbury, James Ash and Charles McClure. For several years services were held at Matthew Wells' house, and then the house of Daniel Harcourt was used. Finally the class was merged into the Monroe organization.

In 1858, a Reform Church was organized which was afterward united with the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Among the Reform ministers who preached here were: Revs. John Hayman, who served seven years; Henry Knepper, six years; C. G. Hulhorst, two years; and F. W. Strunk, six years. Rev. Grossoup is the present pastor.

The Salem English Evangelical Lutheran Church of Shueyville, town of Clarno, was organized in 1868, by Rev. J. K. Bloom, of the Synod of Northern Illinois. He took charge as pastor in 1869. The following is the list of charter members and first officers: Zachariah Albright, Robert Shaw, Mary Shaw, Peter Lichtenwalner, Sarah Lichtenwalner, Joseph Lichtenwalner, Benjamin Neese. Robert Shaw, Sr., elder; Joseph S. Lichtenwalner, deacon. Rev. Bloom resigned the congregation in 1870. He was succeeded by Rev. J. L. Hammond, who took charge April 16, 1871, and served four years, resigning Sept. 26, 1875. Rev. James

M. Rees took charge Nov. 21, 1876, and resigned April 1, 1880. Rev. D. E. Rupley took charge April 1, 1880, and resigned July 1, 1881. Rev. D. P. Grosscup, of the Synod of Iowa, took charge Aug. 1, 1881, and resigned April 1, 1884. The church building was erected in 1869 by the joint contributions of the Lutheran and German Reformed congregations, costing both parties $2,500. It is a frame building 38x48 feet in size. It was dedicated in December, 1869, by Revs. J. K. Bloom and G. J. Donnemeyer of the Lutheran Church, and Rev. Henry Knepper of the Reformed Church. One acre of ground was donated to the church by Albert Albright of the Reformed congregation. The present officers are: Joseph S. Lichtenwalner, elder; Emanuel Painter, deacon. The present membership is nineteen. Beneficial revivals were enjoyed in 1869, and also in 1870.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

There was occasional preaching in the old log school house as early as 1849. In 1859 Rev. J. C. Brainerd sometimes occupied the frame school house known as Enterprise, a name first given in ridicule to the former log house in the same neighborhood. In 1861 Rev. J. C. Brainerd preached in the Thorpe school house, and formed a class there, with John DeLong leader, and members as follows: Axa DeLong, Frances DeLong, Harrison King, Nancy King, George Clingman, Susan Clingman, Annie E. McDowell, Sarah A. Thorpe, Frances H. Simpson, Ephraim Miller, Catharine Clarno and Harriet Iseminiger. This organization was discontinued in 1862, and names transferred to Shueyville, with Alpheus De Haven, leader. In February, 1867, a class was formed at Honey creek, Enterprise school house, by Rev. J. J. Walker, minister, and Eli Chapin, leader, and the following members: Sarah Chapin, Susan M. Chapin, P. Jane Chapin, M. A. Chapin, E. J. Chapin, M. J. Chapin, Samuel Drake, E. Drake and A. E. Anderson. In 1877 a new school house was built, and it was voted at the school meeting that the house should not be used excepting for school purposes. Accordingly, this little band of worshippers, feeling the need of religious instruction for their children, resolved to erect a little church, which was done the same year—in the fall of 1877. It was dedicated sometime in January, 1878, by Rev. D. W. Couch, presiding elder. The plan given by Rev. W. H. Kellogg, minister at that time—size 34x36, and eighteen feet high—cost $1,500. Three-fourths of an acre of land was given by S. Drake, as long as used for church purposes. Rev. J. J. Clifton first occupied the new building, and remained two years. Then Rev. A. L. Tull remained two years as pastor, followed by Rev. P. E. Knox, who staid eighteen months and then removed to Faulk Co., D. T., to build him a home, and is there becoming identified with the early settlers of that part of God's vineyard as a minister, farmer, father of the State, county official, etc. Rev. E. T. Briggs filled the vacancy until fall, when Rev. W. H. Kellogg was appointed to take charge of the Monroe circuit. There has been but one revival held in the church. This was by Rev. P. E. Knox, and resulted in four conversions. Members in good standing March 31, 1884: Samuel Drake, Eliza Drake, Sarah Truman, William Truman, Kate McDowell, T. B. Wells, Amanda Wells, Garry Wells, Abbie Wells, Dora Wells, Sarah McCammant, Minnie McCammant, Annie E. Anderson and Etta B. Anderson; Rev. W. H. Kellogg, minister; T. B. Wells, leader; S. Drake, T. J. Anderson and T. B. Wells, trustees; Rev. E. L. Eaton, Madison, Wis., elder; William Truman and A. A. E. Anderson, stewards. This little society has never been strong either financially or in membership, but in twenty-three years has kept about the same in numbers, and is to-day in a flourishing condition.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

The first town meeting in Clarno was held on the first Tuesday in April, 1849, at John Blunt's barn, on section 22. The following is a list of the first town officers—elected at this time:

Supervisors, Thomas S. Bowen, chairman, O. J. White and William Boyls; clerk, J. H. Shuey; treasurer, J. H. Blunt; assessor, Barnett Starr; superintendent of schools, William McDonald; justices of the peace, John W. Shuey, Henson Irion, George Adams and Hamilton C. Miller; constables, John M. Bryant, Elijah Otterman and O. H. P. Clarno.

Among others who have been prominent in town affairs and filled local offices at different times, are the following named: Alpheus De Haven, Hiram Ticknor, Jonathan Snyder, Jacob Mason, Israel Smith, John Fisher, E. P. Eddy, Alfred Wrisberg, Ashford Trickle, Joseph Cattips, John Walter, Samuel Raymer, Albert Albright, Peter Wells, Oliver Cessna, Edmond Stair, W. I. Hodges, Jacob Adams, J. H. Eaton, James Roberts, Absalom Huffman, Thomas Bowen, Simon Bartlett, Edward Reugger, Peter Gnagi, William Henthorn, Charles Adams, Joseph Kleckner, John Raymer and Benjamin Fair.

The Clarno "town house" is a brick structure, located on the southeast corner of section 16. It was erected in 1857, at a cost of about $1,200. The building committee, which was formed in April, 1857, was composed of Alpheus DeHaven, George Adams and Hiram Ticknor.

EDUCATIONAL.

In 1850 the territory now comprising the town of Clarno was divided into seven school districts. In the superintendents report for that year, district No 1, was not represented; but aside from that there were 237 scholars in the town. The following named were teachers at that time: John D. Buchanan, M. O. Hoyt, John Andrick, and Jabez Johnson.

In 1888 there were 511 scholars in the town. They were distributed among the different districts as follows: No. 1, 61; No. 2, 44; No. 3, 33; No. 4, 23; No. 5, 66; No. 6, 60; No. 7, 29; No. 8, 75; No. 9, 28; No. 10, 87; No. 9,(joint) 5.

In 1884 there were eleven school districts in the town, with school houses located as follows:

No. 1, on southeast quarter of section 2; No. 2, on southeast quarter of section 16; No. 3, on southwest quarter of section 27; No. 4, on northwest quarter of section 32; No. 5, on northwest quarter of section 20; No. 6, on southwest quarter of section 4; No. 7, house in Cadiz; No. 8, on northwest quarter of section 1; No. 9, on southeast quarter of section 26.

SHUEYVILLE POST OFFICE.

The post office generally called Shuey's Mill, was established in 1859. John H. Shuey was appointed postmaster and served two years, when he was succeeded by Alpheus DeHaven, who kept the office until 1876, when he resigned and John Lockwood was appointed. Mr. Lockwood held the office until 1883.

THE CLARNO GRANGE

was organized July 3, 1878, with the following officers:

T. H. Eaton, master; Peter Gnagi, overseer; F. M. Hannah, lecturer; Jacob Adams, treasurer; Eli Chapin, chaplain; Charles Wetzles, secretary; William Hodges, steward; W. E. Connet, assistant steward; James Hawthorn, Jr., gate keeper; Mrs. Alvira Gnagi, lady assistant steward; Miss Frank Eaton, Flora; Mrs. T. J. Anderson, Pomona; Miss Malissa Adams, Ceres. The grange continued in operation for several years, and was a source of much pleasure and some profit, to its members. The membership was widely scattered, some having a long distance to travel to attend the meeting of the grange. It was reported, at the last meeting of the grange, that a couple of families had moved into the town who were in very straitened circumstances. There was considerable money in the treasury. On motion it was voted that the furniture belonging to the grange be sold and the proceeds together with the money in the treasury be divided between the said families, and on vote the grange surrendered its charter to the State grange, together with all the records.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Among the old settlers and prominent citizens of the town of Clarno, are the following:

John Cameron came to this county April 9, 1837, from Cincinnati, and settled on section 33, the southwest quarter, where he owns 120 acres. He was born on the Alleghany mountains, Westmoreland Co., Penn., thirty-five miles northeast from Pittsburg, Dec. 6, 1807. He is a son of Daniel and Jane (Carney) Cameron. When three years old, he was taken by his parents to Cincinnati, where he lived until 1837, when he came here as before stated, and has since resided on the same farm. He was married May 10, 1832, to Elizabeth Tilson, of Hamilton county. She died in 1865, and was buried in Shueyville cemetery. He was again married April 24, 1872, to Malinda J. Dunmeyer, of Stephenson Co., Ill., daughter of George and Mary Grossmen, who are still living in Stephenson county. Mr. Cameron is a democrat.

T. B. Wells, son of Peter and Jane (Bowman) Wells, was born Jan. 22, 1841. He was born on the farm he now owns, in the town of Clarno, on section 22. He now owns 380 acres of land. He is principally engaged in stock raising, and has a good farm finely improved. He was married in 1861 to Amanda M. DeHaven, a native of Illinois, and daughter of T. G. and Mary (Starr) DeHaven, who are living in the town of Clarno. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have seven children—Oren, Abbie J., Garry E., Birtram C., Dora E., Grant U., Treat L. and Prudie M. Two children died and were buried in Clarno. Mr. Wells is a republican and a successful business man. His mother and five children are buried in Monroe. His father and step-mother live in Monroe. T. J. Millman came with his parents to Green county in 1844. He was born in Randolph Co., Ind., Aug. 19, 1836, and is a son of Robert and Abigail (Adamson) Millman, both of whom are dead and buried in Hawthorn cemetery. Robert Millman, on coming to this county, took a claim on section 32, of the town of Monroe, on which he lived until his decease, in December, 1867. His wife died Oct. 5, 1876. They were of English-Scotch extraction. Mr. Millman, of this sketch, continued to reside in this county from 1844 until 1863, when he went to California for the benefit of his health, and remained until 1865. He clerked in a hotel one year, then worked in a saw mill a few months. He then returned and cared for his aged parents, who lived with him till their death. He next went to Nora Springs, Iowa, and remained three years, from 1868 to 1871, after which he returned to section 32. In 1880 he erected a handsome residence on section 5, lot 4, where he now resides. He owns 203 acres of fine land in one body, and is engaged in mixed farming. He was married in 1859 to Ella Hawthorn. They have three children—Mary A., Francis E. and Ellen M. Mr. and Mrs. Millman are members of the United Brethren Church. He is politically, a republican.

John Strader has been a resident of this county since he was seven years old, and was born in Stephenson Co., Ill., Jan. 22, 1838. He is a son of Jacob and Rachael (Starr) Strader. His mother is living with him on the farm, and his father is dead and buried in Franklin cemetery. Mr. Strader first lived in Jordan, where in after years he owned a farm, which he sold and removed to the town of Clarno, on section 29, where he now owns 240 acres of good land. He was married to Adelaide D. Blair, Jan. 22, 1868, who died Sept. 24, 1871, and was interred in Monroe cemetery. There were two children born to them—Homer H. and Sebert B. Mr. Strader was again married Feb. 21, 1878, to Henrietta E. Harris, a native of Michigan. Two children blessed this union—Bessie R.

and John S. Mr. Strader is a practical farmer, and during the winter is engaged in supplying hard wood lumber for the railroads, wagon shops and other places. He is independent in politics, and a member of the Baptist Church.

Andrew J. Trickle, a native of Vermilion Co., Ill., was born Sept. 10, 1825. He is a son of Robert and Mary (Bensyl) Trickle, who came here in 1848, and first settled on section 6, the town of Clarno, where they lived, or near there, until the time of the death of Robert Trickle, Andrew's father, which occurred April 3, 1873. Mrs. Trickle (Andrew's mother) died in 1884, and both the parents were buried in Franklin cemetery. The subject of this sketch came to this county in 1851, having previously, in March, 1849, been married to Elizabeth Cruthers. They settled on section 5, town of Clarno, having at that time forty acres of land. He now owns in the county 440 acres, and 240 in Seward Co., Neb. He makes stock raising a specialty. His wife is now dead and buried in the Franklin cemetery. They had three children. He was again married to Mrs. Charlotte Huffman, a resident of Green county, Dec. 3, 1858. Thirteen children have blessed this union—Jessie, Charles, Andrew, Laura, Martha, Tilla, Charlotte, Lewis, Clara, Olive, Joseph, Albert and Everett. They are all living but Sarah Ellen, who was buried in Franklin cemetery. Mr. Trickle is one of the leading citizens of Clarno, and is respected by all who know him.

Edward Trickle came to this county with his parents when he was ten years old. He was born in Vermilion Co., Ill., Dec. 12, 1837. He now lives on the old homestead, which he has much improved, having added among other things, a commodious dwelling at a cost of over $3,000. The old house is yet standing near by, a relic of the past, and around its hearthstone cluster many happy recollections of days gone by. Mr. Trickle now owns about 400 acres of land and makes stock raising, buying, selling and shipping, a business. He was married Dec. 1, 1866, to Matilda Hawthorn, a daughter of James Hawthorn, whose sketch appears elsewhere. She was a resident and native of Green county. They have nine children—James R., George W., Amy C., William E., Alfred R., Elmer, Mary E., Benjamin F. and Alonzo E. In politics Mr. Trickle is independent, acting according to his judgment, and not being bound by party ties, or subject to the dictations of any clique or party of men. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

Eugene A. White is a native of the town of Clarno, this county, and was born Sept. 27, 1848. He is a son of O. J. White, one of the earliest settlers. Eugene has lived almost continually in his native county, having been away only once, which was in 1871, when he went to Osceola Co., Iowa, and took up some land. After proving up on it he returned to Green county. He was married Dec. 23, 1874, to Helen Adams, also a native of Green county, and daughter of George and Jemima Adams. The father and mother are now living in Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. White have one child, a son—Leland C., born Dec 3, 1875. Mr. White owns 120 acres of land on section 32, which makes one of the best farms of its size in the county. The situation of his improvements is pleasant and attractive, and the grounds and buildings indicate taste and thrift. Mr. White adheres to the republican party, and is a whole souled, genial gentleman.

Fridolin Tschudy was born in Swandon, Switzerland, March 22, 1822, and came to Green county in 1868. He was married in Switzerland to Elizabeth Sweifle, who died in that country, Dec. 8, 1862, leaving five children—Fridolin, Catharine, Margaret, Ursula and Henry. Mr. Tschudy was again married April 30, 1863, to Catherine Beylinger, a native of Glarus, Switzerland. His death occurred June 19, 1882. His son, Henry now owns and carries on the farm. He is an energetic and industrious young man. The farm contains sixty-four acres in all, thirty acres of which are on section 12, where he resides, and thirty-four acres on section 7, in the town of Jefferson.

Alexander Campbell did not emigrate to this county, for here he was born Jan. 30, 1849. He is a son of T. J. and Eliza (Blunt) Campbell, the latter is now dead and buried in Bethel Church cemetery, the former lives in the town of Clarno. In 1873 Alexander went to Nebraska and remained eight years in Saunders county on a farm. With this exception Green county has always been his home. He was married July 11, 1869, to Aquilla Deal, of the town of Clarno, daughter of Levi and Margaret Deal now living in Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have seven children—Flora B., Dewitt C., Joseph T., Minnie M., Abbie E., Maggie B. and Emery L. Mr. Campbell is a prohibitionist. He is a member of the United Brethren Church; also his wife and daughter, Flora.

Fridolin Tschudy, a son of John J. and Barbara (Hodding) Tschudy, was born in the town of New Glarus, Dec. 3, 1849. His parents are now living in Monroe. He remained in his native town until five years old when he went with his parents to Dayton, town of Exeter, thence to Monroe, where he lived until sixteen years old, then removed with his parents to the farm he now occupies. He was married Nov. 28, 1872, to Mary A. Lauz, a native of Switzerland, born Nov. 8, 1850. She died Feb. 25, 1884, and was buried in the cemetery at Monroe. Six children were born to them—John J., Louisa E., Annetta B., Emma F., Andrew R. and Fridolin. They are members of the Evangelical Reform Church. The farm consists of 135 acres on sections 1 and 2, the old homestead, which is conveniently located one and one quarter miles southeast from Monroe, where he is engaged in raising, breeding and selling blooded stock, the firm name being J. J. Tschudy & Sons. They are importers and breeders of pure Chester white swine, Ayrshire cattle and Southdown sheep. Of this stock they are constantly selling to breeders and stock men, and can guarantee satisfaction. He also is engaged in the manufacture of Swiss cheese.

William Henn was born in Germany, but came to Green county when one year old. His parents, Philip and Bena Henn, are living in Monroe. He was married Nov. 15, 1876, to Isabel Conkey, an adopted daughter of Amos and Mary A. Conkey. Mr. Henn owns thirty-eight acres of land on section 1, in the town of Clarno, where he is desirably located, and has good buildings. He is politically a republican. Mrs. Henn's mother resides with them.

Amos Conkey was a native of New York, born April 8, 1809. While he was quite young his father died, and he went to New Hampshire to live with a Mr. Huff, remaining with him until twenty-one years old. He then went to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he remained until 1842, when he came to Green county, and settled on Green's Prairie upon a farm. He died in 1874, on the 21st of December. He was married to Mary A. Slater, April 8, 1856. She is a native of England and now resides with their adopted daughter, Mrs. William Henn. Mr. Conkey was in the service during the War of the Rebellion, enlisting in 1862.

Samuel Weismiller was born in county of Bane, Switzerland, Nov. 1, 1820. He is a son of Samuel and Mary (Wertley) Weismiller, both of whom are dead and buried in Switzerland. The subject of this sketch left his native country when thirty years old, and came directly to the town of Clarno, in this county. This was in 1866. He bought a farm from Jeremiah Bender, consisting of twenty-eight acres. He now owns fifty-eight acres. Mr. Weismiller has been twice married, first to Mary Wattmiller. She died and was buried in Monroe cemetery. He was married again Feb. 12, 1876, to Mrs. Elizabeth Strickey, of the town of Clarno. She had three children by a former husband—Cornelia, Maurice and Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Weismiller are members of the Lutheran Church.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

George W. Bloom came to the town of Clarno in 1882 from the town of Sylvester. He was born in Centre Co., Penn., April 13, 1841, and is a son of George and Elizabeth (Kooken) Bloom, both of whom are now living in the town of Sylvester, the former at the mature age of eighty-one, the latter seventy-eight at this time (1884). George lived in his native State until 1831, when he moved to Illinois, thence the year following to Wisconsin and Green county, where his father settled on section 32, town of Sylvester. In 1863 Mr. Bloom went to Nevada, prospecting, and there remained about two years, then returned home, and Dec. 11, 1864, was married to Mahala Chryst, daughter of John Chryst. By this union there were nine children—Emma J., Florence E., Mary E., Lena B., Ruth A., John C., Ray, Clara and Fred. Emma J. is married to Mathias Schindler, and is living in Beloit, Wis. Mr. Bloom owns 120 acres and has a pleasant home. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and a democrat. He is of a family of eight living children, and all attended the golden wedding of their parents in 1876.

Jacob Jones is a native of Maryland, born Jan. 5, 1820. He is a son of Thomas and Susanna (Trotton) Jones both of whom are dead and buried in Baltimore Co., Md. Jacob came to this county in 1853, and settled in the town of Monroe, on the Mineral Point road, where he lived until 1862, then returned to Maryland and remained one year on account of his health. In 1863 he came again to this county and bought ten acres of land from Dr. Sherman, and now owns twenty-four acres, located a short distance from the village of Monroe. He was married in Maryland to Mrs. Emeline Wilkinson, a native of that State. She died in May, 1867, and was buried in Monroe cemetery. She left two children—John T. and Mary A. Mr. Jones was again married Dec. 28, 1871, to Nancy Crow, daughter of Abram and Elizabeth Crow, who are living in the town of Clarno. By this union there are four children—Harry F., Bertha M. Jacob Arthur and Robert R. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are both members of the M. E. Church. He was married June 10, 1847, in Columbiana Co., Ohio, to Hannah Grisell, daughter of Joseph and Letitia Grisell. Previous to his marriage, Mr. Smock resided in various places in Ohio. After marriage he lived four years in Columbiana county, then went to Logan county, where he was engaged in running a saw mill, and remained three years. He removed from the latter place to Green county, in 1854. Soon after arriving here he purchased the place where he now lives. In 1869 he removed with his family to Story Co., Iowa, remaining there until 1872, when he returned to his farm in this county. When Mr. Smock came to Green county in 1854, the country was, much of it, in an uncultivated state. Land was worth $20 per acre at that time. Mr. and Mrs. Smock had six children, four of whom are living—Frank, Letitia, Douglas, Libbie, Lincoln and John.

Frank H. Smock is a native of Ohio, born in Columbiana county, July 12, 1848, and is a son of J. C. and Hannah (Grisell) Smock, both of whom are living in the town of Clarno, near their son. When Frank was three years old, his parents removed with him to Logan county and remained three years on a farm, thence they came to this county and settled on section 11, town of Clarno. Here the subject of our sketch continued to live with his parents about fourteen years, then went to Story Co., Iowa, and lived about five years, and thence to the town of Clarno and settled on section 14, where he remained one year, then went to Lafayette county and lived about two years. He then moved to sections 11 and 14, Where he now owns about 135 acres of land, and is engaged in handling stock. His farm is an excellent one and well adapted for his business. He was married Sept. 2, 1872, to Belle McHose, of Illinois. They have had four children—Eva May, Elma L., Ida D. and Fannie. The latter died Jan. 24, 1881, and was buried in Greenwood cemetery. Mr. Smock has been a greenbacker ever since the organization of that party. He has held offices of trust in the county, and is a citizen of many good qualities.

Andrew Dinges was born in Centre Co., Penn., Jan. 21, 1828, and is a son of John and Sarah (Swartz) Dinges, of German descent. The subject of this sketch was a farmer and removed from his native State to Stephenson Co., Ill. When twenty-six years old he came to this county and settled on section 22, Clarno, where he purchased 120 acres of choice land. He now owns 200 acres and makes stock raising a specialty. He was married in Centre Co., Penn., Jan. 21, 1851, to Elizabeth Dulwiler, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ulrick) Dulwiler, both of whom are dead and buried in Aaronsburg. Mr. Dinges' parents are both buried also in Aaronsburg cemetery. They have thirteen children—Lydia A., Willoughby H. Florence V., Andrew C., Sarah E., Elenora, Charles W., Emma R., Mary A., Winnie M., Frederick C., Olive E. and Winona E. The four oldest are married. Mr. and Mrs. Dinges are members of the Reform Church, and in politics he is a democrat.

John McCammunt, a successful farmer and stock raiser of the county, was born in Muskingum Co., Ohio, Oct. 31, 1830. He is the son of Samuel and Rebecca (Coe) McCammunt, who are dead and buried in a private cemetery upon Mr. McCammunt's farm. He came from Ohio directly to Green county and settled on section 21, of the town of Clarno, where his father formerly owned the south half of the northeast quarter, to which he has added 160 acres adjoining, and has a good residence and other improvements. Upon his farm are four springs of excellent water, and the place is well adapted for stock raising. He was married Jan. 17, 1856, to Adaline Wells, daughter of Peter Wells, of Monroe, and sister of T. B. and Charles Wells, of the town of Clarno. They have eight children—Mary, Temperance, Angeline, Sarah, John, Minnie, Joshua and Caroline.

Emanuel Painter came to Shueyville in 1855, and went to work in the blacksmith shop of Cornelius Henry, for whom he worked six months. He then bought the shop of Mr. Henry, and began business on his own account; which he has since continued, at the same place. He was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., May 29, 1830, and is the son of Daniel and Esther (Crawshard) Painter. He came to Green county directly from Pennsylvania. He was married May 6, 1855, to Mary Michael, a native of that State's Clearfield county. Ten children have been born to them—Huldah, Lucy A., Flora D., Amanda E., Nettie B., Rosa A., Tillie M., Allie M., Eda E. and Palmer A. Mr. and Mrs. Painter are members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Painter is doing a prosperous business, and since coming to Shueyville, has never been out of work. He has accumulated some property, and now owns his shop and a good house in town, and seventy-five acres of land located a short distance north of the village.

Joshua Wiley was born in Chester Co., Penn., Sept. 6, 1816. He is a son of William and Lydia (Frame) Wiley. The former is now buried in Chester Co., Penn., and the latter in Lancaster county. In 1833 the family removed to Chester county, and in 1854, Joshua went to Freeport, Ill., and lived three years, then came to Green county and settled on section 19, where he owns eighty acres of land. He was married March 2, 1854, to Elizabeth Strode, of Wilmington, Del., and they now have three children—William, now foreman on a railroad, and stationed at Yankton, Dak.; Mary and Ella. They belong to the Society of Friends, and are comfortably situated to spend their declining years in peace and happiness.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Alfred Clark came to Green county when but seven years old. He is a native of Massachusetts, born March 8, 1853. He is a son of Elam and Tirzah (Brown) Clark. The former is now dead and buried in Monroe cemetery, the latter is living in the village of Monroe. Alfred, the subject of this sketch, lives on section 3, near Monroe, and owns 397 acres of good land. He cultivates a fine vineyard and manufactures wine, but is principally engaged in raising stock. His wife was Elizabeth Fitzgerald, a native of New York, to whom he was married Nov. 1, 1863. They have had four children—Charles L., now in Montana on a cattle ranch; Nellie M., Mamie P. and Alfred C., all at home. Near the residence of Mr. Clark was erected the first frame house between Freeport and Madison, and it was built by Joseph Kelly. The lumber was drawn from Galena, and it was used for a hotel. Mr. Clark has a beautiful residence, and seems surrounded by all the comforts of life.

Solomon Starr was born in Ohio, Preble county, July 7, 1822. He is a son of Adam and Mary (Kick) Starr, who are buried in Monroe cemetery. Mr. Starr's father was one of the earliest settlers in this county, having located nine miles below Mineral Point, in 1826, where he worked at blacksmithing for a time, then removed to the place now owned by Peter Lichtenwalner, on section 28. He remained there for eleven years. Solomon was married in 1842 to Sarah Blunt, of the town of Clarno, daughter of William and Nancy (Smith) Blunt, both of whom are dead, the latter is buried at Sedalia, Pettis county, the former lies in Shueytown cemetery. Mr. Starr lives on the north and east side of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 25, and owns 104 acres. There are seven children living—Daniel, William, Levi L., May C., Susan E., Martha E. and Farmer D. Mr. Starr is a member of the Christian Church, and politically is a democrat.

William Beckman was born Oct. 3, 1841, in the northern part of Prussia, near the city of Slettin. His parents, Christian and Louise Beckman, are dead and buried in Prussia. When fifteen years old, William left his native country and came to America. On coming to Green county, he first lived in Monroe one and half years, afterwards working on a farm till 1864, then purchased the mill property known as the "Thober Mill," which he operated about ten years, then sold and removed to his present farm, on section 26, of the town of Clarno, where he owns 125 acres of land, also a saw mill. He has a handsome residence surrounded by trees. His farm is watered by the Big Richland creek, and is very desirable property. He was married Feb. 2, 1866, to Mrs. Louisa Beckman nee Ohm, widow of his brother, Michael Beckman, who died in the army. He belonged to the 36th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company D. Mrs. Beckman had one child by her first marriage—Emma F., now Mrs. Grimmert. of Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. William Beckman have four children—Amanda, William, Martha and Frederick. They are members of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. Mr. Beckman was educated in Prussia, and also attended school after coming to America, about seven months.

Abner A. Drake is one of the men who has always made this county his home, having settled here at the time of his birth. He is a son of Robert M. and Sarah (Jones) Drake; the former is also a resident of this county. Abner was married to Catherina Zweifel, a native of Green county, and daughter of Jacob and Verena Zweifel. They have two children—Frank R. and Arthur J. Mrs. Drake is a member of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Drake is a member of the republican party. Their home is located on section 5, on the southeast quarter, where he owns eighty acres of land, and makes stock raising his principal business.

T. J. Anderson was born March 12, 1838, and is a son of Garland and Elizabeth (Lutts)

Anderson, both of whom are dead and buried at Freeport, Ill. The father of the subject of this sketch was a shoemaker by trade. In 1854, P. J., with his parents, went to Stephenson Co., Ill., and lived near Freeport on a farm until 1862, when he came to this county locating in the town of Clarno. He was married at Monroe in 1864 by Rev. Fairbanks to Annie E. McDowell. They lived for a time in the southeast part of the town, but in 1869 removed to section 20, where they have since lived. He owns eighty acres and is principally engaged in raising stock. They have two children living—Etta B. and Katie J. They have lost four children, three of them within nine days by diphtheria in 1879. They were buried in the Hawthorne Cemetery near the United Brethren Church in Green county.

Thomas Hawkins Eaton, was born April 13, 1822, in the town of Elk Run, Columbiana Co., Ohio. His great-great-grandfather, John Eaton took up arms against the infatuated despot, James the Second; and, for gallantry and good conduct at the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690, was rewarded by William the Third, Prince of Orange, with a liberal donation of land in Ireland, where he established his family. The great-grandfather of Thomas was also named John. He was born on the paternal estate which he finally disposed of and emigrated to America, settling on the shore of the Chesapeake bay. He had, by his first wife, three children—James, Hugh and Mary. James, the eldest of the children, was born Dec. 25, 1733, on his father's estate in Ireland, and, after the death of his mother and the second marriage of his father, he took up his residence in London. After living in that city seven years, he enlisted in the English navy and served seven years on a British man-of-war. During his term of service he was engaged in several battles with the French, both on land and sea. After his term of service had expired, he traveled extensively in Europe, and finally came to America, settling at Hagerstown, Md., where he married Elizabeth Downey. Their children were—John, Hugh, James, Elizabeth, Nancy, Rebecca and Sarah. The father was a pioneer settler of Washington Co., Penn., where he located in 1779, on the headwaters of Pike Run. He died there March 31, 1814. John, the eldest of the children, and father of the subject of this sketch, was born April 25, 1778, at Green Spring Furnace, near Hagerstown, Md. He came with his father to Washington Co., Penn., where he spent his youth and early manhood and where, at eighteen years of age, he was married to Catharine Marker. The fruit of this marriage was eleven children, two dying in infancy. The others were—Elizabeth, Rebecca, William, Nancy, Sarah, Horace P., James Harvey, Reason Beall and Thomas Hawkins. John Eaton, the father, was a pioneer in eastern Ohio, arriving in Columbiana county about the year 1809. He served in the War of 1812—15, under Gen. William Henry Harrison and was one of the early settlers in Crawford county, in that State, taking up his residence in the town of Liberty, in 1830. During the next winter (1830—31), he was instrumental by the aid of the father of the "fighting McCooks," who was then clerk in one of the branches of the Ohio legislature, in permanently fixing the county seat of Crawford county. He died in Holmes township, that county, July 23, 1850. He was a man of ardent temperament, generous, unsuspecting, benevolent, honest and fearless. The youngest of his sons, Thomas Hawkins, the subject of this sketch, was raised on the paternal homestead in Liberty township, Crawford Co., Ohio. He was, to a large extent, deprived of even a common school education, as that part of Ohio was then a "howling wilderness." Whatever of education he acquired in after life was the result of his own energetic efforts. He was married, on the 9th of April, 1845, to Martha Albert, grand-daughter of the celebrated Dr. Breniman, of Lancaster, Penn., the result of which marriage is six children—three dying in infancy. The others are—Mary Frances, the wife of McCletus Chapin; James Harvey and George West. The father, with his family, consisting of his wife and one child, emigrated to Wisconsin in 1851. He settled in Monroe, Green county, engaging for two years in house building. He then began the study of the law and was admitted to the bar in 1856. He opened a law office the following year in Monroe, continuing in the practice until the second year of the War for the Union, when he enlisted as a private in company G, of 22d regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers. He was immediately commissioned as 1st lieutenant, but was taken sick and obliged to resign his commission, returning home in March, 1863. Mr. Eaton has served as justice of the peace three terms in Monroe and four terms in Clarno. He has served one year as chairman of the board in the town last mentioned. In consequence of disease contracted in the service, he was upon his return, unable to resume the practice of his profession, and has for the last twenty-one years resided on his farm on section 16, in the town of Clarno.

William M. Dodson was born in Northamptonshire, England. When old enough he engaged in gardening. During the last seven years he spent in the old country, he lived in Kent. He emigrated to America, locating in Monroe, this county, when thirty-three years old. Remaining there three or four years, he purchased eighty acres of land on the west half of the northeast quarter of section 15, of William Brown. He also owns ten acres of timber, and is engaged in dairying and stock raising. He was married Dec. 20, 1877, to Elizabeth Moreland, a native of Mercer Co., Penn. She is a daughter of Robert and Martha (Mann) Moreland, both of whom are dead. They are both buried in Monroe cemetery. Mr. Moreland settled in the town of Clarno in 1848, and owned a nice farm on section 15. Mr. and Mrs. Dodson are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Dodson is a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Hunt) Dodson. His father is buried in England, and his mother in Ireland.

Frederick Hadinger was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, June 2, 1837. When he was three and a half years of age his father died. When fourteen years of age he came to this country, locating in Pittsburg, Penn., where he learned the trade of cabinet maker. Remaining there four years, he went to Bartlett county and engaged in the manufacture of wagons, buggies, etc. Remaining there about seven years, he removed to Janesville, Wis., and engaged in the same business. Then he removed to the town of Jefferson, this county; thence to the town of Clarno, where he purchased sixty acres of timber of Isaac Newman on section 13. He now owns 300 acres, 200 acres of which is broken, the rest being timber and pasture. He was married on the 20th of February, 1861, to Jane Henderson, a native of Ohio. They had five children—William J., Elizabeth, Harvey, Emma and Minnie. In politics he is a republican. William J. is clerk of district No. 8.

David Disher was born in Switzerland, March 22, 1827, and is a son of Christian and Magdalena (Mimmick) Disher, both of whom are dead, and were buried in the State of Ohio. They came to America in 1851, settling in Lucas Co., Ohio. David came to Tuscarawas county with them and remained in that county two months. He then went to Lucas county, where he was married to Elizabeth Joberg. She was of Swiss extraction, and was born in Tuscarawas county. He was married Aug. 18, 1855. From that county Mr. Disher removed to Lucas county, and thence to Green Co., Wis., and first settled ten miles north from the county seat, in the town of Washington. From there he removed to the town of Clarno in 1867, settling on section 24, where he now owns fifty acres of land. Mr. and Mrs. Disher have had four children—Sophia M., now married to William Tinn, and living in the town of Clarno; John C., Luther F. and Barbara A. They are members of the German Evangelical Church. Mr. Disher adheres to the principles of the democratic party.

A. Morton was born in Spencer Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1814. He is a son of James and Mary M. (Montgomery) Morton, who are dead, and buried in Franklin cemetery. A. Morton moved from his native place to Vermilion county, and remained fifteen years. Then came to Green county and settled on the Calvin Hale place, living there three years. He next went to what is known as the "George Adams' place," on Honey creek, and lived there one year, then purchased a farm on section 5, lots 5 and 11. In 1859 he was burned out. In 1863 he moved to the place he now occupies. In 1850 he went to California and remained two years in the gold mines, having crossed the plains with an ox team. There he met with good success, and returned in good spirits. He subsequently spent three years in the lead mines at Galena, Ill., and returned home in 1847. He now owns 200 acres of fine land with fifty-five acres of timber. He was married March 2, 1848, to Amy Kelly, a daughter of Mordecai and Catharine (Yeazle) Kelly, both of whom are living in the town of Cadiz. Mr. and Mrs. Morton have had twelve children, seven of whom are now living— Joseph, James F., Mary C., Olive, Elizabeth C., Laura E. and Charles. Joseph was married in January, 1870, to Elizabeth Garton. In 1872 they removed to Pocahontas Co., Iowa, where they now reside. James F. was married in April, 1879, to Emaretta Dye, and now resides on the farm with his father. Mary C. was married in May, 1874, to Urias Diven, who resides in the town of Clarno. Olive was married to A. V. Adams, in June, 1877; they reside in Clarno. Laura E. was united in marriage in February, 1882, with William Layton, of the city of Monroe. Elizabeth and Charles live at home with their parents. Politically, Mr. Morton is a republican.

Martin Heinzelmann, a prosperous farmer of Clarno, was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, Dec. 15, 1825. He served six years in the army, in his native country, and, at the age of twenty-eight came to America. He first went to Connecticut where he worked on a farm, by the month, six years, then came to Milwaukee, and a month later to Monroe. He worked in a brick-yard one summer, and four years on the farm of Mr. Newton. He then bought forty acres of timber land, of Alexander Morton, at $10 an acre, which he cleared and improved. To this he has continued to add, until he now owns 125 acres of choice land, with 115 acres under cultivation. He has erected good buildings, and everything about the place indicates thrift and comfort. He makes stock raising a specialty. He was married in Monroe, to Sophia Grose, a native of Mecklenburg, and nine children have been born to them—William L., and Mary E., (twins); Henrietta E., Martin F., and Annie, who is dead, and buried in the United Brethren cemetery; Herman S., Matilda A., Georgie C., and Bertha R. Mr. and Mrs. Heinzelmann are members of the Lutheran Church, and he is, in politics, independent of party.

He next went to Hartford, Conn., and worked in a green house one year. He was a practical florist, having learned the art in his native country. From there he went to Brattleboro, Vt., and two years later to Buffalo, N. Y., where he was employed in a nursery six months, then, concluding to go farther west, removed to Green county and hired out to work upon a farm, one and a half miles from Monroe. He, at first, purchased twenty acres of his present farm, on section 27, town of Clarno. He now owns 110 acres, having a desirable farm, which his son Edward assists him in cultivating. He was married in Wurttemberg, to Madeline Fisher, and they have seven children—Louis, Mary, Robert, Paulina, Lena, John and Edward. Four of the children are married and living in Franklin Co., Iowa, also Robert, who is not married. Mr. Eitel enlisted in 1864, in company K, of the 16th Wisconsin Infantry, and was mustered in at Madison. He participated in the battle of Kingston, N. C., and at the close of the war, was mustered out at Madison.

S. P. Noble was born March 11, 1847, in Stephenson Co., Ill. He is a son of Carey and Catharine (McCauley) Noble, both of whom are living in Monroe. In 1872 Mr. Noble purchased sixty acres of land in the town of Clarno, section 36, and has since added forty more, making 100 in all. He was married on the 8th of June, 1868, by Rev. Squire Rote, of Monroe, to Isabel N. Bridge, a daughter of G. W. Bridge, of Monroe. The result of this union is two children—Frank B., born Feb. 12, 1871; and George W., born Aug. 17, 1874. Mrs. Noble is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Noble is engaged in raising stock, keeping on hand a fine breed of Durham cattle. He is a member of Richland Cheese Company.

CHAPTER XXXII.

TOWN OF DECATUR.

The town of Decatur lies in the eastern tier of Green county's sub-divisions, embracing congressional township 2 north, range 9 east. It is bounded on the north by the town of Albany; on the west by Sylvester; on the south by Spring Grove; and on the east by Rock county. The surface of this town is quite variable. What is known as Jordan prairie—which comprises sections 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27 and 28—is a rich productive portion of the town and was the first settled. Here located John Moore, Thomas Chambers, John J. Dawson, Samuel Rowe, Robert Mattox, E. T. Fleek, William Jones, Benjamin H. Fleek, Samuel Northcraft, Donald Johnson, David Bigelow, Thomas Stewart, J. I. Bowen, Perry and Washington Mitchell and others. The soil of this prairie consists of a rich loam mixed with sand, and is superior corn land. It also produces excellent crops of small grain and grass, and on the whole, is not excelled perhaps in the State for its general excellence. Of late years much attention has been paid to the raising of stock by the farmers here. South of Jordan prairie the land is lower, or more inclined to be marshy, the soil being composed of more or less clay, and in places a black loam. This portion of the town, however, contains a number of valuable farms, among which are those belonging to French Lake, John Douglass and Rufus Colton. Along Sugar river, which runs entirely across the town from north to south, the surface is generally low, and composed alternately of sand, clay and marsh. In fact the entire surface of that portion of the town which lies east of Sugar river may be thus described.

Among the successful farmers and stock raisers on the east side of the river are: W. E. Gardner, A. Murray, N. L. Lewis, R. J. Day and C. D. Wooster.

A ridge, considerably elevated, enters this town on section 6, from the town of Albany, passing southeasterly and terminating on section 22. Several bluffs of considerable height—which are really a part of this ridge—are found on Sugar river. The highest of these bluffs is on section 15, where it rises to a height of 200 feet above the river. The view from the top of this bluff is fine, the surrounding country and river being brought into view for miles in every direction. The principal stream in the town is Sugar river, which enters from the town of Albany, by way of section 3. It pursues an irregular southerly course, and leaves the town from the southwest corner of section 35. This is the most important stream in Green county, and at Brodhead affords an excellent water power. There are several branches of this stream which make confluence in this town. Little Jordan creek enters the town on section 18, flows east and northeast and enters Sugar river on section 15. Sugar creek, which is quite an important stream, affording several mill privileges, enters this town on section 19, flows southeasterly, and leaves the town from section 34. It enters the Sugar river in the town of Spring Grove. Riley's creek, a branch of Sugar creek, rises in the town of Jefferson, enters this town on section 31, and makes confluence with Sugar creek on section 28.

Broughton's creek rises in the town of Albany, enters this town on section 1, flows southwest about three miles, and on section 14 flows into S. C. Pierce's mill race.

The ridge which has heretofore been described, was formerly heavily timbered with different varieties of oak, poplar, and some black walnut and hickory. The greater part of this timber has been removed "long years ago." In the southwestern portion of the town, particularly on section 31, in early days, was found a heavy body of white oak; and throughout nearly all of the territory east of the river were found oak openings. Almost all of the original timber has been removed, giving place to a second growth. In fact, at present, a greater area is covered with timber than when the town was first settled.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler within the limits now comprising the town of Decatur was John Moore, who came here in the early autumn of 1839. He entered 160 acres on section 20, and eighty acres of fine timber land on section 31, and did some breaking the same fall preparatory to a crop the following year. This was the first breaking, and his crop of 1840 the first in the town. He erected a log house on section 20, in the fall of 1839, which was the first building in the town. This house is still occupied as a dwelling. John Moore was formerly from the Sciota valley, Ohio, but came here with his family from Stephenson Co., Ill., where for several years he had been living on a claim. His family, when he came here, consisted of a wife and seven children, four sons and three daughters. He sold out about 1859 and removed to Missouri, where he died at an advanced age several years ago. The family all removed to Missouri at about the same time.

John J. Dawson and Samuel Rowe came in the spring of 1840 and entered land, settling thereon in the fall. They both located on section 20, where Mr. Dawson still lives. Mr. Rowe has been dead a number of years. His son, Amos C., owns and occupies the old home. stead.

John J. Dawson is the oldest resident of the town now living here. He was born in Hampshire Co., W. Va., Sept. 15, 1814, and when twenty-one years old went to Licking Co., Ohio. In August of the following year he went to Galena, Ill. He had worked at the trade of millwright in Virginia, which knowledge proved an available resource, and was the means of securing him employment at times when a little money was with him a necessity. After remaining in Galena a few days, and earning a few dollars to enable him to continue his journey, he went to what was called "Buffalo Grove," Ogle Co., Ill., where he engaged to work at his trade, and during his stay in that vicinity assisted in building a number of saw mills. In January, 1837, he went to Stephenson Co., Ill., where he bought a claim and built a log cabin. In the spring next following he returned to Ogle county, but soon afterward went to what is now Sabula, Jackson Co., Iowa, where he built a saw mill. He worked also at the same business in Carroll Co., Ill. During the fall of 1838 he returned to his claim in Stephenson county, where he remained the following winter. He was accompanied by Samuel Rowe, who came to this county with Mr. Dawson, and became his partner. Mr. Rowe worked and improved the claim, and Mr. Dawson continued his business of millwrighting. In the spring of 1840 he returned to Jackson county with the intention of buying land, but came back to Stephenson county without having made a purchase. Green Co., Wis., having been highly recommended as a desirable place to settle, Mr. Dawson and his partner, Mr. Rowe, came here in the spring of 1840 and entered 240 acres of land, 160 of which was a part of his present homestead farm, where he has since lived. Here he commenced life's work in earnest, and has been successful. He now has a farm of 360 acres, and for many years has been known as one of the prominent farmers and stock raisers in the town of Decatur. Mr. Dawson has been twice married, first in November, 1840, to Mary Ann Parriott, a native of West Virginia. She died in 1862. By this union there were eight children, six of whom are now living, three sons and three daughters. His present wife, to whom he was married Oct. 22, 1871, was Harriett Baird, daughter of William Baird, and a native of the town of Clarno, this county. They have had six children, four of whom, two sons and two daughters, are living—George Elmer, May Elisabeth, Sarah Fannie and Jessie W. The children by first wife are—John P., deceased; Ann Genett, Adrianna, deceased; Bevans Adie, Samuel N., Elmira Ann, Wolford P. and J. F. Mr. Dawson was originally a whig, then a republican, now he is a republican and prohibitionist. He is a member of the M. E., Church.

Thomas Chambers came early in 1840 with his family, and settled on section 19. He was a son-in-law of John Moore, the first settler in the town. After a few years residence in the town Chambers removed to Galesburg, Ill., from thence to Kansas, and finally went to Colorado, where he died.

Edmund T. Fleek and Robert Mattox came in the fall of 1841. Mr. Fleek entered eighty acres of prairie and forty acres of timber land on section 17, where he still lives. Mr. Mattox entered eighty acres on section 17, adjoining Mr. Fleek's on the north; and bought eighty acres of timber land on section 4. He remained here until 1848 when he removed to Baraboo, and afterward went to Missouri.

Edmund T. Fleek, one of the most prominent men in the town of Decatur, was born in Hampshire Co., Va., Jan. 20, 1817. His parents were Adam and Mary Ann (Putnam) Fleek, who removed from Virginia to Licking Co., Ohio, in 1836. The following spring the family settled on a farm adjoining the city of Newark. His father was a miller and distiller, at which business

Edmund engaged when a boy. Mr. Fleek is a half brother of John Dawson. The first winter of his arrival in this county he cut and split 10,000 rails and stakes on shares, receiving one-half for his work. This was his start in this country. Many a young man might profit by this example. He at once began improving his farm, and has kept adding from time to time to his first purchase, until he now owns 1,000 acres in a body, being one of the largest grain and stock farms in the county. During the past four years he has expended for land, over $17,000. Thus it may be seen that Mr. Fleek is a man of energy and good business capacity. His parents, Adam and Mary Ann Fleek, came to this town in 1846, accompanied by seven children. Of the family already here at that time, beside Edmund and Benjamin Fleek, were John Dawson and Mrs. Northcraft, who were children of Mrs. Fleek by a former marriage. Adam Fleek settled on section 17, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1854, at the age of seventy-nine years. The mother survived him until October, 1883, when she died, in her eighty-eighth year. Adam Fleek was twice married. By the first marriage there were seven children, and by the second nine, who lived to an adult age. Edmund T. Fleek, the subject of this sketch, was married to Sarah Ann Bowen, daughter of John and Isabell Bowen, who was born in Fayette Co., Penn, Feb. 20, 1828, and removed to Johnson Co., Iowa, during the spring of 1844. Her father died the following August. Her mother died at Waukon, Iowa, where she was visiting her children, Dec. 25, 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Fleek have ten children, four sons and six daughters—Rinaldo, Emma V., Fannie F., Arthur E., Florence L., John L., Annie L., Alta J., Nellie M. and Howard H. Mr. Fleek originally was a whig, and still adheres to those principles, but votes with the republican party, as they most nearly represent those principles. Religiously, he was at one time a Universalist, but for many years has been a Materialist. He is now well advanced in years. Adam Fleek, the father, first married Ebiotut Umstott. By this marriage there were seven children, all of whom reached an adult age, but are now all deceased.

In 1842 William Jones came and settled on section 22, where he improved a farm. He threw a dam across Sugar river, on section 15, and in 1847—8 erected a saw mill, the first in the town. He was also the original owner of the plat of Decatur village. About 1860 he removed to Kansas and is now deceased. Mr. Jones was a native of the State of New York, but came here from Racine Co., Wis.

Among those who came during the years 1843 and 1844, were Donald Johnson, David Bigelow, Thomas Stewart and Perry Mitchell.

Mr. Johnson settled first on section 28, where he lived for a few years, then went to the village of Decatur. He finally removed to Washington Territory, where he died.

Mr. Bigelow settled on section 23, where he died in 1846. His was the first death in the town.

Mr. Stewart settled on section 5, where he lived until the time of his death, which occurred in 1875.

Perry Mitchell located on section 29, where he lived until the time of his death. He was a native of Fayette Co., Penn., and a man who was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him.

Daniel Dye came from Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., at about the same time. He made several claims which he held and sold for speculation. He finally removed to the far west.

J. I. Bowen and A. B. Axtell came in 1844. The former is still a resident. The latter went to California in about 1850.

Jared I. Bowen resides on section 17, town of Decatur, where he settled in December, 1882, which place is the original homestead of Adam Fleek. Mr. Bowen was born in Fayette Co., Penn., near the Monongahela river in the Forks of Cheat, in 1823. He learned the trade of cabinet maker and carpenter. In the spring of 1844 his father, John Bowen, removed with his family to Johnson Co., Iowa, where he died the same season. His mother with family came immediately afterward to the town of Decatur, this county, where her brother, Thomas Stewart, then lived. Jared I. did not accompany the family to Iowa, but learning of the death of his father and of the removal of the family to Green county, came here at once, reaching Monroe on the last day of December, 1844, and immediately afterward settled in the town of Decatur, where he has since lived. He resided for many years on section 5. He was married to Lacey Ann Fleek. They have three children—Dr. D. H., now practicing physician at Waukon, Iowa; Wilder Lee and Edmund Fleek. The two younger sons live on the homestead farm, on section 5, which Mr. Bowen still owns.

In 1845 Benjamin H. Fleek and Samuel Northcraft came. Mr. Fleek settled on section 17, where he died Jan. 2, 1883. At the time of his death, he was the wealthiest farmer in the town of Decatur. When he came here, with his wife and two children, he was a poor man having no money or property. Industry, economy and good management made him a rich man.

Benjamin H. Fleek was born in Hampshire Co., Va., Oct. 27, 1818, where he was reared. At the age of eighteen years he removed to Ohio with his father. When he came to Green county his family consisted of a wife and two children. All the goods, chattels and money he possessed at that time did not amount to $200. He took a claim of forty acres, which he sold to his father in 1846. With the money he received for this land he began a successful career. At the time of his death he owned about 1,000 acres of land, besides having previously distributed several hundred acres among his children. He also possessed many thousand dollars' worth of personal property. His success was attained by his skill in raising large crops of grain, and the safe and profitable investment of his money. He was an honorable and upright citizen, liberal in providing for his family, and for all charitable purposes, and in the support of the gospel, being a consistent member of the M. E. Church. He was married in Ohio, on the 2d of September, 1819, to Susan, daughter of Henry Fleek. She was born in Hampshire Co., Va. The result of this union was nine children, six of whom are living—Adam G. B., John J. D., Allen, Clementine C., Hattie and Tamson. Three children—Henry M., Demarius and Samuel J. are deceased. The children are all married except the youngest and live within two miles of the old homestead. Adam lives on section 27; John J. D. lives on section 19; Allie, wife of Jacob Roderick, lives on section 20; Clementine C., wife of Sylvanus D. Fisher, lives on section 16; Hattie, wife of John C. Murdock, living in the town of Sylvester, and Tamson, living at home. John J. D. Fleek was born in the town of Decatur, Aug. 29, 1845. He married Martha Erickson, born in Wisconsin. He lives on the homestead farm.

Samuel Northcraft resides on section 28, where he settled in 1847. He came to this town Nov. 7, 1845, and for two years worked the farm of John Dawson. He was born in Washington Co., Md., Feb. 15, 1812, where he lived until seventeen years old, when he went to Hampshire Co., Va., where he was married in 1832 to Elmira Ann Dawson, a sister of John Dawson of this town. He then went to Allegany Co., Md., worked in a mill three years, then returned to Hampshire Co., Va., and engaged in farming, where he lived until he came to Green county. With his wife and five children he came all the way by wagon, being twenty-seven and one-half days on the route. The parents of Mr. Northcraft have but two children—Michael, the brother of Samuel, lives in Minnesota. Mrs. Northcraft was born in Hampshire Co., Va., April 17, 1819. They have had ten children, seven of whom are now living—Mary E., Lucie Ann, Thomas J., Lewelan M., Franklin P., Martha C. and Josephine. One son, Isaac, died in Grundy Co, Mo., Sept. 4, 1872, in his thirty-eighth year.

Emily Jane died Sept 15, 1846, in her ninth year, and John M. died Sept. 5, 1846 at the age of five years.

Many came in 1845, some of whom will be mentioned in this connection.

William Frazee came during this year and settled on section 18. In 1881, he removed his family to Iowa, but still owns the farm, and intends to return.

Fitch Armstrong came at about the same time and settled on section 21. He died in the fall of 1856.

A. Armstrong, a resident on section 21, is a son of Fitch Armstrong, who was married in Portage, N. Y., to Amelia Scoville, a native of Connecticut. After his marriage he removed to Genesee county, where his wife died, leaving him with four children to mourn her loss. In the fall of 1845 he started with his family in a lumber wagon for Wisconsin. It took him about eight weeks to reach Green county. That fall he purchased a claim of 160 acres on section 21, for which he paid $40. He died on the old homestead in August, 1856. His children consist of two sons and two daughters—Armina, wife of B. F. Coon, residing in Iowa; Arteus, Lura, widow of Sylvanus Graham of this town; and Lycurgus, residing in Waverly, Iowa. Arteus was born in the town of Portage, Livingston Co., N. Y., Sept. 5, 1831. He came to this county in 1845. In 1852 he went to California, overland, with an ox team, being six months on the road. He was absent two years, and returned by the Isthmus route. He has been married twice. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Anson Sheffield. His present wife was Mrs. Pluma (Howard) Bryce, daughter of Philander Howard, of the town of Avon, Rock Co., Wis. Mr. Armstrong had five children by his first wife—Mary, wife of Charles Thompson, residing in Waverly, Iowa; Charles F., mayor of Clyde City, Kansas; Frank, resident of Waverly, Iowa; Orr, a station agent and telegraph operator; and Nettie. Mr. Armstrong has one child by his present wife—

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Madge, born Aug. 10, 1876. Mr. Armstrong purchased his present farm of Donald Johnson, and settled thereon in 1856.

W. B. Mack, of Brodhead, is a son of I. F. Mack, the original proprietor of the village of Decatur, also one of the original proprietors of the village of Brodhead, and for many years a prominent citizen of Green county, but since 1869, a resident of Chicago. I. F. Mack is a native of Springfield, Mass, where he was born in September, 1806. His father was a clergyman. I. F. was educated at Munson Academy, one of the oldest and best institutions of learning in Massachusetts. He went to Rochester, N. Y., when twenty years of age and engaged in teaching school about eighteen months, when he went to Cincinnati and taught the first public school in that city for one year, during which time he was instrumental in initiating the public school system there. He returned to Rochester and engaged in teaching again. He took a course of law, reading during the time. He afterwards engaged in mercantile operations, built two stores and three flouring mills and operated one for twelve years. This was at the time when Rochester possessed the largest milling interests of any city in the United States, if not in the world. He was for many years prominently connected with the educational interests of that city, and was the first superintendent of the city schools, under the free school system, of the State of New York. He came to Green county in 1848. He laid out the village of Decatur and was the principal business man of that village, being engaged in merchandising, milling and farming, also practicing law, having been admitted to the bar after coming to Decatur. He dealt largely in real estate, and was owner of a large amount of land on Sugar river. He was attorney and land commissioner of the Northern Iowa Railroad Company, and invested extensively in lands along the line of that road. He was also in the employment of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad company, settling claims, etc. In 1856

the village of Brodhead was laid out on land owned largely by himself, and he being one of the principal proprietors transferred his business headquarters to that place, also taking up his residence there in 1864. He was the first superintendent of schools under the present charter. He drew up the first charter for the village, and upon its incorporation was made president of the board of trustees. In 1870 he removed to Englewood, a beautiful suburb of Chicago. There he also aided in building up the schools, which now rank among the best in Illinois. He was one of the officers of the school board there. Seven buildings were erected under his supervision, and he erected seven residences, and dealt largely in real estate. He moved into Chicago proper in 1878, where he now lives. Although he has reached an advanced age, he is still actively engaged in business. He retains his powers of mind and body to a remarkable degree. He has been twice married. His first wife was Clarissa Beebe, a native of Vermont. She died in Rochester in January, 1848. He was married in August, 1848, at Oberlin, Ohio, by Rev. Dr. Finney, to Frances S. Day. He had by his first marriage seven sons, two of whom died quite young. The others came here with their father and four of them are still living—W. B., the subject of this sketch, is the eldest; I. F., Jr., is editor of the Sandusky, (Ohio) Daily Register, and is president of the Editorial Association of Ohio; William C. is postal clerk between Chicago and Centralia, and is also engaged in business in Chicago; John T. is associate editor and part proprietor of the Sandusky Register. E. B. Mack, deceased, was a journalist, and at the time of his death, which occurred in December, 1881, was the eastern manager for the Chicago Times, the St Louis Republican, the Louisville Courier Journal and the Cincinnati Gazette. He was an able journalist and a successful business man. There are also four surviving children by the second marriage, one son and three daughters. W. B. Mack was born in

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Rochester, N. Y., April 22, 1832. He received his education at the public schools in Rochester, N. Y., and at Oberlin, Ohio. He came to Green county in February, 1849. In March, 1852, he went to California where he engaged in mining and mechanical work, and for two years was book keeper for the Yuba River Water Ditch Company. In 1858 he returned to Green county and engaged in farming and mechanical occupations. He was for three and one-half years with the F. B. Gardner Company, of Chicago, at their milling and ship building establishment on Green Bay as head joiner; having charge of finishing their vessels. For nearly two years he was book keeper for the lumber firm of A. M. Spear & Co., on the east shore of Green bay. He has held the office of treasurer for two years, also held the office of justice eight years for the town of Decatur, and is at present village justice in Brodhead. He was married in June, 1858, to Ophelia Wicks, of New York city. They have four children living—Martha Wicks, Edward A., Ophelia and Cornelia M. They lost one child in May, 1879, Freddie, aged ten and a half years.

Jerome Bonaparte Fleek is one of the seven children of Adam Fleek, who came with his parents to this county in 1846. He was born in Hampshire Co., Va., Aug. 23, 1830. After coming to this county he remained with his parents until his twenty-eighth year. He was then married to Margaret Hightshoe, daughter of David Hightshoe, of the town of Sylvester, and settled on section 21, where he resided till 1868. In that year he sold his farm to Philip Kilwine, and removed to his present residence. He now owns 490 acres of land. Mr. and Mrs. Fleek have three children—Kate, Virgil and Wade Hampton. Mr. Fleek was the youngest of nine sons. Like other members of the numerous Fleek family in the town of Decatur, he has acquired a competence.

Warren E. Gardner resides on section 2, where his father, Dewey Gardner, settled in 1846. Dewey Gardner was born in Bennington, Vt.,

Sept. 10, 1807, where he was reared. He was married to Samantha Wadsworth, also born in the town of Bennington, Dec. 9, 1806. In 1845 he brought his family, consisting of a wife and three children, to Wisconsin, locating in Waukesha county. He only lived there one year, however, when he came to Green county. He improved his farm, and afterwards increased it to 508 acres. His widow still lives on the homestead with her son. They had three children—Gurdon, Warren E. and Martha. The latter is now the wife of Andrew Hall, who resides in Minnesota. Warren owns the homestead. He was born in Bennington, Vt., in 1839. He owns 548 acres of land, and is extensively engaged in stock raising.

Between 1845 and 1850 the town settled rapidly. Among the arrivals during this period were: John L. McNair, I. F. Mack, Samuel Mott, Anson Sheffield, J. B. Fleek, Dewey Gardner and a Mr. Pettibone.

Samuel Mott had a large family and made several claims. He joined the Utah Mormons in 1854.

Anson Sheffield came in 1846 and entered forty acres. In 1853 he sold to J. W. Stewart, joined the Mormons and went to Utah.

Mr. Pettibone came from Milwaukee in 1846 and located on the Sugar river, on section 10. With him came his two children, Harmon and Loretta. Mr. Pettibone died of cholera in 1849. The farm upon which he settled was divided between the children. The girl returned to Milwaukee, where she married and died. Harmon was rather an awkward boy, and fond of reading. He went to Ohio and attended school, his teacher being James A. Garfield, who was his cousin, and finally graduated at the Michigan State University in 1859. He studied law with Hon. J. E. Arnold, at Milwaukee, Wis., and entered into practice at La Crosse. When the war broke out he enlisted, and became major of the 20th Wisconsin regiment. In 1865 he resumed the practice of his profession at Greenville, Tenn. under the name of A. H. Pettibone. He has grown to be a prominent man, and is now serving his second term in Congress.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first birth in the town was that of Caroline Chambers, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Chambers, born in 1840. She is now the wife of Dr. Stair, of Black Earth, Wis.

The first school in the town was taught by Jabez Johnson, in a log school house, on section 20, on Mr. Moore's land. This was in the winter of 1844—5.

The first sermon preached in the town was delivered at the house of Thomas Chambers, in 1842, by Rev. Ash, a Methodist divine.

The first marriage in the town was that of Delilah J. Moore, daughter of John Moore, to William Riley, of the town of Jefferson. This was in 1842. Riley died in the town of Sylvester. His widow married again and removed to Kansas, where she died.

The first mill in the town of Decatur was erected in 1845—6, by William Jones, on section 15, on Sugar river.

During the early autumn of 1846, the first deaths in the town occurred. The season was a very sickly one. The first adults to be called away by death were: David Bigelow, and a young man named William Nipple, a brother of Fred. Nipple. The first children to die were:

John M. and Emily J. Northcraft. The former died Sept. 5, 1846, aged five years; the latter Sept. 15, 1846, aged nine years. These were children of Samuel and Elmira Northcraft.

The first blacksmith in the town was J. D. Cooper, who opened a shop in the village of Decatur in 1842.

The first dwelling was a log house erected by John Moore, on section 20, in the fall of 1839. It was on the farm now owned by Jacob L. Roderick. The cabin was removed from the spot where it first stood, by Mr. Roderick, and is now used as a tenant house on his farm.

The first bridge in the town of Decatur, as well as the first in Green county, was built across Sugar river on section 14, in 1842. It was 100 feet in length. All the neighbors for miles around gathered to raise the bridge, but as there was no one to engineer the work the gathering did not succeed in the undertaking, and the structure was afterward raised with machinery by a man from Beloit. Joseph Woodle, of Sylvester, built the bridge. It was in use until 1856, when, the road having been vacated, it was taken down.

There are seven full school districts in the town of Decatur, and educational facilities here are fully equal, if not superior, to those of any town in Green county. The districts are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 8 and 9. The following items, showing the condition of the various districts, were taken from the reports of the district clerks for the year ending June 30, 1883:

District No 1. W. E. Gardner is clerk of this district. Number of pupils of school age, twenty-three; have a frame building, first cost of which was $400, present valuation, $200.

District No. 2. William H. Murray, clerk. Total number of pupils of school age, twenty-eight. The school house in this district is a brick building.

District No. 3. W. L. Bowen, clerk; number of pupils of school age, nineteen; frame building in good condition, cost $800; present value, $500.

District No. 4. J. N. Davis, clerk; total number of pupils of school age, thirty-seven. This district has a brick house which cost $1,200; at present it is in good condition and is valued at $800.

District No. 6. E. D. Hall, clerk; number of pupils of school age, forty-three. This district has a stone school house, which cost about $1,000. Its present valuation is $500.

District No. 8. A. A. TenEyck, clerk; number of pupils, thirty. The district has a frame structure, the present valuation of which is $75.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

District No. 9. J. L. Roderick is clerk. Number of pupils thirty-three. The district has a frame building which cost $600.

There are two joint districts which embrace territory in this town. District No. 9, joint with Sylvester, has a building in the latter town. Nine of the pupils belong to this town. District No. 1, joint with Albany, embraces some territory in Decatur.

RELIGIOUS.

There are but two churches in the town of Decatur, outside of Brodhead: the M. E. Church on section 19, and the Baptist on section 6.

The first services of a religious character in the town, were held at the residence of Thomas Chambers, on section 19, in 1842. They were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Ash, a Methodist Episcopal missionary. Services were also held at the house of John J. Dawson at about the same time. Late in 1842 a class was formed. Among the members were: John and Mary A. Dawson, Thomas and Rebecca Chambers and Mrs. John Moore. Services were held at private houses until about 1844, when the log school house was erected on section 20. In 1848 a frame church 24x30 feet in size was built. The class increased gradually after its formation, and revivals were frequently held. John J. Dawson is the only one left of the original members. Nearly all of them are deceased. Regular services continued to be held until 1883, since which time most of the members have attended at Juda.

OFFICIAL ORGANIZATION.

The town of Decatur was organized in 1849. The first election, was held at the school house, near William Jones' residence, on the 3d of April, 1849. At that time the following town officers were elected: Supervisors, George Gardner; chairman, Fitch Armstrong and Horace Countryman; clerk, Martin Mitchell; treasurer, Roswell D. Bigelow; assessor, Perry Mitchell; superintendent of schools, Erastus Hurlburt; justices of the peace, Thomas Stewart, Martin Mitchell, William Wilford and John B. Sawyer; constables, Samuel Rowe, Walter W. Wheaton and Stephen B. Saunders; overseers of roads, Nelson F. Roberts and Charles A. Warner. At this meeting $120 was appropriated for school purposes, and $240 for contingent expenses. The judges of this election were: William Jones, Thomas Stewart and E. T. Fleek; D. Johnson was clerk of the election.

CEMETERIES.

In early days the dead of Decatur were buried on section 20, on the farm of John Moore. This was continued for a number of years, when a cemetery association was organized, to which Mr. Moore donated one acre of ground. This took the name of Moore's Cemetery. It is located not far from the spot formerly used for this purpose, and most of the bodies have been removed from the old to the new grounds.

The Monticello Baptist Church association have a cemetery in connection with their church on section 6, in this town. It was laid out in 1856. The first burial here was of the remains of Edmund Wheeler, who died Dec. 28, 1858. Bodies from other cemeteries, generally belonging to Baptist families, in adjoining towns, were re-interred here. The cemetery and church lot contain three acres.

DECATUR VILLAGE.

Decatur village was laid out in the spring of 1848, by William Jones. He had already built a house and soon afterward erected a hotel. A few years later I. F. Mack bought the greater part of the village. At this time the plat had not been recorded. Mr. Mack platted eighty acres and had it put upon record as Floraville, as a compliment to his wife's mother. Mr. Jones insisted that it should be called Decatur, and in 1852 it was so named by an act of the legislature. In 1857, the village had five stores, two hotels, two blacksmith shops, a wagon shop, a shoe shop and about 400 inhabitants.

A post office was established in the winter of 1841—2, with John Moore as postmaster. He had the office named Decatur, in honor of Commodore Decatur. From that the election precinct took the name, and later the village and town.

EARLY DAYS IN DECATUR, BY I. F. MACK.

The following is a letter received from I. F. Mack, regarding the early history of Decatur:

CHICAGO, MARCH 18, 1884.

"Your favor of the 10th inst., was received at my office during a weeks confinement at my home from a very severe attack of winter cholera. I am now in poor condition to either write or think. You can learn from my son, residing in Brodhead, many facts of Decatur's early history, and also from the Messrs. Fleek, of that town, who were among the earliest settlers. I reached Decatur in September, 1848, and found, settled in the township, four Fleek brothers, two brothers-in-law of theirs and John J. Putman, an uncle, all of them energetic, thrifty men.

"William Jones had run out his shingle from the door of a log house, and there kindly entertained strangers in that part of the town afterwards platted as the village of Floraville, subsequently changed to 'Decatur.' Poetic names did not take well on the frontier at that day.

"In the spring of 1849 the village was platted and soon it numbered 100 souls. Martin Mitchell was the first man to dispense candy, pins and needles to the children and ladies, and Dr. R. Morris was the first disciple of Esculapius that dared to meet the stragglers Indians (squaws) that yearly came to fish and trap in the bayous of the river, the Indian name of which was 'Sweet Water.'

"The doctor and merchant above reached there in 1848, a few days or weeks before the writer, but it was reserved for the latter and his family to purchase 'William Jones' squatter rights in the town, complete the platting, and finish the saw mill begun by him.

"In 1851 M. B. Edson and John Brown were attracted to the place and erected a small mill near the site of the saw mill and operated it a short time until fever-heat, resulting from severe friction, led to their separation and sale of the mill to the family of the writer, by whom it was operated for a time until sold to the Messrs. Hendries, who afterwards merged it with the Brodhead mill property and razed it for that purpose.

"In 1851 or 1852 Mr. Mitchell left for the gold mines of California, and J. B. Sawyer figured for a time as merchant in Decatur, but soon gave place to William, Joseph and Isaac Porter, who conducted a very respectable store of general merchandise for several years, and until some time, even, after Brodhead started, and until many of the buildings in Decatur had been taken down and removed to the new town, insisting that Brodhead would not 'make much of a shower,' and that Decatur would prove the lode-stone for the country around. They succumbed at last and removed to the town of Porter, Rock Co., Wis., where they are now thrifty farmers.

"Monroe furnished a man who was a sheriff, and who was charged with letting a murderer escape from his custody at a hotel, who erected and run for years previous to 1856 a very good public house at Decatur. (This man was C. H. Thomas.) Others will give you his history. William Jones sold his remaining lands in Decatur soon after Brodhead started, and removed with his family to Iola, Kansas, where he died many years ago.

"The writer has witnessed the opening up and settling of more than one new settlement of farmers, and he has never known one compare with the town of Decatur, in regard to the frugality, integrity and unyielding energy of its early settlers, and if their descendents fail to make a judicious use of their inheritance, the guilt of great ingratitude will lay at their door."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Among the prominent farmers of the town of Decatur are the following named:

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Adam Fleek, oldest son of Benjamin H. Fleek, was born in Licking Co., Ohio, in 1842, and came with his father to Green county in 1845. He was married to Margaret Dixon, daughter of Martin Dixon, and they have three children—Fanny, Llewellyn and Adam. Mr. Fleek purchased his farm, which is located on section 27, of his father. It was entered by Christopher Waterkot and Anson Sheffield, and contains 282 acres. He also owns considerable land elsewhere in this town. Mrs. Fleek was born at Juda, in this county, in 1850. Her parents were early settlers in the town of Jefferson. They now reside in Evansville, Rock county.

Franklin J. Burt lives on section 6, town of Decatur, on a farm (on Jordan Prairie) which his father purchased in 1847. He is a son of John Burt, who was born in Washington Co., N. Y., Jan. 13, 1800, and came here with his family in 1847, and remained until his death, which occurred in 1853. His wife, Samantha (Lamb) Burt, was born in Washington Co., N. Y., in 1799. They were married in Onondaga Co., N. Y., in 1825, and she died in 1873. Two sons and one daughter came with them—Frank J., Harriet and Russell. The latter was always an invalid, and died in October, 1865, aged thirty years. Harriet was married to Lyman Dexter in 1847, and died in 1852. Frank J., the subject of this sketch, was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1826, and came to Decatur with his father, as before stated, in 1847, from which time he has been a resident. He was married to Emily A. Turman, daughter of Benjamin Turman, who came to Green county from Indiana in the fall of 1847. She was born in Sullivan county, that State, in November, 1826. Benjamin Turman was born near Harper's Ferry, Va., in 1802, and when but a boy removed with his parents to Urbana, Ohio, and was married at Vincennes, Ind., to Prudence Nash, also a native of Virginia. Until he came here in 1848 he owned the homestead in Indiana, and was always a large land owner. Among other real estate, he owned for a number of years that part of Milwaukee known as "Walker's Point." Merchandising in Perrysville, Ind., was a part of his business while there. A year previous to his coming to this county he resided in Texas, and was a man of ability, having served a number of times as a member of the legislature from Indiana. Politically he was a democrat, and took quite an interest in the welfare of that party. He removed to Missouri in 1867. His first wife died in 1841. His second and present wife was Mrs. Mary (Miller) James. They reside at Higginsville, Mo. Mrs. Burt was born in Sullivan Co., Ind., on the old homestead, in 1826, and had good advantages for securing a good education. Her father, being in affluent circumstances, was able to give his family such opportunities. She came to this county with her father in 1847, and taught school for three years, being among the early teachers of the county. She is a lady of more than ordinary culture and ability. Mr. and Mrs. Burt have two sons—John A. and Frank Henri. The former was born Dec. 13, 1854, and the latter Feb. 25, 1864. They lost one son, called Charlie, at the age of fifteen years. Mr. Burt is a thorough going, successful farmer, and is engaged quite extensively in stock raising. He makes the raising of fine horses a specialty. Although he seems to have had his share of reverses, yet by the energy and perseverance of himself and his wife he has secured a competence, and is now in the enjoyment of a home honestly gained.

Frederick Enfield is a resident of section 29, where he settled in 1848, and which he purchased of the government. Mr. Enfield has resided in the county since April 29, 1844. He lived in the town of Spring Grove, about one year, then removed to the town of Jefferson, where he also lived about one year. He finally settled in the town of Spring Grove in 1846, on forty acres of land, which he entered. He came here from that town. Mr. Enfield was born in Somerset Co., Penn., Jan. 13, 1819, where he was reared to manhood on a farm. He is a son of Frederick and Catharine (Boyer) Enfield, who resided in Pennsylvania until their decease. His father was born in Somerset county, and his mother was born just across the line in the State of Maryland. The subject of this sketch came direct to this county from Pennsylvania. His wife was Matilda Mitchell, daughter of John A. and Rebecca Mitchell. Mrs. Enfield was born June 9, 1825, in Somerset Co., Penn. They had thirteen children, eleven of whom are living. In the fall of 1862, Mr. Enfield enlisted in the 22d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. He was captured at the battle of Spring Hill, Tenn., and was sent to Libby prison, where he remained a prisoner one month, when he was exchanged. Although his prison life was short he had passed through trials and hardships that he will ever remember. Being too ill to accompany Sherman on his march to the sea, he rejoined his regiment on the Atlantic coast and took part in the grand review at Washington. He was formerly a strong man, but his army life left him broken in health. He still suffers much from disease contracted in the army. Mr. and Mrs. Enfield began life in limited circumstances, in Green county, but by industry and economy, have secured for themselves and family a beautiful home. His farm contains 160 acres.

John A. Clemmer, who now lives on section 6, town of Decatur, has been a resident of this county since April 12, 1850. He was born in Fayette Co., Penn., in 1832. His parents are Jasper and Delilah Clemmer, of the town of Sylvester, where they settled in 1850. John A. came to the county with his parents. He was married to Rhoda U. Whitcomb, daughter of James and Nancy (Goltry) Whitcomb. She came to this county with her parents, in 1849, and settled in the town of Mount Pleasant. Mr. Whitcomb was a native of Steuben Co., N. Y., born May 17, 1812, where he was married and removed to Indiana with his family, coming here from Indiana. Mrs. Clemmer was born in the State of New York, in 1834. Mr. and Mrs.

Clemmer have six children—Laura A., Clara L. C., Nannie D., Cora A., Letha J. and John F. The farm contains 188 acres.

L. N. Lewis, a resident of section 3, was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., in 1830. He settled in Green county, in 1850, but had entered his land in 1849. He entered 132 acres, but now owns 180 acres. He is a son of Leonard and Elizabeth (Allen) Lewis, also natives of the same county. They came to Wisconsin in 1852, and settled in Dane county, in the village of Mt. Vernon, where they lived until their decease. They had ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity. L. N. is the only one of the family who was an early settler of this county. A brother, John L., settled in Dane county very early. He is now chief-of-police of Madison. The subject of this sketch was married near Stoughton, Wis., to Sophronia A. Stillwell, born in the State of New York, in 1825. They have six children—Frank B., Laura, Arthur, Minnie, Ethan Allen and Marion Stillwell, twin boys. Mr. Lewis' mother, Elizabeth (Allen) Lewis, was a descendant of Ethan Allen, of Revolutionary fame. Mrs. Lewis' parents were Ezra and Polly (Howe) Stillwell. They came to Wisconsin, from New York, in about 1852, and settled in Dane county, where her father died the following year. Her mother now lives in Waukon, Iowa.

Samuel Rowe was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1808. When a young man he removed to the State of Illinois, where he was married. He came to Green county with John Dawson. He located on section 20, of the town of Decatur, where he made a claim of 160 acres, eighty acres of which he entered. The other eighty acres was "jumped" by a man named Mott, who entered the same, and of whom Mr. Rowe purchased it. His wife, Margaret Brown, was a native of Centre Co., Penn. Mr. Rowe died April 18, 1872. Mrs. Rowe died on the 13th of the following September. They had eight children, seven of whom are living—John B., Catharine A., Amos C., Elmira (deceased),

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Elizabeth M., William F., Emma S. and Viola M. Amos C., who owns and occupies the homestead, was born here in 1846. He was married to Emma V. Fleek, daughter of Edmund T. Fleek. Mr. and Mrs. Rowe have two children (twins)—Lola B. and Lee B., born Dec. 18, 1883. Mr. Rowe's farm contains 213 acres. He also owns twenty acres of timbered land.

Jesse Mitchell resides on section 31, town of Decatur, where he settled in 1853, upon a farm bought from his father, who obtained it from the government. Jesse Mitchell was born in the town of Wharton, Fayette Co., Penn., in 1813, where he was reared and married. A brother-in-law, Allen Woodle, had come to this county about 1835, and through his influence Mr. Mitchell was induced to emigrate from Pennsylvania to this county. On the 14th day of March, 1837, he left his home in Fayette county with his wife and child, and the following day took a steamer at Brownsville, on the Monongahela river, thence went down the Ohio, and up the Mississippi to Galena, and from there with ox team to the town of Sylvester, which place they reached April 19, forty-seven years ago. His brother-in-law, Joseph Woodle, with a wife and five children, accompanied him, and these men were the first settlers of what is now the town of Sylvester. Mr. Mitchell resided in that town until he came here, as stated, in 1853. He has been twice married. His first wife, who came with him from Pennsylvania, was formerly Priscilla Woodle, born in Fayette Co., Penn., in 1813. She died in 1849. His second and present wife was Mrs. Lucina (Oviatt) Damon, who was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1823, where in 1842 she was married to Alexis G. Damon, and came with her husband to Sylvester in 1843. Mr. Damon died in 1846. Mr. Mitchell had six children by his first marriage, four of whom are still living—Martha A., Hannah, Abner and Thomas. By his present wife he has seven children—Owen, Frank, Lois, Lucretia, Julia A., Cynthia and John A. Mrs. Mitchell had two children by her marriage with Mr. Damon—Samuel, who was a member of the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and died in the service of his country at Danville, Ky., and one daughter, who died in infancy. Mr. Mitchell has been a member of the Baptist Church for fifty years. His wife is also a member of the same Church. His father, Abner Mitchell, came to the town of Spring Grove in 1844, and died in Decatur in the fall of 1883, on his eighty-fourth birthday. He was a man of considerable ability, and in 1853 was a member of the Wisconsin legislature.

Thomas Munger, of the town of Decatur, resides on section 28, on a farm purchased from Sanford Cochran, who bought it from Noah Ball, the original owner. It contains 175 acres. When Mr. Munger purchased the farm, in the fall of 1854, but little improvement had been made. A log house had been built and about thirty acres broken. For this place he paid $15 per acre. Mr. Munger was born in Erie Co., Penn., in 1825, where he continued to live until he came to this county. His parents, Thomas and Pattie Munger, were natives of the State of New York, and removed to Pennsylvania in 1824, where they lived until death, the father reaching the age of sixty-six years, and the mother seventy-two. Thirteen children were born to them, of whom Thomas is the youngest, and he was married Feb. 13, 1847, to Nancy Colton, a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y. They have four children, one son and three daughters—Judson, Polly A., Mary E. and Sophrona.

Walgrave Atherton came to the town of Decatur in 1854. He settled on section 9, in 1855. He was born in Licking Co., Ohio, Aug. 4, 1826. His parents were John and Clarissa Atherton. The former was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., the latter in the State of New York, and they moved to Licking Co., Ohio, where they lived until their decease. Walgrave Atherton is the only one of his father's family who settled in Green county. He was married in 1852 to Ann Elizabeth Putnam, a daughter of John J. Putnam, and she was born in Athens Co., Ohio, in 1829, and came here with her parents in 1849. Mr. Atherton came to Decatur from Ohio, for his wife, with whom he was acquainted in Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Atherton have had nine children, eight sons and one daughter. Their daughter, Florence V., was the eldest, and died when nineteen years old. Their son, (deceased,) was Charles Ernest, who died April 4, 1873. Their living children are—Edwin P., born April 27, 1855; John J. P., born Feb. 23, 1857; Oliver H., born June 21, 1858; George W., born April 28, 1860; Elmer E., born June 13, 1862; Harry C., born June 2, 1864, and Fred. V., born Dec. 11, 1871. Mr. Atherton first purchased 157 acres without improvements. The farm now contains 300 acres. He also owns the farm settled by Thomas Stewart in this town, containing 192 acres.

Philip Kilwine lives on section 21, where he has a fine farm of 158 acres, where he settled in March, 1868. This farm was obtained from Jerome B. Fleek. He was born in Baden, Germany, in 1820, and learned the trade of mason. He came to this country in 1853, and first lived in Illinois three years, where he worked at his trade. He was married to Julia Bach, who was born in Baden, Germany, in 1824. They have one son, Philip, who was born in Germany in 1845, and now lives on section 29, town of Decatur. Mr. Kilwine is one of the prominent farmers of the town Decatur. His residence, costing $2,000, was burned April 24, 1883. He rebuilt at about the same cost a fine dwelling, which he now occupies.

Russell J. Day settled on his present farm on section 13, of the town of Decatur, in 1855. The farm was purchased from Myron Hulsted by Warren Day, father of Russell, who received the deed from his father in 1864. The first transfer of the place was by Henry Hubbard to Franklin W. Day, in 1851; the consideration being $600. The next transfer was to Myron Hulsted, the same year, consideration $850; and thence to Warren Day for $3,500. The farm contains 160 acres, and is situated one and one-half miles north of the railroad depot, at Brodhead. Russell J. Day was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., in 1829, where he lived until 1856, then came to Brodhead, and has lived on this place since that time. His father, Dr. Warren Day, was a native of Vermont, and practiced medicine for forty years in Herkimer county. He came to this county in 1863, and lived with his son until his decease in 1871. Dr. W. Day's wife died here in 1865. Russell J. Day was married in Herkimer county, to Sarah Wood, a native of Herkimer county. They have three children—Will R., Jane W. and Fayette W. Mr. Day has made many improvements on the place, and the farm is now a beautiful and attractive place.

George W. Chace came to Green county in 1856, and the first few months of his residence here, was employed in driving a stage which carried the mail from Albany to Footville, for S. F. Nichols. He then engaged in keeping the hotel, that is now the Nichols House, at Albany, about nine months. After this he joined the surveying corps, that was surveying the Albany Railroad, then engaged in farming in the town of Albany. In 1862 he enlisted in the 31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served till the close of the war. He continued with the regiment eighteen months, after which he was detailed in the quartermaster's department until the end of the war. He was very near worn out in health when he returned from the army to Albany, where he opened a restaurant and meat market, which he continued one year, then exchanged his property for a farm at Spring Valley Corners, Rock county, where he resided five years. He then exchanged his farm for a meat market in Brodhead, which he carried on for about two years, then traded it for his present farm on section 14, of Decatur. This was in the spring of 1875. He did not settle immediately upon the farm, but worked the land and opened a restaurant and confectionery in Brodhead, also carried on the ice business in that village. Mr. Chace was born at Boston, Mass., in 1821. He resided in New England, and the State of New York, and Ohio, until he came to Wisconsin. He was married in 1843, at Portsmouth, R. I., to Abby Gifford, a native of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Chace have three children—George F., Helen K. and Charles S.

A. A. TenEyck resides on land which his father obtained from the government in 1839, who first settled in the town of Spring Grove and commenced improvements on this farm about 1859. It is located on section 34, town of Decatur, and was occupied by A. A. TenEyck, in October, 1874. He was born in the State of New York, on the Hudson river, but came to this county from Canada with his father. He was married to Amanda Moore, a native of Vermont, and a daughter of Isaac Moore. They have six children—Albert M., Lena A., Sarah J., Belle, Robert T. and Frank A. They lost one son—Walter. The farm contains 376 acres.

Jacob L. Roderick owns and resides on the first farm entered in the town of Decatur. It was entered by John Moore, in the fall of 1839, and originally contained 160 acres. It now comprises 237 acres. Mr. Roderick was born in Fayette Co., Penn., in 1850, and came to this county with his father, in 1862, and has been a resident of Decatur since that time. He was married to Allie Fleek, a daughter of Benjamin H. Fleek. She was born in 1851. They have four children—Iva M., Myrtle M., Susan A. and Benjamin H.

Mrs. Mary Cole, widow of Austin Cole, resides on section 32, town of Decatur, where they settled in November, 1867, but were residents of the county several years previous. He was born in Erie Co., Penn., Oct. 31, 1833, where he lived until his marriage, in 1857, when he came to Green county. He married Mary Shults, born in Erie Co., Penn., in 1838. Mr. Cole died May 24, 1878, in his forty-fifth year, leaving his wife and two children—Fred., born in 1868, and Ella, born in 1870. The farm contains 140 acres.

Andrew Smith resides on section 13, where he settled in 1866. His first settlement was on government land, in the town of Spring Valley, in Rock county, where he lived before making his present selection in February, 1866. He was born in Roxburghshire, Scotland, March 4, 1825. He came to this country with his father's family, in 1840. The family lived three years near Portage, N. Y. The father settled in Rock county, in 1843, where he lived until his decease. Andrew was married to Ellen Atkinson, who was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1824, and came to the United States with her parents in 1843. Her family came to Wisconsin three or four years later, and settled in the town of Albany, where they still live. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have four children—Belle, wife of Ronaldo Fleek; Archie, Janie, wife of William Bell; and Bessie, at home. The farm contains 200 acres.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

VILLAGE OF BRODHEAD.

In the extreme eastern portion of Green county lies the village of Brodhead—one of the most important business centers in the southern part of the State. It is beautifully located, on an undulating prairie, which extends eastward from the Sugar river. The civil town in which the village is located is one of the banner subdivisions of Green county. The Sugar river, which winds its course to the west of the village, furnishes excellent water privileges here, which have been utilized, and now comprise a valuable concomitant of the village in propelling a vast amount of machinery. The inhabitants here are almost wholly Americans—people from the New England and northern States, who have brought with them the culture and refinement of the eastern States, the absence of which, in some portions of the west, is so painfully apparent. Brodhead is by no means an old town, yet a quarter of a century and more has passed since its inception. Almost a generation has come and gone since Brodhead became a fixed fact. While there is nothing remarkable in the changes that have been wrought, there is a great deal to occupy the attention of the historian and attract the interest of the reader.

The plat of Brodhead covers all of section 25, and portions of sections 24 and 36, township 2 north, range 9 east. The Mineral Point branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway passes through the village from east to west, and a branch of that line of railway has been extended from this place to Albany. The Sugar river touches the northwest corner of the plat, and the mill race carries the water to the mill, nearer the center of the plat.

THE BEGINNING.

Early in 1856 E. D. Clinton, agent for the Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad, started west from Janesville to secure the right of way for the railroad through Green county, and also get subscriptions for stock. Arriving in the eastern part of the county, he went to Decatur to see what he could do in the way of “inducement” for the railroad. He received no encouragement there, however, neither as to right of way or taking stock. At that time Decatur was quite an important point. The stage road from Janesville to Monroe passed through the village, and this was the commercial center of all this country, there being a number of stores, a hotel, wagon, blacksmith, shoe and other shops, a post office, and all the concomitants of a healthy, thriving village. Here it was supposed the railroad must come, and the people of Decatur did not imagine that the railroad could afford to leave them in the cold. Deacon Clinton negotiated with them for some time, but could not arrive at anything satisfactory. He then visited several villages in this region, and held public meetings in many of the school houses. He finally arrived at the present site of Brodhead, and determined, if possible, to secure a site and right of way here. The owners of the land here—John L. Thomas, I. F. Mack and Erastus Smith—refused to donate right of way and depot grounds; but offered to sell three-fourths of the land, and proposed then that all the owners give their share. This was agreed to, and after negotiations closed and the bargain was completed the proprietors of Brodhead were: Edward Brodhead, of Milwaukee, then chief engineer of the railroad; E. D. Clinton, John P. Dixon, of Janesville, John L. McNair, I. F. Mack, Erastus Smith and John L. V. Thomas. The town proprietors donated the railroad company a right of way and depot grounds. The village was platted into lots and blocks by the railroad company's surveyor in 1856, the original plat occupying all of section 25; eight blocks on section 36, and four blocks on section 24. Since that time additions have been made by Mr. Pierce and J. P. Dixon on the north; E. D. Clinton on the south; and Day & West on the west.

Before the interests of the proprietors were divided, a lot was donated to John P. Dixon conditioned upon his erecting a store building. He at once erected a double frame building, two stories high, about 40x60 feet in size. It stood on block 88. This was the first building of any size erected on the site. In this building the first business in the village was established, by Sherman, Clinton & Co. They moved their stock of general merchandise into the south room of the Dixon building, in the spring of 1856. Shortly afterward Edson C. Clinton established a hardware store in the north room of Dixon's building. The old building, a few years ago, was replaced by a neat brick building. In 1857 James Sherman bought out the interest of Mr. Clinton, in the firm of Sherman, Clinton & Co., and the firm became J. T. Sherman & Co. They continued for about two years, when they were bought out by Edson C. Clinton, who, as stated, was running a hardware store in the other part of the building. He ran both stores for a number of years.

During the summer of 1856, Dr. M. L. Burnham came from the east and put up a building on Centre street, about a block north, on the opposite side of the street from the Dixon building. It was a two story building, the upper story being occupied as a dwelling. In the lower story, Dr. Burnham opened a drug store. A few years later, he erected a store building on the east side of Centre street, and moved his stock of drugs into it. Joshua Nanscawn succeeded Dr. Burnham in the drug business, and after continuing for several years, moved his stock of goods to Fort Howard, Wis. C. J. Sherman now runs a hardware store in the old Burnham building.

During the fall of 1856, a furniture store was started by Joseph Merrill. L. Fisher, a brother-in-law of Mr. Merrill, came this year and is still a resident of Brodhead.

In the fall of 1856, E. D. Clinton, Ransom Taft and Jacob Ten Eycke, erected a hotel on Thomas street. It was a good sized frame building, being 30x60 feet in size, with an "L" to the rear, 24x50 feet in size. It was two stories high with basement, and cost about $3,500, including the erection of the barn. Ransom Taft opened the building as a hotel, and ran it for three or four years, when the other owners took it, Mr. Clinton, at this time, having a two-thirds interest. They sold to James Campbell, then president of the Sugar River Valley Railroad Company, and he moved the building to Cresco, Iowa. This was known as the Clinton House, and the building, when taken down for removal, was so carefully handled and marked, that when it was again put up in Iowa, the name, which had been painted on the side, read the same, without a letter or shade being out of place.

Late in 1856 I. W. Thayer commenced the erection of a hotel on the south side of the railroad track. The building was finished in 1857, and was opened to the public for hotel purposes by Mr. Thayer. He sold to W. B. Manley, who in turn sold to J. B. Searles. Mr. Searles owned the building until it was burned to the ground.

Ransom Taft, during the season of 1856, erected a dwelling, which stood where Deacon Clinton's residence is now located. James Sherman bought the building, and it was moved to

Clinton Street, where it still stands. It is now occupied by Mr. Atkinson.

During the same season, (1856), dwellings were erected by Edson C. and Henry P. Clinton. The former put up a dwelling on Clinton Street, in which his widow still lives. Henry erected a building on the same street, about two blocks farther north. He lived and died in that dwelling. It is now occupied by H. P. Clark.

In 1856 Mr. Wade erected the Farmers Hotel. He sold to James G. Patton. It is now owned by J. V. Patrick, and is still used for hotel purposes.

BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT.

Thus the growth of the village progressed. Times grew better as the financial panic of 1857 was passed. Then came the outbreak of the Rebellion with its attendant demand for men and money. But through all this, Brodhead had a steady and permanent growth, until today it has become one of the best points for trade in southern Wisconsin. As trade increased and the business of the village began to assume city proportions, the general merchandise business—which, in early days, is one of the features of every village—began to separate, and instead of the stores handling a little of everything they took one line exclusively.

As has been stated, the first stock of general merchandise in Brodhead was owned by Sherman, Clinton & Co., who established business in 1856.

Martin Mitchell, a Decatur merchant, was the second. He removed his goods to this place in 1858, and continued in trade until his death. The firm of Wheaton & Mitchell, successors to Martin Mitchell, were in business until the death of Mr. Wheaton.

The third merchant to carry a general stock was Myron Halstead. He built a store building on the south side of the railroad track in 1857, and in the spring of 1858 removed his stock of goods from the old town of Clarence where he had been in trade, and located at Brodhead. He afterwards took in a partner, and the firm came Halstead & Smith. This firm had a good trade for several years.

B. R. Clawson and B. F. Roderick establish business in 1862. In 1865 Mr. Roderick purchased his partner's interest and continued alone until February, 1867, when W. W. Roderick and Sylvester Stewart purchased a half interest in the business and the firm became B. F. Roderick and Co. In about 1870 B. F. Roderick withdrew and the firm name changed to Stewart & Roderick. About three years later Sylvester Stewart became sole proprietor and in December, 1877, removed the stock of goods to Zumbrota, Minn.

In 1884 the dealers in general merchandise at Brodhead were: W. W. Roderick, Aurand & Terry, Gould & Iverson, J. G. Orr, and the Brodhead Mercantile Association.

W. W. Roderick, general merchant, began business in Brodhead as a clerk, in 1865, for B. F. Roderick, now of Sioux Falls, Dak. In 1867 he engaged as a partner in the business, the firm name becoming B. F. Roderick & Co. This firm existed about three years, when B. F. retiring, the firm became Stewart & Roderick. Four years later Mr. Roderick retired from the business, and in January, 1878, established his present business. He keeps a complete general stock, including dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, etc. Mr. Roderick was born in Fayette Co., Penn., in 1844. His father, Jacob Roderick, Sr., came to this county with his family, in 1861, and settled in the town of Jefferson. Mr. Roderick was a soldier in the War for the Union, enlisting in January, 1864, in company D, 36th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served till the end of the Rebellion. He joined Gen. Grant's army at Spottsylvania, which was the first battle in which he was engaged. He participated in the siege of Petersburg, where he was slightly wounded. He also witnessed the finishing stroke of the Rebellion, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House. His father now lives in Nebraska.

The family of children consists of five, four sons and one daughter—Mrs. Mary A. Blythe, in Nebraska; B. F., at Sioux Falls, Dak.; John M., in Nebraska; W. W. and G. B., the latter Minnesota. Mr. Roderick married Anna Lyman, born in Walworth Co., Wis. They have two children—Maud and an infant son.

The first to embark in the drug trade at Brodhead was Dr. N. L. Burnham. In 1857 he erected a store and dwelling, and established business. The building which he erected is now occupied as a dwelling by B. R. Clawson. Dr. Burnham soon associated Mr. Bliss as partner, built a new store building and carried a stock of groceries in connection with the drugs. Within a few years Burnham & Bliss dissolved partnership, Bliss taking the groceries and Burnham the drugs. The latter was succeeded in business by J. Nanscawn & Son, who removed the stock to Fort Howard, Wis.

The second drug business was established by Taylor & Nanscawn. The latter named gentleman sold his interest to Mr. Mitchell, and the firm became Taylor & Mitchell. About fifteen months later D. W. H. Taylor became sole proprietor. Mr. Taylor had his brother associated with him a short time, but his interest was soon purchased by E. J. Hutchinson, and the firm of Taylor & Hutchinson continued until D. W. H. Taylor again became sole proprietor. He closed out the stock.

The third druggists were Morris & Persons. They established business and continued about six months, when Persons withdrew and R. Morris continued alone for a short time, when he was succeeded by Clark & Walling. This firm, in 1872, changed to Clark, Towne & Co. Two years later the firm became Clark & Towne, and so continued until February, 1884, since which it has been L. E. & Son.

Broughton Bros. & Co., established business in 1869. In 1870 the firm became Broughton Bros., and has so continued to the present time.

Kuns Bros. opened a drug store in 1880. This firm was succeeded by Stair Bros., who are still in business. E. M. Lyons entered into trade in May, 1883.

E. C. Clinton, the pioneer hardware dealer, came from Waukesha and established business here in 1856. He sold in 1857 to Taft & Clinton, who closed out in 1860.

Taylor & Eyer opened a store on the south side of the railroad in 1858. They afterwards removed to the north side, and in about 1860 closed business.

Leonard Lakin came from Janesville and established business here in 1859. He continued several years, then sold the tin and stove department to Spaulding & Brown, and the hardware to M. Morse. The latter gentleman afterwards also bought out Spaulding & Brown, and continued in trade until 1871, when he was succeeded by Bloom & Roach. Mr. Roach afterwards withdrew from the firm, and Mr. Bloom removed the stock to Monroe.

George T. Spaulding established business in 1872. He was succeeded in 1883 by G. A. Metcalf & Co., and this firm in the spring of 1884 by Sherman & Moore, who are still in trade. J. M. Lauby established his present business in 1880. Mitchell & Durgon entered into trade in 1866. Mr. Mitchell soon sold his interest to G. R. Monell, and the firm became Monell & Durgon. In about 1870 G. R. Monell became sole proprietor, and two years later closed out the stock.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

The first to become an exclusive dealer in agricultural implements and farm machinery was Mr. Eastman. He established business in 1870 and continued about two years. This line is now represented by J. B. Searles and George T. Spaulding.

J. B. Searles has been a resident of Green county since 1859, and was here temporarily in 1856. He is a native of Camillus, Onondaga Co., N. Y., where he was born in 1836. In 1846 his father, E. H. Searles, started westward with his family, his objective point being the town of Sylvester, in Green county, where a brother, J. M. Searles, had already located. He shipped his goods to Chicago by steamboat, and with his family traveled with team and wagon. On reaching Michigan he was induced, by the glowing accounts of the country, to locate in the Grand river country, in that State, where he remained till his death. His wife with the younger children of the family removed to Kansas, where she still resides. J. B. Searles was the eldest of the family of seven children. He left home when twenty-three years of age, and did not accompany his mother to Kansas, but came to this county, as before stated, in 1859. He has a brother, Robert D., living in the town of Sylvester. J. B. Searles located in Jefferson where he lived until he came to Brodhead. He has been very successful in business, and is the owner of two good farms in the town of Jefferson, also valuable real estate elsewhere in the county. He is engaged in selling farm machinery and does a large and profitable business. His wife was Charlotte A. Patrick, daughter of C. V. Patrick, of Brodhead. Mr. and Mrs. Searles have three children—Charles, Elijah H. and Frank.

George T. Spaulding, of Brodhead, was born in Proctorsville, Vt., in 1833; his father was Ira Spaulding. He was one of the early business men of Brodhead, having come here in 1856. He was for some time engaged as tinner in the hardware store of E. C. Clinton. He served his country during the War of the Rebellion, first enlisting in the 3d regiment, Wisconsin Infantry, as a member of the regimental band, July 2, 1861, serving in that capacity under Gen. Patterson, at Harper's Ferry during the first battle of Bull Run, then under Gen. Banks in the Luray and Shenandoah Valleys, Va., taking part in his advances and in his retreat from Strasburg, Va., to Williamsport, Penn., in 1862, soon after being mustered out of service by an act of Congress, discharging all regimental bands and only allowing brigade bands, afterwards re-enlisted in the 1st brigade, third division, fifteenth army corps, as a member of the 1st brigade band. He participated in a number of important campaigns, including Atlanta and "Sherman's march to the sea." After the war he was engaged in the hardware business, in the firm name of Spaulding & Brown, for two years. From 1870 to 1883, he conducted the hardware trade alone, being succeeded by the firm of Metcalf & Sherman. His principal business at this time is selling farm machinery, and he has an extensive trade; his sales for 1883 amounted to about $25,000. He is an excellent business man and has accumulated a fine property. He still owns the store building in which he conducted the hardware business and other valuable property. He is the town treasurer for 1884, a position he has held for eight successive years. In 1860 Mr. Spaulding returned to Vermont and was married to Fidelia Shedd, a native of that State. They have two daughters—Lena and Carrie.

The first person to sell cabinet work in Brodhead was Joseph Merrill. He opened a shop in 1857, and continued for about two years. The first regular cabinet shop was opened by Samuel Bennett, late in 1857, and he manufactured the first work of this character here. He conducted the shop until 1866, when he was succeeded by E. L. Ryan, who continued a number of years, then sold to R. M. Smith. He worked at the business for about one year, when it was discontinued. Bennett & Barnes opened a shop in 1872. One year later Mr. Bennett sold to F. B. Smith. This firm continued for a year or two, when Mr. Barnes sold to F. B. Smith and went to Dakota. Mr. Smith continued four or five years, when Barnes returned, and again the two became associated together. In 1881 Mr. Barnes purchased Mr. Smith's interest, and continued in the business until 1883, when he was succeeded by Payne & Payne, who still conduct the business.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

E.W. Payne, of the firm of Payne & Payne, who represent the furniture business in Brodhead, was born at Monroe, in this county, in 1859, and is a son of Willard Payne, of that city. He learned the business of cabinet making in Grand Rapids, Mich., where he served an apprenticeship of three years. His wife was Nellie Campbell, also of Monroe. F. W. Payne, his cousin, and partner, was born in Monroe, and is a son of Calvin Payne, and his wife was Carrie Parks, of Monroe. Payne & Payne engaged in business in Brodhead, in April, 1883, succeeding Ira Barnes. These gentlemen are both young men, enterprising and thoroughly acquainted with their business. They keep a complete general stock of goods, and are establishing an excellent business.

SHOEMAKERS.

L. S. Fisher, the pioneer shoemaker, opened his shop in 1856, and still continues to do custom work.

The second was Mr. Bowman. He remained about three years. Mr. Goodhue came and went, and Jacob Bush and Mr. Hintz have shops at present.

HOTELS.

The Young House was built in 1868 by John A. Young, and was first opened to the public in May, 1869, although not fully completed until August of said year. It is a brick structure, 52x62 feet in size, including kitchen, and is forty-five feet high—three stories. The building cost about $10,000, the site costing $2,500, and the furniture $4,000. The house has good fire escapes, and first-class accommodations to forty-five persons. A larger number, however, has frequently been entertained, It is the leading hotel in Green county.

John A. Young, owner and proprietor of the "Young House" at Brodhead, was born in the town of Berne, Albany Co., N. Y., Aug. 5, 1832. He removed with his parents to the town of New Scotland, when a child. His father was a carpenter by trade, and in limited circumstances, and John began early to earn his own living, thereby acquiring those habits of industry and frugality which have attended him through life, enabling him to secure a competence. At the age of fifteen he engaged in work upon a farm at $4 per month. At the end of the year his employer presented him with $2 in addition to his wages, making $50 for his services for a year. He was employed the next year by the same farmer, at $8 per month, commanding higher wages on account of scarcity of laborers, caused by the prevalence of cholera that season. Though but a lad at this time, he was entrusted by the farmer with the carrying of products of the farm, dairy, etc., to the Albany market, receiving pay for the same, and returning frequently before daylight in the morning. He engaged for the third year with the same farmer, but owing to illness, was compelled to return to his father's, who, in the meantime, had removed to the town of Guilderland, in the same county. John remained in that town till after his marriage, which occurred June 18, 1852. The year following his marriage he worked as a farm hand, for which he received a compensation of $150. He then leased a farm of 300 acres, which he conducted for two years, after which he worked a farm of his father's one year. In the spring of 1858, having sold what personal property he had accumulated, he came to Wisconsin for the purpose, of locating if pleased with the country. He brought his family to this State in the spring of 1859, living in the town of Lima, Rock county, in a log house with flooring in only one half of the house till the autumn of that year, when he engaged in the occupation of painting. He then rented a farm in Johnstown, near the village of Johnstown Centre, where they lived one and a half years. In the spring of 1861, he began keeping hotel at Johnstown Centre. This was Mr. Young's first experience in hotel keeping. Nov. 4, 1863, he came to Brodhead and bought an undivided half of the 'Manley House,' of William B. Manley, for which he paid $1,600. The following winter he bought the remaining interest of Mr. Britton, for which he paid the same amount. These investments involved Mr. Young considerably in debt, but he soon established his success as a hotel man by removing his indebtedness, and has ever since continued to advance in the direction of success. He kept this hotel several years, and sold it about a year previous to beginning the erection of his present hotel. Mrs. Young was formerly Maria Groat, born in the town of Guilderland, Albany Co., N. Y., in 1833. Her father was noted for many years throughout New York and New England as the owner of superior race horses—known as Sorrel Pony and Black Maria. Mr. and Mrs. Young have four children—Alice, Manley, Maud, and Florence, all of whom were born in Wisconsin. Mr. Young is a man of much natural ability, and aided by his estimable wife, has established a reputation as a hotel man second to none.

The Exchange House was built by L. S. Fisher, in 1867. It is a frame structure and cost about $3,500. It was enlarged in 1869. The house is still owned by Mr. Fisher, but is leased to Charles H. Lewis.

BANKS.

The first bank at Brodhead was established in August, 1869, under firm name of Bowen & Co.

E. Bowen, president, and J. V. Richardson, cashier. The stockholders were: E. Bowen, J. V. Richardson, A. Ludlow, J. W. Stewart, Asa Richardson, Thomas Hendrie and S. C. Pierce. In 1871 this bank was chartered as the First National Bank of Brodhead, with a capital stock of $50,000. It continued as a National Bank until 1875, when the charter was given up and it again resumed the name of Bank of Brodhead, the firm being Bowen & Co. After the National Bank charter was given up several of the stockholders withdrew, and it was finally owned by E. Bowen and J. V. Richardson. In March, 1879, E. Bowen became sole proprietor, and conducted the business until August, 1881, when, on account of failing health, he sold out, and it has since been in charge of C. N. Carpenter, president, and J. B. Searles, cashier. The stockholders first were: E. Bowen, J. B. Searles, David Dunwiddie, J. G. Orr, Ami Burnham, R. Broughton and C. N. Carpenter. The present stockholders are: Ami Burnham, C. N. and A. V. H. Carpenter, J. B. Searles, R. Broughton and E. Bowen. The present officers are: President, C. N. Carpenter; cashier, J. B. Searles; directors, J. B. Searles, Ami Burnham, A. V. H. Carpenter, R. Broughton and C. N. Carpenter.

POST OFFICE.

The Brodhead post office was established in the fall of 1856 and John B. Sawyer was appointed postmaster. Mr. Sawyer resided in the country, but was the most available democrat at that time. The office was kept at the store of Taft & Clinton, S. P. Taft, acting as deputy postmaster. Mr. Sawyer was succeeded in office by E. A. McNair, who for a time kept the office on the south side of the railroad track. C. W. Clinton became successor to Mr. McNair, and he was succeeded by H. P. Clinton, who retained the commission until his death, when his widow, Eleanor Clinton, was appointed postmistress. Mrs. Clinton was succeeded in June, 1871, by Burr Sprague, and he, on Jan. 10, 1879, by B. W. Beebe, the present incumbent. It was made a money order office July 17, 1869. The first order was issued to Spaulding & Brown; amount $50. The first order paid was to Kimberley & Tyrrell; amount, $4.

B. W. Beebe, postmaster at Brodhead, has been a resident of the village since 1872, and has held his present office since Jan. 10, 1879. Mr. Beebe was born in Racine county, in this State, in 1843. When about three years old he removed with his parents to Dane county. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he was clerking in a store at Janesville. He enlisted in company D, 2d regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, when less than eighteen years of age, and reached the seat of war in time to participate in the first battle of Bull Run, during McClellan's peninsula campaign he was stationed with his regiment at Fredericksburg. He took part in the battle of Gainsville, where his regiment lost its colonel and suffered a great loss of men, and also in the second battle of Bull Run. At the battle of South Mountain he was severely wounded by the fragment of a shell that exploded within a few feet of him, killing and wounding fifteen men. His right thigh was badly injured, the main artery being severed, and it was only by the prompt attention of his comrades, who removed him instantly to a surgeons' quarters near by, that his life was saved. Amputation would have been resorted to had it not been for the fact that the wound was so near his body that it was deemed impossible without producing a fatal result. He also by the same missile lost a part of his left hand. He remained in the hospital seven months. After about one year, when he had sufficiently recovered to enable him to get about again, he was employed in the provost marshal's office at Janesville for a year. In 1865 he accepted an appointment in the paymaster-general's office of the war department, at Washington, where he remained two years. He then returned to Wisconsin and engaged in general merchandising at Oregon, Dane county. He was married Dec. 24, 1865, to Gertrude E. Tipple, daughter of David Tipple, an early settler of Dane county. They have two children—Cora E. and Grace. The former was born in Washington, D. C., and the latter in Oregon, Wis.

BRODHEAD CITY MILL AND WATER POWER.

Nature did not supply a water power at this place, but through the energy of its citizens Brodhead can now boast of one of the best hydraulic powers in the county. The history of this enterprise dates from 1860. At that time two brothers, Thomas and John Hendrie, owned and operated the old mill at Decatur, but as that once thriving village was fast passing away, the Hendrie Brothers became desirous of removing. The people of Brodhead were anxious to have a mill in their thriving business place, and thus persuaded the Hendrie Brothers to take hold of the enterprise. It was no small undertaking, for in order to get a water power at this place it was necessary to construct a race from the old mill dam at Decatur, a distance of three and one-half miles. The Hendrie Brothers were in limited circumstances, and as it required considerable capital to undertake this enterprise, and as it would be a great benefit to the village, the citizens of Brodhead and others interested agreed to give the sum of $8,000 as a bonus to carry on the work. This amount was raised by subscription. The following named persons paying $100 or more:

I. F. Mack	$500
John P. Dixon	400
D. P. Crosby (of Hartford, Conn.)	250
E. D. Clinton.....	200
M. Mitchell.....	250

The remainder of the subscriptions were made up of amounts varying from $5 to $75 each.

A contract was then let to construct a race, as above stated. Sixty-five feet wide at the bottom, and eighty feet wide at the top, and eight feet in depth. Work was pushed forward, and by 1862 the task was about two-thirds completed. Now arose another difficulty. All the money that could be collected on the subscriptions had been expended, and the Hendrie Brothers were unable to go on with the enterprise. It was at this time that H. B. Stewart and S. C. Pierce purchased a one-half interest in the property, paying $7,000 for the same.

John Hendrie withdrew from the partnership, and the firm now became Hendrie, Stewart & Pierce. Work was resumed with renewed vigor, and in May, 1863, after three years labor and a capital of $28,000 invested, a flouring mill was put in operation. The original mill building was a wooden structure, 40x60 feet in size, and four stories in height, including basement, and cost, including machinery, from $12,000 to $13,000. During the year of 1863 the firm of Hendrie, Stewart & Pierce operated the mill, and were rewarded with large profits. In 1864—5 Thomas Hendrie rented the mill, but as the chinch bug destroyed large amounts of wheat, the profits realized were not as large as were expected. In 1866 the owners again operated the mill, and as the wheat crop was excellent, large profits were realized. Jan. 1, 1867, H. B. Stewart sold his interest to the other members of the firm, and withdrew. The firm now became Hendrie & Pierce, and as the year 1867 proved very profitable, the firm in 1868 enlarged the mill and made improvements, at an expense of about $5,000.

In 1870 S. C. Pierce became sole proprietor, at which date the property was valued at about $40,000. The mill now has five run of stone. It has six turbine wheels, one of which, by means of a cable, furnishes the power used by the plow works, 130 feet distant. The mill is operated both as a custom and merchant mill.

Stephen C. Pierce, the owner of the Brodhead flouring mill, was born in Washington Co., Vt., in 1825. In 1841 his father, Prosper A Pierce, removed to the vicinity of Janesville, in this State, settling on land located the previous year. He resided there until the time of his decease, March 18, 1875. Mr. Pierce, of this sketch, went in 1849 to California. The party with whom he went started from Janesville with ox teams, traveling the entire distance by that mode of conveyance, the journey requiring six months. He was absent three years, returning in 1852. He then located on a farm in Rock county. He has been a resident of Brodhead since its beginning, having come here April 3, 1856, and is the oldest resident on the town plat. He at first engaged in farming, but on the arrival of the railroad, in 1857, he engaged in the lumber and grain trade. He continued to deal in lumber for about three years, but has been continuously in the grain trade since the fall of 1857. He became connected with the mill in 1862, and has been sole proprietor of the same since December, 1870. Mrs. Pierce was formerly Sarah A. Green, born in Cornwall, Orange Co., N. Y. Their children are—George M., Frank F., Arthur P., Ella M., John and Stephen. The eldest two were born in Rock county. The others were born in Brodhead.

FOUNDRY AND MACHINE SHOP.

The first to engage in this business, at Brodhead, were Carpenter & Rood, who commenced in 1872. They were together about three years, when Judson Rood, of Monroe, a brother of one of the founders, purchased the business and was proprietor for a short time. He was succeeded by Rugg & Gosling, who continued for several years. Then Ed Carpenter purchased the foundry and Frank Pierce bought the machine shops. The latter was burned out, Mr. Pierce losing about $3,000. Carpenter & Campbell connected a machine shop with their foundry, and they are still proprietors. From six to eight hands are employed.

BRODHEAD CREAMERY.

The Brodhead Dairy Company was organized in January, 1882, by the principal farmers living in the village. The following were the first subscribers of stock to the enterprise: H. B. Stewart, Broughton Brothers, David Dunwiddie, S. C. Pierce, William Smith, Joseph Murphey, John Douglass, Joseph Westlake, Edward Knudtson, A. M. Bowen, Joseph G. Orr, Mrs. H. B. Stewart and T. H. Burtness.

In April, 1882, a frame building was erected, 30x50 feet in size, one story high, with basement, and wing for engine and boiler room.

A five horse power, and all modern machinery was put in for the manufacture of butter. During the first year, about 75,000 pounds of butter was manufactured. In the season of 1883, about 14,000 pounds were made. The stockholders in 1884 were the same as when it started, except that J. W. Westlake and A. M. Bowen had sold to H. B. Stewart and Broughton Brothers. These gentlemen now own over one-half of the stock. The first officers were: H. B. Stewart, president; A. M. Bowen, secretary; J. G. Orr, treasurer. In 1884 the officers were: H. B. Stewart, president; R. Broughton, secretary; J. A. Broughton, treasurer.

NORWEGIAN PLOW WORKS.

The Norwegian Plow Company, of Brodhead, was organized in 1874, by W. A. Wheaton, C. W. Mitchell, H. C. Putnam and Hans H. Sater. Mr. Sater was a plow maker by trade, having learned the business in Norway. The business was started with a capital of $6,000. At the end of the second year the capital stock amounted to $20,000. A frame building, 46x70 feet in size and a warehouse for the storage of plows, 24x80 feet in size, were erected at a cost of about $3,000. During the first year about ten bands were employed, and 300 plows were made. The business continued for five years, increasing so that in the fifth year 2,000 plows were manufactured. The plow was an excellent one, and came into quite general use in this and other States. The metal was extremely hard, and of excellent quality, and the plows rapidly grew in favor. H. C. Putnam engaged as salesman on the road, selling the first 200 plows manufactured. At the end of the third year, Mr. Putnam retired, selling his interest to W. C. Chamberlain, of Dubuque. At the same time Mr. Wheaton sold to C. W. Mitchell. At the end of two years more the business was removed to Dubuque, where today the Norwegian Plow Manufacturing Company is one of the leading manufacturing concerns. Messrs. Mitchell & Sater still retain their interest in the business. The object of removing the factory to Dubuque was to secure superior shipping facilities, and to reorganize on a larger scale.

TOBACCO FACTORY.

William M. Fleek, packer and dealer in Havana leaf tobacco, began business in January, 1880. The business has been steadily increasing and has become one of the most important industrial enterprises of Brodhead. The amount of money handled in the business during the first year was $75,000. Mr. Fleek employs about forty hands, twenty-one of whom are young ladies. The tobacco is all raised in this State, and is bought in green condition from the producers, and is cured and prepared for manufacturing purposes. The warehouse and factory is 30x116 feet in size. Mr. Fleek sells his tobacco to jobbers principally.

W. M. Fleek, proprietor of the leaf tobacco warehouse, is a son of R. G. B. Fleek, and was born in the town of Decatur, May 8, 1854. He lived with his father until Sept. 8, 1875, when he engaged in the manufacture of cigars in Brodhead, which business he continued until Jan. 21, 1880, when he quit the manufacture of cigars and engaged in the business of leaf tobacco. Commencing in a small way in a building, 24x40 feet, the business has increased until he is now located in a fine two-story warehouse 30x116 feet in dimensions, with a capacity of handling 2,000 cases of tobacco a year, and works a force of forty hands eight months of the year. He was married Oct. 25, 1875, to Viola M. Atwood, daughter of P. Atwood, of the town of Spring Grove. By this union they have two sons—E. O., born Nov. 3, 1877, and Dickie, born Sept. 20, 1882.

WAGON AND CARRIAGE MANUFACTURERS.

The first to manufacture wagons at Brodhead was William Spencer, who commenced here in 1857. He manufactured a few wagons and continued in the business until the war broke out, when he enlisted in the 18th Wisconsin regiment, and went into the service. At the battle of Shiloh he was severely wounded; removed to the gun boats on the river, and was never heard from afterward.

A man named Perkins commenced making wagons about the same time as did Spencer. He also went to the war in the "18th Wisconsin regiment," and died in the service in 1862, of homesickness.

In 1860 James Barnes engaged in this business. In 1861 R. H. Rugg became a partner. Barnes & Rugg were together for one year, and then Mr. Rugg conducted the business alone for eight years, hiring four or five hands. M. H. Williams came in 1862 and worked for Mr. Rugg until 1868, when the latter gentleman, with S. M. Gosling, engaged in the foundry business and ceased the manufacture of wagons.

The next to engage in the manufacture of wagons and carriages was Williams & Ballou, in 1868. Mr. Ballou for three years previous had been engaged in the blacksmith business. The firm at once commenced operations. On the 15th of October, 1881, they were burned out, losing $2,700; their insurance was $1,700. A large part of the stock and tools were saved. Williams & Ballou soon afterward purchased the old stand of Mr. Rugg, fronting Exchange street, and adjoining the railroad grounds in the rear. Two weeks after the fire they resumed work. Their main building, at present, is 24x50 feet in size, two stories high. The first floor is used for the wood work, and the second as a paint shop. Their blacksmith and general jobbing shop is 20x42 feet in size. Their main depository is 22x50 feet, two stories; a smaller one, 14x30 feet, and a trimming shop 16x36 feet. The firm carries a large stock of material and use nothing but the best. They manufacture carriages, top buggies, and wagons of all kinds; including sleighs. The factory employs from ten to fifteen hands.

Manly H. Williams, of the firm of Williams & Ballou, is a native of Tompkins Co., N. Y., where he was born in 1835. His father, Justin F. Williams, removed with his family to Cuba, Allegany Co., N. Y., in 1842. Justin F. Williams was a native of Massachusetts. In 1855 he removed with his family from Cuba, N. Y., to Middleton. Dane Co., Wis., where he continued to reside until his decease, March 10, 1883. Manly H. Williams learned the trade of carriage and wagon maker of his father, and has followed the business since he was a boy. He was married to Elizabeth Witter, a daughter of Robert Witter, an early settler in Exeter, in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have one daughter—Mary L., born in 1872. They lost one son—Frank A., who died in 1877, at the age of ten years. Robert Witter, father of Mrs. Williams, settled with his family in the town of Exeter in 1842. He was born in the town of Scipio, Cayuga Co., N. Y., July 26, 1802. His father was a native of Connecticut. Mr. Witter was married in 1823, in the town of Scipio, to Lorana Rude, a native of Connecticut. They removed in 1834 to Genesee Co., N. Y., coming from there to Wisconsin and settling, as before stated, in the town of Exeter, where they resided till 1882, then he and his wife came to Brodhead to reside with their son-in-law, Mr. Williams. Mr. and Mrs. Witter, having been married in 1823, have journeyed through life together for a period of more than sixty years. They have had eleven children, eight of whom are living.

Lee Ballou, of the firm of Williams & Ballou, has been a resident of Wisconsin since 1843. He was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., in 1830. He resided several years at Beloit, where he learned his trade. He afterward worked at his trade at Avon for two years, then returned to Beloit. He enlisted in 1864, in company D, 38th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. His regiment joined Grant's army at Cold Harbor, participating in the siege of Petersburg and at the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox. He was severely wounded at the battle of Hatcher's Run, where he was shot through the body by a rebel sharpshooter. He has never fully recovered from the effects of the wound. He came to Brodhead in 1865, and engaged in blacksmithing with Haskell Crosby. He afterward bought out Mr. Crosby and continued the business until 1868, when the present firm was formed. Mr. Ballou was married to Mary H. Beals, a daughter of William C. Beals. They have two children—Willie and Harry.

Bartlett & Sons, wagon and carriage makers, engaged in business in 1869, coming from Albany, where L. C. Bartlett had been in business since 1856. In the fall of 1865, the present firm was formed, and they now do a good business. The main workshop is frame, 31x51 feet in size, two stories in height. The lower story is used for wood work, and upper story for paint shop. They have a blacksmith shop, 24x50 feet and show room 18x32 feet, two stories high. From six to ten hands are employed. The sales of carriages per year amount to $5,000, while the blacksmith jobbing and repairing amounts to about the same.

L. C. Bartlett, of the firm of Bartlett & Son, wagon and carriage manufacturers, engaged at business at Brodhead in 1869, coming here from Albany, where he engaged in the wagon making business in 1856. He was born in the town of Waterford, Caledonia Co., Vt., in 1821. He went to Saratoga Co., N. Y., in the fall of 1840, where he learned his trade, and where he was engaged in business till he came to Wisconsin in 1856. His wife was Jane Ann Ellsworth, born in Northumberland, Saratoga Co., N. Y. Mrs. Bartlett is a cousin of Col. Ellsworth who was killed at Alexander, Va., in the early part of the rebellion. Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett have seven children, six sons and one daughter. Eugene, who is associated with his father in business, was born in Schuylerville, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1844, and came to this county with his father Aug. 2, 1862. He enlisted in the 31st regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. He participated in the siege of Atlanta, Sherman's march to the sea, battle of Bentonville, and other minor engagements. He married Augusta Davison, daughter of W. M. Davison, an early settler of the town of Exeter. They have one son—Mortie D.

Lanby & Durner established their business Oct. 6, 1881. Their principal buildings are the wood work and blacksmith shops. The wood work shop is 44x44 feet in size, two stories high; the upper part being used for a paint and trimming shop; the lower story for wood work. They manufacture about fifty vehicles each year, and do general repair and blacksmithing work.

INCORPORATION AND PROCEEDINGS OF VILLAGE BOARD.

The village of Brodhead was granted a corporation charter by the State legislature on the 9th of March, 1870. The first election was held on the first Monday in May, and the following were elected trustees for the ensuing year:

I. F. Mack, George H. Monell, H. T. Moore, Wyatt A. Wheaton and A. C. Douglas. At the first meeting of the board of trustees held on the 6th of May following their election, I F. Mack was elected president of the board, and J. P. Vance was elected clerk. The second meeting of the board was held May 9, at which time president I. F. Mack presented the following communication:

“GENTLEMEN OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES:—Called as I have been by the generous suffrage of my fellow citizens to aid in giving force to the provisions of the village charter, and by your partiality to preside over the municipal relations of our thriving village I enter upon the duties with feelings akin to your own feeling of mingled gratitude and distrust; gratitude for the confidence and personal kindness of the electors and of this board, and distrust of my own ability to fully meet the confidence in the discharge of the delicate duties of the double office thus kindly imposed upon me.

“GENTLEMEN:—Our village, although just past the first decade, has already attained an important rank among the inland towns of the noble State of Wisconsin, with a population of about

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

2,000 inhabitants, and an assessment list of $400,000, it is entitled to the respect even if it does not excite the envy of much older and at present more populous neighboring villages or cities. In our municipal legislation we are to exercise guardianship over the intelligence, the manner, and the habits of the people, drawn together from various sections of our own and foreign lands, presenting in miniature the phases and diversity of a city population. Over this diversity good and wholesome influence should ever have predominance as this alone can make secure the enjoyment of 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.'

"While our gratitude is due to an over ruling Providence that no signal acts of crime, or insubordination to law have yet marred our history as a village, we are all sensible that the time has arrived when special legislation is necessary to the future peace and quiet of the people, and to the future growth and prosperity of the town. The charter of which we are for the time being made the executors, provides for legislation on the following important subjects. For the government and good order of the village, for the suppression of vice, for the prevention of fires, for the benefit of trade and commerce, and for the health of the village. It also provides for imposing penalties against any person who shall violate any ordinance. rule or by-law, enacted by this board, for the formation of the above objects. Thus giving to such ordinances, rules, and by-laws the force of law. The subjects upon which this board is authorized to legislate are specifically set forth in the charter, and enumerated in Chapter IV, under twenty-five distinct heads, to which the attention of the board is respectfully directed. Among the powers specifically granted is that of appointing and removing, at pleasure, the following officers: Clerk, marshal, chief engineer of fire department, two fire wardens and as many assistants as the board may deem necessary, a surveyor, a sealer of weights and measures, a street commissioner, and a pound-keeper, and to require bonds for the faithful discharge of the duties of their respective offices. While the charter made no specific provisions for the election or appointment of a village attorney, I regard the general powers warranted as embracing ample authority for the permanent employment, or retention, by the board of all instrumentalities necessary to give effect to the municipal laws. I therefore respectfully suggest the propriety of designating a suitable legal agent, as village attorney, to be thus permanently retained in the interest of the village and in the duty of enforcing obedience to its laws and ordinances. Gentlemen! As lying at the foundation of our future prosperity and well-being, all must regard the cause of popular education. The real prosperity of a village is not measured by its wealth, or its number. Genuine manhood and universal intelligence are the only true indications of a popular wealth of prosperity. While the cause of education in the village is especially entrusted to the board of education, it is eminently fit that this board cooperate and lend its influence in the adoption and prosecution of the wisest means of conveying instruction to every child, accompanied with healthful morals, inculcations, and of providing the most sure and ready means for repressing juvenile vices and insubordination in the schools or elsewhere, by some well-timed ordinance on that subject. Gentlemen! I feel (doubtless in common with you) a strong desire that the burden of taxation be rendered as light as possible, consistent with the general good. No more delicate duty devolves upon us than to rightly discriminate in our official action between the rights of the individual citizen and the public weal. The stringency of the times admonishes us to avoid, so far as we can, consistent with the general welfare of the village, local and special taxation. It is far better to walk bare shod over nature's path out of debt than with gilded slippers over encumbered pavements.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

“Gentlemen, intemperance in our village has certainly, of late, made fearful strides, and demand at our hands such stringent regulations as are imperatively needed to preserve temperance and good order. The experiment, ‘No license’ has failed to accomplish it, and it becomes our duty to impose such tax upon traffic in intoxicating drinks, with such checks and guards as shall secure greater quiet and security against the horrid revelry and noisy demonstrations which have recently and often resulted from the evil of drunkenness, and have disgraced our village.

“Tendering to you all, gentlemen, the assurance of my esteem and respect, I may be permitted to express the hope that our official, as well as private intercourse will ever be marked by mutual confidence and kindness. My endeavor will be at all times to faithfully do whatever may appropriately fall within the line of official duty, and to aid, fearless of personal consequence, in whatever the board may undertake to contribute to the welfare of our village, and to carry it forward in the cause of moral, intellectual and physical improvements, so essential to the promotion of our own happiness and the future growth of the village, by the attraction hither of intelligent citizens.

Respectfully,
I. F. MACK.”

At the same meeting W. A. Wheaton was appointed chief engineer of the fire department; R. H. Rugg and M. S. Twining, fire wardens; C. Seeber, surveyor; M. Morris, sealer of weights and measures; M. M. McNair, street commissioner; C. D. Wooster, marshal; and Fred Smith, pound keeper. I. F. Mack, G. R. Monell and H. T. Moore were appointed a committee on rules, regulations and by-laws. Saloon licenses were fixed at $100 each, and druggist license to sell for medicinal purposes at $25 each. C. N. Carpenter was appointed village attorney. The board met often for several months and passed many ordinances and discharged its duty faithfully at all times. Jan. 27, 1871, I. F. Mack resigned the office of president, also that of trustee, and A. C. Douglas was elected president.

At the election in May, 1871, the following officers were elected: Trustees, A. C. Douglas, J. V. Richardson, M. S. Twining, N. R. Usher and L. E. Towne. May 6, 1871, the board elected J. V. Richardson president, but as he declined to serve, A. C. Douglas was elected in his stead. O. S. Putnam was appointed clerk. Liquor license was fixed at the same rate as the previous year. May 9 the board elected W. A. Wheaton street commissioner, and M. M. McNair marshal. An ordinance was passed imposing a fine of $100 and costs of prosecution upon any person found guilty of running or riding a velocipede upon the sidewalks within the village corporation. May 19 an ordinance was passed prohibiting live stock from running at large within the corporation. December 7, hook and ladder company reported organized, and the following officers elected: Foreman, J. W. Woodward; first assistant, C. W. Mitchell; second assistant, T. H. Brown; secretary, O. S. Putnam; treasurer, Ira Barnes. On motion the organization was accepted by the board. Fire extinguishers were purchased at a cost of $245.25.

At the election May 6, 1872, the following officers were elected: Trustees, C. W. Mitchell, S. M. Gosling, H. T. Moore, P. Clawson and J. C. Chase; treasurer, H. T. Dickinson. This board elected J. C. Chase, president, and P. J. Clawson, clerk. Licenses were fixed as before. W. A. Wheaton was appointed marshal, G. B. Wooster, pound master; H. W. McNair, street commissioner; J. W. Woodward, chief of fire department. P. J. Clawson resigned, and E. O. Kimberley was elected clerk. For the year ending April 30, 1873, the village treasurer received $814.33, and the amount paid out was $696.60.

At the election May 5, 1873, the following officers were elected: Trustees, E. Bowen, G. T. Spaulding, F. B. Smith, M. Williams and Burr Sprague; treasurer, J. F. Dickinson; supervisor, W. A. Wheaton. The board elected Burr Sprague, president; H. Kimberley, clerk; M. M. McNair, street commissioner; G. B. Wooster, pound keeper; J. W. Woodward, chief of fire department; J. F. Dickinson and C. W. Mitchell, fire wardens; and Alfred Wood, marshal. The board refused to grant license to sell intoxicating liquors. Burr Sprague and E. Bowen resigned, and at a special election, held Jan. 16, 1874, W. H. Barnes and A. C. Douglas were elected to fill vacancies. The board elected G. T. Spaulding as president. In February the board granted liquor license for the remainder of the year at $25 each. The treasurer's report for the year ending April 30, 1874, shows that $1,273.72 was received, and $889.27 paid out.

At the election May 4, 1874, the following officers were elected: Trustees, L. H. Lassell, S. M. Gosling, G. S. Parlin, W. H. Barnes and J. W. Woodward; treasurer, H. Kimberley; justice of the peace, M. S. Twining; constable, Cady Murray. This board elected L. H. Lassell, president; H. Kimberley, clerk; M. Slade, street commissioner; Robert Armstrong, marshal. J. F. Dickinson was elected treasurer to fill vacancy; J. W. Woodward, chief of fire department; and J. F. Dickinson and C. W. Mitchell, fire wardens. This board refused to grant liquor license. Report of treasurer for year ending April 30, 1875, shows receipts, $1,042.32; expenditures, $660.80.

At the election May 3, 1875, the following officers were elected: Trustees, G. T. Spaulding, W. H. Barnes, G. S. Parlin, J. B. Blanchard and Peter Kurtz; treasurer, John Taylor; supervisor, W. A. Wheaton; justice of peace, L. H. Lassell; constable, L. Slade. It was also voted not to purchase a fire engine by a vote of 165 to 13. The board elected G. T. Spaulding, president; H. Kimberley, clerk; M. Slade, Street commissioner; Alfred Wood, marshal; J. A. Broughton, pound keeper; G. B. Wooster, chief of fire department; and J. F. Dickinson and G. W. Chase, fire wardens. Liquor license was fixed at $100 each. An ordinance was passed not to allow any wooden building to be erected on blocks 88, 100, 101, and lots 8, 9, 10, block 87, and lots 2, 3, 4 and 5, of block 99. The report of the treasurer for April 30, 1876, shows: Money received, $1,105.90; money paid out, $681.25.

At the election of May 1, 1876, the following officers were elected: Trustees, J. V. Richardson, W. H. Barnes, T. D. Laird, Judson Bowen and Gilbert Ross; treasurer, M. Roach; supervisor, W. A. Wheaton; justice of the peace, L. H. Lassell; constable, Cady Murray. The board elected the following officers: President, J. V. Richardson; clerk, H. Kimberley; marshal, Alfred Wood; pound keeper, John Broughton; chief of fire department, G. B. Wooster; fire wardens, J. F. Dickinson and G. W. Chase. Liquor license was fixed at $100. Ordinances were passed to guard against fire and accidents, on the 4th of July. The report of treasurer for April 30, 1877, shows: Money received, $1,102.01; money paid out, $645.53.

At the election May 7, 1877, the following officers were elected: Trustees, S. C. Pierce, R. W. Golden, W. H. Strawser, L. C. Morrison and H. A. Murdock; treasurer, John Taylor; justice of the peace, L. H. Lassell; constable, L. H. Hinkley; supervisor, C. W. Mitchell. The board elected S. C. Pierce, president; H. Kimberley, clerk; Frank Champion, street commissioner; W. W. Hill, marshal; G. B. Wooster, chief of fire department; and H. H. Hinkley and G. W. Chase, fire wardens; J. A. Broughton, pound keeper. No liquor licenses were granted. The report of the treasurer for April 30, 1878, shows: Money received, $737.01; money paid out, $580.41.

At the election of May 6, 1878, the following officers were elected: Trustees, C. W. Mitchell, R. W. Golden, F. R. Derrick, Samuel Wales and S. M. Gosling; treasurer, John Kurtz; supervisor, A. N. Randall; police justice, O. S.

EDUCATIONAL.

In early days, the children in this part of Decatur attended school just across the line in Rock county. But in 1857 school district No. 6, now the Independent district of Brodhead, was organized, and at the first election, held August 15, of said year, E. A. West was elected director; J. T. Sherman, treasurer, and A. Hitchcock, clerk of the district. A room was rented and a school taught. The district needed a new school house, but the people could not agree upon the cost of the building or location. But in 1859 they purchased a building (now the Catholic church) and arranged it into three departments. They afterwards also built a small school house, on block 149, which is now used as a primary department. But the leading citizens were anxious to possess better school facilities, and thus at school meetings would pass resolutions to that effect, but as a general thing the same would be rescinded at the next meeting.

Oct. 20, 1866, the citizens of Brodhead met at the Central school house, for the purpose of organizing a corporation for the purpose of building an academy. It was agreed that the capital stock should be $20,000, divided into shares of $50 each. I. F. Mack was elected president; E. D. Clinton, vice-president; C. W. Mitchell, secretary, and H. B. Stewart, treasurer. Several thousand dollars was subscribed towards this enterprise, when, in accordance with the advice of Hon. John M. Mynn, superintendent of schools, the scheme was abandoned, and an application made to the legislature of the State of Wisconsin for a special charter for the organization of a school district in Brodhead, and provide for the establishment of a high school therein, in connection with primary schools, all to be sustained by tax, and made free. The charter was granted March 27, 1867, and Brodhead became an Independent district.

The first school commissioners elected were: H B. Stewart, R. Morris, L. Lakin, R. H. Rugg, L. E. Towne and T. J. Balis. Steps were immediately taken to build a school house. The district was bonded to the amount of $6,000, and the present school building, located on block 83, was completed in 1868. This building is a brick structure, 50x70 feet in size, three stories high and cost, including furniture, about $15,000. The school is divided into six departments, consisting of high school, intermediate and primary and employs seven teachers. The schools are well graded.

Prof. O. N. Wagley, principal of Brodhead graded and high school, was born in the town of Plymouth, Rock Co., Wis., in 1849. His father, N. O. Wagley, settled in Rock county in 1841. He attended the State University at Madison, three terms, and began teaching in 1871. In the fall of 1873, he entered the State Normal School, at Whitewater, in this State, graduating in 1878. He taught three years at Necedah, Juneau county, and came here in the fall of 1881.

The other teachers in 1884 were: Elsie Saulsbury, assistant in high school; and in the higher grammar department, Maria Fenton; lower grammar department, E. Rockwood; higher intermediate department, Addie M. Bowen; lower intermediate department, Lillian Holcolmb; higher primary department, Bertie Sprague; lower primary department, Addie Hinkley; south side primary, Lucy Kingman.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

The religious organizations of Brodhead are the Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, Advent, Catholic and Episcopal.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The first services of this denomination were held by Rev. James Jamison, at the house of Henry Clinton, in the summer of 1856. The Church was organized by the same minister on the 28th of February, 1857, services being held in the dining ball of the Clinton Hotel. The society was designated the "First Congregational Church of Brodhead." The first members were as follows: E. D. Clinton, Amanda Clinton, James T. Sherman, Abby T. Sherman, John L. McNair, Caroline P. McNair, J. W. Thayer, Anna E. Thayer, John C. Wingate, Eliza Wingate, Milo L. Burnham, Ellen D. Burnham, Ichabod Dimick, Catharine Dimick, George Frary, Harriet Frary, Martha Love, Mary J. Wingate, Nancy Foster, Harriet M. Foster, Martha A. Sherman, Ella H. Clinton, Electa Sexton, Friphena Taft, I. F. Mack, Frances D. Mack and Charles M. Griswold. The first officers were:

Deacons, E. D. Clinton, I. W. Thayer and John C. Wingate; clerk, I. F. Mack; treasurer, John L. McNair; trustees, I. W. Thayer, R. E. Taft, M. L. Burnham, E. C. Clinton, H. P. Clinton and R. Love. Services were held at the Clinton House until the erection of the school house, which was then used by the society as a place of worship until 1861 when the church edifice was built. It is a neat frame building, 36x60 feet in size, with a seating capacity of about 300, and cost about $2,000. It was dedicated Dec. 17, 1861. The Rev. James Jamison, who organized the Church, was a missionary. The first pastor was Rev. Hiram Foote, who came in October, 1858, and remained one year. In September, 1859, Rev. W. Cochran became pastor, remaining until succeeded by Rev. James Strong, in October, 1862. He remained two years and was followed by Rev. Ottman, who only staid a few months. After this the Church was without a pastor until the fall of 1865, when Rev. William Bernard was called to the pastoral charge, and remained one year. Then came Rev. Edward Morris. In the fall of 1868 Rev. D. W. Webb took charge, and remained until the fall of 1870. In April, 1871, Rev. Hiram Foote became pastor and served for four years. In the fall of 1875 the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches united for worship. Rev. Edward Dickinson, a Presbyterian clergyman, preached for both societies for three years, services being held at the different churches alternately. After this time there was no pastor until the spring of 1879, when Rev. Wallace Bruce accepted a call, and remained one year. He was followed by Rev. William Cutler, who staid one year. In July, 1881, Rev. H. S. Sanford took pastoral charge and remained until the time of his death in July, 1882. In 1883, Rev. Francis Wrigley became pastor, and is still in charge. The present membership of the Church is thirty-eight, only five of whom are males, thirty-three being women. In 1884 the deacons were: E. D. Clinton, C. Matter, George Frary and J. T. Sherman. The trustees are E. D. Clinton, Deacon Matter, George Spaulding and Edwin Charlton. A Sabbath school has always been sustained, and is now in good condition..

ADVENT CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Elder N. A. Hitchcock was the first preacher of this denomination to hold services in and near Brodhead. In August, 1867, Rev. Joshua V. Hines, assisted by William Sheldon, held a very successful tent meeting, when it was found that a goodly number of people had formerly, while in the east, held these views and a Church was organized. There were twenty-six members, and the following were the officers: Elders, H. T. Moore and H. Crosby; secretary, H. Kimberley. The following, short, yet comprehensive creed was adopted: "The Bible, as it reads (literally); one, only, rule of faith, and practice and Christian character; one, only, test of fellowship." Rev. William Sheldon settled here, later, and preached for the society. Elder George Thompson, of Monroe, was the first regular pastor. Elder Isaac Adrian, who was a gifted man, was the next. In 1869 the next meetings of note were held—a general Advent conference being held in the Congregational church, at which were present many eminent men from several States. A four days discussion was held between Miles Grant, of Boston, and Rev. Mr. Crawford, a Universalist minister of Brodhead. In 1873 Elder Samuel Thurber held a successful series of revival meetings, eighty persons professing. Elders Preston, Hitchcock, Godfrey, Howard, Wilbur, Warner, Bennett, Button, Phelps and others supplied the pulpit at different times; but the Church declined until November, 1880, when Elder D. S. Clark, of Amboy, Ill., held meetings for eighty consecutive evenings with excellent results, and the Church was rescued from oblivion. Elder Clark was pastor for nearly a year. In November, 1881, Elder George M. Button became pastor on trial of six months, and his services have been so satisfactory that he still retains the position. Under his work the interest is healthy and good. The society have rented the Baptist building, one of the finest church edifices in Brodhead. The Church now numbers thirty-five members.

Rev. George M. Button, the pastor of this Church, was born near Juda, Wis., and was reared on a farm one mile south of "old Decatur," and two miles west of Brodhead.

His father was H. W. Button. When seventeen years of age he ran away from home and went to Marquette, Mich., but returned in three months and attended the academy in Brodhead three years; the Milton College one year, and the State University one year. Being, as he believed, called to preach, and being counseled and encouraged by Senator H. T. Moore, he commenced his life work near Baraboo, Sauk county, before twenty-one years of age. Later for four years he preached on a circuit in Illinois. In May, 1878, he married Abbie Lee Watson, of De Kalb, Ill. After this for two years he was pastor of a Church at Afton, Ill. He then went to Turner Co., Dak., for his health, and upon his return, became pastor of the Church at Brodhead.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

The first class of this denomination was organized in June, 1856. Nathaniel Wheeler was the preacher in charge and William Teal, assistant. The class consisted of eleven members, among whom were: F. Van Curen, Timothy Lewis, Eleanor Lewis, F. Nash, Eliza Nash, B. F. Stevens, Norah Stevens, Sarah Lewis and Almon Lewis, the latter being a local preacher. In 1857 the charge was supplied by Almon Lewis, who still resides here. In 1858 Rev. Henry Coleman, then connected with the seminary at Evansville, was placed in charge, but not being able to close his connection with the school immediately, John L. Williams, a superannuated preacher, supplied this place for a few months. In the fall of 1858 J. P. Dixon, of Janesville, donated to the society two lots, on which the present church was erected. This church edifice was finished and paid for in three months. It cost $2,300. It was dedicated by the Rev. Hooper Crews. A Meneeley bell, weighing 795 pounds, which cost $400, was donated by Edward H. Brodhead, of Milwaukee, on the condition that it should be used only in Brodhead. This class was organized and meetings were held at the county line school house, just across the line in Rock county. Afterward services were held in Brodhead in a hall on Center street, northeast of the present church, which has now been removed. Sometime previous to the erection of the M. E. church, parties in the interest of the Congregational Church made a move toward building, and a subscription of several thousand dollars was raised, but through a slight difference among the heaviest subscribers, the enterprise was abandoned. It was at this time that Mr. Brodhead promised a bell to the first church that should be erected in the village, and the Methodists were successful. Rev. D. H. Budlong was appointed to this charge in the spring of 1859; but during the succeeding winter his health failed and his place was supplied by Jacob Miller, of Cadiz. In 1860 Rev. Nelson Butler became pastor, and in 1861 was succeeded by W. H. Wilson. He was returned in 1862. Soon after, however, the presiding elder placed Rev. A. Callender in charge and removed Mr. Wilson to Madison. In 1863 L. W. Pike appears on the minutes as pastor, but it seems he failed to come, and E. B. Russell, then either a local or a superannuated preacher, was sent as a supply and filled out the year. In 1864 Rev. H. Chadeayne was appointed to this charge. During this year the parsonage was built at a cost of about $1,200. In 1866 William J. Wilson became pastor and remained two years, when he was succeeded by Rev. Aspinwall, who remained three years. In 1871 Rev. W. H. Kellogg became pastor and remained two years. After this in succession came: Rev. T. M. Fullerton, three years; Rev. Joseph D. Brothers, three years; Rev. John Knipps, one year; Rev. J. E. Irish, one year; Rev. Whitney, eight months; J. I. McLaughlin, four months; and Rev. G. W. Nuzem was appointed to this charge in September, 1882, and is the present pastor. During the summer, 1874, two side parlors, each twenty feet square, were added to the church, and other improvements were made costing all together $1,100. The Church numbers considerable over 100 members, and both Church and Sunday school are in good condition.

EPISCOPAL.

The first Episcopal services in this town were held at the house of Mr. Kettle, in the winter of 1848—9, by Rev. Mr. Humphrey, of Beloit. There were but few here belonging to this denomination at that time. Services were held at Decatur until after Brodhead was started. Among the earliest Episcopalians were the Kettle family, Mr. Bridgeman and M. B. Edson. Occasional services were held until 1875, when they secured a resident clergyman in the person of Rev. Ross, who resided here for several years, services being held in the halls of the village. The society was organized in 1875. The Church now hold occasional services and support a good Sunday school. They have no church building.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbyterian church at Brodhead was built in 1866. It is a brick building and cost about $6,000. The first services in the building were held Jan. 20, 1867. The building was dedicated Feb. 21, 1867, by Rev. J. W. Dinsmore. The first pastor was Rev. A. R. Day, who was here when the church was erected. He was succeeded by A. A. Joss, and then in turn came Revs. R. G. Thompson, S. I. McKee, A. R. Day, E. Dickinson and J. S. Bingham. In 1884 the Church was without a pastor. The first Presbyterian services held in this town were held at the village of Decatur, in 1849 or 1850, by Rev. Fox. He was a resident of Oregon, Dane county, who preached only occasionally and he effected an organization of this Church at Decatur. The first resident pastor was Rev. Frazer, who preached for about three years. Others who preached at Decatur were Rev. Bachus, Dr. Nichols and Rev. Bascom. The first elders were Alexander Clark, William Oliver and Mr. Kirkpatrick. Originally there were about twenty members; it afterward increased to fifty. When Decatur died, the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches like the rest of the village moved to Brodhead.

CATHOLIC.

The first services of the Catholic denomination were held in 1857 by a priest whose name has been forgotten, for the benefit of the railroad employes. Rev. Conroy was the second priest. Rev. Richard Sullivan, then of Monroe, came here occasionally in 1859 and 1860. The first services were held at private houses. Rev. James J. Kinsella, now at Shullsburg, was the first resident pastor, and remained here about three years, leaving in 1863. He was here when the church and parsonage were erected. The pastors in succession have been: Revs. J. J. Kinsella, N. Stehlehan, M. Wrynn and James Hegerty. Father Hegerty, the present pastor, came here in 1880. He is also pastor of churches at Footville and Albany. The Catholic Church building was formerly the public school building of Brodhead. It was purchased by this society in 1867, and converted into a church.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Church of Brodhead was organized Feb. 20, 1867, at a meeting held in the Congregational church. Rev. D. Alcott was president of the meeting and B. F. Roderick was clerk. The following is a list of those who became members at that time: Rev. D. Alcott, Almira Stewart, Julius Hurlburt, Sarah N. Hurlburt, Joshua Nanscawn, F. B. Smith, Seth Green, Eliza Green, Maria Harris, James Potter, Nancy Potter, M. D. Warren, Margaret Warren, B. F. Roderick, Ellen W. Roderick, S. Kurtz, George Tayler, O. Dorn, Eliza Dorn, Caleb Nanscawn, Ella Harding, Rosanna Worcester and Alexander Shafer. The first deacons were Julius Hurlburt and F. B. Smith. Only one of the original members is now here, George Taylor. The others are either dead or have removed. Services were held in Gomer's hall for some time and in September, 1867, Cole's hall was leased for one year. The church was erected in the fall of 1872. It is a frame building, veneered with brick, and cost

The Patrons of Husbandry organized a grange in Brodhead, in April, 1873, known as Sugar River Grange, No. 125. The following are the names of the original or charter members: J. W.

*Deceased.

Stuart, H. J. Stuart, R. J. Day, C. D. Wooster, G. B. Wooster, H. S. Ames, Lyman Kingman, F. Gumber, T. J. Balis, Mrs. P. M. Wooster, Mrs. C. D. Wooster, Mrs. R. A. R. Twining, and Mrs. V. Ames. At the first election R. J. Day was elected master, and C. D. Wooster, secretary. Since that time the following members have been elected and served as presiding officers: E. F. Fleek, two years; James Davis, one year; R. J. Day, one year; W. Atherton, one year; J. W. Stuart, two years; W. Atherton, three years.

At the last annual election J. V. Roberts was elected master for the year 1884, and Mr. Atherton, secretary. The present officers are as follows: W. Master, J. V. Roberts; W. Overseer, J. B. Kirkpatrick; W. Lecturer, E. A. Rose; W. Steward, A. Murrey; W. Assistant S., H. C. Atherton; W. Chaplain, L. Kingman; W. Treasurer, A. E. Atherton; Secretary, W. Atherton; Gate Keeper, A. G. B. Fleek; Ceres, Linzey; Pomona, P. M. Wooster; Flora, Katie May Wooster; T. Assistant Steward, K. C. Wooster. For three years after its organization the grange was very prosperous. During the next five years there was a marked decline in interest and attendance. It now numbers sixty members, and at no time has more interest been manifested than at the present.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

Hopeful Division, 196, of the S. of T., Brodhead, was organized by Mrs. S. A. Pinkham, the 20th of November, 1882, with the following officers: O. N. Wagley, W. P.; Mrs. Burr Sprague, W. A.; Rev. George Button, R. S.; O. G. Briggs, Assistant R. S.; Addie Hinckley, Treasurer; F. Van Curen, Caplain; Louis Sprague, Conductor; Thomascene Hendrie, Assistant Conductor; Mrs. M. M. Rowell, I. S.; Mrs. J. G. Orr, P. W. P.; Hon. A. N. Randall, W. Deputy.

The following were the charter members: Mrs. J. G. Orr, Mrs. H. M. Blanchard, Mrs. H Hinckley, Mrs. C. Matter, Mrs. E. C. Randall, Mrs. Frank Smith, Mrs. Burr Sprague, Mrs. H. W. Button, Mrs. M. M. Rowell, Iona Baker, Mrs. C. F. Thompson, Lillian Holcomb, Mrs. E. A. Palmer, Miss E. Burnham, Mrs. M. A. Compton, Hattie Rowell, Mrs. Oliver Putnam, Miss T. C. Hendrie, Mrs. G. C. Aurand, Addie Hinckley, Mrs. G. F. Spaulding, Rev. G. W. Nuzum, Mrs. George M. Button, Rev. George M. Button, Mrs. H. C. Clinton, F. Van Curen, E. D. Clinton, Louis Sprague, W. L. Thompson, Elmer McBroom, Hugh Sprague, Fred Brant, A. N. Randall, O. N. Wagley, Robert Baker, C. H. Campbell, O. G. Briggs, Joseph Gramm, and Elijah Adams.

O. N. Wagley was the first presiding officer of the division, and held that office from its organization till June, 1883. He was again reelected in January, 1884. From June till October, the division was presided over by P. E. Derrick, and from October till January, 1884, by Hon. B. Sprague. The total membership has been 185, and the present membership is about 140. No deaths have occurred, and only six expulsions. At the beginning of the present year, the division leased a hall of Mrs. W. Stewart, the conditions being that the division should have the use of it two years by putting it in order; about $200 have been expended in adorning it and fitting it up, and their division room is now one of the finest in the State. The success of the organization has been good; many of the most prominent and influential citizens of Brodhead are members. Several persons who were in the habit of getting intoxicated have joined the order, and have kept their pledge inviolate. Several public entertainments have been given under the auspices of the division, that have been very favorably received, and all have been a financial success.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Samuel Truax, of Brodhead, came to Green county, April 19, 1839, from Vermilion Co., Ill. Several families and a number of young men came at the same time. Among them were Asa Brown, whose wife was an aunt of Mr. Truax; Dickson Bailey and family; Thomas Morton and family Mrs. Ruth Morton and family, and the young men, Solomon Bishop and Isaac Crahil. Mr. Truax was a young, unmarried man at this time. He lived in the town of Adams for two years, then sold out and bought a farm near Monroe, which in June, 1877, he sold, and it is now known as the county farm. After selling his farm he removed to the city of Monroe. He came to Brodhead to reside in August, 1881. Mr. Truax was born in Nelson Co., Ky., May 13, 1818. He removed to Indiana with his parents, in 1822, the family settling in Owen county, in that State, where they remained five years, then removed to Vermilion Co., Ill. There the subject of this sketch resided with his father's family, till he came here. His mother died in Illinois, in January, 1839. His father came, several years later, to this county, and settled in the town of Mount Pleasant, where he lived until his decease. In September, 1841 Mr. Truax of this sketch, returned to Illinois and was married to Mary Ann Whitesitt, who was born in Jefferson Co., Ind., in 1824. Her father, Samuel Whitesitt, was an early settler in the town of Mount Pleasant, in this county, where he died, Dec. 27 1879. His widow now lives with Mr. Truax. Mr. and Mrs. Truax have had no children, but have brought up, from infancy to maturity, five adopted children—Samuel M. and George R. Truax, sons of his brother, Charles H. and Daniel W. Carter, and an adopted daughter, Flora Belle Whitesitt. Mr. Truax has given his adopted sons, all of whom have left home, a good education, and enabled them to start well in life. Charles H. Carter is a physician, a graduate of the State University, at Madison, also of Rush Medical College, in Chicago.

John B. Sawyer, of Brodhead, came to the Territory of Wisconsin, in the spring of 1838, and to Green county in 1840. He was born in the State of New Hampshire, Sept 17, 1817, and is a son of Joseph Sawyer, who was also a native of that State. In 1887 John B. left home and went to New York, where he staid till April, 1838. He then came west and lived two years at Milwaukee, after which he came to Green county, and with Charles Stevens, of Janesville, built a furnace for the smelting lead ore, at Exeter. About the same time he erected a log tavern, which was used principally for boarding the men employed in the smelter, which was sold to J. and L. Ward, of Milwaukee, as soon as built. This tavern he sold to Ezra Durgan. In 1842 he built a bridge across the Sugar river, at Albany, which was one of the first bridges built in the county. He engaged for a number of years in bridge building, in this and adjoining counties. He bought a farm in the town of Exeter, in 1843, on which he erected a frame house and barn the same year. With Dr. Stearns he built the first hotel in the village of Albany. He afterwards owned the farm now owned by Hollis Button. From this farm he removed to Decatur and engaged in mercantile and produce business. In fact, Mr. Sawyer has led a very busy life and was variously engaged in produce and stock buying at Decatur, Clarence and Footville, for many years. He has lived in the village of Brodhead since 1862. He was married in Albany, Green county, to Julia Copp, a native of the State of New York. They have nine children, four sons and five daughters. They have lost two children—Daniel, who died in New Mexico, in 1882, at the age of twenty-eight years, and Julia, who died in September, 1883, at the age of twenty-three years. He was postmaster at Clarence, before the starting of Brodhead, and when the post office was discontinued at Clarence he was appointed first postmaster at Brodhead.

Franklin H. Derrick, of Brodhead, is a son of Rodolphus Derrick. The latter was born Aug. 8, 1793, and was reared in Herkimer Co., N. Y. His parents, the grandparents of Franklin H., were natives of the Green Mountain State. When a young man, Rodolphus D. Derrick removed to Erie Co., N. Y., where he was married to Lorenda Sheldon. In 1820, in company with two brothers-in-law, the latter being accompanied by their families, he went down the Alleghany river in a flat boat and thence down the Ohio, to Morgan Co., Ill., where his brothers-in-law settled. The following spring he returned to New York. In 1836 he came to Green county and purchased for himself and other parties, 1,200 acres of land in the present towns of Spring Grove and Decatur. In the fall of 1838 he removed with his family to Wisconsin, stopping at White Oak Springs, in what is now Lafayette county, where his two sons, Frederick and Alonzo, were at work in the lead mines. Here he remained until spring, keeping a boarding house during the winter. He then removed to Illinois, locating near Savannah. In 1840 he sent his son, Alonzo, with a hired man and team, to his land in Green county, who broke land preparatory to a crop the following year. In April, 1841, he removed with his family to the town of Spring Grove, and there resided until his death, which occurred Sept. 29, 1860. His wife survived her husband for many years, departing this life at the residence of her son, Franklin H., at Monroe, Jan. 14, 1874. "Squire Derrick," as he was familiarly known, is well remembered by the early settlers, for his many excellent qualities. He was a man of much general information, was justice of the peace for many years, and otherwise connected officially with the affairs of his town. He had eight children, five of whom, three sons and two daughters, are still living. Franklin H. is the only resident of the county, at this time. The names of the children, all of whom grew to maturity, except the youngest, are—Frederick, now in California; Harriet, deceased; Alonzo, in California; Franklin H., Statira, deceased; Pauline and Elvira, in Nebraska; and Hellen Irene, deceased. Franklin H., who owns the homestead, was born in Erie Co., N. Y., in January, 1824, and was in his sixteenth year when he came to Green county. In 1850 he went to California by the overland route, returning by Nicaragua route, after a residence of two years, in the land of gold. He was sheriff of Green county from 1873 to 1875, during which time he lived in Monroe, the county seat. Till his removal to Brodhead, in September, 1883, except two years in California, and his two years in Monroe, he had been a constant resident of the homestead farm since his father's settlement there in 1841. He has been twice married. His first wife was Harriet Boslaw, daughter of John Boslaw, who settled in Spring Grove about 1845. He was married in 1846, and his wife died in October, 1871. His present wife was Mrs. Mary A. (Williams) Northrup, a native of Erie Co., N. Y., where she was first married, and with her husband, settled in Rock Co., Wis., in 1847. The latter died in 1869. Mr. Derrick has six children by his former marriage—Theodore J., who lives on the homestead farm; Franklin R., a dentist of Brodhead; Mary L., wife of John C. Balis, in Nebraska; Levi F., also on the farm; Harriet E., wife of J. T. Lamson; and Peter E.

Josiah V. Richardson, one of the prominent citizens of Brodhead and one of the early settlers of Green county, was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., Feb. 26, 1820. His parents were Asa and Mary (Adams) Richardson, natives of New Hampshire, who removed to the State of New York about 1807. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, having commenced work on the farm when eight years old. He was thus early in life trained to habits of industry and economy, which were the characteristic features of his after life. His education was acquired mostly by his own energy at his own expense. In his youth while engaged upon the farm he attended the primitive district school as he had opportunity during the three months term of each winter. During the summer he was obliged to work. He came to this county in 1841, first locating at Monroe, of which place he was a prominent citizen for many years. There he engaged in surveying, and the first two winters taught school, holding the office of county surveyor a part of the time until 1848, when he was elected county register of deeds, after which he entered into a co-partnership with A. Ludlow and B. Chenoweth in merchandising, for a short time; then he engaged in farming, six years; and returning to Monroe, was engaged in various speculations, principally dealing in lands. He has held several county offices, having been county commissioner and member of the board of supervisors a number of years, and these positions have been filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. He came to Brodhead in 1869 and engaged in banking. He was married in 1850 to Lydia Sanderson, a native of the State of Massachusetts. They have five children, two of whom are married—Clara, the elder, to G. F. Claycomb; and Emma, the third, to George Palmer; Sidney, his only son, is engaged with his two brothers-in-law in an extensive lumber trade, in southwestern Iowa. His remaining children live with him. Like many other early settlers who have attained to prominence in life, Mr. Richardson began his career in limited circumstances, for upon his arrival in Monroe in 1841, he was in debt $25, which amount he found much difficulty in paying, as times were hard and money extremely scarce. He found work and earned money but could not get it. His capital was not money, but consisted of a good head with willing hands, and by industry with good judgment he has succeeded in business, and accumulated a competence of this world's goods, and what is better, having placed himself in this position honestly, he has the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. He has now retired from active business life.

George West, of Brodhead, has been a resident of Green County since 1838. He was born in the town of Brant, Erie Co., N. Y., Jan. 7, 1818. His father, John West, was born in the town of Scipio, Cayuga Co., N. Y., and was of Irish descent. His mother, Avie (Bowen) West was of Scotch origin and a native of Vermont. His father died in Erie county in 1876; his mother still survives. The parents of George had ten children of whom he was the eldest. In 1838, when in his twenty-first year, he started westward, his destination being the town of Clarno in this county, where two maternal uncles, Thomas S. and William Bowen, had already located. At Buffalo he took a deck passage for Chicago on the steamer Michigan, commanded by Capt Perry, paying from his small stock of money $5 for the passage. From Chicago he proceeded most of the way on foot to the home of his relatives in Clarno. In the fall of 1839 he returned to his native State and married Susan Winchell of the town of Brant, Erie county, and on the 1st day of February, 1840, started on his return, accompanied by his wife. They came the entire distance with a team, being one month and four days on the journey. He first settled on the land presented him by his uncle, where they remained until 1842, when he sold his land and removed to what is now the town of Sylvester, where he made a claim of 160 acres which he improved and which became the homestead of his family and which he still owns, but he retired from farming in 1872 and removed to Brodhead. His son, Samuel, now occupies the homestead farm. Mrs. West's parents were Ira and Betsy Winchell. The latter was born in Tioga Co., N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. West have had ten children, six of whom are now living—Samuel, born March 11, 1843; Louisa B., deceased, born Sept. 29, 1844; George F., born Jan. 14, 1846, deceased; Avis E., born Nov. 29, 1847, now the wife of John W. Watt; Clara, born Sept. 7, 1849, widow of G. N. Trousdale; Mary, born April 24, 1852, wife of J. B. Nance; Alice E., born Nov. 29, 1853, wife of F. P. Northcraft; Ida M., born July 10, 1857; Nelson P., born Nov. 4, 1859, died at the age of nineteen; and Minnie, born Nov. 2, 1865, deceased.

M. T. Gleason, of Brodhead, is the son of Robert Gleason, who came to Albany with his family in 1846. Robert Gleason was born in Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y., about 1805. He was engaged the greater part of his life in mechanical work. He removed with his family to Lake Co., Ill., where he resided two years, previous to coming to Green county. He erected a saw mill in 1846, for Nichols & Pond, which was the first mill built in the town of Albany. He died the following year. His wife survived until 1870. Seven children of this family accompanied their parents to this county, five sons and two daughters. Two of the sons have since died. M. T. Gleason was born in Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y., in 1830, and came with the family to this county in 1846. He was engaged in merchandising for many years, at Monticello, Albany and Brodhead. Mrs. Gleason was Ellen Corey, a daughter of M. Corey, who settled near Monticello in 1856, and in 1876 removed to Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Gleason have two children—Charles F. and Nettie, both of whom are married. The former lives at Princeton, Minn., and the latter is the wife of L. A. Towne, of Brodhead.

Francis Woodling, of Brodhead, settled in the town of Jefferson, Green county, in the spring of 1846, where he entered eighty acres of land, also forty acres in the town of Spring Grove. He lived in the town of Jefferson about twelve years, when he sold his farm and removed to the town of Decatur, and settled on a farm, where he lived till September, 1865, when he removed to the village of Brodhead. Mr. Woodling was born in Montgomery Co., Penn., in 1814. He removed to the State of Indiana with his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth Woodling. His father died in Indiana. His mother came to Green county and lived with her children till her decease. Mr. Woodling was married in 1839, in Indiana, to Ruth Biedleman, born in Indiana in 1822. Her parents were Samuel and Sarah Biedleman, natives of the State of New York, and removed to Indiana, where they lived till death. Mr. and Mrs. Woodling have been blessed with ten children, five of whom are living. The following are the names of their children, living and deceased—Levi S., born Jan. 11, 1841, enlisted in the army in August, 1862, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Resaca, surviving but two or three days after the fight; Cyrus H. died in 1859, at the age of sixteen years; Sarah M. is the wife of W. H. H. Fleek; Homer R. died at the age of thirty-one years; Marion H. lives in Iowa; Marvin E. is a physician, located at Minneapolis, Minn.; Charles J. died at the age of six years; Mary L. and Martha L. were twins—the former is deceased; their youngest child is Annie R.

Reuben Fleek, of Brodhead, came to the town of Decatur with his father in 1846. He was really instrumental in having his father remove to this State. He being the oldest son at home, the care of the family devolved upon him. And his brother, Edmund, having given a somewhat glowing account of Green county, he advised his father to remove here with his family, which he did. Reuben was born in Hampshire Co., Va., May 31, 1822. After coming to Green county he resided with his father for a number of years. His settlement on leaving his father's was on section 28, which he procured of the government and had owned since he first came to the county. He resided on this farm for twenty-five years. He purchased a home in Brodhead, where he removed from the farm in 1876. Reuben Fleek, like his brothers, has been successful in accumulating property. He is somewhat eccentric, firm and decided in his opinions, and upright and honest in his business transactions. Mrs. Fleek was a daughter of Davis Bowen, who settled in the town of Sylvester in 1837. They have four children—Winfield S., William M., Charles M. and Lillian Belle.

H. C. Putnam, of Brodhead, was born in Newark, Ohio, in 1847. He is a son of John J. Putnam, and came to Decatur with his parents in 1849. He enlisted in 1863, when but sixteen years old, in the 1st Wisconsin Cavalry, and served until July, 1865. He was in active service from the time he enlisted till the close of the war. He participated in a number of important battles. He was in the Atlanta campaign and at the battle of Nashville under Gen. Thomas; also took part in Wilson's cavalry raid through Alabama and Georgia to Macon, Ga. After the war he attended school one year at Milton College. He then engaged as clerk for a time. He represented, for several years as a commercial traveler, a tobacco house in Milwaukee, and for four years traveled for the house of W. & J. G. Flink, selling teas, spices, etc. From September, 1875, till the fall of 1877, he was engaged in general merchandising in the firm name of Orr & Putnam. He was one of the founders of the Norwegian Plow Co. He is at present dealing in lumber, which business he began in 1881, succeeding W. W. Hill, with whom he was associated for a short time. Mr. Putnam is president of the village for 1884. Mrs. Putnam was Frances Sutherland, daughter of Avery Sutherland and granddaughter of Justus Sutherland.

Joseph Warren Stuart, a prominent citizen of Brodhead, settled in the town of Decatur, April 1, 1851, on a farm he had purchased the previous 10th of September. This farm is located on section 27, and was entered by Anson Sheffield. At the time Mr. Stuart bought it there was about ten acres improved, and a log cabin had been built by the former owner. Mr. Sheffield, from whom he made the purchase, was of Mormonistic tendency, and removed to Salt Lake. Mr. Stuart is a native of Delaware Co., N. Y., and was born in 1819. His father, Sylvester Stuart, was formerly from Washington Co., N. Y., and his grandfather, Joseph Stuart, was a native of Massachusetts. The latter was a Revolutionary soldier. His maternal grandfather, Ezra Doty, was also a soldier of the Revolution, and was present at the execution of Major Andre. When thirteen years old Joseph went with his parents to Ohio. At the age of seventeen he went to Bennington, Vt., and engaged at work in the cotton factory, where he remained two years, then spent six years on the farm, then returned and spent three years in the factory. In 1849 he came to Wisconsin and engaged at work in a sash, door and blind factory. He came to the town of Decatur in 1851, as before stated, but for a number of years was engaged in the manufacture of sash, doors, coffins, etc., his shop being on the farm. In 1872 he sold his farm to B. H. Fleek, and removed to Brodhead. Mr. Stuart is numbered among the successful business men of Decatur. He has now practically retired from the more active business duties of life, and is in possession of a competence. He owns considerable real estate, including two good farms, besides village property in Brodhead. His wife, to whom he was married Jan. 21, 1844, was formerly Lydia R. Lasell, a native of Gouverneur, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. They have had but one child—Phebe Ann, who died on the 7th day of January, 1846, at the age of eleven months. They have had several adopted children, two of whom—Mary W. and Ezra H., they reared from the ages respectively of six and ten years. The latter enlisted in the army in 1862, in the 18th Wisconsin Infantry, re-enlisted in the 4th Cavalry, was one of the captors of Jefferson Davis, and served until the close of the war. He now lives in Hancock Co., Ill. Mary W. is the wife of Abner Mitchell, and lives near Waverly, Iowa. Another adopted daughter is now at Deadwood, Dak., and another, an infant daughter, died in 1858, but a few days after her adoption. Mr. Stuart is among the best class of Green county citizens, and as a business man has the confidence and respect of his fellow men.

John Douglas, a prominent citizen of Brodhead, came to Green county in 1854. He was born in the county of Sutherland, Scotland, on July 15, 1812, and came to the United States with his father's family in 1828. They settled in Monongalia Co., W. Va., where Mr. Douglas lived until 1834, when he was married and removed to Fayette Co., Penn. In 1835, he came to Milwaukee Co., Wis., where he settled on a farm and lived nineteen years. At that time

Milwaukee was but a small village, and Mr. Douglas became well acquainted with the first settlers of that place, who were Solomon Juneau, George Walker and Byron Kilbourn. He lived in Milwaukee county until 1854, when he came to Green county and settled in the town of Decatur on a partially improved farm, where he lived until he came to the village of Brodhead in 1872. He still owns a part of that farm. Mr. Douglas has good business qualifications and has had good success, being now numbered among the wealthy and substantial citizens of Brodhead. His parents, James and Ann (Oliver) Douglas, were born on the border, between England and Scotland, the former on the Scotland side and the latter on the English side of the line. After marriage they removed to Sutherland county. Mr. Douglas' father died in the State of Maryland before he had reached his intended destination in Virginia. His mother died in Virginia at the age of about eighty years. The parents of Mr. Douglas had seven children—six sons and one daughter. He has been three times married. His first wife was Mary J. Brown, who was born in Pennsylvania and died in Milwaukee county. His second wife was Mrs. Almira (Bates) Shaff, who died at Brodhead in 1881. His present wife was Mrs. Amanda (Hart) Holcomb. Mr. Douglas is the father of five children, two of whom are now living—James W. and William H. The former lives in Brodhead, the latter resides on and owns a part of the homestead farm. Mr. Douglas has two brothers and one sister—Andrew in Milwaukee county, Mrs. Jane Barlow in Wheeling, W. Va., and Thomas, his youngest brother, who formerly lived in the town of Decatur, but now resides in Johnson Co., Kansas. Mr. Douglas' education was limited. Politically he was formerly a whig, but upon the organization of the republican party, he joined them, and continues to vote for those principles. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and is in favor of prohibition.

Stair Bros., of Brodhead, keep a first-class general grocery store, with which they have connected a drug department. The brothers, John and Henry Stair, are sons of Peter Stair, who came to this county June 30, 1855, locating on section 36, in the town of Jefferson. In 1865 he removed to an improved farm on section 25. He retired from farming and settled in the village of Juda, where he died, Nov. 15, 1878. His wife died Sept. 9, 1882. There were eleven children in the family when they came to Green county, ten of whom, six sons and four daughters, are still living—William, in Clark Co., Dak.; Mrs. Samantha Obenchain, in Mono Co., Cal.; Mrs. Martha Regudtt, (widow) at the homestead in Jefferson; Mrs. Ellen Obenchain, in McKinney, Texas; Jehu, Dr. M. P. Stair, of Black Earth, Dane Co., Wis.; Mrs. Antoinette Allen, at Darlington, Wis.; Dr. Theodore F. Stair, at Mazomanie, Wis.; Henry and Dr. J. B. Stair, at Spring Green, Wis. A daughter, Elsie, the sixth child, died at the age of twenty-nine years. Jehu, the elder of the firm of Stair Bros., was born in Virginia in 1833. He was married to Eleanor, daughter of Benjamin Chambers, who settled on section 35, of the town of Jefferson, in 1839. Mr. and Mrs. Jehu Stair have two children—Mary G. and Landus C. Henry Stair was born in Virginia in 1845. He was married to Mary E., also a daughter of Benjamin Chambers. They have five children—Elsie, Louis, Sydney, Mary and Henry. While Henry Stair and family were on a pleasure trip to the Rocky Mountains in the summer of 1879, an event of their expedition was the ascent of Pike's Peak. His son, Louis, went on foot and return, the distance being about twenty miles, being then between ten and eleven years old. This was a feat probably never before accomplished by one so young. Stair Bros. have established an extensive trade, and their integrity and ability as business men are unquestioned.

Bowen R. Clawson dates his residence in Green county from 1855, but was here temporarily as early as 1852. He was born in Green Co., Penn, in 1837, where he lived till 1851. In that year he removed to Waukesha, Wis., with his parents. He early engaged in the grain business, buying for the Forest City Mills at Waukesha, Stoughton and also at Juda, in this county. He began his mercantile career, as clerk, in Juda, though he had previously sold goods at Waukesha. He began mercantile trade, for himself, at Juda, in April, 1860, and in 1862 came to Brodhead and engaged in business, in the firm name of Clawson & Roderick. After continuing some time, he sold to Mr. Roderick, and purchased the store which he now owns. He continued in mercantile trade alone and with various partners, until 1881. He was then succeeded by Aurand & Terry, but he still owns the store building. Mr. Clawson is an active, energetic business man, and has acquired a competence. Since his residence in Brodhead, he has not confined his business to merchandising, but dealt in wool and grain for many years, and lately has dealt extensively in wool. Mr. Clawson began business with nothing, but has succeeded by energy and a determination to win. His father, Phineas Clawson, came to Brodhead in 1865, where he died in March, 1882, at the age of eighty-five years. His mother died several years previous to the death of her husband. Mr. Clawson was married to Matilda R. South, daughter of Abijah South, who settled in the town of Jefferson, in 1846, coming there from Pennsylvania. He died in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Clawson have two children—Bowen R., born in 1869, and Sadie, born in October, 1876.

Sceva P. Taft has been a resident of Brodhead since June, 1856. He was born in Pottsdam, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in 1821, where he lived till twenty-two years of age, when he went to Ogdensburg, N. Y., and engaged in the business of piano making, to which he had served an apprenticeship in his native town. He remained several years at Ogdensburg, and then went to Vergennes, Vt., where he had charge of a piano factory one year. Thence again to St. Lawrence county, where his parents were still living. He soon after came to Wisconsin, and lived in Milwaukee and Waukesha for two years. At Milwaukee he was employed in the railroad car shop in the construction of passenger cars, assisting in building the first passenger car constructed in the State of Wisconsin. He returned to New York in the fall of 1855, and came to Brodhead, as stated, the following year. He engaged here, at first, in clerking in the drug store of E. C. Clinton, and bought out Mr. Clinton in 1858. He subsequently disposed of his drug business, and was engaged in the hardware trade for a number of years; later he engaged in real estate and insurance, which was his business for many years. Mr. Taft has been a justice of the peace most of the time for twenty years. He has been twice married; his first wife was Jane Critchet, a native of Ogdensburg, N. Y., who died in Waukesha, in 1856; his present wife was Catharine E. Conkey, born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in the town of Canton. He has one child by his first wife—Edmond, now engaged at railroading. He has three children by his present wife—Jennie May, Nellie A. and George J. Mr. Taft's father, Silas Taft, came to Brodhead in 1856, and lived with his children till his decease. His mother is still living, at time age of ninety years. Two of his brothers were among the early carpenters of Brodhead. The elder, Ransom Taft, built the Clinton Hotel in 1856, and conducted it for several years. He is now in Chicago. The younger brother, Judson, resides in Racine.

James T. Sherman is one of the earliest settlers of Brodhead. He was of the firm of Sherman, Clinton & Co., the first general mercantile firm of the village, a history of which appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Sherman is a native of New Haven, Conn., where he was born, April 17, 1819. He is of an eminent descent, being a great-grandson of the illustrious Roger Sherman, of Continental and Revolutionary fame. He was reared to the occupation of farming in Suffield, of his native State, not far from the city of Springfield, Mass. Mrs. Sherman was formerly Abby Morgan. Her father was Deacon Jasper Morgan. She was born in Windsor, Conn., March 17, 1824, and is a sister of the late Edwin D. Morgan, the eminent statesman, and great war governor of the State of New York. Thus both Mr. and Mrs. Sherman are connected with men whose names will ever be conspicuous in the history of our country. Mr. Sherman came to Brodhead from Connecticut, in 1856, with his family, consisting of wife and seven children, and immediately engaged in mercantile trade, in which he continued two years, and soon after engaged in agricultural pursuits, to which he has since devoted the greater portion of his time, but has now retired from the more active duties of life. He possesses one of the many beautiful homes in Brodhead, and is now passing his declining years in peace and comfort. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman have been identified with the Congregational Church since its organization in 1856, he being one of the deacons of that society. They have had nine children—James Morgan, Abby T., Eliza M., Anna M., Charles J., John T. and Jessie T., (twins) Helen M. and Fannie B. The two youngest were born in Brodhead.

John B. Blanchard was one of the early business men in Brodhead, coming here when the town started in 1856, and erecting one of the first dwellings on the village plat. Soon after coming here, he engaged in buying grain, live stock, dressed hogs, etc., in which occupation, he was one of the first to engage. After a residence here of several years, he purchased the warehouse now occupied by Dunwiddie & Taylor, and continued the grain trade until his decease, which occurred March 13, 1876. His advantages for obtaining an education in early life, were only medium, but he was a very good business man, a man of sterling integrity, strictly temperate in his habits, and withal, an esteemed and valuable citizen. He met with some unfortunate reverses in his earlier business enterprises, yet by persevering effort, he was enabled to leave to his family a good competence. He was a native of Caledonia Co., Vt., born Oct. 13, 1820, where he was reared, and married to Helen M. Laird, in 1847, who was born in Barnet, Vt., in 1821. Mrs. Blanchard is still a resident of Brodhead. She has no surviving children, but has lost three—Azal A., born in Vermont, and died in 1859, at the age of ten years; Helen M., who died in infancy; and John A., her last surviving child, was killed while coupling cars, in November, 1881. Mrs. Blanchard occupies the home built by her husband, in 1868.

Harvey F. Moore came to Brodhead in 1856. He was born in Barnet, Vt., in 1809. He was married to Sophia B. Laird, a sister of Mrs. H. M. Blanchard. Capt. Moore, as he was familiarly called, was a man of prominence among the business men of Brodhead, and was also well known politically, and served a term in both branches of the legislature of Wisconsin. He was engaged in grain buying here for a number of years. He purchased a farm in the town of Spring Grove, and resided, alternately, on the farm and in the village, until his death, which occurred in April, 1877. Mrs. Moore now lives in the village of Brodhead, having sold her farm in Spring Grove. She has three children—Catharine, wife of P. J. Clawson; Harvey J., in St. Paul, Minn.; and Peter T.

Hiram Bowen came to Green county first in 1850, and settled here permanently in 1858. He is a brother of Ephraim Bowen. He was born in Erie Co., N. Y., in 1827. His parents were Pardon and Maria Bowen, who removed from Cayuga county to Erie county. Pardon Bowen died in 1840, and his wife a number of years previous to that time. Hiram Bowen grew to manhood in Erie county, and in 1853 was married to Catharine E. McMartin. Her father, Daniel McMartin, was a native of Scotland, who came to this country when a child. Soon after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Bowen went overland to California, being about four months in reaching their destination. After crossing the Missouri river, settlers were not numerous on the route which they took to the Pacific coast. The first building they saw after crossing that river was Fort Laramie, about 500 miles west of Council Bluffs. This was Mr. Bowen's second trip to California—he having gone there in 1851 by way of the Isthmus. They remained several years in California, and returned to the State of New York. On coming to this county, Mr. Bowen engaged in merchandising with his brother Ephraim, at Albany. He afterwards engaged in farming in the town of Mount Pleasant. He came to Brodhead in the spring of 1873 and engaged in the lumber business, which he continued until January, 1881, when he was succeeded by his son, Albert M. Mr. and Mrs. Bowen have three children—Albert M., born in California, in 1854; Addie, born in 1860; and Nellie, born in 1870. Albert M. is married and has three children—Kittie Maude, Lotta Emeretta and Edith E.

Harmon B. Stewart has resided in the town of Decatur, this county, since April, 1858. He was born in the town of Silver Lake, Susquehanna Co., Penn., Jan. 18, 1818. He is a brother of J. W. Stewart, of Brodhead. His father, Sylvester Stewart, removed from Vermont to Pennsylvania, and soon after the birth of H. B. removed to the State of New York, and settled near the Vermont line. The family removed to Clinton, Wayne Co., Ohio, in 1833, and located on a farm. In 1835 Mr. Stewart went to Vermont, and engaged in cotton manufacturing at North Bennington. The factory in which he was engaged was destroyed by fire, and Mr. Stuart then engaged at the work of a machinist and built a number of looms, he returned to Ohio in 1837, but went in the fall of the following year to Adams, Mass., remained eight months, then returning to Vermont, pursued his former occupation at Bennington until 1845, when he returned to the homestead farm in Ohio, where he remained twelve years, then came to Green county, and has since been a resident of this town. In the spring of 1862 he bought an interest in the flouring mill near old Decatur village, and was connected therewith until the close of 1866. Since the beginning of 1867 he has been engaged in farming, real estate, loaning money, etc. Mr. Stewart is numbered among the most successful and substantial business men of Brodhead. He now owns at least 1,200 acres of land in the vicinity of Brodhead, and is a man of sound financial ability. He has been three times married, first in Vermont to Harriet C. Tanner, a native of Wilmington, Vt. She died in 1871. His second wife was Mrs. Clarinda Harrington. His present wife was Mrs. Lavina Dubois. By his first wife he has three children—Sylvester, a former successful merchant in Brodhead, now at Hancock, Stevens Co., Minn., where he is a large land owner and produce dealer; Mrs. Emma Walling, wife of Percy Walling, who now resides in Kansas; and Harmon T., now living in Brodhead. By his second wife he has one son—Gerald.

J. Brant is a harness maker, of Brodhead, that business there now being represented by him, Joseph Gramm and Henry Richards. The first to open a shop of this kind in the place was Albert Shearer, in 1858, who employed his brother-in-law, Michael Ott, as workman, who made the first harness manufactured in the village. The shop was continued but a short time. Mr. Ott is now a resident of Janesville. The second shop was opened in 1859, by J. Brant, the subject of this sketch, who has since been in the business, except his service in the army, and another recent short interval. He was born in Ohio, in 1832, and when but seven years old removed to Indiana with his step-father, his own father, Abraham Brant, having died when he was but two years of age. His parents were natives of Pennsylvania. He learned his trade in Wabash City, Ind., after which he spent a number of years traveling and working at his trade at different places, until he engaged in business in Brodhead, in 1859, as stated. He enlisted in 1861 in the regimental band of the 3d Wisconsin, and was discharged in October, 1862, by virtue of an order issued by the war department for the discharge of regimental bands. He re-enlisted in 1863 as a member of the band of the 1st brigade, third division, fifteenth army corps, and served until August, 1865. He participated in Sherman's Atlanta campaign, and in the march to the sea. He was married to Ellen Cowen, a daughter of Mrs. Charlotte Cowen, who was an early settler of Green county. Mrs. Brant died a number of years since, leaving two children—Fred, born in 1867, and Tina, born in 1869.

D.C. Day, of Brodhead, settled in the town of York, Oct. 3, 1843. His father, D. B. Day, located in that town the previous year, coming from Geauga Co., Ohio. D. B. Day was a native of Madison Co., N.Y., born in 1798, in which county he continued to reside until he reached manhood, when he moved to Genesee county, thence to Ohio, in 1840, and to this county in 1842. The wife of D. B. Day was formerly Hannah Cass. They had nine children who grew to maturity, seven of whom, five sons, and two daughters, are still living. They removed to Kansas, in 1856, during the existence of border warfare in that State, where Mrs. D. B. Day died. Her husband removed to Iowa, in 1863, where he died. D. C. Day, the subject of this sketch, was born in Canada West, where his parents were then living. He was reared in the State of New York, removed to Ohio with his parents, and came to Green county, in 1843. He first settled on a farm in the town of York, which he had obtained from the government. At that time there were living within the borders of that town: John Stewart, Sr., William Crowell, Albro Crowell, son of William; William C. Green, Joseph Miller, William Spears, Simeon Alden, Ezra Wescott, Amos Conkey, D. B. Day, Philander Pebbles and Henry Hurlbert. Of these families only that of Philander Pebbles now (1884) remains. Mr. Day has been twice married. His first wife was Mary Bryant, a daughter of Jesse Bryant. His second and present wife was Mrs. Mary A. Crosby, a daughter of Elder Decker, of Newark, Rock county, and the widow of Haskell Crosby. Mr. Day has six children by his first wife—Albert L., a physician located at Postville, in the town of York; Edwin R., living near Lemars, Iowa; Lewis E., in Nebraska; Rosella, widow of Francis Grinnell; Nellie, wife of E. A. Lynn; and Willie B., near Lemars, Iowa. His youngest son died in 1880. Mrs. Day has seven children, five daughters, and two sons, by her former marriage—Martha, Angelia, wife of A. E. Hall; Ella, wife of F. E. Darling; Emma, wife of R. E. Hoyt, Erwin C., Hattie and Harvey.

E. R. Sprague, Esq., the present police justice of Brodhead, is a native of Cattaraugus Co., N.Y., born in 1830. He received a good common school education. In 1846 he came with his parents to Rock county, and in the winter of 1847 engaged in teaching school in the town of Spring Valley. He followed teaching and farming for a number of years in Rock county. In November, 1854, he came to Clarence, in this county, and taught a number of terms. He was well known as a successful teacher, for many years, and there are many men and women in Green and Rock counties who have reached or passed the meridian of life, who received the benefit of his instruction. After taking up his residence in Green county, he was absent for a number of years. He went to Menomonee, in Dunn Co., Wis., where he was engaged in the construction of the extensive saw mill of Knapp, Stout & Co., at that place. He remained there three years. He went to Orfordville in 1860, and there resided until 1867, thence to Evansville, where he was engaged in business three years, thence to a farm near Stoughton, Dane county. Two years later he came to this county and located at Albany, remaining there a year and a half. He then came to Brodhead. He has been a justice of the peace for several years, and superintendent of the city schools, two years. Mr.

Sprague has been three times married. His present wife is a native of St. Johns, N.B. He has four children—Flora May, F. Guy, Alberta, a teacher in the graded schools of Brodhead, and Hugh. His oldest son is an expert printer, and a compiler of city directories, also a step-son, C. W. Murphy, a clerk in W. W. Roderick's dry goods store in Brodhead for several years. Mr. Sprague is a genial gentleman, socially, and well liked for his many excellencies of character.

Joseph Thompson and wife are engaged in a general millinery and fancy goods business in Brodhead. They were engaged in the same business at Albany, in this county, previous to coming to Brodhead. Mr. Thompson was born in Canada, in December, 1833, of American parents. When a child he removed with his parents to Ohio, and thence to Rockford, Ill. He enlisted the first year of the war, Sept. 18, 1861, in the 8th Illinois Cavalry. He served three years in the army, and was discharged Oct. 28, 1864. He participated in many important battles, including Yorktown, Williamsburg, seven days' fight, and retreat of McClellan, second battle of Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Chancellorsville, where he had a horse shot under him and was taken prisoner. After remaining three days in the hands of the rebels, he succeeded in escaping from his guard at midnight and reached the Union lines in safety. He participated in twenty of the most important engagements of the Rebellion, including Gettysburg. After the war he returned to Rockford, and thence to Waterloo, Iowa, where he lived two years. He came to this county in 1868, locating at Albany. Mrs. Thompson was formerly Charlotte Marson, a native of Nottingham, England. She came to the United States in 1847, with her parents, who settled at Rochester, N. Y., and removed to Ogle Co., Ill., in 1854, and during the late Rebellion took an active part in woman's work for the Union at Washington City, under a government commission.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

John J. Pfisterer, dealer in diamonds and jewelry, at Brodhead, established his business here in 1866, succeeding A. G. Wetstein. Mr. Pfisterer was born in Wurttemberg, Germany, in 1841. He learned the trade of watchmaker in his native country, and came to the United States in 1861. He worked at Ann Arbor, Mich., three years, then went to Chicago, where he resided two years. Mr. Pfisterer is an excellent workman, and has established an extensive and lucrative trade. He is also a successful business man. He owns the store building which he occupies, also a pleasant home in the village, and a good farm in the town of Spring Grove. His wife was also a native of Wurttemberg. They have one daughter-Clarie.

Ernest Hahn is the merchant tailor of Brodhead. He engaged in business here in 1868. Mr. Hahn was born in the northern part of Germany, in 1832. He learned his trade in his native land, and came to the United States in 1856. He worked at his trade in Cleveland, Ohio, for a time; in 1857, came to Madison, Wis. In the spring of 1859, he went to Prairie du Chien, and soon after came to Monroe, Green county, and in a short time went to St. Louis and remained one year. He then returned to this county and located at Monroe, where he remained working at his trade, with his father-in-law, until he came to Brodhead. His wife was Mary Spahr, daughter of Peter Spahr, of Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. Hahn have four children. The eldest, a daughter, was born in St. Louis. Two sons were born in Monroe and one in Brodhead. Mr. Hahn is an excellent workman and does a prosperous business.

Charles W. Lucas, artist and photographer, at Brodhead, located here in April, 1869. He is a native of Maine, and was born in Piscataquis county of that State in 1841. He engaged in the business of photography in 1866, and in 1868 came to Wisconsin. He was in company with other parties till the spring of 1871, since which time he has carried on business alone. Mr. Lucas has had much experience in photography, is an excellent artist, and possesses facilities for doing first-class work. Mrs. Lucas' maiden name was Bashie Springstead. She has lived in Brodhead and vicinity since she was a child, and is a daughter of David Springstead, who came to Green county in March, 1855, and died subsequently. Mrs. Springstead and six daughters are still living. Two of the latter, besides Mrs. Lucas, reside in this county, Mrs. Sarah Straw and Mrs. Dolly Gardner. Two reside in Illinois, Mrs. Georgia Stiles and Rella, unmarried, and one, Mrs. Esther Johns, lives in Nebraska. There were also two sons in the family, William, who went to California in 1859 where he died in 1861, and Jeremiah, who served in the War of the Rebellion, first in the 3d Wisconsin Infantry, company C, and afterwards in company B, of the 46th regiment. He removed to Minnesota after the war, where he died in 1875.

Charles F. Thompson, a well known citizen of Green county, is a native of Susquehanna Co., Penn., born in 1828. He came to this county with his father, who settled in the town of Sylvester, at quite an early day, and was one of the prominent farmers and dairymen of that town. Charles F. Thompson was married to Kate C. Chandler, daughter of Josephus Chandler, who settled in Dane county, where he died in 1859. Mr. Chandler emigrated to Wisconsin from the State of Maine. Mrs. Thompson was one of the early teachers in the town of Sylvester, engaging in that occupation in 1851. He was one of the prominent business men of Sylvester, and resided for considerable time in the village of Monticello, engaged in farming and other occupations. He was a member of the legislature of Wisconsin while a resident of Monticello. In 1863 he removed to Milwaukee and engaged in a commission business. From Milwaukee he went to Green Bay and engaged in lumbering. He came to Brodhead in 1870. At the present time (1884) he has charge of the toll road from Deadwood to Lead City. This road he helped to construct. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of two children—Thomas W., who resides near Deadwood on a ranch, and Carrie S., wife of George M. Pierce.

William Smith is a son of Archibald Smith, who was born in Scotland, and came to Wisconsin from Livingston Co., N.Y., and settled on a farm of government land in the town of Spring Valley, on the town line, adjoining the town of Decatur, where he still lives. Archibald Smith has seven children. William was born at the homestead in 1849. He has been a resident of Brodhead since 1881. He is employed as a clerk in the Grange store, in which he owns stock. He also owns stock in the Brodhead Creamery. His wife was Clara, daughter of E. G. Melendy. She was born in the town of Cottage Grove, near Madison. They have two children—Marilla and Alice D.

W.R. Skinner is the present station agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company at Brodhead. The first to hold that position was J. L. McNair; the second, Charles Peck, who was succeeded by W. S. Alexander, who was followed by S. Hills, who in turn was succeeded by Warren H. Barnes, who was agent for fifteen years, until his decease, in August, 1881, when Mr. Skinner, subject of this sketch, took the position thus made vacant. Mr. Skinner was born in Oneida Co., N.Y., in 1854, and came to Wisconsin with his father, Robert Skinner, in 1866. The latter settled with his family at Monroe, but in 1868 the family removed to LeRoy, Bremer Co., Iowa. W. R. Skinner came to Brodhead in 1873, and engaged as clerk for Mr. Barnes, the former agent, also in learning telegraphy, at this office. He afterwards went to Atchison, Kansas, where for four years he was cashier of the Rock Island Railroad office at that place. He returned to Brodhead to assist Mr. Barnes, who was his brother-in-law, in the illness of the latter. Mr. Barnes was a man who had had an extensive experience in railroad business previous to coming to Brodhead, and was a faithful and efficient officer. Mr. Skinner was married to May Woodle, a daughter of Allen Woodle, one of the earliest settlers of Green county. He is a capable officer, and a courteous and popular gentleman.

Frank J. Bucklin, proprietor of livery stable at Brodhead, succeeded G. B. Wooster in 1882. He is a native of Iowa, and was born in Jackson county in 1852. He removed to Illinois with his parents, where he attended school for ten years, then went to Pennsylvania, and was engaged in the oil regions eight years. He was married in Pennsylvania to Eliza Bruner, a native of that State. They have four children—Rodney, Nettie, Frank and Maggie. Mr. Bucklin's stables are furnished with excellent teams, and he has become deservedly popular as an accommodating and reliable gentleman.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

TOWN OF EXETER.

Congressional township 4 north, range 8 east, of the fourth principal meridian, comprises the civil town, Exeter. It is bounded on the north by Dane county; on the east by the town of Brooklyn; on the south by the town of Mount Pleasant, and on the west by New Glarus. Sugar river crosses the surface of this town, coming from Dane county by way of section 2, and leaving through section 25. On section 14, where the village of Dayton is located, this stream affords the only water power in the town. Three small spring branches enter the river as it passes through this town. The largest comes from Dane county by way of section 1, flows south and makes junction with the river on section 24. Two branches, heading on sections 5 and 16, unite on section 10, and reach the river from the west on section 2. A small spring branch flows from near the old village of Exeter, to the main stream on section 25. A branch of little Sugar river crosses the southwestern portion of the town. These water courses make the surface of the country rolling, but no very abrupt bluffs are found. The soil of this town varies. East of the river the soil has a much more apparent tendency toward sandiness than the west, and the soil improves as you retreat from the stream. In the northwestern portion of the town there is a good prairie soil, and to the south and southwest the surface is quite rough, having a heavy clay soil, and being quite well timbered. In the valleys the soil consists of a rich black loam. In the southeastern portion of the town there is considerable rolling prairie, which generally has a rich, deep soil, underlaid with clay.

Altogether Exeter is one of the best agricultural towns in the northern part of Green county. There is plenty of timber for use, water in abundance, and considerable natural meadow land, making it a fine stock district, and the people are improving their natural advantages.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The lead mines at Exeter, called in early days "New Diggings," and later Sugar river mines and Exeter mines, caused this town to be the first settled of any in Green county. In a rude way the Indians had mined lead here years before white men had been in this country. 'Tis said "a man named Burke, in crossing the country, lost himself and found the Indian diggings." When this occurred, no one knows. But two miners and traders named D. McNutt and Mr. Boner, came here early in 1827, bringing goods for the Indians, and soon became possessed of the lead ore in the hands of the Indians by trade in whiskey and trinkets. These built a cabin for occupancy. Whether they intended to remain or not, cannot be ascertained. But at all events their residence here was brought to a tragic termination; for a little over a year later McNutt killed Boner in a drunken quarrel. Van Sickles, their Indian interpreter, was the only white man there, except themselves. McNutt kept up his drunk, but sobered enough to reach Blue Mounds, where he was arrested. The next day miners buried Boner. Upon McNutt's trial at Prairie du Chien, he was acquitted, the jury believing that while he might have killed Boner, the fact that Van Sickles, who was noted as a champion liar, swore positively to the killing, was sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, and in accordance with their oaths they found a verdict of "not guilty." McNutt left the country.

The first man to make a permanent settlement in this town—and this was the first settlement in Green county—was William Deviese. He was of French-Scotch descent, born in Pocahontas Co., Va., March 16, 1793. In 1826 he left his native State, and the following spring of 1827, found him in St. Louis. In March, 1827, he came to Wiota, Lafayette Co., Wis. Terr. In August, 1828, a short time after the McNutt—Boner tragedy, Mr. Deviese, who had prospected here prior to that time, took up his residence at "Exeter Diggings," and thus became the, first settler in Green county. At first Mr. Deviese was a trader in a small way. He was a stirring man, and soon got in shape to give employment to others. In the fall of the same year, William Wallace and wife, and Josiah R. Blackmore came to the mines in the employ of Mr. Deviese. In the spring of 1829, he built a smelting furnace, and in the fall went to Peoria and brought home a drove of hogs. In 1830, he broke sixteen acres of land and put in some turnips, and "sod crop." During this year—1830—lead which he had been selling at Galena for $80 per ton, dropped to a low figure and the mines, which had been worked vigorously, were nearly abandoned. Mr. Deviese still continued the smelting furnace, buying ore and selling some goods. Blackmore had left, and afterward he and Wallace turned up again as settlers in the town of Clarno.

John Dougherty, in 1831, opened a small trading cabin. Deviese kept up his smelting works, employing three or four hands, until the outbreak of the Black Hawk War, in 1832, the first news of which that reached the mining settlement was of the engagement at Stillman's Run. All hastened to Galena. Mr. Deviese joined a company under William S. Hamilton, at Wiota, and did valuable service as a scout, messenger and soldier. No service for which he was not ready and willing; no work too hard or too continuous. He eventually received for his services $1 per day for himself and horse. September 1 of the same year found him again at Exeter rebuilding, for the Indians, or rather malicious whites, as Mr. Deviese believes, had destroyed every thing destructible. He found his oxen and cut hay for the winter, selling his smelting furnace to Mr. Dougherty the following year. He conducted business in a prosperous way until, in 1836, he had become wealthy for those days. The financial convulsions of the commercial world in 1836—7 could not spare the humble lead mining settlement, and ruin overtook Mr. Deviese, financially wrecking him and his fortunes. He passed under a dark cloud and gave himself up to indulgence in drink. For the years following he says : "There is nothing of my life worth telling." Major Deviese is a man who is universally respected, and by many of the old pioneers, beloved for his many and manly qualities. When he had it to spend and give, he did it royally; a man of good education; high-minded; loved the right even when traveling wrong. He is now in his ninety-first year, clear in intellect and memory, though bedridden since September, 1879, occasioned by a fall, permanently injuring his spine. He now lives with Hollis Crocker, just over the line in Dane county. He has for many years followed total abstinence, so far as liquor is concerned, but an inveterate smoker, and many a Sabbath morning the family are aroused by his crying out: "Oh! how I wish I could smoke." In his helpless condition some one must wait upon him, and his wants are immediately attended to. Major Deviese, as he is commonly called, joined the Methodist Church many years ago. In his death, which must occur 'ere long, he will be mourned and remembered as few among the old pioneers have been. He has no relatives living in the west, or, perhaps anywhere else. He has never been married; as he says:

"When I ought to have married, I left the active world behind me."

Hollis Crocker gave Major Deviese a home over thirty-one years ago. For nearly a third of a century has his untiring care of and for him been a subject of wonder to all who do not know his good heart. No reward or hope of reward has ever been his; and God's richest blessing can be but a feeble recognition of this man's love of humanity, as shown in his care of fellow being—unfortunate. No son could do more, or do it more willingly. Hollis Crocker is a pioneer in every sense, having settled here in 1842, and undergone all the hardship, privation and disadvantages attendant upon the building up of a new country. His wife was born at Gratiot's Grove, Wis. Terr., in 1829. She was a granddaughter of a Swiss colonist, who came to the Red River colony, (Lord Selkirk's settlement) in 1821. Her mother made the trip by way of Hudson Bay, from the mouth of the Rhine, and in 1823, down the Red river, Lake Travis and St. Peter's river to Fort Snelling in a canoe, and from thence to Lafayette county, this State.

Pierce Bradley came to the mines in an early day, and erected one of the first cabins where Exeter village was afterward built. He was engaged at mining.

James Slater came to the mines in 1828, and remained a short time.

James Hawthorne came at about the same time as Major Deviese, and for a time the two were in partnership. Mr. Hawthorne left the mines in 1833.

Edward D. Beouchard, a Frenchman, was mining at Exeter in 1828, and remained until 1833, except a period during the Black Hawk War. He went from here to Lafayette county.

BUSINESS GROWTH IN EXETER.

In 1835 Kemp & Collins bought out Mr. Dougherty's interests at this place, and also the same year, bought 600 acres of land south of the mines, including that which Major Deviese had broken. Mr. Dougherty, later, moved to Otter Creek, Lafayette county, and died there. Kemp came from England; and Collins—who was of Scotch descent—from Ireland. They remained in Exeter only a few years, when Joseph Kemp returned to England. Later, he came back and died at Wiota. William Collins succeeded to the real estate and left about the same time as Kemp. He came back and sold the land; then went to California.

In 1841 Exeter had become quite an important place in the new Territory, and apparently had a prosperous future before it.

The first hotel was a log affair, erected by Brainard Blodgett, in 1840. The same year, Ezra Durgin erected a small log tavern. Both sold whisky. Blodgett left, a short time later, and went to the Wisconsin pineries where he was drowned. He was succeeded in business by Alvah B. Humphrey. The latter, and his wife, lived here until 1854, when they went to Monroe, where they died. Ezra Durgin went to California.

Thomas Somers came in 1840, and when the first post office, "Exeter," was established, in 1841, he was made postmaster. Mr. Somers died at Exeter in 1851. In 1846 the first frame house was built by Mr. Somers. He sold to Charles George, who opened a hotel. Thomas Somers followed Kemp & Collins in trade. Then in succession came "Wild Yankee" Litchfield and John Burke, Freeman Safford, Ephraim Bowen, Hayward & Lindsley. It is not known where Litchfield went; John Burke went to Iowa; Hayward to California and is now wealthy; Lindsley went to Sheboygan and engaged in lumber business.

The last hotel kept was by James Hayden, who closed it out in 1856.

In 1834 Tom Welch and wife came to Exeter. Mrs. Welch is remembered by the old pioneers for her general recklessness, and disposition to run the machine without regard to what others might call respectability. They farmed some, and kept "boarders, whisky, etc." Welch died there. The widow married a man named Flaherty and started for Oregon, and the husband died on the way. It is said the woman, later, married her fifth husband in Oregon. Tis said "she was able to get outside of from three to five drinks of whisky every morning before breakfast."

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Michael Welch, a single man, came in 1834, and followed mining.

John Armstrong came to the town in 1840, and settled on section 5. He sold out in 1844, but lived here until 1850. He was reckless fellow and fond of drink and wild life, but had many good qualities. It is said of him, that he ordered dinner in Galena, for a party of miners in his employ, and upon being told he would have to wait until the other guests were served, he rode his horse into the dining room, and on the tables, scattering things right and left. He paid $300 for the sport. From here he went to the Wisconsin pineries, and died about 1860.

Joseph Dunbar came in 1836, and followed farming and mining. For the last thirty years or more, he has lived on his fine farm on sections 22 and 23.

Capt. Leonard Ross resided a short time in the village of Exeter, in 1840, and the same year settled on section 8. Capt. Ross was a valuable acquisition to the new settlement, and bought 900 acres of land in that part of the town. He was an energetic and public spirited man.

The building of the Dayton mill and the almost entire failure of the lead mines, caused a general decline at Exeter, until in 1884 it numbered less than half a dozen houses.

The name of the mines was taken from the Exeter mines in England, being bestowed by English miners. The town took the name from the mines.

The post office at Exeter village was discontinued in 1871. Robert Witter was the last postmaster.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first birth in the Exeter mining settlement was that of Louisa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wallace, born Aug. 7, 1830. She afterward married Charles Thomas. The first marriages were of John Campbell to Elizabeth Durgin in 1843. At about the same time Dr. Stearns married Charlotte Durgin.

John Campbell was the first blacksmith in Exeter. He came here in 1842. Some years later he went to the Wisconsin pineries.

The first religious services were held in 1829. A miner, who was also a preacher, was always ready, willing and able to instruct his fellow workers in spiritual matters, and in those early years the voice of prayer would occasionally be heard among the hardy miners at Exeter.

The first death of a white man in this town was that of the miner Boner, who was killed by McNutt, in 1828.

The following January, 1829, James Fanning died in the cabin of Major Deviese. He was buried by the side of Boner, on land recently owned by N. Wilcox.

A man named Castleman, from Milwaukee, was the first doctor. It said he did not have much skill, but was merely able to practice medicine. Dr. Stearns, who succeeded him, was a man of considerable education, genius and skill. Dr. Parsons came later and after a few years went to Milwaukee.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

The town of Exeter was organized in 1849. The first election was held at the house of L. D. Barnes, April 3, 1849, and resulted in the election of the following officers: Supervisors. John Porter, chairman; Robert Witter and James Hair; treasurer, John Gilman; assessor, William Oliver; clerk, A. K. Stearns; school commissioner, Alonzo Haywood; justices of the peace, John Porter, Robert Witter, Frederick Streiff and James Hair; constables, James T. Porter, Walter C. Ressler and James D. Forbes. There were thirty-nine votes cast. The clerks of the election were Charles K. Adams and A. K. Stearns; the judges were Lorenzo Barnes, John Porter and William Fletcher.

The officers elected April 1, 1884, were: Supervisors, James Lewis, chairman, John Ferguson and Leonard Ross; clerk, John Clark; treasurer, Lucius Jordan; and assessor, James Ruff.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school in the town of Exeter was taught in a log house in the Exeter mining - settlement in 1840. The teacher was Mr. Johnson. Schools have been taught regularly since that time.

In 1884 there were four full and eight joint districts in the town. Their condition is shown by the following:

District No. 1 (old village of Exeter) has a good school house, nearly new, valued with furniture at $665; has forty-eight pupils.

District No. 2 (village of Dayton); house in good condition, valued with furniture at $1,000; thirty-four pupils.

District No. 5 has an old house on section 17, valued at $450; forty-one pupils.

District No. 7, school house on section 23, valued at $300; there are twenty-eight pupils here.

District, No. 2 (joint) embraces territory in the towns of Exeter, Montrose and Oregon, with a school house in Montrose. There are fourteen pupils belonging to this district in Exeter.

Joint district No. 3 embraces territory in Exeter and Brooklyn, the school house being located in the latter town. Seven pupils reside in this town.

Joint district No. 4 embraces territory in Exeter and Montrose; school house in the latter town. Sixteen pupils reside in Exeter.

Joint district No. 4 embraces territory in Exeter, New Glarus and Primrose. The school house is in New Glarus; four pupils reside in Exeter.

Joint district No. 4 embraces territory in Exeter and New Glarus. The school house located on section 29, and is valued at $270. Fifty-six pupils reside in Exeter.

Joint district No. 6 embraces territory in Exeter and Brooklyn. The school house, which is located in East Dayton, is new, having cost $1,600. Thirty-four pupils reside in this town.

Joint district No. 8 embraces territory in Exeter and Brooklyn, the school house being located in the latter town. There are six pupils in this town.

Joint district No. 8 embraces territory in Exeter and Mount Pleasant; school house in Mount Pleasant. Three pupils live in this town.

VILLAGE OF DAYTON.

The first settlers on the present site of Dayton were the members of the Lewis family. Mahlan Lewis came in 1844. Mr. Leland came the same year and they formed the firm of Leland & Lewis. Mahlan Lewis went to California in 1850, and died in the mines there four years later. Leland also left.

Mahlan Lewis' mother, a widow, came in 1845. She had a family of two girls and three sons besides Mahlan. Melvin went to Minnesota in about 1860 and still lives there. Stephen lives in the town of Brooklyn. Joseph died about 1860. Eunice, the eldest girl, married Ansil Filts, and died in this town two or three years later. Abigail, the other girl, married a Mr. Cook and they went to Minnesota, where they still live. The old lady lived upon the old homestead until 1870, then went to the town of Union, Rock county, and lived with a sister until the time of her death, which occurred shortly afterward, when she was nearly ninety years of age. The Lewis family were the first permanent settlers of Dayton. They lived in the house now occupied by Mrs. Joseph Green.

A. D. Kirkpatrick came in 1852 from Ohio and brought his family. He had formerly lived in the town of Brooklyn. After selling out to Joseph Green he returned to his farm in Brooklyn. Mr. Kirkpatrick gave the name of Dayton to the village, from Dayton, Ohio.

Dr. Lysaght, with his two sons, William and Thomas, came from Ireland in 1844 and purchased a large tract of land. The doctor remained about two years, then left his sons to improve his gift to them. Thomas went to California in 1850. He died in Kansas before 1860. William lived in this town until 1882, when he sold out and removed to the city of Monroe, where he still lives, having acquired a goodly share of this "world's goods."

The water power at Dayton village was first improved by Leland & Lewis, in 1845. They built a dam across the river and erected a saw mill. It is said by old settlers to have been a good mill, and successfully operated. It being the only mill within a long distance, excepting a mill that had been erected at Attica the preceding year, this was a great convenience to the new settlement. In 1852 the property was sold to A. D. Kirkpatrick, who was assisted by Leonard Ross and others with means to build a flouring mill. This was equipped with two run of buhrs and was operated in connection with the saw mill by Mr. Kirkpatrick until April, 1854. At this time the property was purchased by Joseph Green, who enlarged the grist mill by adding a wing to the, east end in 1854, and in 1855 he entirely rebuilt the saw mill. In 1866 Mr. Green rented the property to his son, Thomas Green, who, in 1881, after his father's death, purchased the property. He has added new machinery to the grist mill, and moved the saw mill building away, converting it into a barn.

The village of Dayton was platted in August, 1853, by P. P. Havens, the plat being situated on the northeast quarter of section 14. In the spring of 1854 M. T. White made an addition, laying into lots and blocks land on the southwest quarter of section 12.

P. P. Havens settled here in 1847, and opened the first blacksmith shop in this section of country. He was one of the best of mechanics, and his breaking plows were considered to be the best obtainable. He made plows and did general work in his line, supplying a large extent of country. Mr. Havens did not seem to be desirous of making money from the sale of lots, for, it seems, to induce people to locate here, he was generally ready to give a deed of a lot if improvements were to follow.

M. T. White settled here as early as 1849, coming from Milwaukee county. He bought the southwest quarter of section 12, and still lives upon it. He has three sons living in the town—Frank, Mortimer and Benjamin.

About ten families reside in this part of the village, which is separated from the balance by Sugar river. In school affairs the two sides are distinct from each other, and this side has a fine school building. There is also on this side Wackman & Ruttz's blacksmith shop and Charles Wackman's wagon shop.

The first hotel in the village was opened July 1, 1853, by Rhinehart & Gracy. That day was a memorable one in Dayton's history. It is said by several who were present that the number of men who went home sober that night could be counted on the fingers of one hand. This hotel in the spring of 1855 was sold to Julius Stone, who, not long afterward, sold to A. D. Hymer. Different parties have rented the house, among whom are E. W. Smith, Mr. Williams and William Hayden. In 1880 Mr. Hymer sold the property to Mathias Hoesly, now of Monroe, who ran the house until 1883, when he rented it to Charles Sheple, the present occupant.

The first store in Dayton was opened in 1852 by a man named McLaughlin. During the same year he was closed out by his creditors, and returned to Ohio. The building he used is now occupied as a residence by Thomas Green, although many changes have been made.

In the fall of 1853 a store was opened by Leonard & Church, who kept a small stock of general merchandise. In 1855 Mr. Church bought his partner's share and continued the business for a few years, when he closed out and sold the building to Mr. Gattiker, who opened a hardware and tin store.

In the spring of 1854 George Duncan opened a store in a building which he had erected for the purpose. The same year he took a man named Harvey into partnership. Harvey had no capital, but a great amount of assurance. 'Tis said of him that he "was all things to all men." At least he seemed to know how to carry funds. When it became necessary for one of the firm to visit Chicago with $1,500 to pay indebtedness and replenish stock, he was the one to go, and he never returned. The firm immediately went out of business, and later Duncan went to California..

James Norris opened a store in the same building in 1855, and two years later sold to Jacob J. Tschudy (now of Monroe). Mr. Tschudy, owing to the financial panic of 1857—8, followed the fashion of the times, necessarily, and failed too. In 1858 Mosher & Humphrey opened a stock of goods here, and remained one season, when they returned to Monroe. In 1859 George Campbell, of Albany, occupied the same building and sold goods for one year. The building then remained vacant for a time, until, in 1861, Joseph Green put in a stock of dry goods and groceries. After the war his son, William Green, was associated with him. In 1859 James Norris erected the store building now occupied by Thomas Luchsinger, and put in a stock of goods.. Mr. Norris ran the business until 1866, when he sold to C. W. Leonard, formerly of the firm of Leonard & Church, and E. W. Smith. A year or two later Joseph Green bought them out, and afterwards sold to his son, William Green, who removed the stock to Albany in the spring of 1882. In November, 1882, Thomas Luchsinger bought the building, put in a good stock of general merchandise, and is still in business.

In the early days of Dayton's history, Thomas Gracy opened a small stock of groceries and dry goods. He sold to Day & Ross, who added drugs to the stock. Mr. Day sold his interest to Richmond & Ross, and later Mr. Ross bought out his partner. A few years later he sold to Witter & Trouesdale. Mr. Witter sold his interest after a time to his partner, and in 1883 it was purchased by J. P. Cunningham. Mr. Cunningham has added to the building and stock.

He now keeps dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, drugs, paints, oils, etc.

The Dayton Mercantile Association was organized in the spring of 1884, for the purpose of conducting a general mercantile business. The association bought the stock of Thomas Luchsinger, rented his store building, and opened for trade in May. The stockholders number about 100. The paid up capital amounts to $5,000. The directors and officers of the association are: Directors, W. S. Heal, president; Ansel Fitts, James Root, Philip Wackman, William Gill, I. F. Wallahan; Forester Havens, treasurer; Thomas Green, secretary.

John Pace commenced wagon building and repairing, on the east side, in 1854. He was succeeded by Doolittle and Still, who ran the business several years and sold to John Taylor. Then the business passed into the hands of Mr. Doolittle again, and later to Theodore Wackman, who was afterwards associated with Charles Wackman. The latter bought out Theodore, and now (1884) runs the business.

In 1859 Alfred Gattiker opened a tin shop and kept some shelf hardware in a room over the saw mill, and later in the building now occupied by the harness shop. Mr. Gattiker left here in 1864, and was succeeded by a Mr. Taylor, who ran a shop about one year. In 1869 William Dick, who had learned his trade with Gattiker, who had been in the army and absent some years, opened a tin shop and shelf-hardware store. He is still in business.

In 1853 Nick Gruidenwise opened a blacksmith shop in East Dayton. Later he was in partnership with D. M. Spencer, who succeeded to the business. He was followed by D. and J. P. Wackman. J. P. Wackman bought out his partner, Daniel, and was with his brother Joseph in the business for some time. Joseph sold to S. L. Ruddy and he to T. M. Scott, and from the latter gentleman Wallace Ruddy purchased the interest. In 1844 the firm was Wackman & Ruddy.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Thomas M. Scott, formerly of the firm of Wackman & Scott, opened a blacksmith shop in the village in 1881, which he still continues.

In 1859 William Taylor opened a harness shop, closing out about four years later. J. R. Richards opened a shop soon afterward, being here temporarily. He sold out to E. O. Faulks who is still in business. About 1866, William Kirkpatrick opened a shop and worked about two years. E. Witters did some business in this line here in 1872.

S. L. Forges keeps a small refreshment stand, candies and fruits, and is the shoemaker and cobbler of the village. Mr. Forges came from Ohio to this State in 1855, and has lived in Dayton fourteen years.

The first physician of Dayton was Dr. J. B. Ormsby, who located here in 1854, coming from Bradford, Vt., with a family of a wife and one child. Dr. Ormsby is well remembered by the old settlers as a skillful, kind hearted, intelligent physician, always ready to serve all, pay or no pay. Many an old pioneer has cause to remember him gratefully. He left here in 1867, and now lives at Milan, Ill. He buried his wife here, in 1865. Dayton has, since the departure of Dr. Ormsby, been transiently the residence of many physicians among whom are remembered Dr. Cobbin, Dr. George Fox, Dr. Bloomer, Dr. Roone, Dr. Edgar, Dr. G. N. Troesdale, Dr. Confor, and in 1883, Dr. W. C. Roberts, son of Dr. Roberts, of Albany, located here and is the resident physician. The doctor has won the confidence of his patrons, and is building for himself a lucrative and honorable practice.

A post office was established at Dayton, in September, 1854. W. W. Shepard, a young lawyer, resident of Dayton, visited the east, and went to Washington, for the purpose of securing a post office for Dayton. He succeeded. Mr. Shepard evidently was impressed with the magnitude of what he saw there, or wished to impress others, for he says, "the Capitol is forty rods and the President's house is nothing shorter." The first postmaster in Dayton was George Duncan. He was succeeded by James Norris, and he by C. D. W. Leonard, William Green, Volney Ross and G. N. Troesdale; and he by the present incumbent, J. P. Cunningham.

Jeremiah P. Cunningham, postmaster and merchant at Dayton, is a son of James and Mary Cunningham, and was born in Exeter, March 17, 1853. When eighteen years old he went to Chicago, where he was employed by the Transfer Omnibus Company five and a half years. He was then engaged as conductor on the west division street railroad, one year, then eighteen months in the Northwestern Railroad office, after which he ran a milk wagon about six months. In the fall of 1879, he returned to Green county and for two years rented the farm of James Martin, of Albany. In the spring of 1882 he rented the farm owned by J. P. Wackman, in Exeter, and worked it one year. In 1883 he bought the business of G. W. Trousdale, in Dayton, where he is now engaged in general merchandising. He has enlarged the store and increased the stock. He was married in Brodhead, May 29, 1876, to Margaret O'Donnell, daughter of John and Mary O'Donnell, of Monticello. One child—Mary, was born to them July 2, 1878. Mrs. Cunningham died May 13, 1883. Mr. Cunningham is a young man of good business capacity and habits. His child, Mary, lives with her grandfather O'Donnell, at Monticello, Wis. His father, James Cunningham, was born in Waterford county, Ireland, in 1819. In 1844 he came to Montreal, Canada, and lived in Kingston a short time. He then went to Vermont and worked on a railroad, and afterwards went to Kentucky, where he worked one year and returned to Vermont. He remained in that State and Massachusetts till about 1848, when he came to Green county and bought 200 acres on section 1, of Exeter. He was married in Dane county, to Mary Kerwin. Four children were born to them—Jeremiah P., William, Catharine, wife of John Dooley, and Rose Ann, living in Milwaukee. His wife died and he was again married to Catharine Joyce, of Monticello.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

By this union there were three children—Margaret, John and James. James Cunningham died in 1882. William Cunningham now owns and occupies the homestead.

The Methodist church was erected in 1868. It is 30x50 feet in size, with a belfry, but no bell, and cost $2,200. Elder Russell was the first pastor. In 1884 the pastor was Elder Haight.

In 1868, a Presbyterian church was built at a cost of $2,400. It is 30x50 feet in size, and also has a belfry, but no bell. Elder Newell was the first pastor, and through his instrumentality the church was built. The present pastor is Elder Pierce.

The Catholic church was built in 1869. It is 30x48 feet in size, and cost $2,000. Rev. James Stehle is the present pastor in charge. There are 120 families communicants in this parish.

CEMETERIES.

Dayton has three cemeteries. The one on the west side, close by the village plat, was located in 1852. William Norton was the first one buried there; he was the father of John M. Norton. He died in April, 1853. Another cemetery adjoins White's addition to Dayton, on the east side; it was established in 1854. The Catholic cemetery is located on section 10, about one mile from the village. The other cemetery in this town is near the old village of Exeter. It was located in 1850, near the center of the north side of section 35. A stranger named Shields had been buried on the grounds before the location was made.

MASONIC LODGE.

Dec. 6, 1873, under a dispensation of the grand lodge of A. F. & A. M., of the State of Wisconsin, a lodge was established at Dayton, with the following officers: E. C. Morre, W. M.; Joseph Witter, S. W.; P. H. Multer, J. W.; R. Ray, Treas.; Perry Doolittle, Sec'y. June 9, 1875, a charter was granted by the grand lodge, and the name and number given was, Dayton Lodge, No. 198. The first officers elected were: L. D. Dalrymple, W. M.; Joseph Witter, S. W.; P. H.

Multer, J. W.; G. L. Rutly, Treas.; C. Peterson, Sec'y. The masters succeeding Mr. Dalrymple have been: William Green, G. N. Troesdale, and the present master, A. S. Lewis. The present officers are: James Lewis, S. W.; G. Langhead, J. W.; L. Ross, Treas.; J. H. Langhead, Sec'y. The lodge has a membership of forty-seven. The lodge room is well furnished and their treasury is in good condition.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

Dayton formerly had two cheese factories, but neither have been operated for some years. But a Mr. Davis, from Chicago, converted the one on the east side, in 1883, into a creamery, and ran the business through most of the season, then failed. He left the farmers who had sold him cream behind about six or seven weeks in his payments.

A cheese factory in the Ross neighborhood was put in operation in May, (1884) by a stock company consisting of the following stock holders: Jeremiah Staley, William H. Ross, Leonard Ross, Abram Kundert, Henry Schneider and James Wilson. Leonard Ross, manager and treasurer. The building is located on section 16, main building 20x50 feet, and contains a work room 20x24 feet. They expect to use 1,500 barrels of milk per day this season.

REMINISCENCES.

[BY HOLLIS CROCKER.]

In this connection are presented several letters containing reminiscences of early days by Hollis Crocker. As little change as possible has been made, in order to preserve the style of the writer, and they will prove to the pioneers to be one of the most interesting chapters in Dayton's history. In his first letter, under the date of April 10, 1884, Mr. Crocker says: "At your request I will try and write a few of my early recollections of Green county, for, although a resident of Dane county, I had more to do with Green county in an early day than with Dane. I came to Wisconsin in the fall of 1842, with my father and family, and for the first two years we had to cross the entire county every time we went to mill, either to Winslow, on the Pecatonica, or Curtis's mill on the Richland creek. I well remember the first thing I saw on landing in old Exeter, on the 21st day of September, 1842. Three men were assisting a fourth man to the polls. It was Territorial election day. There was a man under each arm and another pushing in the rear, whilst froth and curses were pouring out of his mouth. Young as I was, (I was only fourteen) the thought struck me that possibly his vote might not be a very intelligent one. The very early settlers of Green county will remember old John Armstrong, sometimes called Devil John. I saw him in Exeter the first day we came there. He directed us to his house in the north part of the town, near where Mr. Lysaght used to live. As he had a good deal of whisky down, he felt very rich, and generously proposed to keep us a day, week or month, as the case might be, free of charge. We staid at his house all night. Mrs. Armstrong and children retired to the corn crib, surrendering us the use of the house; in fact, the early pioneers, with but few exceptions, were a whole-souled and generous class of people. Uncle John Armstrong had lived in the vicinity of Galena as a miner, a number of years before he came to Green county. He was quite wealthy at one time. When he was digging mineral at Galena, I remember hearing one of his adventures at that place. He had a good many hands at work for him, and the thought struck him to give them a first class meal at the hotel. The landlord wished him to wait a while, as he had some of the elite or upper ten at table that day. Uncle John swore that himself and hands were as good as his upper crust, and mounting his horse, he rode him into the dining room, made him leap with his fore-feet on the table, crushing it down, breaking the dishes and smashing things generally; then coolly asking what were the damages, he paid them and went his way rejoicing. I suppose the damages were the snug little sum of $300. Uncle John used to spree it some times for a week at a stretch, and there was one peculiarity about him, he would never stagger, and I believe he was more active when drunk, than when sober. I think he came to Exeter some time about 1840. He sold his claim and improvements to William Lysaght's father in 1844, and with Joe Hendrick, (his son-in-law) went into northern Wisconsin. They were both pioneers and required a great deal of elbow room.

“Leonard Ross, commonly called Capt. Ross, came to Exeter about the same time and settled one mile south of Armstrong. He was quite a prominent man in an early day. He died in 1856. His widow still lives on the old place and still looks hale and hearty. Long may she be spared to us.

“I remember another character who lived at Exeter when we came. I think his name was Joseph Wall, but he was better known by the name of Dad Joe. He was a Kentuckian by birth, and was as proud of it as any of the F. F. V., of old Virginia. He had a great aversion to eastern people; he designated them all as damned Yankees. Late in the autumn of 1842, my two brothers, Russell and William, started for Oneco, below Monroe seven or eight miles, for lumber, getting a late start, they were benighted at the Kemp & Collins place, where Uncle John Porter then lived. As no one in that day thought of turning a traveler away, he kindly took them in. Shortly after their arrival Dad Joe came in, somewhat elevated; by some means he found out they were York State people. He insisted on Uncle John turning them two d—d Yankees out. He said the straw pile was good enough for Yankees to sleep in. Failing to get Mr. Porter to turn them out, he declared he would not stay in the same house with them, and started for the village of Exeter. Mr. Porter going out about half an hour afterwards, found Dad Joe fast asleep, about ten or twelve rods from the house.

The cool air of a November night had the effect of cooling his wrath somewhat, and he stopped quietly in the house the rest of the night.

"It would not do to pass over the history of Exeter, without mentioning Tom Welch and his wife, well known as Mother Welch. They came to Exeter some time about the year 1835. They farmed some and kept tavern some. The old lady would go with an ox team to Milwaukee or Galena; she was well known at both places. When the store keepers saw her coming they would say: 'There comes Mother Welch, we must put up our goods about double so we can stand it to be beat down.' They used to keep their whisky hid from each other, and when a mutual friend happened to come there, unless he looked out sharp between the two treating him he would be made drunk. Michael Welch, brother to Thomas, left Exeter some time about 1848 or 1849. A year or two ago I heard a man say he had seen him in California. He was keeping 'bach.'

"In 1845 a Swiss settlement was started at New Glarus. Soon after coming there, Christopher Martin, of Monroe, was passing through the place and called up the crowd and treated. He noticed the people gathered in a little group and looked at him from time to time, talking amongst themselves; pretty soon he treated again, their curiosity was so aroused that one of the group constituting himself spokes man for the rest, walked up to Mr. Martin and asked him: 'Bees you von politic man?' 'No,' says Mr. Martin. At this the man seemed astonished and exclaimed: 'Vell vat for you treat us then?' showing by this that politicians had already been tampering with them. The Swiss were very shrewd in business matters, especially in buying cows. Shortly after they came to New Glarus, one of them came over to Mr. Ross' to buy a cow. Mr. Streiff came along as interpreter. They seemed to fix their attention on a rather inferior cow, examining her very attentively. They asked her price, and after looking at her some time, Mr.

Streiff turned around and pointing to his best cow asked him in a careless manner what her price was. Mr. Ross named a sum a good deal less than he would have been willing to take for her had he supposed they actually wanted to buy her. 'Vell,' says Mr. Streiff, 'dis man vill take this cow' pointing to the good one. Mr. Ross would not go back on his word and let them have his best cow, but declared they would never catch him napping again. Whilst I am speaking of Leonard Ross, I will mention what I should have written before. Not only does his widow live at the old place, but his three sons—Milton, William and Leonard, live near there. There was a fourth son, Otis, but he was killed before Petersburg. He belonged to the 37th regiment. Milton, the eldest, and William, served three years in the 8th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company H, and had the good fortune to get home alive, though Milton lost an eye in his country's service. I should be much to blame if I failed to mention 'old Ball,' a favorite horse of the captain's. Mr. Ross and old Ball were one and inseparable, as much as was Judge Irvin and his horse, Pedro. Ball was a large bay horse eighteen hands high, and well proportioned. He had a white stripe in his face, which gave him his name. He was very high spirited and a horse of uncommon intelligence. Every old settler in Green county will remember him. Although a heavy horse, he was a speedy traveler. Mr. Ross at one time was in Monroe on business; and receiving news of his wife's illness, he rode him home (twenty miles) in two hours, without injuring him in the least.

"I cannot refrain from relating one anecdote of Charlie George, an old settler in Exeter. At one time a Mormon preacher was holding forth at the Ross school house, and in his discourse he urged upon the people the necessity of watchfulness; and bringing over the word. 'watch' very often, old Charlie took him at his word, and getting up, started for the door, remarking audibly 'yes, yes, I'll watch, an I'll go right home and lock my horse stable'.

"The first time I passed through Monroe, then called New Mexico, as near as I can recollect, there were but three or four houses, and now it is one of the prettiest inland towns in the country; surrounded on all sides by as good a farming country as the sun shines on. I was never personally acquainted with many of the residents of Monroe, but a good many I knew by reputation. I remember seeing old Peter Rutledge. As near as I can remember he was about four feet, eight, nine or ten inches in height, and I should judge his weight was about 190 pounds, so you see that as far as avoirdupois was concerned, he was a man. He was a jurymen on the celebrated Vineyard trial. I think a Mr. Field and Moses M. Strong were lawyers for the defendant. I think it was Mr. Field who made the plea, and whilst he was coming out strong on the pathetic dodge, depicting the melancholy task of the messenger who should carry the sorrowful news of a verdict of guilty to his distracted wife, Peter was observed to be agitated. He said afterwards he was fearful that he would be the one chosen to carry the harrowing intelligence to the victim's wife. I suppose he was just such a jury-man as the most of criminal lawyers delight in.

"The winter of 1842—43 was very severe, with an uncommon depth of snow for this country. Very few settlers had seen such a depth of snow. To us, who just were from the eastern part York State, it was nothing unusual. Towards spring, feed became scarce, and in some places timber was cut down for the cattle to browse on, especially the linden or basswood. I well remember when Thomas Bowers' neighborhood was called Egypt, certainly very many went there to buy corn. Some of our neighbors were so scared at the deep snow, that they did not try to go to the mill, using hominy as a substitute for bread. I remember starting with two yoke of young oxen for mill below Monroe. I took my mother along as far as Mr. Thompson's, in the town of Sylvester, and going on the next day to mill. The day I started home it thawed a good deal, the water started running in the ravines a little. Stopped at Mr. Thompson's all night. It froze very hard, and the low places next morning were all a glare of ice. My oxen could not travel in the yoke. I got Mr. L. True, at this time a resident of Sylvester, to take his horses and bring home my grist with the ox yokes, and I drove my oxen loose. Coming to Little Sugar river below Exeter, I found the water about three feet deep between the bridges. The ice was not strong enough to hold up the cattle. I had to go back to a rail fence and get a rail and break the ice between the bridges; the cattle went through Indian file and I got home all right. I remember the first pork we bought in the country cost us ten shillings per 100 pounds. We bought a good cow of Thomas Bowen for $9; a yoke of steers coming four years old for $30. One thing I can testify to, money was hard to come by in those early days. Author Smith was murdered for $200. It would seem a small sum of money to kill a man for now, but $200 looked full as large at that time as $1,500 would now. I see his name is called Arthur; it is a mistake, his given name was Author. He boarded with my father the first winter we were in the country. My father went to school one winter to Mr. Smith's father, at that time a resident of Vermont. It is an old saying that murder will out, but nearly forty years have passed by and poor Author's murderer's not discovered yet, that is to my knowledge.

"I have nothing more to say of my own adventures, they were the same as other early settlers. It is pretty generally known to all who take any interest in Major Deviese, that he is now living with me, three miles northwest of Belleville, He has lived with me over thirty years, and is now ninety-one years of age. Four years ago, the 2d day of last September, he fell from the door step and hurt his right hip, and broke the wrist of his right arm. It was never fully ascertained what injury was done to his hip, as he could not stand the pain of a thorough examination, and he was so old the doctor did not dare to use chloroform. Since that time he has not left the bed only as he has been lifted; still his health is generally good, especially for a man of his advanced age. His mind and memory is remarkably good for a man of his age, he is a perfect chronicle of the past, and notwithstanding his afflictions and infirmity, he is cheerful and resigned; this is owing somewhat to his natural temperament, which is very cheerful, but is also owing in a great measure to a firm trust in Christ, and bright hope that when the trials of this life are over, he will be admitted into that rest that remains for the people of God."

April 17, 1884.

"You speak of the drinking habits of the early pioneers, I must confess that in proportion to the number of population, there was far more liquor drank forty years ago than there is to-day, but it must be remembered that Exeter for a number of years was a mining town, and there is almost always more drinking done in such places than where the occupation of the people is purely agricultural, but there was a good deal of drinking done in those days. Births, deaths, marriages, 4th of July, election, Christmas, harvesting, hog killing, house raising, were all good excuses for imbibing, but then, to offset this evil, I believe there was less pride, more open-handed hospitality in those days than at the present time. A young couple could get married in those days without ruining themselves buying costly clothes, if a man was buried, it was not thought necessary to starve his widow and fatherless children in order to procure a $75 or $100 coffin, because other people did. You spoke about the Major telling some more of his early experience. Since you were here, I heard him tell one. Mr. Foreman, who used to live in Exeter in a very early day, had set a number of traps in a circle, with a bait in the center, to catch a wolf. A Mrs. Powell lived near where time traps were set, and her little dog got into one of them, and of course set up a dreadful howl. Mrs. Powell went to the rescue of her pet and got caught in a trap herself, and of course there was more music. A large black dog belonging to Pierce Bradley, an old resident of Exeter, then thought it best to go and see what was the matter, of course he got caught, and then the chorus was complete. Fortunately the outcries brought Mr. Foreman to the rescue, and he set them all at liberty. When I think how the great west has settled up, even in my day, (I am fifty-six) it is wonderful. I can remember when going into the western part of York State was called going out west. If any one started to go as far west as Indiana or Illinois, their friends bid them farewell, with about the same feeling they would, had they started for that undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns. But now the Pacific can only stop them, and I am not sure as that will prove a barrier long, some enterprising emigrant will want to colonize the Sandwich Island."

Yours truly,
HOLLIS CROCKER.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Joseph Dunbar Sr., is a native of Ireland, born in 1814. At the age of ten years he came to the United States to live with his uncle, Robert Dunbar, near Wheeling, Va. After a few years residence there, he went to Philadelphia, coming from that city to Mineral Point, Wis. Terr., where he worked a short time in the mines and around the furnaces. He came to Exeter, then called "Exeter Diggings," in 1835, and worked here many years, but in 1840, he bought 160 acres of government land on section 22, and later eighty acres on section 23. These lands are now comprised in the fine farm which is now his home. His residence is on section 23. He partially improved this land before his marriage. He continued to mine a portion of the time, until it ceased to be remunerative.

July 20, 1855, he was married to Mary Martin, daughter of John Martin, who settled in Exeter in 1849, and died here in 1864. His widow now lives in Richland county. Mr. and Mrs. Dunbar have had fourteen children, nine of whom are living, all of whom reside with their parents, except two sons—Joseph, who lives in this town, and John, who lives in Golden, Colo. The others are—Jane, Tilla, Jeremiah, Bertha R., Archie D. and Charles T. Those who have died are: Claude, Mary, wife of W. Q. Ross; Inez, Rozena M. and Sarah A. In 1836, while at the diggings, Mr. Dunbar and James Slater, spaded one acre of land and planted it with corn. The crop they sold to Joseph Kelley, who had just settled on a farm south of Monroe. The first death in Exeter, after Mr. Dunbar's arrival, was a child of Thomas Welch, the next was that of a man named Cheney, who died about 1838. It was thought desirable to bury Mr. Cheney beside the child of Mr. Welch, three miles distant. The miners at that time had nearly all left for New Diggings, just discovered at Blue Mounds, consequently help was scarce. The carrying of the body to its place of burial was undertaken by two or three men, who after accomplishing about one third of the distance, had to abandon it. Mr. Dunbar went some distance after a yoke of oxen, with which the task was completed.

George Magee, a native of Ireland, was born in the county of Armagh in 1813. He emigrated to Canada in 1821, and in 1836 went to Vicksburg, Miss. The following year he moved to Galena, Ill., and the same year came to the town of Exeter and bought 500 acres of land on section 25, on which he settled. He was one of the first men in Green county to make farming an avocation. Mr. Magee was, in his prime, a pushing, energetic, money-making man, and at an early day, had the sagacity to see the advantages which the county possessed as an agricultural county. He was married in 1842, to Lucy Eggleston, who was of English descent. In 1852 he went to California and returned in 1855.

He then devoted his time entirely to farming until 1875, when he moved to Evansville, where he now lives. He owns several buildings in that city, which he rents. He also owns his original farm of 500 acres in Exeter. His wife died in 1871. They had nine children—Jennie, wife of F. Shergar, of Evansville; Mary, wife of A. S. Lewis; Julia, wife of A. W. Patterson, of Howard Co., Neb.; Hattie, widow of John T. O. Swager, living in Evansville; Welsley died in infancy, in 1852; Emma, wife of O. Case, lives in Dane county; William, who lives on the homestead, and is unmarried; Lillie is the wife of Walter Hopkins; and George Jr. William and George Jr., rent the homestead farm of their father. George Jr. was married Sept. 11, 1883, to Effie Marshall, daughter of J. H. Marshall, of this town.

John Hosken, son of Richard and Mary Hosken, was born Jan. 15, 1844, in the town of Exeter. He now owns and resides upon the land bought from the speculators by his father, on section 22, in 1854. He was reared a farmer, and lived with his parents until their death, except during the short time he served in the army. He enlisted in company F, 42d Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out, June 20, 1865. July 13, 1874, he was married to Mrs. Brabyn, widow of William Brabyn, of England, where her husband died. She came to this town in July, 1869, with four children—Joseph, now in Colorado; William H., now in Washington Territory; Elena, wife of Charles Storrs, of Dane county; and Mary Jane, who lives with her mother. A child, named William J., of Mr. Hosken's deceased brother, Joseph D., was made one of the family, but he died Oct. 27, 1881, at the age of ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Hosken have no children. His father, Richard Hosken, was born June 20, 1801, in England, where he learned the trade of carpenter. In his youth he came to the United States, landing in New York in November, 1838 or 1839, in company with some others and their families.

He reached Wiota, where he worked at his trade among the miners until 1841. He was married to Mary Cherry, a native of Dublin, Ireland, who came from there with a brother and two sisters in 1840. After marriage he bought land in Exeter, where he settled. Four children were born to them—Joseph D., who died in 1871; John, the subject of this sketch; William, who died in 1867; Ann J., wife of Charles George, died in 1879. Mr. Hosken died Nov. 17, 1869. His wife died April 1, 1872.

John Ferguson was born in county Derry, Ireland, in 1810. In 1836 he came to the United States, and in November of that year came to Wiota, Lafayette county, where he engaged in mining which business he followed successfully a few years. Meanwhile he purchased 200 acres of land on sections 26 and 27, town of Exeter, with a view of making it his future home. Later he added 200 acres to this purchase, and after his marriage made his residence thereon. He was married Oct. 3, 1845, to Almeda Porter, Jacob Lindsley, Esq., officiating. Six children were born to them, of whom are now living—William, living in Pocahontas Co., Iowa; Elleanor, wife of Isaac Green, of Dedham, Iowa; John and Nathaniel, living at home; and Sarah, who is a school teacher, makes her home with her mother. John Ferguson died at his home March 13, 1875. He was a good citizen, and will long be remembered for his sterling qualities. He was quite prominent in town affairs. His widow now lives on the old homestead with three of her children. Mrs. Ferguson was the daughter of an old pioneer, John Porter, who was an early settler in every place he ever lived after attaining manhood. Mrs. Ferguson was the third child born where the city of Springfield, the capital of the State of Illinois, now stands. It was then, April 29, 1826, only a squatter village. John Porter was born in Harrison Co., Ky., in 1796. He was married in his native State to Nancy Turley. Two children were born to them—James, now a resident of California; and Urana, widow of Joseph McConnell, who lives in this town. Mr. Porter removed to Sangamon county about 1820, where his wife died, and he was married to Sarah Brents in 1825. He was one of the early settlers of that county. Sarah Brents was born in Kentucky in 1801. Her widowed mother and family came into Livingston Co., Ky., as pioneers. John Porter, by this second marriage, had eight children, and all were living in 1884—Almeda, widow of John Ferguson, the subject of this sketch; John, living at Fort Dodge, Iowa; Nathaniel, now in California; Susan, wife Christopher Steele, now living in Missouri; William, in California; George, in Fort Dodge, Iowa; Rebecca, wife of T. D. Day, of this town; and Mary, who is married, and living in Iowa. John Porter, as stated, was always a frontier man. He removed from Sangamon county to Pike Co., Mo., in 1831, and from there to Lafayette county, this State, in 1833, where he farmed until 1838, then came to Monroe, this county, and lived three years, then to the old village of Exeter in 1841, and later bought land on section 35, where he lived until about 1865, when he made a home with his son, George, in Fort Dodge, Iowa. His wife died in July, 1875, and he died the May previously.

Milton Ross was born at Wiota, Wis., July 7, 1839. He is the son of Capt. Leonard and Sarah E. Ross. Capt. Leonard Ross was born at Ludlow, Vt., in 1806. When eighteen years of age he left home and learned the cabinetmaker's trade, and afterwards went to Little Falls, N. Y., where he kept tavern, in company with another man. He removed from thence to Wisconsin, in 1836, locating at Wiota, Lafayette county, where he rented land and engaged in farming and mining. Jan. 8, 1838, he was married to Sarah E. Burritte, who was born in Indiana, Jan. 30, 1821, and came to Lafayette county with her father's family, in 1828. Her father's name was William Burritte. He came to Wisconsin with Major Deviese, who was the first permanent settler in Exeter. Mr. Burritte died in Wiota, Lafayette county, in 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Ross lived in Wiota, after their marriage. two years, then came to the town of Exeter, and settled on section 8. He was a man of means, and a most valuable acquisition to the new settlement. He bought land on sections 7, 8, 9, 16 and 17, about 900 acres in all. He died, deeply regretted, at his residence on section 8, June 3, 1856. His widow still survives and lives with her son, Milton, at the homestead. She has a vivid recollection of the excitement attending the Black Hawk War. Her father took an active part in attending to the safety of families of the settlers, and in restoring confidence among the timid. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ross—Milton, William H., Leonard and Otis, who was killed at the battle of Petersburg, June 18, 1864. He was a member of the 37th Wisconsin Volunteers. Henry died in infancy; Daniel died at the age of twenty months. He became entangled in a rope swing, and died from strangulation. On the same day that this sad accident occurred, one of their twin children, Edward, died, aged five months. The other twin, Edwin, died eight days later. Milton Ross, after the death of his father, remained with his mother until he enlisted in the 8th Wisconsin regiment, the "Eagle" regiment. He was in all of the engagements of the regiment, except during the Red River campaign. He participated in the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Corinth and Iuka. After the war, he returned to farm life, and April 15, 1866, was married to Laura A. Brayton, daughter of Joseph Brayton. She was born in Juda, in 1840. Her father settled in New Glarus, in 1848. He now lives in Fayette Co., Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Ross have no children.

Leonard Ross, son of Capt. Leonard Ross, was born in the town of Exeter, April 3, 1842. He lived with his mother until after his marriage with Mary Turner, which occurred Dec. 25, 1863. She was a daughter of Robert Turner, who came from New York, to Racine county, in an early day, and, about 1860, to Dane county, and now lives in Belleville. Five children were born to them, of whom four are living, and at home—Otis, William L., Edgar L. and Franklin Grant. Henry, the last born, died young. Mrs. Ross died March 11, 1880. June 30, 1881, Mr. Ross was married to Mary J. Rossitter, of Brooklyn. By this marriage there are two children—John Henry and Luella. Mr. Ross owns one of the fine farms of Exeter, containing 198 acres, on sections 8 and 9. He also has thirty acres of valuable timber land on section 17. His improvements are excellent, and the farm is in a good state of cultivation. Mr. Ross has served as town treasurer, and was, in 1884, elected to the town board.

Dr. Augustus Ross was born in Ludlow, Vt., May 27, 1816, and was married to Amanda Smith, Oct. 13, 1837, who was born in the same town May 26, 1818. Mr. Ross became a botanical physician, commonly called in those days "Thomsonian. In 1849 he came to the town of Exeter on a visit to his brother, Capt. Leonard Ross, and in 1855 brought his family here, and bought 100 acres of land on sections 16 and 17, making his residence on the latter, where he died Jan. 28, 1863. His widow, in good health, in 1884, was residing on the homestead. Dr. Ross was an able and good man. In Vermont he had an extensive practice, in fact, had too much to do, causing him to desire a home life on a farm, hence he came west. In this town, with the exception of attendance upon a few families, personal friends and relatives, he did no medical work. His death was much regretted by all his acquaintances. Their children were—Margaret, born July 8, 1839; Edgar H. born May 26, 1847. He enlisted in the 3d Wisconsin Volunteers, Capt. Flood's company; was wounded and taken prisoner near Harper's Ferry, and died of lock-jaw at Charleston, Va., Nov. 1, 1861; Joseph W., born March 18, 1843; Marion F., born Nov. 15, 1844; A. E., born Dec. 13, 1846; Ada E., born April 6, 1849; Columbus C., born April 16, 1851, and died April 13, 1855; Wilbur born March 29, 1854; Louisa A., born Jan. 27, 1857; and Carrie, born Nov. 24, 1862. Wilbur Ross lives on the homestead with his mother. He was married March 13, 1881, to Caroline Hallarbush. They have two children—Myrtie May, born Feb. 1, 1882, and George A., born April 1, 1884.

William H. Ross, son of Capt. Leonard Ross, was born Sept. 8, 1840, in the old village of Exeter, where his parents resided a few weeks after their arrival in this town. Mr. Ross is probably the oldest person living in the town who was born within its limits. He lived with his parents until the death of his father, and remained with his mother until he enlisted in company H, of the 8th Wisconsin Volunteers. His brother, Milton Ross, enlisted on the same day, Sept. 8, 1861, that being the day on which William H. attained his majority. His mother had refused her consent previously. His regiment was a part of A. J. Smith's corps through the siege of Vicksburg and battles of Corinth, Iuka, etc. He took part in the Red River campaign, and participated in twenty-seven battles and skirmishes. He was a gallant soldier, and was discharged at the expiration of his term of enlistment, in September, 1864. He was married Dec. 12, 1871, to Margaret Greidenwise, born in New Jersey in 1845. They have had four children—Duane, Eldora, who died at the age of seven years; Bertha, who died at the age of four years, and Theron. Mr. Ross owns a valuable farm of 160 acres on section 16, where he resides; also twenty acres of timber on section 17.

Thomas B. Richards, a native of Cornwall, England, was born Feb. 25, 1827. His father, John Richards, with his wife and seven children came to the United States, landing at New York in November, 1839, and came west by way of the Erie canal and the lakes to Detroit, where they remained until the following February, then started overland with a team, which he purchased in Detroit, and went to Chicago, thence to Freeport, then a village of half a dozen houses, and one hotel. He then proceeded to Wiota, where they arrived March 1, 1840. Here he remained three years, working in the lead mines. He then came to Exeter and bought 200 acres of land on section 22, upon which he settled permanently. Of his children, Louisa was married to John Toay and resides at Mineral Point; Thomas B., subject of this sketch, lives in Exeter on his finely improved farm of 160 acres, on section 10; John V. B. owns the homestead farm in Exeter and lives at Dayton, with his widowed sister, Elizabeth, as housekeeper. Her deceased husband was Alfred Pascoe. Mary Ann is the wife Edward Ellis, of Brooklyn; Robert lives at Belleville; James lives in Smith Co., Kansas; Sarah, widow of Jasper Orvis, lives at Mineral Point; Joanna is the wife of Edward Curnew, of Mineral Point. Joanna and Elizabeth were born at Wiota, in this State. The father, John Richards, died Aug. 7, 1854. His widow survived until Aug. 14, 1882. Mr. Richards is well and kindly remembered by the early settlers of this town. The subject of this sketch, Thomas B. Richards, was wedded with Abigail Winston, Feb. 20, 1856. She was a resident of Rock county, but born in the State of New York. Two sons were born to them—John W., who now lives in Idaho; and Willie B., who is married and living in Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Mrs. Richards died Jan. 24, 1875. Mr. Richards was again married Nov. 22, 1876, to Nancy Moore, daughter of Joseph Moore, who settled in Exeter in 1851, and died in January, 1882. His widow still survives, residing with her sons, James and Leslie Moore, at the homestead farm. Mr. Richards has by his second marriage two children—Mary Louisa and Elizabeth Elsie. He has owned and resided upon his farm since 1856. He has made valuable improvements.

Peter Parkin was born in Yorkshire, England, in the year 1825. His father, Robert Parkin, came to the United States in 1842 with his wife and nine children, landed at New Orleans and proceeded directly to St Louis, remaining there one year before deciding where to make a home; but in 1843 came to this county, reaching the village of Exeter January 22, and shortly afterward bought land in New Glarus; made a home there ten years or more, then sold out and moved to the town of Exeter, buying 160 acres of land on section 18, and died in 1856; his wife died in 1870. They had nine children—George, now in Minnesota; John, who died in the town of Exeter; Charles, who died in Mount Pleasant; Peter, the subject of this sketch; Ann, a daughter left in England, deceased; James, who lives in Eden, Dak.; Henry, living in Butler Co., Iowa; Robert, living in Canton, Dak.; and Elizabeth, wife of Eli George, now living in Kansas. Peter Parkin, the subject of this sketch, was married to Mrs. Eliza Holland in 1851. She was born in Malburn, England, in 1823. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Steed, died in St. Louis. She has one sister, Mrs. Hannah Muir, living in New Orleans, and a brother, John, in Malburn, England. An adopted son, Peter, taking by them when he was eleven months old, lives at home; Frances, an adopted daughter, was married to Mortimer White, and lives in Dayton. Mr. Parkin was put in the coal mines at seven years of age, where he worked with his father. He was not given an opportunity to secure an education, but nevertheless he has been successful. His farm consists of 102 acres, and is pleasantly located on section 11, almost adjoining the village plat.

Josiah P. Morse was born in Swanzey, Cheshire Co., N. H., Dec. 31, 1803. His father, Josiah Morse, was born in the same town. The latter, when the son was quite young, moved to Massachusetts, and from there, after a short residence, to Erie Co., N. Y., where he died. Josiah P. Morse was married in Erie county, in 1827, to Azubah Estey, and lived in the State of New York until 1843, when he came west and lived on a rented farm in McHenry Co., Ill., a short time, then came to Green county and bought 400 acres of land on section 10, town of Exeter, where he has since lived, although he has disposed of nearly all the original purchase. He is now in comfortable circumstances, financially, and has retired from active business life. His wife died in 1875. They have had five children, two of whom are now living—Wallace W., who served in the 8th Wisconsin Battery during the war, and now lives in Faulk Co., Dak.; Minerva, wife of Abner Townsend, Wadena Co., Minn.; George also served in the 8th Wisconsin Battery, and died soon after coming home, from disease contracted while in the service; Rowena, deceased, who was the wife of Elbert Bowker; and Henry, who died when about twenty-five years old. Mr. Morse married Mrs. Elvira Webb, widow of Thomas C. Webb, who died in September, 1865, in Dane county. She had six children by her first marriage—Franklin and James, living at Kendall, Monroe Co., Wis.; Mary., wife Albert Bowker, of Dane county; Helen, wife of William Chatterton, of Dane county, and her two youngest daughters, Emma E. and Rose F., who make their home with their step-father.

John W. Norton came to Wisconsin in 1846, and spent one summer in looking over the State and also visited Iowa. The following winter he taught the first school in the present village of Clinton Junction. In 1847, his father, William Norton, came to this county, accompanied by his wife and daughter, and settled on section of the town of Exeter. John W. was born in Monroe Co., N. Y., May 1, 1826, and was there reared upon a farm. His father's family consisted of eight children—Stella, deceased, wife of Daniel Owen, of Yates Co., N. Y.; Samuel, who died in Buffalo, N. Y.; Caroline, wife of Robert Turner, of Belleville, Wis.; Jerusha, wife of A. C. Ressequie, of Janesville; Rachel, wife of R. Gardiner, of Rhode Island; George W., who died at Columbus, Ohio, aged twenty years; John W., the subject of this sketch, and Jane A., widow of Thomas Hills, living in Janesville. William Norton died in April, 1852. His burial was the first in the Dayton cemetery. His wife, Amy Norton, died in June, 1872. The homestead farm is now owned by John W., who was married March 5, 1853, to Emma A. Moore, in Monroe Co., N.Y. They were schoolmates in former days. The following year the great loss of his life occurred, in the death of his wife, who died at the birth of a child, who also died. Since that time Mr. Norton has lived unmarried. He sold his farm of 300 acres, in 1867, to E. Wade, but came in possession of it again, in 1878. He lived in Belleville, Dane county, during the meantime He is a much respected citizen and a man who tends strictly to his own affairs.

Peolin P. Havens was born in Hartford, Washington Co., N. Y., May 1, 1803. In his youth he learned the blacksmith trade, at which he became a master workman. At the age of twenty-two years he left home, and for the next ten years worked at his trade in different parts of the State. The last work which he did, as a hired man, was in New York city. In 1835, he went from there to Evans, Erie county, and worked in a shop of his own several years. He went from Evans to Orleans county, and in 1845 came to Wisconsin, and worked at blacksmithing two years in Evansville. In the fall of 1849 he came to Exeter and bought 240 acres of land. The village plat of Dayton was made by him at the time of his purchase. He opened the first blacksmith shop in that part of the town, in 1847. He was at one time interested in the water power at Dayton. Mr. Havens was married in Erie Co., N. Y., to Betsey A. Phillips, who was born in Niagara Co., N. Y., Jan. 23, 1812. She died in Exeter, Dec. 29, 1872. The children born to them were—Luther, who was born in 1835 and died March 11, 1866, from disease contracted while a prisoner at Andersonville. He was a member of the 8th Wisconsin regiment; Harriet, born in 1836, is the wife of James Morris, of Milwaukee; Forrester, born April 10, 1838, now owns the old homestead, and his father lives with him; Livonia, born in 1840, died at the age of four years; Albert P., born in 1843, was a member of the 42d Wisconsin Volunteer regiment. Mr.

Havens has led an active and useful life. Now in his declining years he has the confidence and respect of many warm friends. Forrester Havens, who now lives upon the homestead farm, was married Jan. 3, 1865, to Elizabeth Ellis, daughter of Mark Ellis. They have three children—Jessie, born in 1866; Aldulah, born in 1870; and Theodore, born in 1876.

William F. Fulton was born in Clarion Co., Penn., Oct. 13, 1817. In his youth he learned the carpenters' trade. He was married in 1839, to Sarah Silver, after which he lived in Mercer county, in the same State, until 1845, when he came to Wisconsin. He spent one winter at Richland Grove, then moved to the "Mitchell place," in Mount Pleasant, which he rented one year, then removed to Attica and remained till the spring of 1848. He then bought forty acres of land on section 35, of Exeter, upon which he settled permanently. He afterwards added 101 acres to his farm, making it contain 141 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Fulton had, when they came to Wisconsin, three sons—William S., now living in Montcalm, Mich.; Albert and James T., who resides in this town. Seven children were born after their arrival—Elvira, wife of Theodore Torgorson, of Madison; Ella, who died at the age of three years; Cynthia, wife of William Edwards, of Warsaw, Wis.; Alfred, who died aged seventeen years; Frank, living at Wilmot, Dak.; Edward, also living at Wilmot, and Arthur, who lives with his mother on a part of the homestead farm. In October, 1874, Mr. Fulton moved to Cresco, Iowa, where he died July 16, 1878. His widow remained there until the fall of 1882. Mr. Fulton was prominently identified with the public affairs of the town, and was an honored citizen. He served several terms as town treasurer, also as a member of the town board. Albert Fulton resides on section 35, on the homestead purchased by his father in 1848. He was born in Mercer Co., Penn., Oct. 19, 1842. He came west with his parents and remained with them until the time of his marriage,

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY

Nov. 27, 1869, with Dora A. Gater, who was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., March 27, 1846. They have four children—Alma, born in 1870; Lizzie, born in 1872; Blanche, born in 1874 and Grace born in 1876.

Mathew Edgar was born in Cumberland Co., England, in the Lake district, Aug. 24, 1817. In 1839 he went to St. Croix, West India Islands, and engaged on a sugar plantation, where he worked seven years; from there he went to Moore township, Canada West, and lived there, and part of the time near Woodstock, until 1849, in which year he came to Wisconsin and made his present location on section 32. He owns here a fine stock farm of 140 acres; he lived the first five years here alone. In 1854 he married Jane Wallace, daughter of Samuel Wallace, of this town. She died Aug. 24, 1859, leaving two children—Isabell I. J., wife of M. L. Rossiter, of Dixon Co., Neb, and Anna, who is a school teacher in Butler Co., Neb. On May 21, 1860, Mr. Edgar married Nancy Hanson, of Troy, Walworth Co., Wis. They have two children—Mathew, Jr., born in 1862; Mary S., born in 1864. both are living at home. Mr. Edgar does all he can to have his children fitted by education to help themselves through life, and counts nothing lost which aids in attaining that object.

Henry Albly was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, May 8, 1823. He was an engraver by trade, but by reason of bad health had to give it up. With his father, Henry Albly, and his brother, Jacob, he came to the United States in 1845. They came directly to New Glarus, reaching there about two weeks later than the first colonists. His father was entitled to twenty acres of land, which he took on section 15. The father intended to have his wife join him here as soon as he could make a home for her, but he was taken sick and died in the fall of 1816, of intermittent fever. Jacob, the brother, was married in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., and made his home there, improving a good farm and accumulating money. His wife died in 1877, leaving several children, when he concluded to take his money and return to Switzerland. In this he was opposed by his children, and finally was murdered by his son Joseph, who was tried and convicted for this unnatural crime and sentenced to an imprisonment in an Illinois penitentiary for life. A cousin of Joseph, son of a sister of his mother, was also tried for this crime. His name was Peter Miller. The jury failed to agree upon a verdict, and the prosecution was abandoned. Henry Albly, after his father's death, succeeded to his land. In 1847, October 26, he was married to Mary Becker. She was born March 18, 1827, and came from Switzerland with her brother, Josling Becker, settling in New Glarus in July, 1847. They have had six children—Solomon, born in 1848, who was killed by lightning in the town of Exeter, Feb. 26, 1881; Henry Jr., born in 1850, now keeping hotel at New Glarus; Mary, wife of Nicholas Durst, of New Glarus; Magdalena, wife of Thomas Kundert; Elbetha, wife of Henry Durst, of New Glarus, and Jacob. Mr. Albly lived in New Glarus until 1864, owning 100 acres of land on sections 15 and 16. During that year he sold his New Glarus property and bought 235 acres on section 18, Exeter, where he has since resided. He served several terms as assessor in New Glarus, and one term as town treasurer. In Exeter he has been several times chairman of the town board, and has served several terms as assessor. Mr. and Mrs. Albly were the first couple married in New Glarus.

William Wilson was born of Scotch parentage in the north of Ireland, in 1809. When ten years old he emigrated with a brother to Canada. In June, 1837, he was married to Eliza Argue. In 1839 he went to Joliet, Ill., where he worked two years on the canal construction. In 1841 he settled in Milton, Rock county, Where he lived until 1847, then he moved into Montrose, Dane county, residing there until 1853, when he settled on section 12, town of Exeter, where he made a farm and lived the rest of his life. He died May 22, 1883. His wife died April 5, 1874. Five children were born to them—John, born in Canada; Eliza, deceased wife of Lyman Hoskins, of Dane county; William, of Idaho; James and Alexander, born Oct. 1, 1855.

John Wilson, son of William Wilson, was born in Canada in 1838. He lived with his father until he bought the old homestead of 200 acres. June 7, 1880, John was married to a daughter of Stephen and Margaret Ann Jackson. The parents are of Scotch descent, born in Ireland. They came to the United States and settled in Montrose, in Dane county, in 1857. The parents are both dead. Mr. Wilson's wife died in October, 1872, leaving one son—William, born in June, 1872. In March, 1883, John sold the old homestead, and now lives in Belleville, Dane county.

James Wilson, son of William Wilson, lived with his parents until after his marriage, which occurred Jan. 1, 1874. His wife was Hannah Jackson, a sister of the deceased wife of his brother John. They have two children—Jessie, born March 7, 1881; and Mina, born Dec. 22, 1883. He rented lands until June, 1881, when he bought the farm he now occupies on section 8. This farm is well improved, and contains 120 acres.

Marion F. Ross was born in Ludlow, Vt., Nov. 15, 1844. He was married Nov. 4, 1866, to Alma J. Gassett. She was also a native of Ludlow, Vt., born Oct. 16, 1844. She came west with her parents in the spring of 1854. They settled in the town of Exeter, on section 10. They now live a retired life in Belleville. Her brother Julius lives on the homestead. Mr. and Mrs. Ross commenced housekeeping with his mother after marriage, living there about two years, then followed a residence of about eight months in Galesburg, Ill. Returning to this county Mr. Ross bought a farm on section 31, town of Brooklyn, where he resided until the fall of 1882, when he sold out and bought his present fine farm on sections 3 and 4, of the town of Exeter, containing 302 acres. They have five children—Archer F., born in 1868; Lucius A., born in 1871; Curtis H., born in 1873; Mabel A., born in 1875; and Vernon M., born in 1881.

David Sullivan is a native of Otsego Co., N. Y., born May 16, 1814. He lived in different parts of that State during his younger days. He was married Sept. 10, 1839, to Jane Doty, who was born in Cazenovia, Madison Co., N. Y., Sept. 19, 1818. Mr. Sullivan owned a farm and followed that avocation, working a portion of each year in a saw mill, until he sold his property in 1850 and made his home in this town, locating on section 10, where he now lives upon a farm of 128 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have had twelve children, seven of whom are living—James, Catharine, Henrietta M., Caroline A., William H., George E. and Oscar W. James and Catharine. are living in Belleville, Dane county. The others reside with their parents.

William M. Brooks came to Green county in 1854, settling then in the town of York, where he entered 200 acres located on sections 31 and 32, and resided until 1878. Then having the place well improved, he sold it to G. Post, and moved to Monroe. In the spring of 1881 he came to Brooklyn, and in 1884, removed to Dayton, Green county. Mr. Brooks is a native of Pennsylvania, born April 26, 1824. There he spent his younger days and was married to Fannie Rogers, also a native of Pennsylvania. He came from Pennsylvania to Wisconsin, in 1854. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have six children—F. M., C. E., Stella E., E. G., W. R. and Sarah.

F. M. Brooks was born in Bradford Co., Penn., and came with his parents to Green county. He was educated in the common schools, and at the age of nineteen years began teaching school, which he continued eleven terms. He has also engaged in selling farm machinery four seasons. He sold farm machinery for J. S. Bell & Co., in 1884, at Brooklyn, Green Co., Wis.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Calvin Morse and his brother, Elias C., came to Exeter in 1854, arriving May 1. Their father, Milton M. Morse, came the next month, and settled on section 15, where he purchased 160 acres of land, upon which he still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Milton M. Morse were married Sept. 8, 1831. Their son, Elias C., lives with them at the homestead. They have one daughter living—Mrs. Frances Byington, of Juneau county, in this State. Calvin, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., Aug. 10, 1832. He made his home with his parents till Aug. 15, 1862, when he enlisted in company F, of the 31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served gallantly until June 20, 1865. He took part in the Atlanta campaign, following Sherman's banners to the sea and up through the Carolinas. He was present at the review of Sherman's grand army in June, 1865. After the war, he continued to reside with his parents until 1872. He was married in that year, to Mrs. Martha A. Dunham, a soldier's widow. Her former husband, Willard H. Dunham, was a member of the 13th Michigan Volunteers, and died in the hospital at Washington, D. C., in May, 1865. She was born in the town of Wheeler, Steuben Co., N. Y., and is a daughter of Asa Wilson, who died in this town, in 1864. Her mother is now the wife of Robert Turner, of Belleville, Dane county. Her brother, John Wilson, served in the 68th regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and died in 1874, from disease contracted while in the service. Mr. and Mrs. Morse have no children. Their residence is on section 15, where he has a finely improved farm of 100 acres. Mr. Morse was sheriff of Green county in 1879—80.

Thomas Green was born in Derbyshire, England, March 8, 1841. His father, Joseph Green, with his wife and seven children, came to the United States, in 1851, coming directly from New York to Rock county, and locating in the town of Porter, where they bought a farm. There he lived until April, 1854, when he sold out and came to Exeter, where he bought the mill property from A. D. Kirkpatrick. He enlarged this mill, refitted it with new machinery, and successfully operated it until 1866, when he rented it to his son, Thomas, the subject of this sketch. The children who came to the United States with the parents were—Thomas, John, who died in Dane county, in 1877; Richard, produce dealer, at Middleton, Dane county; Mary, deceased, wife of W. B. Norris, of Topeka, Kansas; William, now in trade at Albany; Chautry, who died in this county, in 1884; and Isaac, now a resident of Dedham, Iowa. Born in this State, were Herbert, (now in Albany); George, who lives in Dakota; and Frank, who lives on the old homestead farm in this county, town of Exeter. Joseph Green was one of the prominent citizens of this part of the county, always foremost in all work which would advance the interests of his village. He was a member of the M E. Church, and a consistent, honest Christian man. He died Feb. 28, 1881. His widow, Ruth Green, survives him, and lives in the village of Dayton. Thomas Green succeeded to the mill property, by purchase, from the estate of his father, in the spring of 1881, and is now (1884) proprietor of the same. He was in the army a little more than four years, a member of the 8th Wisconsin Volunteers, known as the "Eagle regiment." He was a gallant soldier, as his comrades testify. The family did loyal service during the war, for, John Green went out as captain in the 37th regiment, and was promoted to colonelcy; another brother, William, rose from the ranks to a lieutenantcy. Sept. 17, 1866, Thomas Green was married to Isabella Beattie, who was born in Northumberland, England, Jan. 20, 1840, and came to this country, with some friends, in 1861, the year following, came to Monroe, and lived with a brother until her marriage. They have four children—Maggie, Ida, Jessie and Charles. Mr. Green owns fifty-two acres of improved land on section 11, bought from his father's estate. This with the mill property, gave him title to 105 acres. He is an energetic, reliable business man,

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Frank B. Green, son of Joseph and Ruth Green, was born May 17, 1859. He was married to Emma B. Jordan, Jan. 4, 1882, who was born in this town, Aug. 7, 1859. Mr. Green lives on the farm formerly owned by his father. This place is located on section 11, and contains 108 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Green have one child—Mabel Mary, born July 4, 1883.

Arad Ross was born in Ludlow, Vt., April 8, 1808, and was brought up on a farm. After attaining his majority, he ran a peddling wagon about four years, selling dry goods, notions, etc. Then, shortly after being married, he went to farming. His wife was Hannah Batchelder, who was also a native of Vermont, born Sept. 29, 1803. They were married Feb. 28, 1832. With his wife and five children he came west in 1854. The children were—Abel E., now in this town; George H., David B., who lives on the homestead with his father; Hannah M., wife of Robert Richards, of Belleville, Dane county; Thomas A., of Belleville, and George, who served in the 46th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers. Thomas A. served in the 5th Wisconsin regiment during the last two years of the Rebellion. The family first settled on section 6, in 1854, where Mr. Ross bought 326 acres of land, made a farm and lived there two years, but not being able to give his children the desired school advantages, he sold out and moved to Mount Pleasant, renting there two years, and then bought his present place, located on section 36. The original purchase was 200 acres; he now owns 100 acres, the care of which is in the hands of his son David B. His wife died March 1, 1872.

David B. Ross was born in 1840, and has always lived with his father. He was married Feb. 6, 1866, to Sarah Dodge, a daughter of Everett Dodge, a settler of Albany in 1845, and now a resident of Washington Co., Kansas. Mrs. Ross is an only child. Her mother died in 1852. Her maternal grandfather, J. Davis, came from Wyoming Co., N. Y., and was one of the early settlers of Attica. Mr. and Mrs. David B. Ross have five children—Linda. C., born in 1867;

Percie H., born in 1871; Irvie D., born in 1873; Myrtle E., born in 1876, and Luta M., born in 1883.

Abel E. Ross, son of Arad Ross, was born Oct. 15, 1832, and came west with his father, and lived with him most of the time until his marriage with Rosina Redmond, Feb. 24, 1857. He owns a well improved farm, on section 36, consisting of 100 acres, where he lives.

Henry G. Silvor was born in the town of Shipton, county of Sherbrooke, Canada East, Oct. 9, 1820. He was reared a farmer, but learned the carpenter trade when a young man. He followed that occupation until 1854. He was married in Canada, March 28, 1847, to Betsey M. Baker. She was born in the town of Shipton, Aug. 17, 1821. Two children were born to them in Canada—Augustus H., born Sept. 3, 1850, and Clarence H., born June 10, 1852. The latter died Sept. 5, 1852. In the month of May, 1854, Mr. Silvor came to Wisconsin and stopped in Janesville about three months, then came to Dayton, Green county, and purchased his present farm, which contains 160 acres. He went to Mineral Point and obtained his deed to the land of Washburn & Woodman, September 10, of that year, then returned to Dayton and went to work on Joseph Green's grist mill. December 1 he returned to Canada, and the following spring removed with his family to Dayton, where they arrived May 31, 1855. He soon after commenced building a house on his land, which when partly completed, the family moved into, and in which they have continued to reside until the present time (1884). The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Silvor, after their removal to Wisconsin, are—Mary E., born March 27, 1856, and died in infancy. John A., born April 26, 1858, and Arthur E., born Oct. 15, 1861. Sept. 12, 1864, Mr. Silvor was bereaved by the death of his wife. He was again married Feb. 28, 1865, to Lucinda E. Church, who was born in Clarendon, Orleans N. Y., Aug. 19, 1832, and came to Wisconsin in August, 1800, stopping at Janesville with her brother, Jonathan Church. By this marriage there were two children—Herbert G., born June 9, 1867, and Leon E., born July 26, 1870. Mr. Silvor's eldest son, Augustus H., while in the discharge of his duties (temporarily engaged as brakeman) coupling cars at Harvard Junction, was caught between the cars and thrown down, the train passing over one of his legs. The injury resulted in his death Jan. 10, 1874. The four remaining sons make their home with their father and are all promising young men. Mr. Silvor is a stockholder and director in the Grange store, established at Evansville, in 1874. He is a citizen who can always be counted upon to support any and all measures conducing to the good of the public. Mr. Silvor has held town offices nine years since he became a resident of the town of Exeter.

Amos Scott purchased a large tract of land in the town of Exeter in 1854, and was there engaged in farming until his death. Mr. Scott was born in the State of Vermont, and served as a soldier in the War of 1812. He was thrice married, and reared a large family of children. Religiously he was a close communion Baptist.

Moses W. Smith is a son of John B. and Amy G. Smith, who live in Belleville, and was born in the town of New Glarus, Aug. 31, 1857. John B. Smith, the father, was born in Paxton, Mass., May 24, 1812. His mother, Amy G. (Hilton) Smith, was born in Somerset Co., Maine, March 9, 1823. They were married Jan. 8, 1854, at Monticello, by A. P. Ross, Esq. John Smith came west in 1849, and settled on section 34, town of Brooklyn, in November of that year. He was then living with his first wife. She was formerly Vashti H. Stratton, and they were married in Worcester, Mass., by Rev. Dr. Bancroft, father of the great historian. This Mr. Smith is a lineal descendant in the eighth degree of Henry Smith, one of the Plymouth colonists. His wife died at Beloit, July 20, 1852, aged thirty-six years. The children of John B. Smith by his first marriage who came west were—Sarah, wife of H. W. Smith, of Evansville; Mary, deceased wife of Joseph Hilton, of Washington; Josephine, wife of Samuel Lumbers, of Iowa; John S., living in Dakota; James S., of Minneapolis; Ellen, wife of Abijah Sissons, of Dakota; and Jason, living in Colfax Co., Neb. Two children were buried in Massachusetts. By the second marriage has had four children—Gustavus B., who died when young; Moses W., Marcia H., wife of W. Jordan, of Belleville; and Jane Grace, now living with her parents. Mr. Smith's present wife was the widow of David M. Lane, to whom she was married in Embden, Somerset Co., Maine, Oct. 9, 1849. By this marriage there is one daughter living, now the wife of William Z. Trow, a resident of Plymouth Co., Iowa. Mrs. Smith's father, John Hilton, was one of the early settlers of the town of Washington. He and four sons took adjoining lands in that town. He is not now living, but his widow survives, and lives with her youngest son, James Hilton, in York. Moses W. Smith lives on section 1, town of Exeter, where he owns 150 acres of land. He lived with his father until his marriage with Maria Jarman, which occurred, Nov. 11, 1882. By this marriage there is one daughter—Amy Grace, born May 18, 1884.

George F. Ellis lives on section 14, on the farm bought in the spring of 1855 by his father, Mark Ellis, of Alonzo Jordan. This farm contains 200 acres, forty acres being on section 22. Mark Ellis was born in Eckington, Derbyshire, England, in 1803. His father, the grandfather of George, died in 1811, and the grandmother while Mark was an infant. Mark Ellis learned the trade his father had acquired—sickle making—and worked at it until his marriage in 1828 with Mary Watts. He then became a farmer, and lived as a renter on one farm twenty-two years. All the children were born there. Their names were—Olive, wife of Joseph Jackson, of Belleville, Dane county; she died in 1876; John, who lives in Fillmore Co.,

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Minn.; William, who died in this town in 1863; Arthur, who died in Cheyenne, Wy. Terr., in 1872; Thomas, now living in Green county; Elizabeth, wife of Forester Havens, of the town of Exeter; George F., and Mary, wife of Edwin Jordan, living near Evansville. In the summer of 1850 Mark Ellis and his family came to the United States, landing at New York city, and coming directly to this State, reaching Janesville July 10. He rented a farm the next spring of Judge Gibbs, and the next year of Judge Bailey, and in 1853 of Wait Wright, lived there two years, and came to Exeter in 1855 and bought a farm, where he died Sept. 4, 1878. His wife died Sept. 11, 1870. George F. Ellis and Flora Fitts were married Oct. 26, 1869. She is a daughter of Francis and Harriet Fitts, now residents of Belleville. Mr. Ellis is one among the best citizens of the town, is a good farmer, and a man of many excellent qualities.

John Crawford is of Scotch descent, but born in county Cavan, Ireland, in 1820. His father and grandfather were both natives of Scotland. The latter was in the linen bleaching business in Ireland, and his father, Walter Crawford, was a merchant in the town of Arvagh, Ireland. John, when a boy, sold goods in his father's store. The family came to America and settled in New York. One son, William, died there. Two daughters, Ann Eliza and Jane, are married, and the former lives in Brooklyn and the latter in New York, where the parents died. They are buried in Greenwood cemetery. John Crawford was married in New York, Aug. 11, 1854, to Fannie Moore, and for several years after his marriage, was engaged in the dry goods and millinery business; disposing of his store in 1858, he came west to Green county and purchased 214 acres of land on section 6, of this town, and has resided here since that time. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford have given their eight children a liberal education. The boys are farming and the girls teaching. Jonas S. Staley came to this county in 1856, and settled on section 21, of the town of Exeter, where he still resides. He owns 240 acres of land. He was born in Sussex Co., N. J., June 22, 1812. He was reared on a farm, and has always been a farmer. His father, George Staley, died about seven years ago in New Jersey, aged eighty-seven years. His mother died in 1840. Jonas was married in 1836, to Hannah Cron, a native of New Jersey, born May 8, 1820. They brought seven children with them to Wisconsin—Jacob, who lives in Hamilton Co., Iowa; Mary E., wife of Marcus Smith, of Crawford Co., Wis.; Jeremiah, who is married and living near his parents; Sarah A., wife of James Richards, of Smith Co., Kansas; Catharine, wife of Chris. Noggle, died in Kansas; John died young, and Margaret died in infancy. Four children were born in this State—Charles, living with his parents; Jonas, living on a part of his father's farm; Amy and Emily (twins) both of whom died young. Mr. Staley is a worthy citizen and highly respected by his neighbors.

Elijah S. Ace was born in Sussex Co., N. J., Jan. 21, 1846. His father, Jacob Ace, was born in Pennsylvania, Nov. 12, 1809, and was married to Mary Staley, Feb. 7, 1832. She was born July 22, 1817, and is a sister of Jonas S. Staley, of the town of Exeter. Jacob Ace and family came to Exeter in 1857. His wife had died the previous year in New Jersey. He settled on section 16, and was living in 1884 with his son, Simeon D. Ace, who came with his father to this town. He was born March 29, 1850, and was married Aug. 17, 1873, to Ella A., daughter of Dr. Augustus and Amanda Ross; his farm of 120 acres is on section 16. Another brother, William, lives in Dane county. Elijah S. Ace, the subject of this sketch, enlisted March 30, 1864, in company C, 37th Wisconsin Volunteers. The regiment joined the army of the Potomac in May, 1864, near West Point, Va. He was in the assault upon the defenses of Petersburg April 2, 1865, the day before the evacuation of the place, and served creditably until the close of the war, then returning to Exeter, he engaged in farm work until 1878; that year he went to Chicago and engaged in work for the Parmlee Transfer Company, remaining in that employ two years, when he returned to their town, and was married Dec. 17, 1871, to Rozilla, daughter of N. S. and C. Park. She was born in this town, Sept. 25, 1854. He went back to Chicago and to his former employment, remained twenty-seven months, then returned to this town and bought the farm where he now lives, consisting of 110 acres. They have one child—Oscar B., born Sept. 25, 1874. Mr. Ace is one of the public spirited men of the town of Exeter. He was elected in 1881 and 1882 a member of the board of supervisors, and in 1883 was chairman, filling all these positions creditably.

Granville W. Smith, son of Joseph W. and Mary Smith, was born Oct. 3, 3, 1848, in Susquehanna Co., Penn., and now lives on the homestead purchase made by his father, who is now dead. Mr. Smith was united in marriage Dec. 9, 1869, with Alice J. Jipson, daughter of S. F. and Lucy J. Jipson, of Evansville. They have two children—Mary Alice, born Jan 14, 1871; and Milan F., born June 6, 1876. Mr. Smith is one of the reliable men of his neighborhood, respected by all for his integrity and kind neighborly qualities.

His father, Joseph W. Smith, was born in Ludlow, Vt., Sept. 8, 1809, and was married April 2, 1835, to Mary Whitney, who was born March 26, 1814, and reared in the same town. In 1837 they went to Bradford Co., Penn. After four years residence there they moved to Susquehanna county and there remained until March, 1858, when he moved to this county, settling on section 23, town of Exeter, where he died Sept. 21, 1881. His widow in 1884 resided on the homestead with her son, G. W. Smith. Mr. Smith was a farmer most of the time while a resident of Pennsylvania, but owned a carding mill, cloth dressing and fulling machinery.

In 1854, while at work in his factory, he was entangled in the machinery of a picking machine and so badly injured as to necessitate the amputation of his left arm. Mr. Smith was a man in Pennsylvania of high standing, serving there as county commissioner. After coming to Exeter he was found to be the man needed in town and county affairs, and has held prominent positions with credit to himself and entire satisfaction to the people. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Smith have had four children—Henry, who died in infancy; Asahel, who died when eight years old; John S., now living at Evansville; and Granville W.

Alonzo McKenny moved to this county in 1853, and settled in the town of Brooklyn. He was born in Oswego Co., N. Y., in 1825. He was brought up on a farm, and married in his native county to Lucinda Tilapaugh in 1847. His father, Chester McKenny, came with him to Green county, and bought the Attica grist and saw mills. Alonzo worked in the mills with his father some years. While thus engaged he bought 160 acres of land on section 36, of Exeter. This land he afterwards sold and bought 160 acres on sections 33 and 34 to which he removed and improved the land. He enlisted in the 3d regiment of Wisconsin volunteers and served with that regiment three years, then enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and died in the service with yellow fever, at New Orleans, in 1865. His widow was afterwards married to Thomas St. John and now (1884) resides in Mount Pleasant. Mr. and Mrs. McKenny reared five children who reached maturity—Burdette, who died, in 1873; Starlin, living in Exeter; Judson, living in Dane county; Loretta, wife of John Himmers, of Decatur; and Lydia, wife of Thomas Crampton, living in Dakota. Chester McKenny sold his Attica property to Weltman & Bartlett. His death occurred at Attica, in 1861. His widow died in Mount Pleasant, in 1864. Starlin McKenny was married Jan. 1, 1881, to Rachel Crampton, daughter of Thomas Crampton. She was born in Exeter, Dec. 25, 1855.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Two children were born to them—Grace, born in May, 1882, and died in September of the same year; and Chester, born in February, 1884. Mrs. McKenny's parents live in the town of Brooklyn. then went to New Glarus, Wis., residing in that State, employed at different kinds of work until 1860, when he came to Exeter and settled on section 17, where he lived until March, 1863, then bought the farm he now occupies. He built his present residence in 1870. His children living are—Mathias, born Jan. 10, 1854; Sybilla, born Aug. 24, 1855, now the wife of Joseph Altman, of Jordan; David, born Jan. 22, 1857, now living in Brooklyn; Magdalena, born May 5, 1859, now the wife of Iosua Klassy, of Jordan; Regula, born Jan. 13, 1863, now wife of John Becker, of New Glarus; Henry, born March 23, 1868, and Mary, born Oct. 10, 1870. The last two live at home. The dead children are—Regula, born in 1861, and died in 1863; Henry, born in 1866, and died in 1867. His wife died March 23, 1876, and he was married to his second wife, Barbara Schiesser, June 7, 1877. She was born in February, 1815. In 1861 his mother died, and in 1875 his father, who was born March 23, 1806, came from Switzerland to live with him, bringing a boy, by his third marriage, called John, who was born July 10, 1871. The mother is living in Switzerland.

Alonzo J. Edwards was born in Livingston Co., N. Y., in the town of West Sparta, Oct. 2, 1835. His father, Harveylin Edwards, was a farmer, and reared a family of thirteen children. All were living in 1884 except one son—Allen, who died in the army in the fall of 1864; his father died in Livingston, Co., N. Y., in 1850; his mother died in 1883. The brothers and sisters are living west excepting two—James and Mrs. Lavina Dart, who live in Livingston county. Maria is the wife of H. M. Barnes of this town. William lives in Monticello; Harvey, in Albany; Andrew, in Rice Co., Minn.; Elsie Jane, wife of Eugene Witter, same county; Heman, in Polk Co., Iowa; David, in Antelope Co., Neb.; Alvah, near Fort Vancouver, Washington Terr.; Frank, in Colorado. Alonzo J. Edwards and Emeline P. Green were married in Livingston Co., N. Y., Sept. 28, 1858. Mrs. Edwards was born in that county Dec. 3, 1839. They came west and to this town in March, 1862, rented a farm on section 33 one year, and then lived in old Exeter village two years. Mr. Edwards leaving his family there went to Montana and followed mining until June, 1865, when he returned home, and lived on rented lands until February, 1868, when he bought land on section 27, and lived there until August, 1874, when he bought and moved to his present residence on section 34. He owns 160 acres, one half on section 33 and one-half on section 34. They have six children. All are living. Charles, the eldest, was born in New York, April, 1860; Jasper, born July, 1864; Mary, born March, 1867; Hattie, born May, 1869; Lester, born November, 1871; Heman, born October, 1875. Mr. Edwards is an energetic, reliable and well respected citizen.

John Jacob Freitag was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, Sept. 17, 1809. He came to America in 1845, and settled in Milwaukee county, this State. His family consisted of his wife and three children—Jacob, now lives on section 30, this town; Rosina, wife of Aug. Hirsch of Milwaukee county, and Harry, who died in the year of their coming. There were born in Milwaukee county—Barbara, wife of Fred. Klassy, living in Iowa; Henry, in this town; Mary, wife of Thomas Jenny, lives in Ohio; Anna, wife of Gabriel Blasy, living in Iowa, and John. The parents are both living. The elder Freitag, when he came to Milwaukee county, bought forty acres of land the first week of his residence, and lived there until 1864, when he sold and came to Exeter, buying 150 acres of land on section 31, which he still owns and resides upon.

Jacob Freitag, son of John Jacob Freitag, came with his father when young from Switzerland in 1845. While a resident of Milwaukee county he married Christine Becker, Jan. 17, 1860. One child was born to them—John, born Sept. 16, 1862. Mr. Freitag lost his wife by death, Jan. 1, 1873. He owns a valuable farm of 210 acres on section 31, and is one of the best farmers in this part of the town. He settled on this land in 1864.

Henry Freitag, son of John Jacob Freitag, and brother of Jacob Freitag, was born in Milwaukee county, and came here in 1864 with his father. His residence is on section 31. He owns a fine farm of 300 acres, and adjoining sections south and west. He was married May 10, 1872, to Ursula Blumer. They have five children—Mary, Jacob, Rosina, Henry and John.

Mrs. Urania McConnell is a daughter of John and Nancy Porter, and was born in Sangamon Co., Ill., Oct. 4, 1820. She lived with her father until her marriage, Aug. 19, 1840, to Joseph McConnell, who was born Feb. 4, 1811, in Pennsylvania. He came to Wisconsin from Ohio in 1833, and engaged in mining in Lafayette county, which occupation he followed most of the time until his marriage. He was at that time operating a mill near Freeport, Ill. They were married at Monroe in this county, and this is said to have been the first marriage in that town. They settled in Stephenson Co., Ill. where they lived until 1866, upon a farm which he purchased two or three years after their marriage. Mr. McConnell, in 1866, bought eighty acres of land on section 35, of the town of Exeter, upon which he resided until the time of his death, Dec. 3, 1882. Mrs. McConnell now lives on the homestead. Their children were—John, who enlisted in the 93d Illinois regiment, and died in the service; James, who died in this town; William died in Illinois; three infant children died in Illinois; Lucy, wife of William Porter, lives in Exeter; Nancy is the wife of Alonzo Silver of Mount Pleasant; Mary is married to George Lewis, and they reside on the homestead with Mrs. McConnell. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have two children—Ervia U., born in November, 1881, and Amy, born in February, 1884.

James T. Fulton, son of William T. and Sarah Fulton, was born in Mercer Co., Penn., Aug. 19, 1844, and was but an infant when his father and family moved to Wisconsin. He lived with his parents until eighteen years old, when with their consent he started in life on his own account. The first year he worked in Wisconsin pineries, then engaged as sutler's clerk for J. S. Gold, sutler of the 15th Veteran Reserve Corps, stationed at Chicago, Springfield and Cairo, Ill. He was in this employ about one year, then went to Montana and engaged in mining two years; came back to Wisconsin in 1867, and took charge of lead mining works in Exeter for an Evansville company, and the Sugar river lead mines on section 35. A few months later the work was abandoned. In 1869 his father made a trip to California hoping to be benefited in health. James accompanied him, and they returned the same season. James T. then settled down in life in the town of Exeter, and was married to Matilda Hayden, Feb. 26, 1871. She was a daughter of James and Lucinda Hayden, and born in Dane Co., June 12, 1851. Her father died Oct. 18, 1875, in Exeter village. Her mother now lives there with her son, James Hayden. There are four children besides James and Matilda—Elizabeth, Louisa, Catharine and William. Mr. and Mrs. Fulton have two children—William N., born Jan 1, 1872, and Cora Idell, born March 31, 1879. Mr. Fulton is an excellent citizen, and has eighty acres of land on section 34, where he lives.

Alonzo Jordan brought his family from Chittenden Co., Vt., in 1850, and made his home near Dayton, on the place now owned by G. F. Ellis. Mrs. Clarinda Jordan, his first wife, died in Vermont, March 5, 1848, leaving four children, who were a part of Mr. Jordan's family when he settled in the town of Exeter. They were—Frances, the deceased wife of Warren Hill; Alonzo P., Edwin T., who now lives in Rock county; and Eliza, wife of Frank Edwards. In January, 1849, the year before coming west, Mr. Jordan was married to Charlotte Parker, native of Franklin Co., Vt., born March 14, 1827. Before leaving Vermont, one son—Lucius O.—was born to them, and afterwards, in this town, were born—Wilber, who now lives in Belleville. Volney, who was married to Minnie Prucia, and has three children—Frank, Belver Pearl, and an infant daughter, now living in Dayton; Emma, wife of Frank Green, and Fred, who now owns the homestead, and was married to Mary, daughter of Charles and Ann Parkin, Nov. 27, 1883. Alonzo P. Jordan, the oldest son of Alonzo Jordan, was married June 11, 1865, to Frances Hunt, daughter of Homer and Mary Hunt. She was born in Dresden, Ohio. Her parents came to this town in 1866, and have since that time lived with Mr. and Mrs. Jordan. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have two children—Lizzie May, born in 1870, and Charles Homer, born in 1873. Mr. Jordan owns 105 acres on section 26. Lucius O., the first born of Alonzo Jordan by his marriage with Charlotte Parker, owns 100 acres of land where he resides on section 26. He was married Oct. 8, 1872, to Angeline Vest, daughter of Henry Vest, residents of Eau Claire, Wis. Her mother died when she was quite young. They have seven children—Alonzo W., Emma A. Charlotte A., Orphia, Orlando, Lucius and Lewis, (twins). In 1856 the father, Alonzo Jordan, sold his place near Dayton, and moved on 160 acres of land he had previously bought on section 26, where he lived until his death, which occurred Feb. 12, 1872. The homestead is now the residence of his widow and his son, Fred, who owns the property.

James Lewis was born in Erie Co., Penn., July 27, 1835. His father, Elijah Lewis, was born in Ashtabula Co., Ohio, Oct. 8, 1808, and his father, Elijah Lewis, Sr., was a Revolutionary soldier, was a pensioner, and lived to the age of ninety-six years, and died in Erie county in 1853.

He was born in Rhode Island. After the Revolution he went to Ohio, and later to Pennsylvania. Elijah Lewis, Jr., was married to Isabel Johnson, in 1831. She was born in Monroe Co., Penn. He was a farmer. They came to this county in May, 1850. He now lives in Brodhead, where his wife died in March, 1872. Seven children came west with the parents—Jane, wife of Alonzo Jones, living in Montana; Lydia, wife of Joel C. Close, living in Crawford Co., Penn.; James, of this town; Margaret, who died young; Mary, who died in Decatur; Rose, wife of Isaac N. Farmer, of Decatur; Sarah, deceased wife of Star McKenney, and Clara, wife of Oliver Woodling, of Brodhead. James Lewis, the subject of this sketch, was married to Elizabeth Conway, April 5, 1858. By this union there is one son, now living in this town—George Eugene, born in 1859. Mr. Lewis lost his wife by death, in March, 1865. July 4, 1867, he was married to Louisa Hayden, daughter of James A. Hayden, one of the old settlers of Exeter village, and who died in October, 1876. By this marriage there are seven children—William, Jay, Almira, Frank, Charles, Pearl and James. After his first marriage he commenced life in Mount Pleasant, lived there eighteen months. In the fall of 1859 he made a trip to Kansas, returning the same season. The next spring he went again to Kansas, and back to Allamakee Co., Iowa, where he lived till August, 1863, then returned to Green county, locating in the town of Sylvester, and from there came to the town of Exeter, subsequently purchasing 200 acres of valuable land on section 34. Mr. Lewis is a prominent citizen. He was elected chairman of the town board in 1864, and is a man well calculated to attend to the business of the office.

CHAPTER XXXV.

TOWN OF JEFFERSON.

This town lies in the southern tier of Green county's civil sub-division. It is bounded on the north by the town of Sylvester, on the east by Spring Grove, on the west by Clarno, and on the south by the Illinois State line. On the government surveys the territory embraced by this town is designated as congressional township 1 north, range 1 east, of the fifth principal meridian, and contains 24,536.92 acres. It is stated that there are 24,337 acres of farming lands, valued at $511,765 or $21.02 per acre. The value of village lots in the town is $25,500, as estimated. The total value of real estate in the town is $537,265, while that of real and personal property is $815,585. The population of the town in 1875 was 1,714; in 1880, 1,438.

The soil of the town is mostly an excellent black loam, with a slight tendency to clayeyness, yet with but little sand. There is some native timber in the west and northeast portions of the town, and the balance is made up of a beautifully undulating prairie. This is a magnificent farming country, and the fine dwelling and farm buildings abundantly testify to the intelligence and thrift of the class who make up Jefferson. In the timber the soil is of a lighter nature than on the prairie, yet all is unusually well adapted to the production of all cereals common to this latitude, as well as to indigenous and exotic grasses. The principal farm products of the town of Jefferson grown during the year 1882, were as follows: 1,353 bushels of wheat; 48,585 bushels of corn; 78,248 bushels of oats; 386 bushels of barley; 3,109 bushels of rye; 4,456 bushels of potatoes; 3,580 bushels of apples; 34 bushels of clover seed; 81 bushels timothy seed; 2,461 tons of hay; 39,267 pounds of butter. The principal farm products growing in the town at the time of making the assessment in 1883, were as follows: 95 acres wheat; 3,343 acres corn; 2,042 acres oats; 13 acres barley; 168 acres rye; 52 acres potatoes; 106 acres apple orchards; 3,440 bearing trees; 4,043 acres grass; 1,312 acres growing timber. In 1883 there were 637 milch cows in the town valued at $19,110. There were 637 head of horses, average value $69.56; total $44,310; 3,244 head of cattle, average value $19.28; total $62,571; 9 mules, average value $104.44, total $940; 3,343 sheep, average value $2, total $6,694; 2,749 swine, average value $5.26, total $15,465.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

According to the report, and to the best information that can be obtained, J. H. and David C. Bridge and J. E. Clark entered the first land within the present limits of the town of Jefferson. They came from Preble Co., Ohio, in the fall of 1835. Mr. Clark brought his family, driving through two teams, and stopped during the winter of 1835—6 near Dodgeville. Here he was located when the Bridge brothers arrived. In October, 1835, they all came here and selected their land, then went to the land office at Mineral Point to enter the same. David Bridge took land on section 32, as did Mr. Clark. After entering the land David C. Bridge returned to Ohio, and moved his family out in the fall of 1836, having erected a cabin the previous spring. He lived upon the land for a number of years, then removed to section 30, where he lived until the time of his death, which occurred in February, 1882. His widow and one son now reside in Monroe. Two of the children still live in the town—Mrs. Elizabeth Starr and Jacob V. Bridge; the latter resides on section 29.

J. H. Bridge took land on section 30, and after entering the land he remained until the spring of 1836, helping his brother build his cabin, and cutting 5,000 rails, and then he started for Ohio again. He remained there until the fall of 1840, when he moved to this town and settled upon the land he had taken. He lived in the town of Jefferson until 1870, when he removed to Monroe; but two years later he returned to his farm, and remained three years, when he again located at Monroe, where he still lives.

J. E. Clark came to the town of Jefferson in the fall of 1835, settling on the southwest quarter of section 32. He was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Jan. 29, 1795. When he was six months old his parents removed to Preble Co., Ohio, where he remained until he came to Green county, which has since been his home. He was married in Preble county to Mary P. Voorhies, who was born July 13, 1799, and died in 1864. Her father was a soldier of the Indian War, in which he served as ensign, and was wounded in the shoulder by a bullet, which he carried until his death. Mr. Clark's father, Stephanas, died in Fountain Co., Ind. J. E. Clark has eight children living, all of whom are married. He is the only one now living of the three judges of election for the location of the county seat of Green county. He was also formerly justice of the peace. The first religious services ever held by the Baptists in the town of Jefferson were at his house in 1836. Mr. Clark's parents were of English descent, and his wife's of Dutch. The latter resided in New Jersey, where they settled about 200 years ago.

L.P. Clark is a native of Preble Co., Ohio. When two years old, he came with his parents, to Green county, where he has since resided upon the same farm, which is the old homestead formerly owned by his father, J. E. Clark. He was married July 3, 1856, to Mrs. Sylbey Elliott, of Winnebago, Ill. They have two children living—Alma R., now the wife of Claude Hunt, living near Linn Grove; and Myron E. Mr. Clark owns 140 acres of land. He is a member of the republican party and was, at one time, postmaster at Jefferson. He and his family are Church members.

James Riley, a native of Maryland, came from Indiana to this town in 1836, and entered land on sections 11, 12, 1 and 2. He returned to Indiana, and in the spring of 1837, came back here with his family. He brought with him six head of oxen, two wagons, household goods, stock, etc. They lived in a tent until they could build a log cabin. The roof of said cabin was covered with bark and the floor made of basswood bark. He afterwards erected a double log cabin, 16x32 feet in size, one and a half stories high, with a shingle roof, in which he lived until his death, which occurred in 1864.

In the spring of 1836, Daniel Harcourt and John Chryst arrived. Daniel Harcourt came from Indiana with his family and settled upon land about a mile and a half north of the Bridge and Clark settlement. He remained there for a number of years when he removed west. John Chryst also came from Indiana, in which State he was born. He stopped the first year near Monroe. He settled with his family—which was quite large—upon a place in the northwestern part of the town, where he lived until the time of his death. His widow is dead. Some of the children are still residents of the county.

Ezra B. Gillett came from Ohio in the winter of 1835—6, and entered in the timber land on section 31. He also entered land on section 25 in Clarno, where he erected a cabin. In the summer of 1836 he sold his place to John Bridge and in a few years removed to Illinois.

John Bridge, father of J. H. and David, came in the fall of 1836, with his family and settled on section 29. He lived there until the fall of 1854 when he went back to Ohio, where he died in March, 1855.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

In 1837, Jehu Chadwick located in this town. He is now dead.

M. Albin also came at the same time as did John Bridge, in the fall of 1836. He was a native of Virginia, but came here from Ohio. He was a single man at the time, but shortly after he came here, he was married to Deborah Ann Bridge. They lived in the town until about 1853, when they removed to Douglas Co., Kansas, where they still live.

Jeremiah Bridge, a native of Ohio, came from Dodgeville in the spring of 1836, and settled with his family on section 20. He lived here until the time of his death, and his widow and one son, Josephus, still live in the town.

Jotham Scudder came from Ohio in 1838. He settled near the present site of Juda. He had a family of three children. He lived there until the time of his death.

John Kane came from Indiana with a very large family about 1839, and settled near Richland creek, on section 19. He lived there fifteen years when he went to Missouri, and it is reported that he is dead. None of his family are now living in the county. He was a wheelwright by trade, and also a cabinet maker. In an early day he threw a dam across Richland creek, and made a business of manufacturing household furniture. He put up a little shop, put in a turning lathe, and with the power which the creek furnished, he made much of the homely, though sensible furniture that was used in early days. He made a great many chairs, putting in raw-hide bottoms. This little shop he operated for a number of years, and to-day, in many of the little cabins, and in many of the garrets of the elegant dwellings that have in many instances superseded the log cabins of former days, may be found some of "Kane's old raw-hide bottom chairs," which are saved as mementos of pioneer life and its attendant disadvantages.

Joseph Forbes came from Indiana at the same time, being a brother-in-law of Mr. Kane. He settled near Kane's place and remained for ten or twelve years, when he left.

William Rittenhouse came in 1840 and settled on section 7, where he resided a number of years. He met his death by falling from a wagon. Two years previous to his death, his wife fell from the same wagon and was killed. The same team was also hitched to the wagon. He was a man prominent in town and county affairs, having been clerk of the court and register of deeds. Some of his children still reside in the county.

Garret R. Patton, of Pennsylvania, came in the fall of 1845, and located. He now lives near Juda. Rev. G. R. Patton was born in Strausburg, Susquehanna Co., Penn., March 13, 1811, and brought up in Fayette Co., Penn. His father was from Delaware and his mother from New Jersey. The former was quite a prominent man, and was principal justice of the peace for thirty years, having an extensive practice, and his decisions were seldom appealed. He served with honor to himself, and satisfaction to his constituency. The grandfather of the subject of this sketch was a Baptist minister, and preached for fifty consecutive years. Mr. Patton is of Scotch-German extraction. In 1845 he came to this county and settled in the town of Jefferson, taking a homestead on the road between Juda and Monroe. He afterward sold this place and removed to section 2, where he had purchased 175 acres of land where he now lives. Since twenty-seven years old Mr. Patton has been a preacher of the gospel. His third sermon was preached in the same church in which he continued to preach until his advent in this county. since then he has preached in the same church. He has been three times married, and his first two wives are buried in Juda cemetery. His present wife was Lydia Roderick, from Pennsylvania. By his first wife he had eight children, five of whom are now living—Daniel J., Rebecca J., James A., Ann E. and Garrett J. By the second marriage there was one child—Arthur R. By his present wife there are seven children—Victor E., now at school in Beaver Dam; Grant E., Thurlow J., Dow D., Edith E. and Cecil D. Rev. Patton first came to Green county in 1834, worked in the mining regions at Mineral Point one summer, returning home in the fall, coming again in 1845, and making a permanent settlement. As a preacher of the gospel, Rev. Patton deserves special mention, as he has been the means of doing much good. He has probably married more people, and officiated at a greater number of funerals than any other person in Green county. It is said he has married over 600 couples and attended over 600 funerals. He is widely and favorably known, having the respect and esteem of all who know him. He preached his first sermon in Green county, Oct. 4, 1845. He was licensed as a Baptist preacher, to preach in Pennsylvania Jan. 18, 1839, and ordained March 25, 1841, by Revs. S. Sigfried, E. Miles, Isaac Wynn, J. W. B. Tisdale and Milton Sutton, and was baptized by Rev. William Schedwick.

Andrew Roderick, a native of Pennsylvania, came from Virginia in 1846, and settled on section 5. He has since died. Several of his children are still residents of the county.

EVENTS OF IMPORTANCE.

The first sod turned in the town was thrown over by J. E. Clark, on his place, on section 32, in the spring of 1836.

The Bridges did some breaking shortly afterward and all raised crops that year.

The first death in the town was that of Anna Bridge, wife of Jeremiah Bridge. She died previous to 1840, and was buried on the State line.

The first birth in the town was a son of J. E. Clark, which occurred Nov. 19, 1836. He now lives in Gage Co., Neb.

The first school in the town was taught by Thomas J. Stewart, a native of Virginia. It was established in the winter of 1840—41, and was a subscription school. It was held in a log cabin erected by Jehu Chadwick. Scholars attended from Sylvester and Spring Grove, as well from Jefferson.

Hiram Dunwiddie's mark for cattle was under bit in left ear, and under slit in right ear. Recorded June 6, 1850.

David C. Bridge's mark for stock was a smooth crop of right ear. Recorded June 19, 1851.

Bradley Chefan's ear mark for his cattle was a swallow fork in right ear. Recorded July 28, 1853.

The first election in this town was held April 3, 1849, at the house of Abraham Sanburn, located on the southwest quarter of section 22. John Barry was moderator, and George Eley, clerk. Jeremiah Bridge, chairman, Garret R. Patton and William, Berry, judges, and E. J. Blackford, clerk.

Probably the first mill for grinding corn and buckwheat was put up by James Riley the first winter after he settled here. He made the buhrs from stone he picked up. He fitted one of them to the hollow log, and then placed the other one on top of that one. He had it set up in one side of his house at first. It was operated by a shaft from the edge of the top stone to the ceiling. It required two men to run the mill, and had a capacity of turning out two bushels of buckwheat per hour.

RELIGIOUS.

At an early day the inhabitants near Juda attended religious services in the town of Sylvester, at the house of Thomas Wardle. Rev. William Stillwell was the preacher. People of all denominations attended these meetings.

In 1840, Henry Howe, a minister of the Christian (better known as Campbellite) Church, held meetings at the house of James Riley. Among the members of this organization were: James Riley and wife, Isaiah Kline and wife, and two sons, John Kline and wife, Eli Kline and wife, and Christopher Meinert. James Riley was the first deacon. Meetings were held once a month, people coming from long distances, and many of them with ox teams. Elder Howe preached here about three years, when a man named Gleason, a street preacher from Canada, came along and offered his services free of charge. Elder Howe accordingly withdrew. Mr. Gleason preached to the small band of Christians but a few times when he suddenly scoured the congregation for not paying him for preaching. That was the last time he preached for them, and it was in fact the end of the organization, for it left them without a preacher.

The first religious services held in the southeastern part of the town, was at the house of David Bridge, in 1840. Elder Henry Howe was the preacher. He organized a congregation, among whom were the following members: Henry Johnson and wife, J. H. Bridge and wife, David Bridge, Jeremiah Bridge, Adam Starr and wife, J. E. Clark and wife, Mrs. Deborah Bridge and two daughters, Nancy and Deborah Ann. J. H. Bridge was the first deacon. The congregation met for worship in private houses, until a school house was erected in the neighborhood. A large portion of the members have moved away, and regular services have not been held for a number of years.

The Richland M. E. church, located on section 5, was erected in the fall of 1873. The church grounds, containing half an acre, were donated by Seth Austin. At the time the church was built there about twenty members. This grew from a class which was organized many years ago at the school house. The first minister was Elder Walker. The present pastor is Elder Kellogg, The present trustees are: A. H. Woodle, Samuel Catherman, Lewis Roub, L. Steveson, William Baird and Seth Austin.

The English Lutheran Church, of Twin Grove, was organized in Twin Grove school house, Feb.

15, 1874, by Rev. G. J. Donmeyer, of the Evangelical Lutheran synod of northern Illinois. The following named persons signed the constitution adopted: E. L. Walker, David Holmes, John Rodocker, Joseph Emrich, Samuel D. Benage, May Holmes, Phiana Benage, Eva Holmes, Ann Rodocker, John Ohl, Lydia A. Ohl, James Holmes, Isabell Holmes, Annie Fries, Mary C. Holmes and Elizabeth Emrich. The following officers were elected: E. L. Walker, elder; John Ohl and Samuel D. Benage, deacons. Rev. J. A. Beidler was selected as first pastor, and commenced his labors in April of the same year. He served the congregation until 1876. From 1876 until 1880 it was served by Rev. J. M. Rees, of the Iowa synod. From 1880 until 1881 by Rev. D. E. Rupley, of the Allegany synod. From 1881 until 1884 by Rev. D. P. Grosscup, of the Iowa synod. In 1876 the congregation built a neat house of worship in the village of Twin Grove. It is a frame building, 34x50 feet, costing $2,775.71, including bell. It was dedicated Jan. 21, 1877, by Rev. Prof. D. L. Tressler, Ph. D., President of Carthage College, Carthage, Ill. In the same year a house and lot in the village of Twin Grove were purchased by the congregation, assisted by three other congregations, for the use of the Church as a parsonage. It was secured for $250. It has since been improved in buildings and other repairs at an additional expense of $150. The present membership of the congregation is forty. The following are the officers: William Stevenson, elder; Samuel Holmes and Leander Stevenson, deacons.

The Richland English Lutheran Church congregation was organized in February, 1859, by Rev. Ephraim Miller, of the Evangelical Lutheran synod of northern Illinois. Twenty-one members were enrolled at a meeting held in Richland school house, town of Jefferson, for the purpose of organization. The following is the list taken from the Church book: Samuel L. Roub, Mrs. S. L. Roub, George Bloom, Bloom, J. K. Bloom, Mrs. M. M. Bloom, Aquilla Deal and Amanda Hill. The following officers of the Church were chosen at this meeting: Isaiah Deal and S. L. Roub, elders; George Bloom and Levi Deal, deacons. Rev. E. Miller served the congregation as pastor from date of organization until 1861. Rev. A. A. Trimper, from 1861 until 1862. Rev. Charles Anderson from 1862 until 1863. Rev. J. K. Bloom from 1864 until 1866. Rev. S. Cook from 1866 until 1872. Rev. J. L. Hammond from 1872 until 1875. G. M. Packer, an applicant for licensure supplied the congregation from the close of 1875 until the middle of 1876. Rev. J. M. Rees served the congregation as regular pastor from 1876 until 1880. Rev. D. E. Rupley from 1880 until 1881. Rev. D. P. Grosscup from 1881 until 1884. Precious revivals were held in the years 1862, 1865 and 1873. A lot of two acres, on section 6, was deeded to the Church, for building purposes, in the year 1873, for the consideration of $160. Upon this lot, in 1874, a church building of 200 sittings was built, costing $2,750. It was dedicated by Revs. P. G. Bell and W. H. Schoch, of the synod of northern Illinois. In 1876 the congregation united with the Twin Grove pastorate and contributed to the purchase of a parsonage to be located at the latter place. The officers at present are: Rev. D. P. Grosscup, pastor; William Lore and Samuel Catherman, elders; Solomon Deal and James Holmes, deacons. The present membership is twenty.

The Spring Grove Lutheran Church was organized Oct. 1, 1866, by Rev. S. Cook, of the synod of northern Illinois. Six persons signed the constitution, viz: Josiah Adelman, Jesse Schoch, David Holmes, Rebecca Adelman, Elizabeth Schoch and Mary Holmes. The officers elected were: David Holmes, elder; Jesse Schoch, deacon. Rev. S. Cook remained as pastor from 1866 until 1872. Rev. J. A. Beidler served the congregation from 1874 until 1876. Rev. James M. Rees from 1876 until 1880. Rev. D. E. Rupley from 1880 until 1881. Rev. D. P. Grosseup from 1882 until 1884. From the first of the organization, the congregation had held divine services in a church building of 150 sittings, which had been erected by the people of the community as a church for all denominations. Since 1880 no roll of Church membership has been preserved.

Daniel Paul Grosscup, pastor of the English Lutheran Church of Twin Grove pastorate, Green Co., Wis., was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, Nov. 29, 1846. He was baptized in infancy in the Lutheran Church, and confirmed in the same Church at fourteen years of age. He was brought up on a farm, hence received only the training of a common district school until nineteen years of age. During a part of this period, his father having enlisted as a soldier in the War for the Union, (42d Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Garfield's) he was deprived of regular attendance upon school; but upon his father's return at the close of the war, in 1864, he again returned to books; entering Ashland High School in 1866, boarding at his home and walking three and one-half miles morning and evening. On reaching his majority in 1867, an inheritance of $1,200 was at his command. He at once entered Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, Samuel Sprecher, D. D., president; graduating in the classical department in 1871, and in the theological department of the same institution in 1872. In 1873 he was commissioned by the Board of Home Missions of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, of the general synod of the United States, to open a mission for the Church in Iowa City, Iowa. A Church was built up rapidly. In 1875 he was married to Mary V. Schaeffer, third daughter of Rev. G. W. Schaeffer, pastor of the English Evangelical Lutheran Church, of Princeton, Iowa. In 1879 he was transferred by the Board of Home Missions to Knoxville, Iowa. In 1881 his health failing, and that of his family, he resigned the mission field; and expecting a healthier climate, accepted a call to the Twin Grove pastorate. He has not been deceived. His health is entirely restored, and his work for the Church continues.

TWIN GROVE CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

Feb. 20, 1879, a meeting was held in the Lutheran church, and the above named association was organized. Three trustees were elected as follows: For one year, David Holmes; for two years, E. L. Walker; for three years, John Ohl. Annual meetings are held in February of each year. A half acre of land north of the village church has been purchased, at a cost of $50. Lots are to be sold at $10 per lot; and when these sales shall have covered the expense of the grounds, sums arising from subsequent sales, shall be appropriated to the improvement and adorning of the grounds.

The first burial was that of an infant child of Rev. James M. Rees, pastor of the Lutheran Church. Nine bodies have been buried. The present trustees are: David Holmes, E. L. Walker and John Ohl. This cemetery is under the control of the Twin Grove English Lutheran Church.

Oak Hall Cemetery, which is located on Section 5, embraces one acre of land. The ground was donated by Seth Austin and S. L. Roub.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

Joseph Bloomer has a cheese factory on section 18, where he makes different grades of cheese. This was the first cheese factory established in this town.

The cheese factory on section 5, was erected in 1878, by M. T. Gapen, W. J. Chryst and J. S. Roub, who had formed a joint stock company. The present owners are Messrs. M. T. Gapen, W. J. Chryst and William Hartwig. They have a good building and all the modern machinery and improvements for manufacturing Limburger and Swiss cheese. It is well patronized by the neighborhood. The firm also devote a good deal of time to making brick cheese. Timms' cheese factory is located on section 24. The building is 20x54 feet in size, two stories high, with basement. It receives the milk of about 200 cows. Charles Timms is the present proprietor.

The following is a list of men who have been prominent in town affairs: J. Andrew, B. W. Ritchford, E. Hosier, H. Dunwiddie, S. W. Ball, J. Allen, Lewis Gapen, William Blackford, Joseph Wardle, Isaac Trembley, R. S. Stephens, Samuel Witmer, Isaac Smiley, James Stevenson, H. Frankenbarger, John Howard, William Coldron, John Barry, D. C. Bridge, George Eley, Howard Hunt, Alfred Barmore, G. W. Bridge, Francis Barnum, A. B. Wilt, W. W. Walkey, William Stephenson, S. M. Hanna, G. W. Bussy, D. J. Patton, John Bolander, V. B. S. Newman, J. J. Armstrong, Jacob Roderick, D. Witmer, Charles F. Fisher, James A. Patton, John A. Chamber, Joseph Musser, B. F. Carle, J. C. Andrews, M. S. Tadel, John Carter, G. M. Walker, H. K. White, J. M. Swartz, H. W. Fallett, J. H. Armstrong and Jasper Chryst.

VILLAGE OF JUDA.

The village of Juda is situated on sections 1 and 2. The land now included in this village was entered in 1837, by Jehu Chadwick and John Crawford.

In 1848 Martin Dixon platted a village on the south side of Main street, and named it Juda. He erected a small frame house and lived there until 1850, when he sold to Joseph Gaus.

In March, 1852, J. D. Overton, Benjamin Broadbent, Robert Hanna and A. B. Smith platted a village, located in fraction 6, of section 2, township 1 north, range 8 east, and which contained thirty-one lots. The village was named Springfield. In 1857 Joseph Gaus sold out to David Witmer, and he re-platted the old village and made thirty-seven lots, which he made an addition to Springfield. That same year, Samuel Witmer made an addition of fifteen lots on the north of the plat, and north of Main street.

In the fall of 1883, H. C. Witmer circulated a petition that was numerously signed, and which was presented to the county board, and the name of the village was changed back to Juda.

The first birth in the village was Annie, a daughter of David and Martha Taylor.

The first death in the village was Phebe, wife of Joseph Gaus. Her death occurred in October, 1850. She was buried in the old cemetery at Juda. During the following year three of their children died.

The first building erected was a log school house in 1844. There were no other buildings erected until in 1847. In that year a Baptist church was built; Garret Clawson erected a dwelling house and wagon shop; George Debolt put up a dwelling house and blacksmith shop, and Robert Hanna built a house in which he opened a store and hotel.

George Debolt engaged in the blacksmith business in 1847, doing shoeing and general repairing. He was the first blacksmith in the town. He remained in Juda about fifteen years, when he removed to Sylvester. He remained there three years, then returned to Juda and resumed business. He died in 1882.

Garret Clawson was the first wagon-maker in this village. He opened up a shop in 1847. He remained here several years, then went to Brodhead, where he died some years later.

The first merchant was Robert Hanna, who opened a store in 1847. He followed the business about five years, when he closed out and removed to Iowa.

Benjamin Broadbent was the second merchant. He remained in the business but a few years.

The next to engage in the merchandise business was J. D. Artel. He erected a frame dwelling on lot 12, and put in a large stock of goods. In 1856 he sold to Elder Patton and his son, Daniel. They soon afterwards sold to H. and

C. J. Hunt. The latter was a practicing physician. He died in a short time. His brother soon closed out the business and engaged in farming.

Evan Hosier opened a store immediately afterward, but only engaged in the business a short time.

In 1858 David Witmer engaged in the general merchandise trade, and did the first business of any magnitude in the village. He continued in trade some years, then closed out.

Robert Hanna kept the first hotel, and his guests received the best of accommodations and were well cared for. He went out of the business in about five years. The present hotel was erected by Samuel Ball, who acted as "jolly host" several years. It has since changed hands several times. Chester Gifford is the present landlord.

C. A. Gifford, hotel keeper in Juda, was born in Fulton Co., N. Y., Oct. 3, 1845. He is a son of Robert B. and Susan M. (Foote) Gifford, who now reside upon a farm in Spring Grove. In 1856 they left New York and came directly to Wisconsin. They remained a short time in North Prairie, Waukesha county, then came to Monroe. It was their intention on leaving New York to settle in Iowa where Mr. Gifford, Sr., owned a farm, but on their arrival in Monroe a snow storm set in, it being then the fall of the year, and they were unable to proceed. They then concluded to settle in this county, and rented a house in town, in which they lived two weeks, then removed to the farm of George Goodrich, in Clarno. In the spring of 1857 Mr. Gifford, Sr., taught the district school. In the spring of the same year they removed to another farm, owned by David Earlywine, where they lived until the fall of 1857, then removed to Juda, to a place now occupied by Mr. Biggs, near the depot. In the meantime they sold their farm in Iowa. In 1859 they removed to the farm in Spring Grove where Mr. Gifford, Sr., now lives. C. A. Gifford, the subject of this sketch, was married Jan. 24, 1866, to Emma

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

I. Hall, a resident of this county and daughter of William R. and Polly (Parker) Hall. They have four children—Metta L., Zua B., Robert B and Fred C. Metta L. and Zua B. are both teachers in the public schools of this county. Mrs. Gifford's father is living in Warren, and her mother is dead.

The first hardware store was opened by Josiah Clawson soon after his return from the war. He remained here a short time, then removed his goods to Iowa.

The first post office was established in 1847, with Edward Tenny as postmaster. The village was on the route from Monroe to Beloit, and from Janesville to Mineral Point. Mr. Tenny was succeeded as postmaster by J. D. Axtel; and he in turn by Charles Dudgeon, George Gaus and John Swan, the present postmaster.

The first harness maker in the village was A. B. Smith. He opened up a shop in 1851. He continued in business about three years, then sold out to Hugh Benninghaff. The latter remained here a few years then closed out. Jacob and Ezra Frieze opened a shop in 1864. In about three years they sold to Jacob Wilting. One year later he sold to N. W. Hartman, who continued to furnish his patrons with harness, saddles, bridles, etc.

N. W. Hartman came to Green county from Belleville, Washington Co., Penn., March 8, 1871. He is a son of Morgan and Maria (Crabb) Hartman, who still reside in Belleville. Mr. Hartman, of this sketch, learned the harness maker's trade in his native town, and has followed the same since coming to Juda. His wife was formerly Sarah A. Swan, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of William and Mary Swan, both of whom are dead, and the former is buried in Pennsylvania, the latter in Juda cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Hartman have two children—Mary Lulu and Jesse N. In 1863 Mr. Hartman enlisted in company A, 22d Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was mustered in at New Brighton, Penn., April 14. He was with Phil. Sheridan in his cavalry exploits, also with Siegel at Martinsburg, New Market and Lynchburg, also numerous minor engagements. He served until the close of the war, under Generals Custer, Sheridan, Averill and Hunter. Mr. and Mrs. Hartman are members of the Baptist Church and he is a Mason, an Odd Fellow and a member of the A. O. U. W.

The first drug store was started by a man named Bishop, in a building located on lot 4. This was during the war. He paid but little attention to his business, and as a consequence soon closed up.

The first school house was erected in 1844, and Brooks Dunwiddie was the first, teacher. It was a log building, situated on Main street. Religious services were held in this house while it was in use, which was only a few years.

The Juda flouring mill was erected by Samuel Ball in about 1860. The power is derived from two small streams that flow together below the mill. There is a dam across each stream, and races carry the water to the mill, which has about ten feet fall. The mill contains two run of stone, which for a number of years did a good business. It is now operated by E. Thompson.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

V. B. S. Newman, son of Isaac and Adeline (Sparks) Newman, early settlers of Green county, was born in the town of German, Fayette Co., Penn., June 13, 1832. He there received his early education in the common schools. He came to Wisconsin with his parents in 1849, and made his home with them until he was twenty-two years of age, when he went to Beaver Dam, to attend school, after which he engaged in teaching school in the town of Jefferson. On the 9th of August, 1862, he enlisted in company K, 22d Wisconsin regiment, Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in as orderly sergeant. They first went to Covington Heights, Ky., remaining there until February, 1863, thence to Tennessee. His regiment was captured at Spring Hill, Tenn., on the 5th of March following, and taken to Tullahoma, thence to Libby prison. They were kept prisoners eight weeks, then exchanged and ordered to report at St. Louis. In May of that year, they went to Tennessee and were stationed at Murfreesboro until the spring of 1864, then joined Sherman's command at Chattanooga, and was with him on his march to the sea, thence through the Carolinas to Washington, participating in the many important battles of that memorable campaign. He was promoted 2d lieutenant in May, 1863, and soon after to 1st lieutenant. He was honorably discharged with his regiment in July, 1865. He returned home and engaged in teaching until 1867, when he embarked in the mercantile business at Juda. He has been successful in business, and still continues in the same. He was married Sept. 20, 1860, to Rebecca J., daughter of Garrett R. and Ruth (Johns) Patton. They have five children—Clyde, Charlie, Kate, Paul and Ruth. He keeps a general stock of groceries, dry goods, clothing, boots, shoes, hats, caps and notions.

William Byrne, a prominent business man of Juda, began the mercantile trade, in that village, in 1876, succeeding John Swan. He carries a stock of about $6,000. He is a native of Ireland, born near Dublin, Aug. 25, 1839, and is a son of James and Jane Byrne. His father died June 18, 1841, leaving his wife and six children. In the year of 1850, the entire family sailed for America, and settled in Canada until November, 1851, then came to Green Co., Wis. Mr. Byrne, of this sketch, was married March 18, 1861, to Margaret Oliver, of Belleville, Dane Co., Wis. They have had eight children, five of whom are living—Ida L., James E., Maggie, Alice and Dora M. George Edward, Mary, Elener and Maggie are dead. James E., is a mute, and is in Delavan, at school, where he is pursuing his studies, also learning type setting, and is an apt scholar and general favorite. Mr. Byrne enlisted in February, 1865, in company I, of the 46th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in at Madison and did guard duty most of the time that he was in the service. He was discharged in November, 1865. He is a man of good education, and has been a teacher. The Albany Journal speaks of him as follows:

“William Byrne, an affable gentleman, and a newspaper correspondent of considerable note, paid us a pleasant visit one day last week. His home is at Juda, Wis.” Mr. Byrne is a man of indefatigable courage and possesses great ability of acquiring knowledge, and has become noted for the same, and in the late history of Green county, is classed with the largest farmers of the town of York. He is now doing a flourishing business.

W.F. Moldenhauer, druggist at Juda, is a native of Prussia, born Sept. 19, 1842. His father died when he was very young, and his mother married again. He lived upon a farm in his native country until 1857, when his parents came to America, and settled at Monroe, Green county, where he remained until 1865, clerking for George Summers, dealer in dry goods, with whom he continued until the spring of 1864, then clerked for A. Pick, about one year, then for J. B. Cook & Co. six months. He was married June 12, 1865, to Emilie F.

Gloege, a native of Prussia, and sister of H. L. Gloege, the county clerk. She came with her parents to Green county, in 1860. After marriage, Mr. Moldenhauer resided upon a farm about two years, then, Dec. 11, 1867, he went to clerking for Newman & Gans, continuing with V. B. S. Newman until Jan. 1, 1880, then engaged to clerk for B. B. Bowell, druggist, whom he bought out on September 10, of the same year. Mr. and Mrs. Moldenhauer have four children living—Arthur F., Edwin S., Oscar H. and Della Emilie. They are members of the Evangelical Church. Mr. Moldenhauer was constable of Juda, in 1878.

Samuel Pletts is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Dauphine county, June 16, 1831. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Shaffer) Pletts. His parents removed from Dauphine county to Centre Co., Penn., in 1837. His father was a shoemaker, and Samuel learned that trade, at which he has always been employed. He was married in Rebersburg, Centre county, to Sapilla Guire, in 1851. He soon after removed from Rebersburg to Venango county, and remained one year, thence to Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1855. He remained there two years. In 1857 he removed to Juda, this county, and in 1858 removed to Monroe; then in 1859 he removed back to Juda. Mr. and Mrs. Pletts have had eight children, six of whom are living—Margaret A., John F., Charles H., George L., Vashti and Theodore. They are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Pletts is an Odd Fellow and Mason, and votes the republican ticket.

Anton Stauffacher, blacksmith in the village of Juda, is a native of Switzerland, born June 16, 1841. When four years old, he left his native country with a colony that came to New Glarus. He remained on a farm until 1861, and on the 7th of October, enlisted in the army, and was in quite a number of battles. He was discharged on account of sickness. He was married July 5, 1865, to Anna Schindler, a native of New York. They have seven children—Henry J., Anna M., Clara L., Anton A., Lydia T., Frank A. and Charles F. Mrs. Stauffacher is a member of the Evangelical Church. Mr. Stauffacher is a republican.

VILLAGE OF TWIN GROVE.

This little village of about 100 inhabitants is situated near the southern central part of the town of Jefferson. Its first start was in 1862, when Harrison Clevestine opened a store. He ran the business until 1866, when E. L. Walker succeeded him. Mr. Walker engaged in the business until 1875, when, owing to heavy reverses, he closed up. Miller & Reitzell then commenced business. They afterward moved their stock of goods away. In 1882 Wells & Walker opened a store. In a short time G. M. Walker purchased the business, and he in turn sold to J. H. Armstrong in 1883. Mr. Armstrong continues to run the store, and does a good business. He carries a stock of goods valued at $2,000. The building is of brick, and is used as a dwelling house and store.

Alonzo Emrick opened a grocery and confectionery store in December, 1882, in which business he is still engaged.

Abraham Sanborn and Calvin Hale were the first settlers at Twin Grove, although they did not settle at "the corners." Mr. Sanborn's house was about forty rods north, and Mr. Hale's house a quarter of a mile southeast of the corners. Mr. Hale died and his family afterwards erected a house about forty rods east of the corners. Messrs. Sanborn and Hale located herein 1845.

Jonathan Hill built the first frame house at the corners, and engaged in farming.

Jonathan Cable settled there soon after, and engaged in the blacksmith business. This business is now in the hands of a gentleman named Walters, who is a first-class workman.

The citizens of Twin Grove are an energetic, wide-awake and intelligent class of people, who are not slow to take advantage of the fine agricultural district which surrounds their neat little village. They have a church in the village, and a school house near by.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Below are given biographical sketches of a number of the prominent and energetic citizens of the town of Jefferson.

J. A. Chambers is a native of Union Co., Penn., born Feb. 6, 1834. He is a son of Benjamin and Mary C. (Musser) Chambers. His father was a saddle and harness-maker, and started the first harness shop between Chicago and Galena. He worked at his trade in the winter, and improved his farm in the summer. He brought with him his wife and two children—John A. and Robert M., the latter now residing in Colorado. He arrived in the town of Jefferson in the spring of 1839, and in a short time purchased a farm of John Baker. By hard labor and economy he was successful in securing a comfortable home. They had three children born to them in the town of Jefferson—Eleanor B., Mary C. and Henrietta B. He continued to live on his farm most of the time until his death, which occurred in October, 1872. John A., the subject of this sketch, was five years of age when he came to this county. He left the farm to learn the harness making trade, at which he worked for seven years. He then returned to the home of his father and built a house and fenced eighty acres of land adjoining his father's farm. He was married in March, 1859, to Mary E. Glover, who died in April, 1860. He then gave up farming and worked at his trade. On the 12th of August, 1862, he enlisted in company K, 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He served until the close of the war, participating in many battles. He was with Sherman on his march from Nashville to Atlanta, Savannah and Richmond; at the battle of Spring Hill, Tenn., he was wounded in the hand and disabled for eight weeks. At the close of the war he returned to Green county and engaged in farming. In March, 1867, he was married to Margaret Rockey, of Stephenson Co., Ill., and at the death of his father, purchased the old home, where he now resides. By this union there are six children—Henrietta E., Charles L., Ella M., Mary C., Margaret E. and Benjamin G. Mr. Chambers owns 206 acres of land, with timber adjoining, and one of the best springs in the town of Jefferson. He is engaged in farming and raising stock.

J. S. Brown is a native of Green Co., Ohio, born May 21, 1822. He is a son of D. W. and Lydia (Rowser) Brown. His father was a farmer and a native of Pennsylvania. Both parents are now dead and buried in Olive Cemetery near Bellbrook. The subject of this sketch removed from his native State to this county as early as 1844, and lived with Allen Woodell in Spring Grove about eight months, then went back to Ohio. He afterwards returned to Green county, and selected 120 acres of land which he has since sold. He lived upon a farm until 1882, when he removed to the village of Juda, where he has since lived. He now owns 205 acres of land, and a nice house in the village. He was married June 4, 1848, to Patience Stephens, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of Reuben and Sally Stephens, who were among the early settlers of the town of Jefferson. Her father is dead, but her mother is yet living, hale and hearty, aged eighty-one years. By this marriage there were three children—David D., now in Oregon; Florence, now living in Franklin Co., Iowa; and Lydia, who lives in Butler Co., Neb, all being married. The mother of these children died and Mr. Brown was again married to Judith A. Luce, a resident and native of Green Co., Ohio. Three children have blessed this union—Belle L. and Jennie, both married; and William who lives at home and is a teacher in the schools of Green county. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Baptist Church and Mr. Brown of the Christian Church. Mr. Brown has been somewhat prominent in the county, having been chairman of the board of supervisors twice, deputy provost marshal during the late war, and constable for six years. He is an excellent man, and may be classed among Green county's best citizens.

Joseph Belveal came to Green county about 1844, and purchased the farm owned by Jeremiah Bridge, which contained sixty acres, located on section 31, in the town of Jefferson. He has since sold twenty acres and now owns forty. He has always been engaged in farming. Mr. Belveal was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Jan. 22, 1821. His parents, Joseph and Sarah (Caniff) Belveal, are dead, and buried in Union Co., Ohio, where they removed when Joseph, Jr., was ten years old. He remained in that county until he came to Jefferson. He was married Dec. 14, 1847, in Monroe, to Elizabeth Clark, a daughter of J. E. Clark, of Jefferson. The ceremony was performed by Elder Walworth. Mr. and Mrs. Belveal are the parents of four children, of whom three are living—Sylvester, Sarah A. and George W. Lewis C., the eldest, is dead. Sylvester is a carpenter and cabinet maker. He has a shop upon the farm, in which he works during the winter, making all kinds of scroll and bracket work. He is a natural genius. Mr. Belveal is a republican and a Church member.

E. J. Blackford, a native of Fayette Co., Penn., was born May 12, 1824, and is the son of William and Rachel (Johns) Blackford, natives of the same State, who emigrated to Green county in 1845, and settled in Richland timber, on the Monroe and Juda road. They are both now deceased and buried in Juda Cemetery. The subject of this sketch came here with his parents with whom he made his home for a time. He worked the first summer for Elder Patton. He was married to Margaret Chryst, a daughter of John Chryst, Sr., an early resident of the county, now deceased and buried in Richland. In 1867 Mr. Blackford removed with his family to Iowa, and remained two years. When they were returning to Green county in 1869, Mrs. Blackford died on the road. By this union there were seven children, four of whom are living—John W., Rebecca R., James E. and Thomas J.

He bought a farm in the town of Jefferson in 1859 called the "Chryst" place. He also owned a farm on section 8 of the same town. He removed from the "Chryst farm," to Juda, in November, 1878, living in that town until March, 1883, when he moved to his present home. He was married again, Dec. 23, 1870, to Mrs. Jane Clemmer, formerly Jane Roderick. Mrs. Blackford has one daughter by her former marriage—Lucinda L., wife of B. B. Bowell. Mrs. Blackford is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Blackford is a democrat, politically, and has been town clerk of Jefferson, also chairman of the town board two years; assessor, one year, and is at present, justice of the peace.

Andrew Roderick was a native of Pennsylvania, born July 14, 1803. His wife is a native of the same State and was born on the day previous. He was always accustomed to farm work, and after spending some time in Virginia came to Green Co., Wis., in 1846, having but $60. He bought forty acres of land and was successful, adding thereto until he had 250 acres. He died April 16, 1871, on the farm now owned by Elder Patton and was buried in Juda cemetery. He was an active, energetic, hard working man, a sincere Christian, and a much respected citizen. He always took a prominent part in Church matters, and was universally beloved. Mr. and Mrs. Roderick were the parents of nine children, all of whom reached an adult age. Mrs. Roderick still lives on the old homestead, having a pleasant room exclusively for herself.

James W. Roderick has been a resident of Green county since 1846, when he came here with his parents, who located at that time on section 3, in the town of Jefferson. He was born in Fayette Co., Penn., April 5, 1843. He, at present, owns a farm of 200 acres, a part of which is the homestead formerly owned by his father. He has good improvements and is desirably located. He was married Dec. 22, 1870, to Hannah LaBoard, a daughter of Peter to Charles P. Preston, and living in Denver; George, who was drowned in Lime creek; Ella, married to David D. Brown, now living in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Carle are members of the Baptist Church. Politically, or otherwise, he is a prohibitionist, and an earnest worker in the cause.

William Guinter, a native of Pennsylvania, was born July 12, 1825, and is the son of Charles and Anna (Cherry) Guinter, both of whom are dead, and buried at Milton, Northumberland Co., Penn. Charles Guinter was a native of Germany, and a shoemaker by trade. William Guinter learned the blacksmith trade, and followed it in Pennsylvania, also after coming to this county. At present he has a shop on his farm in which he works a portion of the time. He removed to Green county in 1858, and purchased eighty acres of land of Hugh Cameron, which is located on section 33, of the town of Jefferson, where he still resides. He was married Feb. 5, 1846, to Rebecca Steninger, a native of Pennsylvania. They have six children living—David S., now traveling salesman for the Neenah Stove Works, formerly a preacher; Ann E., married to Oscar Templeton, and living in Iowa; Agnes L., wife of William Lutz, of Shannon, Ill.; Vialetta, wife of Ira Emrick; William S., married to Sarah Armstrong, and living in Jefferson; and Belle, who is living at home with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Guinter are members of the Evangelical Association. He is a class leader in the Church, a member of the republican party, and a respected and popular citizen. He owns a good farm, and makes stock raising a specialty.

George Eley is a native of Pennsylvania, and was born in Centre county, Feb. 28, 1807. He is the son of John and Catharine (Johnsonbach) Eley, also natives of the same State. He is of German extraction, his grandfather and great-grandfather being natives of that country. When thirty-eight years old George came to this county from Ohio, and settled on a farm in Richland, where he remained until 1875, then came to Juda. He is now comfortably situated, and lives upon the income of his money, which he loans. Mr. Eley has been married three times, and his first two wives are buried in Austin Cemetery. His present wife was Mrs. Jemima Blackford, formerly Jemima Dennis. He is the father of ten children, seven of whom are now living. He is a member of the Church of Christ (Disciples). Mrs. Eley formerly was a member of the Baptist Church, but at this time neither have any sympathy with human legislation in religion. They believe that the teaching of Christ, and his apostles, is sufficient to govern the conduct of all true Christians.

W. F. Grenzow was born in Prussia, Germany, June 14, 1849. He is a son of William and Augusta (Wolf) Grenzow. When seventeen years old he left his native land and came with his parents to America, and remained with them until of age. March 23, 1877, he came to Green county and settled on section 12, where he had purchased forty acres of land. Since that time he has bought eighty acres more so that he now owns 120. He was married March 15, 1877, to Augusta Mazke, by whom he had four children—Minnie A., John E., Samuel W. and Joseph Henry. They are members of the German Evangelical Church. Mr. Grenzow is a man of energy, and has been a successful farmer. He fully understands both the German and English language, and teaches the same to his children. His farm is a desirable one, well located and abundantly watered.

John Myers was born in the town of Spring Grove, Green Co., Wis., March 22, 1839, and is a son of Samuel and Sarah (Cline) Myers. Samuel Myers removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1835, and settled on what is now called the "Barker farm," where he owned 600 or 700 acres. He afterwards sold this place and removed to Green Co., Wis., and in company with his father-in-law built a saw mill, which was the first in the county, and for a time, did the sawing for the whole county. He lived in a log house with no floor but the ground. He continued to run the mill for a number of years, and then built a carding mill at Oakley, which he operated two or three years. He owned a farm on section 19, of Spring Grove, which he improved and removed to, living there until his death, which occurred May 2, 1863. He is buried in Union Church Cemetery, in Spring Grove. Mrs. Myers is now living in Monroe. Mr. Myers Sr., was born in Bucks Co., Penn., and lived there until eighteen months old, then went with his parents to Ohio and remained there some time, then removed to Indiana, and thence to Stephenson Co., Ill., where he was married in 1831. He was a cooper by trade, also a farmer. He was a large powerful man, and very active and energetic. He was the owner of the first grain thresher and separator, in the county, and the second reaper. He also owned the first reel reaper. Mr. and Mrs. Myers were the parents of ten children. John Myers, the subject of this sketch, was married March 19, 1863, to Fanny H. Bussey, a native of Green county. They have four children—Laura J., Elmer W., John D. and Emily E. Mr. Myers, on the death of his father, removed to another farm in the town of Jefferson, and in 1866, bought eighty-one acres on section 25. He was in the machine business in Brodhead in 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1879. He has also taught school a number of terms. He now owns 245 ½ acres of land, with substantial and elegant improvements, having a barn which cost over $3,000, and has, altogether, one of the most desirable places in the county.

Hermann G. Fritz, a prosperous young farmer of the town of Jefferson, is the son of David and Anna G. (Beckman) Fritz, born Aug. 22, 1857. When seven years old, he came to Green county, and afterwards bought the place known as the "Crayton farms" on which he lived until twenty-four years old. He then removed to Jefferson, where he now lives, upon section 30, also owns sixty-six acres in the town of Clarno, on section 25. He makes a specialty of stock raising. His wife was formerly Louisa Brunner, daughter of John and Mary (Bure) Brunner, of the town of Jefferson.

John Chambers, a native of England, was born in Leicestershire, in 1824, and is a son of William and Elizabeth Chambers, both of whom are dead, and buried in England. Mr. Chambers came to America in 1852, and first lived in Davenport, Iowa. Afterwards he came to Green county and lived the first season with Henry Hamberry, subsequently he worked for John Chadwick one year for $15 per month. He then made arrangements for forty acres of school land on section 16, and one year later took another forty, costing $100. Upon the latter forty he now lives and owns in all 390 acres, all in a body, excepting his timber land, which is detached. He was married in his native land to Fanny Wood, also a native of England, May 24, 1849. Two children were born to them—William and Elizabeth A., now the wife of Avan South, living in Jefferson. Mr. and Mrs. Chambers were reared in the faith of the Church of England. He adheres to the republican party, always voting with that organization.

Seth Austin has lived upon section 5, of the town of Jefferson, since 1851. He was born May 17, 1817, in Edgar Co., Ill. His father, Elijah Austin, was the first settler of that county. Mr. Austin, of this sketch, on coming to Wisconsin, worked for two years in the mines in Green and Grant counties. He purchased 400 acres of land in Green county, all of which he has since sold, including a fine farm on section 5. He was married March 13, 1842, to Elizabeth Wyatt, a native of this county. She died June 29, 1880, and is buried in Oak Hall Cemetery. Twelve children were born to them, of whom five are living—William J., who lives in Minnesota; Orrin S., living at home; Marion, in Minnesota; Elizabeth J. and Anna. Mr. Austin was again married in April, 1883, to Eliza Wyatt. He is a member of the

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

M. E. Church, has served as justice of the peace and belongs to the republican party. Three of Mr. Austin's sons were killed while in the service, during the late war.

H. K. White is a native of Maine, born in Livermore, Oxford county, May 24, 1841, and is a son of G. W. and Mary A. (Cram) White, also natives of Maine. He was brought up in the rough, hilly country of northern Maine, contrasting greatly with the beautiful farm which is now his home. It is located on section 15, in the town of Jefferson, and consists of 140 acres of prairie and ten acres of timberland. Before coming to Wisconsin, Mr. White was engaged in farming and lumbering upon the Kennebec river, in his native State. He was married there to Mary E. Marshall, a native of Somerset county, and daughter of William S. Marshall. Her parents died when she was quite young. Mr. and Mrs. White have three children—Cora L., John W. and William H. Mr. White is an industrious and enterprising farmer, and consequently prosperous. He is a republican, a member of the Masonic order, and one of the substantial citizens of the county.

CHAPTER XXXVI:

TOWN OF JORDAN.

Congressional township 2 north, range 6 east, comprises what is organized as the civil town of Jordan. On the north, it adjoins the town of Adams, on the east, Monroe; on the south, Cadiz; and on the west, the county of Lafayette. The surface of this town, as well as its soil, is varied; and the scenery is diversified by interspersed prairie and timber land, sufficient to make it picturesque, and, in certain localities, romantic. There is an inclination, visible in the surface, toward being bluffy, yet in but very few places are the hills so abrupt as to be detrimental to the cultivation of the land. The soil is generally a dark, rich loam, yet this is not uniform, as there are many localities in the town where it is quite light, and mixed with stone. There are some fine farms in Jordan, and there are a number of substantial and comfortable farm buildings.

The principal farm products grown in the town of Jordan during the year 1882, were as follows: 3,737 bushels of wheat; 49,320 bushels of corn; 35,453 bushels of oats; 291 bushels of barley; 5,212 bushels of rye; 6,723 bushels of potatoes; 200 bushels of root crops; 952 bushels of apples; 77 bushels of clover seed; 25 bushels of timothy seed; 2,198 tons of hay; 53,100 pounds of butter; and 46,700 pounds of cheese.

The principal farm products growing in the town, at the time of making the assessment, in 1883, were as follows: 392 acres wheat; 2,090 acres corn; 1,455 ½ acres oats; 3 acres barley; 392 ½ acres rye; 100 ½ acres potatoes; 30 ¾ acres apple orchard; 1,409 bearing apple trees; 1,982 acres grasses; 5,850 acres growing timber,

The live stock of the town was assessed as follows: 1,008 much cows, valued at $20,310; 481 horses, average value $38.55, total $26,660; 2,003 cattle, average value $16, total $32,049; 19 mules, average value $50.73, total $964; 2,000 sheep, average value $1.93, total, $3,872; 1,591 swine, average value $4.47, total $7,122.

There are 23,034 acres of farming land in the town; average value per acre $7.57, total value of real estate $174,547. Total value of real and personal property $263,035. The population of the town, in 1875, was 1,027; in 1880, 1,094.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement, within the limits now comprising the town of Jordan, was made by William Brazel. He came from the southern part of Illinois, in 1837, and first settled in the town of Adams. Later, he settled on section 4, in the town of Jordan, and erected the first house in the town. in 1846 he sold his farm to John Scott, from Ohio, at $6 per acre, and moved to the town of Adams, where he died a few years later.

Within the next few years, the arrivals were: Robert Brazel, who located on section 5; Joshua Chilton, from Illinois, who located on section 9; John Trotter, Curtis Hard and Henry Crary, who came from Stephenson Co., Ill. The latter died here. Hard settled in Jockey Hollow; he afterward took to roaming; traveled to Iowa and California, and was in the latter State when last heard from. John Trotter came to Green county in 1839, and settled on the northwest quarter of section 8, in the town of Jordan. He was born in Kentucky in 1801, being reared on a farm. When he left home he went on the river as oarsman. He became very sick and had to quit work. He afterwards removed to Springfield, Sangamon Co., Ill.; thence to Stephenson county, where he remained between two and three years, thence to Apple River station, Wis., where he worked in the lead mines; thence to Wiota, Wis., and followed mining there. He then came to Green county and settled as stated above. His health began to fail, and he went to live with a brother in Stephenson Co., Ill., so as to be near a physician. He only lived about one year, when he died, and was buried in the forest near his brother's house. He was married to Isabelle Brazel, a native of Tennessee. The result of this union was four children—James H., Mary A., William and John. James and John live in Bonhomme Co., Dak. Mary A. married David Bell, and lives in this county. William lives in this county. After the death of her husband Mrs. Trotter gathered her children together and returned to Green county. She was poor in this world's goods, but kept her family together by knitting until they were big enough to work. She was an invalid for twenty years before her death, being just able to walk since the death of her husband. She lived on what is now known as the Daniel Clark place. She died July 21, 1869, and is buried in Jordan Center cemetery.

William Trotter, son of John and Isabelle (Brazel) Trotter, was born at Apple River station, Polk Co., Wis., Oct. 5, 1827. He lived at home until the death of his mother, which occurred July 21, 1869. He bought 190 acres of land on section 17, and has since purchased ninety-five acres on section 21. He is engaged in farming and stock raising. On the 24th of November, 1862, he was united in marriage with Calista E. Sawin, daughter of Horace and Elvira (Burnett) Sawin, of this county. The result of this union was eight children, six of whom are living—Alice B., Angie E., Ada M., Della A., William E. and Alta E. Mr. Trotter preaches to some little extent, having been engaged in the work for ten years. He is a staunch and earnest temperance worker, and a man whose advice is well worth listening to.

Chester Stephens, a pioneer of 1839, was born in Missouri, near Jackson, Sept. 25, 1842. He is a son of John and Betsy (Jacobs) Stephens, both of whom are dead and buried in Argyle. Lafayette county. From Missouri the Stephens family moved direct to this county in 1839, and took a claim on section 6, town of Jordan, of 180 acres. Chester now owns 260 acres. He was married Nov. 6, 1870, to Rosa Hobbs. They have four children—John R., Lettie M., Marble C. and Clay I. Mr. Stephens politically is a republican, and a good citizen.

Dr. Edward Church and sons came from Illinois, in 1840, and erected a saw mill on section 12, on Skinner creek. They finally went to Iowa, Lars Larson Bothan and Iver Iverson, the first Norwegians to settle in the town, came in 1842 and located on section 33, where Bothan still lives; Iverson still lives in the town. They were soon followed by Axiel Iverson Stortottle, Mr. Tollefson and other Norwegians.

John and George Shelton came from Virginia as early as 1836, and engaged in mining at Wiota. In 1842 they settled on section 4. John was killed in Missouri during the war, having accumulated a fortune and become a sympathizer with "the lost cause." George went back to Virginia and has been lost trace of.

John Soper came with his family, in 1844, and bought the claim of George Shelton, on section 4. He died Oct. 22, 1872, and his remains were buried in the Jordan Centre cemetery. He was born in the town of Brandon, Vt., Jan 26, 1798. He was a son of Prince and Elizabeth (Allen) Soper, the latter a grandniece of Ethan Allen. Prince Soper was a shoemaker by trade, and lived in Vermont until 1843, when he removed to Milwaukee, Wis., locating on a farm, three miles south of the city. He then removed to Sugar river. Remaining there but a short time, he came to the town of Jordan and settled on section 4, now owned by his son. He was married in Vermont to Eleanor Arnold, a native of Brandon, Vt. She was born April 9, 1803. She now lives on section 4, this town, with her son, William. Ten children were born to them—Warren S., deceased; Martha J., living in West Union, Iowa; William B. A., Samuel S., in the town of Wiota; Prince Edward, deceased; George W., deceased; Foster R., killed in the battle of Fairfax Court House, during the late war; Edward L., Eimice A., and John Q. A., living near his mother. He was born Dec. 28, 1844. He enlisted on the 1st of January, 1862, in company K., 18th Wisconsin Infantry. He participated in the battle of Shiloh, and many skirmishes. He was discharged in December, 1862, and again enlisted in December, 1863, in company K., 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in which he was corporal. He was discharged in March, 1865. Mr. Soper was married to Adeline Williams, a native of Dane Co., Wis., and a daughter of William and Esther (Warren) Williams. Three children blessed this union—William, Viva and Cecil. He owns a good farm on section 4.

Edward L. Soper was born in the State of Vermont, Sept. 7, 1840. He is a son of John and Eleanor (Arnold) Soper, one of the oldest residents of Jordan. He was only four years old when he left his native place and with his parents emigrated to Milwaukee, where they remained one year, then came direct to this county, settling on section 4, town of Jordan, where Edward has since remained. His early life was spent on a farm among the timber and he was brought up to hard labor. He has cleared up a farm on section 4. He first bought the west half of the northeast quarter, to which he has since added until he now has a fine farm. He was married Jan. 1, 1867, to Julia Hanson, a native of Norway. Eight children have been born to them—George A., Mary E., Clarence E., Amison R., Almond A., Lena L., Juliet and Lodasca. Mrs. Soper is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Soper served in the army, enlisting Jan. 5, 1864, in company K, 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry; was mustered in at Janesville and served until June, 1865, when he was mustered out at Madison. Politically he adheres to the principles of the republican party.

During the same summer came Franklin Osgood, Noah Ellis, Nehemiah Ellis, Jason Morton, Levi Spaulding, Jabez Smith, Arfaxed Crain, Jonn McIntyre, Thomas White and a number of others. After this the settlement progressed rapidly, and the best government land soon was occupied by actual settlers.

Lewis P. Osgood, a settler of 1847, is a native of New York, born Nov. 4, 1816, in Colchester, Delaware county. his father's ancestry were of English-Irish extraction, and his mother was of Welch descent. In the year 1822 the family emigrated to Ontario Co., N. Y., and again, in 1828, to the State of Pennsylvania, settling in Warren county, where Mr. Osgood's father was in the lumber business. There they remained until 1832, then emigrated to Stephenson Co., Ill., where the father died. The rest of the family continued in that county until August, 1846, when they came to this county and located on section 14, town of Jordan, where Mr. Osgood now owns 100 acres of good land. He was married Jan. 1, 1841, to Delilah Loomis, who died June 26, 1855. By this marriage seven children were born—Mary C., (deceased); Adeline E., now the wife of James Beade; Erepta M., the wife Hamilton Deal; John G., deceased; Elnora E., Tusmania G., the wife of Alexander Adair, living at Wayne; and Lydia A., of Chicago, the wife of George Tanberg. Mr. Osgood's second wife was Mary M. Smith, who died March 25, 1866. He was again married July 8, 1866, to Mrs. Lydia Bauffman. She had a family of seven children—Hannah L., Mahala F., Mathias O., Minerva A., William H., Mary E. and Lydia T. Mr. Osgood was one of the earliest settlers of the town of Jordan, and has always taken an active part in its affairs, having been called upon to fill several different offices; among them, chairman of the board, collector, treasurer, constable etc. He is a practical wagon-maker, and has worked at that trade since coming here. He is a good mechanic, and an industrious, honest citizen.

James Henderson, a native of Ohio, came from Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1845, and settled on section 23. He lived there for eight years, then removed to Iowa, where he died.

William Van Horn, a native of New Jersey, also came from Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1845, and located on section 22. He lived on that place some years, then went to Cadiz, where he died. Two of his children still live in the county.

John Blain came from Ohio, in 1846, and settled on Rust branch, where he improved a farm and lived for several years. He is still a resident of the county.

Joseph Blain, a brother of John, came to Green county from Ohio, in the fall of 1846, and entered 160 acres on section 26, where he has since resided. He was born in Luzerne Co., Penn., July 14, 1822. His parents, Joseph and Mary A. (Shaffer) Blain, are both dead, and buried in Muskingum Co., Ohio. Mr. Blain was married in Ohio to Dorcas McCammant, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Coe) McCammant. Their marriage occurred Sept. 3, 1846. They have five children—Mary A., wife of Mordecai Kelly; Margaret, wife of Ehud Parriott, of Clarno; Charles, married to Lydia Bechtolt, and living on section 26, in the town of Jordan; James, married to Jessie Lake, of Monroe, also living on section 26, of Jordan, and Elam. Mr. Blain's farm contains 356 acres, and he is engaged in stock raising. Politically he is a democrat.

Charles Wagner, a native of Pennsylvania, came in 1848 and settled on section 24, where he still lives.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

The first ground broken in the town was that done by William Brazel in 1836, on section 4. He sowed the first wheat in 1837, and planted the first corn in 1836.

The first religious services in the town were held in the school house on section 5, by a Baptist clergyman. In 1848 services were held at the school house in district No. 5, by Elder White, a Christian minister.

The first school house in the town was erected in 1845. The neighbors made a "bee" and drew the logs together and erected the building. It was covered with shakes. No nails were used, the shakes being kept in place by weight poles. This house was in use four or five years.

The first term of school was taught by James Tennon.

The first marriage in the town was that of Addison Wells to Paulena Jacobs. The ceremony was performed in 1841 by Warren Osgood, a justice of the peace. The bride died soon after.

Addison P. Wells is a native of George Co., Ohio, born Dec. 9, 1819. He remained in his native county until thirteen years old, then removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., there remaining, and working for his parents until twenty-three years old. He then came to this county and bought forty acres on section 35, from the government, where he built a small log house. He subsequently pre-empted the northwest quarter of section 35. He bought out a squatter by the name of Fowler Jacobs. In 1841 he built a brick house, in which he lived until 1850, when he went to California and engaged in mining. He was gone eighteen months, since which time he has lived in this county, excepting a visit to California in 1865. He now owns a farm of 220 acres. He has been three times married, first to Paulena Jacobs, in May, 1841; she died the following year. His second wife was Louisa Rickett, who bore him three children—Laura L., Delos H. and Minerva. His second wife died in 1865. His third wife was Sarah E. Divan, from Ohio. They have seven children—Ida M., Dow A., Iva M., Ina M., John E., Ira M. and Ila M.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

VARIOUS MATTERS.

The Blackford saw and grist mill, on section 12, was established in 1843—4 by Dr. Church, who first erected a saw mill, and afterwards sold to his son, John Church. About 1860 machinery was put in for grinding grist, and the saw mill was no longer used. Ghormley & McCormack bought the property, and sold to Lewis, W. P. Morton and Solomon Jones in about 1852. They ran it until 1855, when it was purchased by Taylor Wickersham. In 1860 he sold to Morton & Catherman, but it reverted to Mr. Wickersham, and he ran it two years longer, then (1864) sold to Samuel Dennis. About 1868 the property was purchased by Samuel Blackford and Erad White. They continued in partnership until 1881, when Mr. Blackford purchased his partner's interest, and has since conducted the business alone. In 1867 Dennis & Blackford erected and put in operation a saw mill in connection with the grist mill, which is still running, having changed hands with the grist mill.

Samuel Blackford, son of William and Rachel (John) Blackford, is a native of Fayette Co., Penn., born Oct. 10, 1837. His father was a potter by trade. In 1845 he came to Green county, and located in the town of Jefferson, where he owned a small farm. In 1860 he and his son, Samuel, built a patent lime kiln, and engaged in lime burning until 1867, when Samuel sold out, and the father continued the business until the time of his death, which occurred in 1871. He is buried at Juda. In 1867 Samuel bought his present farm on section 12, town of Jordan. He has seventy-five acres, and is engaged in the mill and dairy business. He was married on the 21st of October, 1860, to Sarah A. Dennis, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Bloom) Dennis. This union has been blessed with four children—Ted E., Belle, George G. and Musa C. Mrs. Blackford's father lives in Green county. Her mother is buried in Richland cemetery, Green county. Mr. Blackford has been chairman of the board of the town of Jordan eight terms. Politically he is a democrat.

The grist mill on section 26, on Skinner's creek, originated in the erection of a small mill on the same site, in 1840, by John Baughman. Mr. Baughman ran it for a number of years, then sold to Philip Fawver. After running it a few years Mr. Fawver left, and the mill ceased to run. In 1868 John Abelman erected a new mill on the same site, and a few years later sold to Hiram Rust, the present proprietor. The creek furnishes a good power at this point, and the two run of buhrs with which the mill is equipped give it a capacity for grinding from 100 to 150 bushels of grain per day.

The cheese factory on section 5, on the farm of Henry Poff, is controlled and owned by what is known as the Nulty, Soper, Poff & Lewis Cheese Company. The factory was established in the spring of 1883, buildings 36x18 feet, and 24x16 feet being erected. It is run by Jacob Carlan, and makes Swiss cheese. There are 140 cows on the milk list.

Peter Nulty was born in Ireland, in 1840. He is a son of Richard and Bridget (Hyland) Nulty, who now live in the town of Monroe. Mr. Nulty came from Ireland and settled in the State of Kentucky, where he remained a few years, then came to this county and located in the town of Monroe. The property there was disposed of and a removal made to the town of Jordan. In 1870 Mr. Nulty bought the place he now occupies on section 5, where he owns 156 1/2 acres of good land, and is one of the best farmers in the town, having neat and tidy buildings. He was married to Catharine Kemp, and by this union there are six children—Mary, Richard, Johanna, Bridget, Catherine and Ellen. They are members of the Catholic Church, and Mr. Nulty is chairman of the town board of supervisors. His main business is stock raising and the manufacture of cheese.

Levi H. Poff is a native of Ashland Co., Ohio, born Feb. 4, 1852. He is a son of Jacob and Julia A. (Lawbogh) Poff, a native of Pennsylvania. When Levi was two years old he removed with his parents to this county, settling in the town of Adams, where he lived until 1877, when he removed to section 5, town of Jordan, where he now owns 125 acres of land, and is an enterprising and useful citizen. He was married Feb. 5, 1873, to Irene Adair, daughter of John and Martha (Simpkins) Adair. By this union there are eight children—Anna, born Aug. 25, 1874; Jacob, born Nov. 24, 1875; John, born June 25, 1877; Nellie A., born Sept. 7, 1878; Charles G., born July 5, 1880; Katie, born July 20, 1881, and a pair of twins, Dora Ellen and Cora Estella, born Dec. 25, 1883. Mr. Poff is engaged in the stock and dairy business, and owns a share in a cheese factory on his farm.

James Lewis is a native of North Ireland, born near Londonderry, Aug. 20, 1831. He is a son of William and Elizabeth (Beatty) Lewis, both of whom are dead, and buried in Wales. In 1848 James emigrated to America and stopped two years in the city of Philadelphia, Penn. Being a morocco dresser, he easily secured a position. From there he removed to Chester county, of the same State. He was married in Philadelphia to Ann Hood, May 3, 1852. He remained in Chester county till 1859, when he came to this county, settling near Jordan Center, where he lived until 1866, when he moved to section 9. He now owns 360 acres of land. They have had eight children—Andrew, Elizabeth, who was married to Ernest Rankins, and died in California, where she was buried; Margaret, deceased, and buried at Argyle, Lafayette county. She was the wife of William Mitchell. John J., Marshall B., George B., Priscilla E. and Mary A. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Lewis has been a school officer most of the time since coming to this town. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and a good substantial citizen.

The cheese factory on section 16, owned by Voegley Bros., was built in 1876. It uses the milk of from ninety to 100 cows, manufacturing Swiss cheese.

Jacob Voegley came to the town of Jordan in 1874, and located on section 16, where with his brother he purchased 286 acres of land. He is a native of Canton Glarus, Switzerland, born Oct. 3, 1848. He came to America in 1869, stopping in New Glarus, Green county. He remained there eighteen months, working on a farm. He then went to the pineries in northern Wisconsin, remaining there three years, after which he returned to New Glarus, where he staid one year, then removed to his present home in the town of Jordan. He was married on the 11th of May, 1873, to Barbary Kundert, a native of Switzerland. They have three children—Elizabeth, Catharine and Balthar. Mr. Voegley's brother, John, his associate on the farm, was born Jan. 1, 1852, and came to America in 1872. He stopped in Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., where he worked in a vinegar factory six months. He then worked on the railroad for about one year; then took position on an engine as fireman; which he followed for eight months. He came to the place he now lives and with his brother is joint owner of the farm. The brothers also run a cheese factory. They are members of the Lutheran Church. Politically they are republicans.

The cheese factory on section 24, was established by Daniel Bechtolt, in 1883. It occupies a building 18x50 feet in size. The milk of several hundred cows is used in the manufacture of Limburger cheese.

Daniel B. Bechtolt was born in Licking Co., Ohio, Feb. 22, 1837. His parents, Mathias and Christena (Epler) Bechtolt, are both dead, and buried in Cadiz and Kelly cemetery. Daniel B., when fourteen years old, left Ohio and settled on section 25, town of Jordan, this county, where his father resided on forty acres entered from the government, he lived at home until 1860. He was married March 12, 1857, to Matilda Wagner, a daughter of Charles and Lydia Wagner. They have six children—Albert B., Lydia C., now married to Charles Blain; Samuel D., George, Erwin and Ida M. Mr. and Mrs. Bechtolt were members of the United Brethren Church. His wife died in June, 1880, of heart disease, and was buried in Kelly cemetery, town of Cadiz. She was a sincere Christian and a devoted mother.

The cheese factory on section 3 was built by Andrew Meythaler, Jacob and Yoderick Kubli, Nicholas Dittman and Joseph Sharer, and is located on Mr. Meythaler's farm.

Andrew Meythaler is a native of Germany, born in Baden, Oct. 26, 1836. He is a son of Christ and Eva (Bleiler) Meythaler, both of whom are dead, and buried on section 35, of the town of Adams. In 1855 Mr. Meythaler went to Pennsylvania, Blair county, where he lived two years, thence came to this county, settling on section 35, town of Adams, where he lived until 1863, then removed to section 34, thence in 1876 to section 3, town of Jordan, where he now resides, owning 197 acres of land. He also still owns 120 acres in Adams. He was married to Mary Hook, a native of Germany. They have seven children living—William G., Edward, Andrew, George J., Annie E., Charles T. and Frederick. Mr. and Mrs. Meythaler are members of the Evangelical Church. He is a good farmer and excellent citizen.

Jacob Kubli is a native of canton Glarus, Switzerland, born Feb. 23, 1847. He is a son of Peter and Barbary (Martis) Kubli, both of whom are dead, and buried in his native country. When twenty-four years old, Jacob emigrated to America. His brother having come to New Glarus, this county, he concluded to settle there, and upon his arrival, went to his brother's house, living there and with a brother-in-law for one year. He then went to the village of Monroe, and remained two years, working at the trade of shoemaking, which he had learned in the old country, but by accident losing his fingers by a circular saw, he concluded to remove to a farm.

He first went to Jordan Center and remained three years. He then sold out his little property and bought on section 3 eighty-four acres in April, 1870, where he has since continued to live. He was married while in Monroe, to Elizabeth Hefty, a native of Switzerland, March 24, 1870, where her parents now reside. They have seven children—Anna E., Barbaretta, Margaret, Catharine, John P., Samuel and Sophia.

The cheese factory on section 13, was erected in 1882, at a cost of $1,200, by Joshua Klasey & Co., the present proprietors. The company is known as the Blackford Mill Cheese Company, and is composed of Joshua Klasey, George Hartwig, Samuel Blackford and David Knoble.

John Klasey established a blacksmith shop a number of years ago on section 13. He sold the shop to Abraham Stauffacher, who moved it to Jordan Center, where he still carries on the business.

Abraham Stauffacher, a native of canton Glarus, Switzerland, was born April 21, 1843. He is a son of Jacob and Catharine Stauffacher, both of whom are dead and buried in his native country. Abraham was the tenth child and the only one of the family who came to America. He was well educated in Switzerland, attending school until twelve years old. He then hired out on a farm. His father was a farmer, and at the same time mail carrier and postmaster. Abraham learned the trade of locksmith, serving an apprenticeship of seven years, and then learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed in Switzerland, and for a time after coming to this county, first working for Constantine Haegla six months, and then went into partnership with G. Schindler two years and a half. He then went to Iowa with the intention of settling there, bought a shop and paid some money down, but failing to sell his property in New Glarus, he did not go, but built a shop and engaged in work for four years, then sold out to Michael Smith and went to Monroe, where he found employment with the Monroe Manufacturing company one year, then about 1874, he removed to the town of Jordan and bought a shop from J. Klasey, where he remained two years, then purchased thirteen acres of land on section 10, to which he removed his shop, and has since kept the same. He now owns 169 acres on that section. He was married in his native country to Elsbeth Baebler, Feb 13, 1866, and this union was blessed with ten children—Jacob, Albert H., John, Ernst A., Katharina, Edward, Rosa, Henry, David W. and Elsbeth. Mr. and Mrs. Stauffacher are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. He is politically a republican.

RELIGIOUS AND OTHER SOCIETIES.

The United Brethren denomination organized a class at what is known as Jefferson school house, in 1860. Rev. Crowder presided. They held services there for seven or eight years, when it was removed to the Jordan school house. The organization was discontinued in 1882. The first members were as follows:

William Ault, Albert Smith and wife, Mathias Bechtolt and wife, William Witham. Mrs. Joselyn, Lydia Baughman, now Lydia Osgood, Frank Miller and wife, Daniel Bechtolt and wife, Levi Wagner, Susan Wagner, Nellie Baughman, Christian Ault, Ella Wells, William Ableman and wife, Joseph Ableman and wife, William Campbell and wife, Mary Blain, Francis Ward, Malvina, Elnora and Geraldine Osgood, Francis Wagner, T. W. Ault and a number of others.

The Norwegian Lutheran church, in the southern portion of section 29, was erected in 1859. Its cost was $1,000, the amount being raised by subscription and donation of work by members. Formerly the congregation worshipped at Wiota, in Lafayette county. The first preacher was Rev. Clausen. At present they have no regular minister. When the class was organized it consisted of twenty-one families; it now numbers thirty-two. There is a cemetery in connection with this Church, which is also located on section 29. It was laid out in 1859, the land (one acre) being donated by Knudt Thorstan. Additions have been made since that time. The first burial here was of the remains of John Johnson, who died in 1860.

Banner Lodge, No. 113, Good Templars, was organized on the 5th of December, 1882. The charter members were as follows: Rev. Ira Lebaron, Mr. and Mrs. Sawin, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Chester, Newton and Matilda E. Deetz, Walter, John, and Laura Deetz, Mrs. John Squires, Richard, Elmer, Emma, Marshall and Ella Lewis, William Trotter, Richard Rowley, Ezra and Thomas Treister. The first officers were as follows: Jacob Deetz, W. C.; Mrs. Squires, M. V.; Mr. Squires, P. U.; Newton Sawin, W. M.; Marshall Lewis, W. S.; Walter Deetz, F. S.; Mrs. Deetz, T.; Matilda Sawin, I. The civil town of Jordan was organized in April, 1849. The first town meetings were held in the Ostrander school house.

Among the officers elected at the first town meeting, in April, 1849, were: Warren Osgood, chairman; T. N. Ellis, clerk, and John Blain, chairman. Among others who have been prominent in town affairs are the following: Warren Osgood, Thomas White, William Munson, Levi Spaulding, James Y. Cleveland, Taylor Wickersham, H. C. Cleveland, Iver Iverson, William Biggs, J. K. Bloom, N. T. Hanson, George R. King, Samuel Blackford, T. N. Ellis, M. Satterlee, Isaac Trembley, H. G. Cleveland, M. Devareaux, D. H. Morgan, James M. Cook, W. H. Allen, Jacob Deetz and Nelson Rust.

The present town officers are as follows: Supervisors, Peter Nulty, chairman, A. P. Wells and Joseph Staley; assessor, Rolan Olsen; clerk, John Lewis; treasurer, Joshua Klasey.

VILLAGE OF JORDAN CENTER.

This is the name of a small village located on section 10. The land here was laid into lots and blocks in 1855 by Levi Spaulding, Manless and Oria Satterlee, Levi Wiggins and Nehemiah Ellis. A store was started by Amos Holmes and a blacksmith shop by A. J. Smith. Holmes carried a stock of general merchandise and was in business about two years when he sold to Manless Satterlee, who, after about two year's experience, closed out. After this Jordan Center was without a store until 1882, when Hibbard Rankins erected a building and put in a stock of goods. in the spring of 1883 he sold to Jacob Deetz, the present proprietor.

Jacob Deetz was born in Columbia Co., Penn., June 4, 1831; and is a son of Jacob and Susanna Deetz, natives of Northampton county. From Pennsylvania the family removed to Wayne, Lafayette county. Jacob Deetz, Jr., came one year later. The father is now buried in Wayne and the mother in Cadiz, this county. In 1860 Jacob returned to Pennsylvania and remained one and one-half years. He has taught school in Pennsylvania and in this county, both before and after marriage. He was married October 13, 1861, to Fanny B. Meachim, a daughter of Hosea and Mary (Nichols) Meachim. Her father lives in Cadiz, where her mother was buried. They have seven children—Walter W., John A., Laura L., Mollie I., Charles H., Nettie L. and Jacob S. Mr. Deetz enlisted Aug. 30, 1864, in battery D, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery and served ten months. He was mustered in at Janesville and out at New Orleans. He then returned home to Jordan Center, and bought eighty acres of land on section 8 in 1865, where he lived until 1883, then he removed to Jordan Center and engaged in running a small store. He has held the office of town clerk eight years, and assessed the town a number of times. He was justice of the peace six years, and is the present postmaster of Jordan Center.

A. J. Smith, the blacksmith, remained here about three years, when he sold to the McConnell Bros., who closed a short time later.

Abram Stauffacher, the present blacksmith, has been here since 1881. He does general repair work but no shoeing.

Jordan Center Cemetery, on section 9, was laid out in 1846, the land being donated by Elisha Stevens. A half acre has since been added by donation from James Lewis. The first burial here was of the remains of a child of Manless Satterlee.

The German M. E. Church—Christ's Church, Evangelical Association of North America—was erected in 1876, at a cost of $700. The first officers of the Church were: Andrew Meythaler, president; Jacob Kubli and August Wemen, board; Henry Zimmerman, clerk. The first members were: John D. Fritsch, August Wemen, Jacob Kubli, Jacob Zimmerman, August Schlim, August Shultz. Yoderick Kubli, Andrew Meythaler, August Kreuger, John Knoble, August Wagner and their families. Henry Uphoff was the first minister, after the church was built, superintending its erection. This Church grew from the organization of a class in 1862, consisting of John D. Fritsch and family, Mrs. Chris. Meythaler and family, Jacob Meythaler and family and John D. Fraiser and family. Services were held at private houses and school houses until the church was built. Among the ministers who have served the class and Church are: Revs Peter Messuger John M. Hammeter, Nicholas Shoup, William Hilster, Chris. Brendell, John M. Hammeter, Leonard Buehler, Henry Uphoff, Peter Hild, C. Green and Chris. Lahr. The latter is the present pastor.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The town of Jordan was settled up by a class of wide-awake, go-a-head people, as follows:

William Ableman, is a native of Albany, N. Y., born May 6, 1800. He is a son of Christian and Regina (Kaner) Ableman. His father was a native of Germany, and one of Burgoyne's soldiers, in the War of the Revolution. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Bunker Hill, and when paroled, would not return to his old home, but remained in the United States. He and his wife have long since been laid to rest, at their old home, near Albany. The subject of our sketch remained in New York until 1835, when he removed to Rock Prairie, Walworth Co., Wis. He followed farming in that place, eleven years, then removed to this county, locating on section 22, in the town of Jordan, where he first bought forty acres of land. He now owns 280 acres. He was married in November, 1820, to Ellen Vanderberg, of New York. This union was blessed with ten children—Gilbert, John, Stephen, Reuben James, Christian, Regina, Rachel, Joseph and Elizabeth. Mrs. Ableman died in 1850, in Johnstown, Wis. Mr. Ableman married the second time, Oct. 25, 1860. His wife is Martha, a daughter of Jonathan Thompson, of New York. They have had three children—Emma L., Ephraim A. and Samuel.

George W. Phillips came to Green county in 1847. He purchased a farm on Sugar river, in the town of Mount Pleasant. He was a native of Brunswick, Medina Co., Ohio, born April 8, 1837. He removed from Ohio to Rock Co., Wis., locating on Jefferson prairie, where he remained one year. He then removed to the town of Mount Pleasant, this county, where he lived until 1847, when he removed to section 9, town of Jordan. He lived there until 1863, when he enlisted in the army. He served until the close of the war. His wife died on the 13th of May, 1861, and lies buried in the cemetery at Jordan Center. He was again married, and removed to his wife's property, in Rock Co., Wis. He died at Clinton Junction. His life was short after coming home from the war, for he only lived three or four weeks. He was a hard working man, and in Ohio, had been a minister of the gospel in the M. E. Church. By his first marriage he had thirteen children, and by his second wife, two children. He sent six sons and five son-in-laws to the war, besides going himself.

Levi D. Phillips, well known in Green county, was born in the State of New York, Dec. 9, 1833. He came to Wisconsin at an early day, with his parents. He remained at home until 1852, when he went to California in search of gold, following mining eighteen years, and then engaging in various other things, for about eleven years. In April, 1863, he enlisted in company M, 1st California Cavalry, serving three years. He was mustered in at Camp Stanford, Stockton, Cal., and out at Fort Sheldon, N. M., and returned to California. He then went into business at Chico. His next move was for Montana, where he remained two years; then he returned to Green county, in July, 1883, having been absent from the county just thirty-two years.

George W. Phillips, living on section 18, town of Jordan, is another son. His early life was spent with his parents. In September, 1861, he was married to Cynthia Clark, daughter of D. W. and Elizabeth Clark. On the 4th of January, 1862, he enlisted in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and was mustered in at Milwaukee. He was in the western division, and participated in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth, and in many skirmishes. He was discharged from the 5th street hospital, just one year from date of enlistment, and returned home. He now draws a pension. His farm contains sixty acres. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have had seven children born to them—Lucius, deceased; Sarah Ada, married to William Powley, resides in Dakota; Walter D., William C., deceased; Sylvia M., Cora B. and Charles W. Mr. Phillips is a republican, politically.

Nehemiah Ellis, a native of Maine, was born near Bangor, Aug. 4, 1804. In 1819, he, with his parents emigrated to Chautauqua Co., N. Y., at which place he married to Rachael Osgood, in 1828. In 1838, he emigrated to Stephenson Co., Ill., where he purchased a farm near Orangeville, where he remained until 1847.

Then on account of ill health he sold out and came to Green Co., Wis., settling near Jordan Centre. He owned a farm on section 3, where he lived till 1875. In that year he removed to Buena Vista Co., Iowa, where he owned a farm. Mr. Ellis took an active part in the organization of the town of Jordan. He was the first town clerk, also was justice of the peace and held other important offices. His reputation for honesty and integrity was unquestionable. There was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ellis eleven children, six of whom are living—Mary E., now Mrs. Kinnison; Eliza A., wife of Samuel Shook, of Buena Vista county; Richard F., of Jordan; Lewis N., Laban B., and Samuel A., of Buena Vista Co., Iowa.

Richard F. Ellis was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., July 12, 1837. He remained with his parents until 1864. August 21 of that year he enlisted in company D, of the 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and served till June 17, 1865. On his return from the army he bought a farm on section 11, which he sold in 1870 and bought his present farm, which contains 180 acres, on sections 13, 14, 23 and 24. His residence is on section 24. He was married Aug. 29, 1864, to Emma Bowden, a native of Knox Co., Ill., but at the time of marriage, a resident of Monroe. They have six children—William O., Flora M., Edward S., Franklin N., Robert L. and Lewis B. Mr. Ellis has held the office of town treasurer three terms, and has been school director for twenty years. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are members of the Church of Christ.

Harney Benson, son of David and Sarah (Lamd) Benson, was born in the town of Warren, Worcester Co., Mass., Feb. 8, 1848. His parents now live in Monroe. When Harney was two years of age his parents came to this county, and located in the town of Decatur, where they lived for eight years. They then removed to the town of Sylvester, remaining there six years; thence to the town of Jefferson. In 1866 they moved to Missouri. Harney traveled through Indian Territory, Arkansas and Texas, and returned to Green county in 1867. He lived on a farm in the town of Jefferson until his father returned in 1868. His father purchased 140 acres on sections 18 and 19, in the town of Jordan. Harney rented land in the town of Sylvester, of Amaziah A. Sutherland, and lived there for seven years, when he removed to the farm on sections 18 and 19, in the town of Jordan, which he had purchased some time before, of his father. He had also added twenty acres to the original farm, making him a comfortable home of 160 acres. He deals to some extent in horses and cattle, buying and selling. He was married Feb. 24, 1874, to Julia A. Sutherland, daughter of George A. and Eliza J. (Brown) Sutherland. This union has been blessed with five children—George A., born Jan. 17, 1875; Guy A., born April 18, 1876; Burt, born Nov. 11, 1877; Fannie May, born July 30, 1879; and Leroy, born Jan. 15, 1883.

Charles Theodore Bayrholder was born in Marburg, Hesse Cassel, Germany, Oct. 14, 1812. He studied philosophy at the University of Marburg, and became doctor and professor of philosophy. From the beginning he was a free thinker and a radical, and took part in free religious associations. After the revolution in France, in 1848, he was a republican and democrat. He was twice elected to the representative body of Hesse Electoral, of which body he was president (speaker) during its last week, and later, one of the five members who were elected during one session that body to hold over to the next session. Afterwards, when Hesse Electoral was overwhelmed by the Bavarian troops, he was criminally impeached, but escaped to Switzerland, and in 1852 to the United States with his family, consisting of his wife and six children. He purchased a farm in the town of Jordan, Green county, from Gortz Wrisberg. His wife died in February of the year 1853. He was married the second time to Charlotte Draz in 1854. She died in 1864, leaving one daughter and one son. For about ten years he did all the work on the farm, then his sons, who by this time were grown, took charge of the farm, and this gave him leisure time for mental work. He wrote articles for liberal, German and English papers. He also wrote a small book entitled, "The Laws of the Universe and of Humanism." He has lately generally lived with his eldest son, Charles Leonard Bayrholder, or his son-in-law, Alexander Riesselbach. During the past year he lived in Nebraska, where he had three married daughters and one son. One of his sons was killed in Wisconsin, being accidentally shot; and another died in Nebraska from apoplexy. During the past fourteen years Mr. Bayrholder has been suffering from chronic dyspepsia, but is yet vigorous mentally.

Charles L. Bayrholder, son of Charles Theodore and Julia Kreuzer Bayrholder, was born in Hesse, Germany, March 25, 1843. When he was eight years of age his parents emigrated to America, locating on section 25, in the town of Jordan, this county, where they purchased 140 acres of land. He lived at home until February, 1865, when he enlisted in company A, 46th Wisconsin regiment, being mustered in at Madison. He did guard duty at Athens, Ala., and was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., in 1865, returning to his home in Wisconsin in the fall of the same year. On the 15th of November, 1869, he was married to Agnes Maehle, a native of Wurttemberg, Germany. They have had five children, four of whom are living—William, Edward, Ida and Theodore. The eldest, a daughter, died in infancy. His mother died in 1853, and is buried on the farm. His father was a fugitive from Hesse, on account of politics. He now makes his home with his children. He was well known in Hesse as one of the revolutionists. Mr. Bayrholder bought his father's farm of 140 acres in 1870 and in 1875 purchased eighty acres joining him on section 25.

Jacob Kundert, Jr., was born in the town of New Glarus, Green Co., Wis., July 5, 1854, and is a son of Jacob and Barbary Kundert, who reside in the town of Monroe. He lived at home until he was married, working with his father on the farm. On the 14th of March, 1878, he was united in marriage with Rosa, daughter of Baltz Hoesly, of New Glarus. He then rented his father's farm, working it for five years. In the spring of 1883 he purchased 200 acres on section 21, and now has a good, comfortable farm. Mr. and Mrs. Kundert have had five children born to them, two of whom are living—Catharine and Edward. The family are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. He is a democrat, politically.

(Hanson) Peterson, of Norway. This union has been blessed with six children—Caroline, married to Lars O. Grove, living in the town of Jordan; Morgan P., married to Nellie Hanson, and living in Dakota; Clara A., Oscar R., William I. and Henry E. Mr. Olson enlisted Oct. 14, 1861, in company E, 15th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving his country until 1864. He was mustered in at Madison, and mustered out at the same place. He was in the battles of Stone River, Perryville, Chickamauga, where he was taken prisoner. He was wounded at the battle of Stone River. He was commissioned 1st lieutenant under Capt. Torkill A. Rossing. He is now engaged in stock raising and is a member of the Lutheran Church. Politically he is a republican, and has served on the side board several terms; assessor three terms, being the present incumbent of that office. He is a member of the G. A. R. He took the town census in 1880.

Henry Zimmerman was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, Nov. 5, 1854, and is a son of Jacob and Rosena Zimmerman, who are now living in the city of Monroe. Before coming to this country his parents worked in factories in their native land, where Henry was educated. His father, upon coming to America in 1866, settled on section 13, of the town of Jordan, this county, where he bought fifty-five acres of land from Andrew Anderson. To that tract he afterward added thirty acres. This place was purchased by Henry, from his father, in the fall of 1883. He was married on the 23d of January, 1879, to Wilhelmine C. Schliem. She died on the 2d of February, 1880, leaving one child—Wilhelmine C., who was born the 5th day of January. Mr. Zimmerman was again married Sept. 29, 1881, to Frederika W. Wagner, an old friend of his former wife, who together, when children, came across the sea, in 1864. Two sons have been born to them—Henry J., born Aug. 28, 1882, and Frederick D., born March 13, 1884. Mr. Zimmerman makes stock raising a specialty.

Henry Wiederkehr was born in Switzerland, Aug. 2, 1835. He left his native country in 1855, and went to Brazil, where he remained ten years, occupied in various avocations. In 1866 he returned to Switzerland, remained three months and then started for the United States, and upon his arrival, settled in New Glarus. Two years subsequently he bought a farm in the town of Monroe. He moved on to this place in 1810. It is located on section 24, and contains ninety-six acres. He was married in February, 1861, in Brazil, to Mary Marty, who was a native of canton Glarus, Switzerland. They have five children—Jacob, born Nov. 15, 1861, in Reodeanelro; Felix, born April 15, 1866, in Switzerland; Rosa, born Aug. 14, 1868; Anna, born Sept. 15, 1870, and Mary, born Feb. 22, 1874. The three latter were born in Green county. They are members of the Lutheran Church.

Seth Welton was born June 4, 1848, in the town of Brunswick, Medina Co., Ohio. His parents are Henry and Caroline (Spencer) Welton. In 1854 his parents removed to Sauk Co., Wis., remaining there until the fall of 1861, when they returned to Ohio. On the 10th of January, 1862, his mother died, and her remains were laid to rest in the town of Granger, Medina county. His father now lives in Nebraska. In 1867, Seth returned to Sank county, remaining there until 1869, when he went to Sun Prairie, Dane county, his sister keeping house for him. In 1871 he removed to Green county. He now lives on section 21, on the farm known as the Widow White's farm. On the 4th of November, 1871, he was married to Rachael, daughter of Thomas and Rachael White. The natural result of this union was four children—Harvey T., Frank, Charley and Lester. Mrs. White's father is buried in Monroe, and her mother in Jordan Centre Cemetery. Mr. Welton has held the office of town treasurer for two years.

Joseph Staley is a native of Ashland Co., Ohio, born Dec. 6, 1849. He is a son of Israel and Lucy A. (Heltman) Staley. He was reared on a farm. When twelve years of age, he went to work by the month, working ten years. He then rented land for three years. In 1874 he removed to Green county, locating in the town of Jordan, and purchasing eighty acres of land on the north half of the southeast quarter of section 31, where he has since resided. Mr. Staley was united in marriage Sept. 17, 1874, with Mary E., daughter of Peter Richard. This union has been blessed with four children—Ella R., James N., Nellie E. and Alta I. Mr. Staley is a member of the town board, and politically is a republican.

Lemuel Taylor, a prominent citizen of the town of Jordan, was born in the State of New York, on the 26th of March, 1823. Shortly after his birth his parents moved to Oakland Co., Mich., where he remained till 1843, when he removed to Janesville. He remained at the latter place until he came to this county. He learned the trade of millwright in Michigan. He was a son of Elisha and Mary (Miner) Taylor, both of whom are buried in Michigan. He owns 365 acres on section 7, besides other lands in the county. He rents his land out, as his attention is kept on his inventions. He is an inventor, having invented many useful articles. He has on hand, at present, a portable automatic gate and portable fence. He commenced life with limited means, and has arose to affluence only by hard labor and economy. He was married Nov. 28, 1859, to Mary E. Stevens, of Franklin Co., Maine. They have seven children—Mary M., married to William Nelson; Lee, Jane, Ellen, Annie, Julia C. and Alice L., who is buried in the cemetery near Jordan Center. Mrs. Taylor is a member of the Free Will Baptist Church. Mr. Taylor is a republican politically.

Calvin Hale, one of the earliest settlers of the town of Clarno, was born in Belvidere, Vt., and was a son of Hewett Hale, a native of the same place. In 1835 Calvin came to this county and settled on section 23, in the town of Clarno, which was his home until his removal to Twin Grove, in the town of Jefferson, where he died June 1, 1849. He was by trade a blacksmith, and in those early days work came to him from long distances. His wife was formerly Sarah Smith, who died in March, 1875.

Alfred Hale was born in 1842, April 19, in the State of Tennessee, but was brought up in Ohio. He was married June 6, 1875, to Ellen L. Wieland, a native of Centre Co., Penn., born Dec. 25, 1847. After marriage he lived in the town of Jefferson four years, then bought a farm on section 5, town of Jordan, where he now owns 180 acres, also sixty acres on section 6. They have two children—Marion E., and Altha M. Mr. Hale is a member of the I.O.O.F., and a republican.

John J. Figi is a native of Switzerland, born in canton Glarus, on the 12th of August, 1845. He is a son of George and Barbary Figi, both of whom are living in Switzerland. In 1867 Mr. Figi commenced work in a calico factory, which he followed for a number of years. Having friends in this county, he came to America, stopping in New Glarus, where he hired out to a farmer. In a few months he went to Freeport, Ill. Remaining there a short time, he returned to New Glarus. In about one and a half years he went to Pennsylvania, located near Pittsburg, where he remained about six months. He then went to Chicago, Ill., but only staid a short time, when he returned to this county and worked in Shueyville for the next two years. He purchased forty acres of land of William Bergen, upon which he lived for six years, then sold out and removed to Humboldt Co., Iowa. In about six months he returned to Green county, and rented a farm,. Concluding to have a home of his own he found a location on section 21, town of Jordan, which he purchased. He now owns 220 acres, and is in a prosperous condition. He is engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married June 4, 1874, to Barbary Kundert, daughter of

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Jacob Kundert, of the town of Monroe. They have had six children born to them—George, Barbary, Sarah, Emma, Jacob, deceased; and Jacob. The family are members of the Evangelical Church. Politically Mr. Figi is a republican.

Henry Hafner was born Dec. 17, 1830, in canton of Solothurn, Switzerland, and is a son of Urs J. and Mary A. (Bader) Hafner. His parents are both buried in Switzerland. In 1858, Mr. Hafner emigrated to America, locating Stark Co., Ohio. He remained there a short time, then went to Indiana, where he lived one year, then returned to Ohio. He purchased land in Tuscarawas county and remained there some time, when he heard of the rich farming land in Wisconsin, and immediately came out, locating in the town of Jordan, this county, and purchasing a farm on section 2. In about three years he sold out and bought on section 13. In 1869, he again sold out and purchased 440 acres on the same section, where he now resides. He owns 306 acres at the present time. He followed cheese making for eight years, then gave it up and engaged in stock raising. In 1857, he was united in marriage with Fredericka Knoble. This union has been blessed with seven children—Mary, Joseph H., John V., Sarah E., George D., Frank and Anna. The four eldest live in Kansas. Mrs. Hafner died Sept. 26, 1870, and her remains are interred in Monroe cemetery. He was again married Dec. 8, 1873, to Mary Bader, a native of Switzerland. Mr. Hafner is a member of the I.O.O.F. and A. O. U. W.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

TOWN OF MONROE.

The town of Monroe embraces congressional township 2 north, range 7 east, of the fourth principal meridian, except that portion which is included within the incorporated limits of the city of Monroe, which lies in the southeastern part of this town. The surface of this town is, in places, quite broken, yet it is all an excellent agricultural and stock raising region. The soil here is variable. That in the east and south is a rich, dark loam, while in the northwest there are some ridges with a clay soil.

The principal farm products grown in this town during the year 1882, were as follows: 1,731 bushels wheat; 79,568 bushels corn; 40,577 bushels oats; 160 bushels barley; 2,242 bushels rye; 5,550 bushels potatoes; 1,510 bushels root crops; 1,780 bushels apples; 44 bushels clover seed; 24 bushels timothy seed; 2,919 tons hay; 46,900 pounds butter; 172,250 pounds cheese.

The acreage of the principal farm products growing in the town, at the time of making the annual assessment, in 1883, was as follows: 146 ½ acres wheat; 2,572 acres corn; 1,450 acres oats; 103 acres rye; 70 ½ acres potatoes; 55 ½ acres apple orchard; 2,865 bearing trees; 1 acre tobacco; 2,723 acres grass; 1,907 acres growing timber.

The live stock in the town, in 1883, was assessed as follows: 600 horses, average value, $70.90, total, $42,542; 2,575 head of cattle, average value $23.62, total $59,829; 8 mules, average value $100, total $800; 844 sheep, average value $2.31, total $1,951; 1,695 swine, average value $6.62, total $11,237; 734 milch cows, valued at $19,108. The land in this town was assessed at $15.50 per acre. The total value of real estate $424,560; total value of real and personal property, $649,835.

The first move toward settlement, in what is now the town of Monroe, was made in 1830. John B. Skinner came here that year, for the purpose of mining. He erected a log cabin and smelting furnace just north of the south line of the northeast quarter of section 10. There were others here at the same time, in his employ. It seems that they all left about the time of the Black Hawk War. In the spring of 1834, Nicholas Cornelius visited the place and found four vacant log cabins, and a log building for a smelting furnace. One of these cabins was on a rise of ground, and there were port holes in every side of it, showing that they were prepared to defend themselves in case of attack. In 1835, operations were again begun here by Nicholas Cornelius, Hiram Rust, Richard Palmer and Joab Enos. Mr. Palmer had a wife and three children. The other men were single, and boarded with him. Mr. Enos left in the fall of 1835, while the others remained until the fall of 1836. They sold their ore to William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, of National fame. He had a smelting furnace at Wiota.

In the spring of 1835 Hiram Rust and Leonard Ross claimed the east half of section 35, built a log cabin and did some breaking. Mr. Rust was there but a short time, when he went to the mines as before stated. Mr. Ross stopped and held the claim until that fall, when he went to Wiota and engaged in smelting ore. He sold the claim to the Wilcox Bros., who entered the land but never settled on it.

In the winter of 1835—6, Hiram Rust entered the southwest quarter of section 27, and also the southwest quarter of section 28. He employed some one to do the first breaking on his land, while he was engaged in mining. He afterward married and settled on section 27, and made his home there until the time of his death. He was a native of Litchfield Co., Conn. He was a man much respected by all, and was one of the first justices of the peace of the town. For a number of years he was superintendent of the county poor.

George Reeder, a native of Ohio, came in 1836, and entered land on section 25. He improved a farm and lived thereon some years, when he returned to Ohio.

N. Cornelius came in 1836, and is a native of Illinois, born in St. Clair county nine miles east of St. Louis. He was reared upon a farm, and remained upon the same until he came to Wisconsin. His parents were Joseph and Mary (Rutter) Cornelius, both of whom are now dead and buried in St. Clair Co., Ill. The former was of Scotch descent and the latter of German parentage. In 1834 he left his native county and went to Galena, thence to this county. During that summer he broke land at Brewster's Ferry. During that time he passed over the land where the city of Monroe now stands, which then was without an inhabitant or anything except the wild prairie. He also visited "Skinner's Diggings" and the following winter worked in the new diggings. The pioneers of that day had many and varied experiences, and accomplished, under the existing circumstances, what would now seem impossibilities. In breaking prairie, it is a necessity to have plow in good condition, and it must be frequently sharpened, and for that purpose, Mr. Cornelius had to go sixteen miles and carry the iron part of an old breaking plow on his back, wading the Pecatonica. Not many people at the present time would break prairie under such circumstances. Not only such inconveniences were the lot of people at that time, but actual danger often threatened them. Indians were, at times, abundant, and liable at any time to take the war path, and spread destruction and desolation among the settlers. On one occasion, Mr. Cornelius was down near the Pecatonica, and saw large numbers of squaws and papooses going down the river. This was not considered an occurrence at all favorable to the settlers, for frequently such a move was made when fighting was contemplated, and this knowledge had a tendency to put the people on their guard. Mr. Cornelius and Mr. Plummer slept, "with one eye open," on the banks with ax and butcher knife under their heads, ready, at a moment's warning, to give up their lives if they must, only after a struggle. They slept in that manner about ten nights, when one night Plummer looking about said, "I hear them coming." Mr. Cornelius was on his feet in a moment, but in the excitement Plummer could not find his pants, which caused him some trouble. The Indians were singing and dancing and it was supposed they were coming, and the two quickly gathered up a couple of quilts and concealed themselves in the brush, where they remained an hour and a half, when, becoming chilled, they took refuge in an old cabin and remained until day-break, then returning to their cabin they found everything all right. In the spring of 1835, Mr. Cornelius came to Green county again and mined at Skinner's Diggings until the fall of 1836, during which time he had taken out considerable mineral. He went to White Oak Springs in the fall of 1836 and thence to Blue river, where he mined until the fall of 1837 with good success. He then came again to Green county and entered 220 acres of land on section 33, township 2 north, of range 7 east, in the present town of Monroe, within a short distance of the place where he now lives. In 1840, having traded off a part of his land, he secured a deed for eighty acres on section 34 which he has owned since that time. During all these years Mr. Cornelius was an unmarried man and continued in the county most of the time, and mined principally until about 1844. He then came to Monroe and built a store, which he rented to Mr. Ludlow to put in a stock of general merchandise. At length concluding it was not best to be alone, on the 16th day of June, 1849, he was married to Phillippi Tresidder. She was a native of Ohio, and of French descent. Her parents were both dead, the father died of cholera in 1832, and the mother died in 1845. They have two children—Alice and Erwin. After marriage they lived on the place they still occupy, in a log cabin, which in time gave way to a good brick house. He now owns 150 acres of land joining the corporate limits of Monroe, valued at $100 per acre, and some city property. Politically, he adheres to the principles of the republican party, and is a temperate man, having never drank a glass of beer or liquor.

In 1836—7—8 there were quite a number of arrivals, among whom were the following: Rev. R. H. DeLap, Asa Brown, D. S. Sutherland, John Walling, Dickson and Hamilton Bailey, Isaac Chamness and T. Bragg.

Isaac Chamness, formerly of Indiana, was born April 5, 1820. He is a son of William and Margaret (Henshaw) Chamness, natives of North Carolina. His father, now ninety-one years old, is living in Randolph county, and his mother is dead and buried in that county. His early life was spent upon a farm in Indiana, where he continued to live until 1843. Oct. 5, 1837, he was married to Mary Willman, a native of Wayne county. They remained in Randolph county until 1843, then came to Green county, arriving on the 3d day of October. He bought eighty acres on section 32, of what is now the town of Monroe, where he lived for thirteen years, then moved to section 33, having bought from Charles Foster the DeLap farm, containing 108 acres. They have had four children—Louise M., now married to Cyrus Dye and living in Monroe; Abigail M., married to Andrew Hawthorn and living in Clarno; William M., now dead and buried in Hawthorn cemetery; and Mary E., married to Stephen Potter, and living in Chippewa Falls, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Chamness are members of the M. E. Church. Upon their arrival in the county they had two children and $3. They made a start under many difficulties, but have been successful.

T. J. Bragg is a native of this county, born in Monroe June 13, 1846. His father, T. J. Bragg, Sr., is a Virginian, and his mother, Emily J. (Nobles) Bragg, is a native of Kentucky. Mr. Bragg, of this sketch, in 1875, took a prospecting tour through Missouri, Nebraska and Dakota, and returned, convinced that Green county was not an undesirable dwelling place, and has since remained here. He owns a farm of 150 acres, located on section 12, of the town of Monroe, and makes stock raising a specialty. He was married Aug. 29, 1867, to Martha Lindsley, a native of Tazewell Co., Ill., and daughter of Oliver and Priscilla (Coffin) Lindsley, both of whom are deceased and buried in Missouri. He was a resident of the village of Monroe for the last two years of his life in this State. He formerly lived in the town of Sylvester, where he was engaged in making wagons for over twenty years. From there he came to Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. Bragg have four children—Lora T., Allie V., Irvie M. and Chessa D. Mr. Bragg is politically a democrat.

Rev. DeLap was the first preacher in the county. He entered land on section 34, which is now occupied by Nicholas Cornelius. Mr. DeLap was a resident of this town for several years, when he removed to Richland county, where he has since died. His son, R. H. DeLap, is one of the prominent physicians of that county, and is located at Viola.

D. S. Sutherland was a native of New York State. He settled on the southeast quarter of section 25, where he still resides.

Asa Brown was from Indiana. He settled on section 21, where he lived two years, then removed up near D. S. Sutherland's place. He lived on that place several years, when he went to Missouri, where he has since died. He served several terms on the county board during his residence here.

John Walling came from Missouri and located on the southeast quarter of section 23. He was a carpenter by trade, and erected a large frame house, which was opened as a hotel or tavern, and was the first of the kind in the limits of the town. He rented the building to Joseph Paine, and later sold it to Joseph Kelly. He returned to Missouri in 1844 or 1845.

The Bailey brothers were from Illinois. They located on sections 20 and 29. They lived there about two years, then removed to the town of Adams. They have since died.

J. Austin came in 1838 and settled on section 34, and erected a log house. In 1840 he erected the first brick house in the town, in which he made his home until the time of his death.

Ben Buzick arrived here in 1839, and located on section 28, where he lived some years. He died while living on the old farm.

Samuel Truax, who had been a resident of the county for some time previous, settled in this town in 1842. He has been successful in business ventures, and now lives a retired life in Brodhead.

Asa Richardson came from New York in 1841, and settled in this town. He was a speculator, and was for a time president of the Bank of Monroe, and of the Monroe First National Bank. He now resides in Lawrence, Kansas.

The town was organized at a meeting held in the court house April 3, 1849. The following officers were elected: D. S. Sutherland, chairman, Hiram Rust and Andrew B. Cunningham, side board; Horace Poyer, town clerk; George Kuykendall, assessor; Jesse Chandler, treasurer; John W. Stewart, James Moss, J. B. Stevens and A. B. Cunningham, justices of the peace; J. C. Richardson, superintendent of schools; C. Martin, W. H.

Foster and Caleb Morse, constables. The present officers are as follows: R. D. Gorham, chairman, John Faizer and D. S. Young, side board; J. D. Eley, town clerk; John Gibbons, assessor; Henry Keller, treasurer; Samuel Johns, justice of the peace; and Emery Winslow, constable.

The first marriage in the town took place at "Skinner's Diggings," in 1840, between a man named Kendrick and a lady named Armstrong.

The first deaths occurring in the town were those of two men named Carr and Barto. Carr was a miner, and was eating eggs on a wager, when he ate so many they killed him. Barto was an Italian jewelry peddler.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

The one on section 11 is owned by Jacob Kundert. It was built in the summer of 1877. He also owns one on section 18. These are large factories, making as high as 500 pounds of cheese per day for six months during the summer, in both. Mr. Kundert buys the milk and hires a practical cheese maker. The kinds of cheese made are Swiss and Limburger. The patrons get the whey, which they carry back to their farms for fattening hogs.

Rudolph Benkert owns a cheese factory on section 4, which he erected in 1883. The first year he made 18,000 pounds of cheese. It is kept neat, is very convenient, and is well patronized.

CEMETERIES.

Union Cemetery, on section 17, is used as a general burying ground. The cemetery was laid out prior to 1849, that being the date of the first burial. Mrs. Halloway was the first person buried there. The site was given by Henry Eley and Mr. Halloway.

Snyder Cemetery is situated on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 4, and consists of one acre. The land was donated by John Snyder, in 1861. The first burial was a Mr. Forsyth.

There were two school houses erected in this town in 1843, known as the Bethel and Iliff school houses. The former was situated on section 33, and the later on section 21. They were both built of logs, and were in use several years.

RELIGIOUS.

In 1842 a United Brethren Church was organized at the house of Isaac Chamness, on section 32, with the following members: Isaac Chamness and wife, Edward Church and wife, and William Millman and wife. This class was organized by Rev. James Davis. In 1843 Rev. Riley Corray, a local preacher, made a discourse occasionally. Rev. Davis was succeeded by John Mast, and he in turn by Elder Graves, Dallerhide, Cretsinger, Conager, Scott, Knox and Terrell. The class met in private houses until a school house was built in the neighborhood when they met in that. After a few years the class was discontinued, many of the members moving away.

The M. E. Church is located on the northeast quarter of section 21. The land (one acre) was donated by H. P. Williams. He also gave $200 towards building the church, and S. J. Truax gave $600. The rest of the money was subscribed by the citizens.

This town, like the remainder of the county, is well provided with schools. In some districts the buildings are above the average. There are six whole districts, three joint and one union.

District No. 1 is joint with Washington. It has a good frame building, on section 6, and in 1884 had fifty-three pupils enrolled.

District No. 2 has a good frame building on the northwest quarter of section 11. Forty-nine scholars were in attendance in 1884.

District No. 3 is joint with Washington, the building being situated in that town. There are nineteen scholars in attendance.

District No. 4 has a log school house on section 17, that is greatly in contrast with the other school buildings of the town. Thirty-three scholars are taught in this school at the present time—1884.

The school building in district No. 5 is located on section 21, and is the finest school house in the county, outside of the villages. It seats sixty pupils, and is provided with outline maps, penmanship charts, etc. In 1884 there were thirty-six scholars in attendance.

District No. 6 reported fifty scholars in attendance in 1884. It has a good frame building on section 13.

District No. 7 is joint with the town of Sylvester, the building being located in that town. It is a frame house, and has nine scholars from this town.

District No. 9 has a good frame building on the northwest quarter of section 31. There are forty-five scholars in attendance.

The school house in district No. 10 is located on section 33. The building is a frame structure, with twenty-four pupils in attendance.

District No. 12 is joint with the town of Jordan. Four pupils being in attendance from this town.

Twenty-two scholars are sent from this town to the city of Monroe, it being a union school.

James Keen is a native of Buckinghamshire, England, forty-five miles distant from London. He was born in January, 1811. His parents, James and Elizabeth (Bull) Keen, are deceased, and buried in England. Mr. Keen, Sr., was a boot and shoemaker. The subject of this sketch came to America in 1843, stopping in July of that year, in Ogle Co., Ill. In October of the same year, he came to Green county and located in the town of Adams, where he lived twenty-three years. He owned a farm of 400 acres in that town, which he sold and removed to the place he now occupies, on section 36, of the town of Monroe. Here he first purchased 123 ½ acres, but has sold a part of this, and now owns sixty-five acres. He was married Aug. 28, 1845, to Hannah Sperry, a native of Ohio, and daughter of Wallace and Sarah (Watkins) Sperry, both of whom are dead, and buried in Vermilion Co., Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Keen have seven children living—James and John, who reside in Lincoln Co., Dak.; Elon S., in Hutchison Dak.; Robert, at home with his parents; Foster and Daniel living in Hutchison Co., Dak., and Mary A. at home. Sarah is dead, and buried at Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. Keen are members of the M. E. Church. Politically he is a republican.

Peter Chandler came to the county in 1844, and first stopped in the town of York, where he remained four months, then went to Monroe and worked at wagon making, which occupation he followed until 1856, when he removed on section 26, where he owned eighty acres of land. He was married Sept. 7, 1843, to Eliza Westcott, a native of Saratoga Co., N. Y., and daughter of John and Eunice Westcott, both of whom are dead, and buried in Monroe. Peter Chandler was born in Oxford Co., Maine, in 1805, and is a son of Joseph Chandler. His parents are deceased, and buried in Maine. Mr. Chandler removed from Maine, to Genesee Co., N. Y., and came from thence to Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler had three children born to them, all of whom are deceased, and buried in Monroe cemetery. Peter Chandler died May 8, 1884, and is buried in Monroe cemetery.

William H. Kinnison came to Green county in 1846, and settled then in the town of Cadiz, on a farm, where he remained two years, then removed to Clarno and lived two years upon the farm of William Bowens. He then removed to Monroe and lived upon Peter Wells' place two years. In 1851 he bought 120 acres on section 16. He sold forty acres of this land and afterwards bought ten acres. Mr. Kinnison is a son of Lawrence and Mary Kinnison, born April 18, 1817, in Pike Co., Ohio. He has 140 milch cows of his own, and makes Swiss cheese a specialty. When he came to America he was in debt $100 but by hard labor and perseverance he has accumulated a considerable fortune. He was married May 16, 1861, to Barbara Kundert, also a native of canton Glarus, Switzerland, where they were married. They have raised quite a large family—Jacob, deceased; Jacob, living; Sarah, Barbara, Abraham, Ruday, Lena, Anna, buried in New Glarus; Henry, Thomas, Frederick, buried in Union cemetery, Monroe; Frederick, living; Anna and John; Mr. and Mrs. Kundert and family are members of the Lutheran Church. In politics he is an independent.

W.F. Hintzman settled in Juda, in the town of Jefferson, in the spring of 1868. He engaged in farming two years, then followed mercantile life for nine years, in Juda and Brodhead, selling dry goods. In 1879 he removed to his present home on section 23, town of Monroe, where he owns 150 acres of land, and is engaged in stock raising. He was born in Prussia, twenty-four miles east of Berlin, Aug. 31, 1848, and is the son of David and Mary (Heis) Hintzman. His father, David Hintzman, is dead, and buried in Juda cemetery. His mother is living with her daughter, Mrs. Buer, in Juda. He attended school in his native country until fourteen years old, then worked three years learning the gardener's trade, after which he worked three years in Stettin, as practical gardener. He was married Sept. 18, 1870, to Christina Caplin, who was born near Stettin, in Prussia. She was a daughter of Michael and Dorothea (Hartwig) Caplin. She died Feb. 25, 1882, leaving seven children—Mary E., Emma V., Ida J., Clara H., Arthur W. and Anna C. and Lena (twins). Ella E. is deceased. Mr. Hintzman was again married to Rosa Knipshnild July 17, 1882. She is daughter of Adam Knipshnild, who was formerly a wagon maker in Monroe. One child has blessed this union—Edward S. Mr. and Mrs. Hintzman are members of the Evangelical Church at Monroe. He is a republican in politics.

Emanuel Dettwiler was born in Langenbruck, Baselland, Switzerland, Oct. 13, 1836, and is a son of Henry and Anna Dettwiler. He came to America in 1864 and located in Tioga Co., Penn., where he remained one year, then went to Delaware Co., Ohio, remaining there, also, one year. He then returned to Switzerland on a visit. On his return to this country, he came to Green county and engaged in farming one summer, then rented a farm for two years of John Jennie. He was married Oct. 24, 1867, to Rosena Marty, a native of Switzerland, the marriage ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Hagerman, a Lutheran minister. He next rented a farm in what is known as "Dutch Hollow," for, one year, after which he bought 120 acres on section 13. He also owns ten acres of timber on section 19. He removed to this place in 1869, since which it has been his residence. Mr. and Mrs. Dettwiler have nine children—Henry W., Emma E. and Annie M. (twins), John J., Ida R., Frederick M., Otto E., Jocum and Ernest E. Mr. Dettwiler is independent in politics, and in religion he is, with his family, a Lutheran. He has a desirable home and is an industrious and thrifty farmer.

Rudolph Benkert is a native of Bern, Switzerland, born May 22, 1841. He is a son of John and Magdaline (Murrer) Benkert, who now reside in the town of Jefferson. He came to America in 1851 and settled in Oneida Co., N. Y., where he lived until 1867, when he removed to Monroe, Wis., and lived with his parents until 1871. He then purchased a farm on section 9. In 1881 he sold out and removed to section 4, where he purchased 150 acres of land. On the 17th of February, 1871, he was married to Catharine Zimmerman, daughter of Jacob Zimmerman, who resides in the town Washington. The result of this union was six children—Frederick, Charles, Emma, Ida, Rudolph, Jr. and Robert. Mr. Benkert is a practical cheese maker, having worked at that business in Switzerland, and now owns a factory on his farm. In September, 1863, he enlisted in company C, 1st New York Mounted Rifles. He was mustered in at Albany, and out at City Point. He served to the close of the war, participating in the battles of Williamsburg and Cold Harbor. His regiment did scouting and guard duty most of the time. For six months he acted as dispatch carrier. He was wounded in each arm in a cavalry charge at Bontack, Va., and while on duty was only sick two weeks during enlistment. They are members of the Lutheran Church. He is a republican, politically.

John G. Faeser, a native of Baden, was born May 20, 1836. His father, John A. Faeser, died while crossing the ocean in 1853. His mother died in 1871, in Jordan. John A. Faeser was a contractor and builder of stone work, and his son, John G., of this sketch, learned the same trade, which he followed four, years in Westmoreland Co., Penn., where he, with his mother and sister, settled on their arrival in America. In 1857 they came to Green county and settled in the town of Jordan, where he purchased 100 acres of land, afterwards forty acres, and still later 220 acres, making in all 360 acres. In 1876 he moved into Monroe, where he remained three months. He then traded one farm in Jordan for city property in Monroe and forty-six acres in Clarno, which he sold and bought his present farm in 1880. It contains 117 acres, located in Monroe. He was married Dec. 31, 1862, to Anna E. Uitiger, a native of Switzerland, but at the time of marriage a resident of Monroe. They have had eight children, five of whom are living—John A., Anna, Frederick R., Elizabeth and Lene. Three children are buried with their grandmother in Jordan. Mr. and Mrs. Faeser are members of the Evangelical Church in Monroe. He casts his vote with the republican party.

R. C. Whitcomb, son of Deacon James W. and Nancy (Goltry) Whitcomb, was born in Rock

Co., Wis., July 6, 1848. His parents are both dead, and buried in Gap Church cemetery, in Decatur. His father was an active Christian and deeply interested in Church work. He (Mr. Whitcomb, Sr.) and his wife were among the first members of the Monticello Gap Church. R. C. Whitcomb, when one year old, went with his parents to Mount Pleasant, where he was reared upon a farm, and remained upon the same place until 1879. He was married June 8, 1874, to Margaretta Fitch, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Smith) Fitch, of Ohio. Mr. Fitch was formerly overseer of the poor farm at Mount Pleasant, but now resides in Mahaska Co., Iowa. Mr. Whitcomb is the present overseer of the poor farm, a position that he has held since 1879. Mrs. Whitcomb, before her marriage, taught school at Mount Pleasant, in this county, and in Oskaloosa, Iowa. They have two children—Eva G., born July 7, 1882, and Walter J., born Nov. 15, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Whitcomb are members of the Baptist Church at the Gap, in the town of Decatur. He is a republican.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

CITY OF MONROE.

This beautiful and enterprising city had its origin almost half a century ago, when the beautiful and fertile region of southern Wisconsin was just beginning to attract the attention of those in search of homes, and the surroundings were as free and wild almost as the time when the stars of the morning sang anthems of joy at nature's dawn. The changes from the primitive to the developed state have been constant and rapid. It has been comparatively, one continuous change from the moment of its projection until Monroe of to-day stands forth as one of the most beautiful, as well as most important business cities of the State. While there may have been nothing really remarkable in the development of the past, or nothing peculiarly striking in the present, still there is much that cannot fail to interest and fascinate not only those who have been closely connected and identified with the city in all the various changes that have occurred from year to year, but the general reader as well. Endowed with many natural advantages, aided by the strength of enterprising husbandry, Green county has assumed a high position among the best and wealthiest of her sister counties throughout the State, and Monroe, the first town within her borders, has kept pace with the improvement and advancements.

Monroe is situated a few miles south and west of the center of Green county. One line of railway passes through the city—the southern branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. It passes through from east to west, and furnishes excellent marketing and shipping facilities. The city is surrounded by some of the finest and most productive agricultural and stock raising lands in the State, which is a guarantee of a permanent and ever increasing trade.

There are many fine and substantial brick and stone blocks to be seen upon the business thoroughfares, and a stroll through the city discloses many elegant and costly dwellings. There are a number of fine church edifices and excellent buildings for educational purposes. In respect to religious and educational advantages, Monroe ranks among the best cities in the State of Wisconsin. An abundance of shade trees adorn the streets, which, in summer adds greatly to the beauty of the place. The location is exceedingly healthy, the inhabitants are possessed of a high degree of intelligence, and the society is of the most refined and desirable character.

THE BEGINNING.

The land upon which the city of Monroe has since been built, was entered from the United States government by Joseph Payne and Jarvis Rattan. Payne came here from the southern part of Illinois in 1832, and first settled in the territory, which now comprises the town of Clarno. His earlier movements are treated at length in the chapter upon the history of that town. About 1834, he made a claim on section 35, township 2, range 7, taking 160 acres. He piled up a lot of clap-boards upon the land to mark the claim, which grew to be a "land mark" to the settlers in this region, remaining about two years. In the meantime he had begun improvements on the land, hiring a quasi-scout, named Bradley, to break some ground.

During the year 1836 [or as some claim 1837] Payne erected a little log cabin which stood near the present site of Dr. Byers' residence. It was a small building, probably 16x16 feet in size, one story in height, constructed of logs, covered with shakes, and floored with puncheons. A rude affair, yet in those days it was considered a very comfortable dwelling. Payne lived in the village until about 1842, then moved to the town of Cadiz, where he remained for some years, when having got in trouble through killing a man—an affair which is treated at length elsewhere in this volume—he fled the country. He finally drifted to California, where he died in 1881. Prior to his coming to the village, and during his residence in the town of Clarno, he had taken part in all the early transactions and inconveniences of pioneer life in that region; participating in the Black Hawk War, and all of the scouting expeditions which took place during and growing out of that war.

Jarvis Rattan came here in 1836, from Illinois, and entered eighty acres of land adjoining Payne's claim, building a cabin near the "Town Spring." He was a single man, but kept house. He lived there for a few years, when he sold a part of his claim to Jacob Ly Brand. He afterward married Miss Pierce and moved to a farm about two miles southeast of the city. He remained there until 1844, when he removed to the town of Washington. He now lives in California.

Jacob Ly Brand came here from Pennsylvania, in 1837, and purchased a third interest in the town of New Mexico, and some land of Joseph Payne.

Mr. Russell became interested here at about the same time as Mr. Ly Brand. He was a land speculator, from Rhode Island, and was representing some large company. When the city of Monroe was platted, he donated eighty acres of land to the county, forty of which was to be used for educational purposes, and this, when platted, took the name of Russell's donation. In 1835 Judge Jacob Andrick came from Indiana and entered land which he subsequently laid out as the village of New Mexico. Judge Andrick remained here for about twenty years, when he removed to Kansas. He is now dead.

In 1838, immediately after the organization of the county, there arose a contest for the county seat, which had the effect of preventing emigration while it lasted, and of inducing many who had come, to go away. Shortly before the county was organized, Judge Andrick had laid out his town, which he called New Mexico; but he neglected to have it recorded at the land office at Mineral Point. It was supposed that this town—New Mexico—would be the county seat of the proposed county, and in fact this was the only reason by which Judge Andrick was induced to plat the village. Mr. Payne besought Andrick to sell him an interest in it, which the judge refused to do. Payne then laid out a town, immediately north of Andrick's town, and north of the railroad track.

James Campbell, who was Payne's surveyor, used to tell the story that, while they were surveying, Mr. Payne stopped work to make a last effort to purchase a share in New Mexico, and that he remarked on his return from his fruitless visit to Andrick: "New Mexico isn't recorded, and if that old fool won't let any one else have half the county seat, he shan't have any part of it himself." The act of the Burlington legislature, which made this a county, also located the county seat at New Mexico, referring, of course, to Judge Andrick's town. As soon as this act was passed, Mr. Payne named his town New Mexico, and hastened to the land office at Mineral Point. A few miles behind him rode Judge Andrick, pursuing him, "compared to which," as Miss Bingham, in her History of Green County, says, "the most rapid movements of the Indians who followed him in 1832, and of the sheriff who sought him in 1844, were as the crawling of a snail." Mr. Payne reached Mineral Point before Judge Andrick, and got his New Mexico on record first, which made it the county seat by law. But moved by a petition which was presented by Mr. Sutherland, the member from Green county, the legislature at its next session repealed this law and appointed three commissioners to select a county seat. These commissioners, after looking the county over, selected a place which they called Roscoe, about two miles northeast of the present city of Monroe. This place was not acceptable to the people of the county. It was then represented to the legislature that the selection of Roscoe as the county seat was improperly secured. However, the former act was repealed and it was decided that the question of county seat should be decided by a vote of the people. In the meantime it was undertaken to dig a well in Mr. Payne's town, but after digging about forty feet, those interested in it became discouraged and gave up the attempt. The belief became general then that the county seat must be at some place where water could be more easily obtained, and Messrs. Payne, Ly Brand and Russell offered to give the county 120 acres of land near the spring. Mr. Russell subsequently gave another forty acres for the benefit of a county seminary. Mr. Andrick had also abandoned the hope of making his town the county seat and united with others in claiming the honor for a site, which was situated a short distance south of Roscoe. At the election in May, 1839, the point at issue seems to have been not as much the comparative merits of the sites under consideration, as the comparative popularity of the men who had selected them, and the tickets of one party were marked: "For Andrick, Wilcoxon and Sutherland," while those of the other party read: "For Payne, Ly Brand and Russell." The vote was a tie. A second election was held in June, and, although there were cast six votes more than at the other election, the result was a second tie. This result, it was said, was inadvertently brought about by Mr. Ly Brand. On election day each party knew how many voters it had in town, and knew, too, that Mr. Ly Brand's side had one more man than the other. To make assurance doubly sure Ly Brand sent into the country for another voter, paying his messenger $2.50 for the trip. The man, whose name was Elias Luttrell, came, but much to Mr. Ly Brand's surprise, he voted with the opposition. A third election was held in August. Andrick and Sutherland were now the champions of a site which was almost in the geographical centre of the county, but as votes were cast for the men rather than for the places, it was probable that the election would result like the others, in a tie, when Mr. Ly Brand, taking advantage of the great popularity of a peculiar kind of hat, braided by Mrs. Rust, offered to give one of them to a young man named Porter if he would induce some miners at Sugar River Diggings to come to the polls. The offer was accepted, and the votes thus gained located the county seat. The selection of a name for the town was left to Dr. Harcourt, one of the county commissioners, and he chose the name of Monroe.

In the meantime the growth of Monroe and New Mexico had begun, and signs of business life were visible. The two places were so near together that they will be treated almost as one.

The first business place opened was on the site of New Mexico. It was the establishment of O. C. Smith and Mr. Binninger, and was run by O. C. Smith. This was started in 1837. They erected a little hewn log building, 18x20 feet in size, which stood just east and south of the railroad bridge of to-day. They kept a general assortment of goods, making the sale of whisky a specialty, and ran for about two years, when they closed out their business. Smith remained in Monroe until the time of his death. Binninger removed to California.

A short time after Smith & Binninger got in to running order, Jacob Ly Brand established a store on the west side of what is now Lincoln Park. He erected the first frame building on the site, and ran the store—which, for those days, was an unusually good one—for a number of years. He was afterwards associated in partnership with J. W. Rogers. Mr. Ly Brand died in Minnesota.

In 1836 Payne, Benninger & Smith put up quite an extensive building just north of the railroad bridge. It was two stories high, about 26x36 feet, with a wing. Payne opened the building as a tavern, keeping a good stock of whisky. He ran the hotel for a few years, after which it was run by various parties. Part of the old building now forms a portion of the planing mill.

John Hart, an Englishman, came here with his family in 1840, and opened a stock of goods in a building which stood a little east and south of the railroad bridge. He soon after moved his building to the north side of the square, where he remained for a time, and then went to Milwaukee.

From the time that Monroe permanently secured the county seat, business began drifting to that place from Milwaukee.

In the summer of 1840 a building intended for a temporary court house was erected where the United States house is now located. The contract was let to A. J. Sutherland and James Campbell. Before its completion, in the fall, however, it was consumed by fire.

About 1843 the first tavern was put up by John Walling. It stood on the north side, two lots from the west corner. It was an extensive building for those days, being two stories high, and containing a number of rooms. It was opened as a tavern by the proprietor. He was succeeded by Joseph Payne, and the latter by J. Kelly as landlord. It was then closed for a time, and subsequently opened by Thomas Gillette, after whom came Willard Payne. The building was finally moved away. This tavern, while it was open to the public, was the favorite place of resort for all this region, and almost every evening, in pioneer days, the bar room was the scene of a rehearsal of all the events that had transpired, and an exchange of news and gossip.

In 1844 Jacob Ly Brand moved his building to the south side of what now forms the court house square, and kept his store there for a number of years. He then erected a building on the north side and moved his goods there.

At about the same time, in 1844, Charles Hart started a store on the corner where the bank now stands. He ran there for a few years, then sold out his stock of goods and removed to Rockton, Ill.

In 1846, while Ly Brand's store was still running, A. Ludlow opened a store. Prior to this time he had been driving a peddler's wagon through this region, supplying the settlers and stores with goods, all the way from Chicago to Madison. In 1846 he opened a store, using one of the buildings that had been moved to the north side. Mr. Ludlow continued in trade here for a few years, and then rented a building which N. Cornelius had erected on the east side of the square. It was about 22x30 feet in size, and two stories in height, with a basement. In this building Mr. Ludlow carried on the largest part of the business done in Monroe. In 1848 Mr. Ludlow erected a three story brick building, the first building of that material used for business purposes in the village. For a time he was associated with Benjamin Chenowith. He finally sold to George Hoffman.

In 1849 Milton Kelly came here from Pennsylvania and started a store in a building which had been erected for him by Frank Emerson. It was a fair building, 20x30 feet in size, a story and a half in height, and stood on the east side a little above the center of the block. Mr. Kelly ran a store here for about four or five years. Thus the improvement went on. At the outset the growth of the city met with a severe backset in the financial panic which began in 1837, and continued for several years. Business of all kinds was stagnated, and the most enterprising men became hopeless and despondent. During these years, but little was accomplished, and nothing of importance in the way of business development was done. But as the latter part of the decade between 1840 and 1850 was speeding by business picked up; settlers began to arrive, and from 1850 to 1857 marked progress was made. Then came the financial crash of 1857—8, and again business was almost paralyzed. Immediately succeeding this came the outbreak of the Rebellion, accompanied by the demand for money and men. Times were very hard for Monroe in those days, the darkest days in its history. After the close of the war the prospects began to brighten. New faces began to be seen; business revived and the people, too, seemed to have regained some of the business energy and enterprise of olden times. Reinforcements came in from the eastern States and across the water, and Monroe and Green county, took a marked forward step. Since that time the growth has been sure and steady, save the brief interruption caused by the financial panic of 1873. Magnificent blocks have been built; elegant dwellings erected; fine schools and Churches established and sustained, and all the concomitants of a healthy, thriving business city have sought their way here until Monroe city of to-day has become the pride of Green county.

PLAT OF NEW MEXICO.

On the 28th of October, 1836, the town of New Mexico was surveyed by Abner Van Sant, for Joseph Payne, Jacob Binninger and Owen C. Smith. It was platted on section 2, township 11 north, range 7, and contained twenty blocks, one of which was left for a public square. The papers were acknowledged before Robert Dougherty, a justice of the peace of Mineral Point.

On the 7th of April, 1839, Jarvis Rattan made an addition to New Mexico. It laid directly north of the original plat, and extended to what was afterward platted as Ly Brand's donation (Monroe). The addition was just the size of the plat, proper of New Mexico. It was surveyed by Abner Van Sant.

On the 26th of March, 1856, Jacob and John H. Andrick, James Bintliff and F. H. West made an addition to New Mexico, which laid south of the original plat. It was sworn to before J. B. Galusha.

PLAT OF THE CITY OF MONROE.

On the 24th of August, 1839, Jacob Ly Brand deeded to the county a tract of land described as the north half of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 35, township 2 north, range 7 east. This was to secure the location of the county seat at this place. This done, a committee was appointed by the citizens of the county to represent them in the matter, and attend to laying out the city. This committee consisted of James Hawthorn, John Chryst and Daniel Harcourt. The land was deeded to them and they accordingly secured the services of William Gravath, the district surveyor, in laying it out into lots and blocks. This was done in December, 1839, the plat being recorded on the 23d of that month. This tract of land took the name of "Ly Brand's donation." It embraces the present court house square, which lies directly in the center of the donation.

Russell's and Payne's donations were also deeded and laid out at the same time. Joseph Payne's donation was the same as that of Ly Brand, and laid just east and adjoining it. Russell's donation embraced the same amount of land, and laid to the west of Ly Brand's. The streets of the city, as then laid out, were named as follows: Those running north and south, commencing at the east—Adams, Ly Brand, Green, Van Buren, Madison, Jefferson, Jackson, Monroe, Market, Clinton, Fulton and Franklin. Those running east and west, commencing at the north, were named: Payne, Russell, Washington and Racine. The streets were about sixty feet, and alleys twenty feet in width. The committee to whom the above lands were deeded, acknowledged the plat before James Riley, justice of the peace. The county commissioners,

In April, 1848, Josiah V. Richardson surveyed Wadsworth Foster's addition to Monroe. It consisted of about five blocks, lying just south of Payne's donation.

In November, 1849, W. M. Tallman made an addition of about ten blocks to the city, lying just north of Ly Brand's donation. Mr. Richardson was the surveyor.

Emerson & Moulton's was the next addition made to the city. It was made in May, 1854, by Francis Emerson and Salena Moulton; being surveyed by Samuel Spangler. It embraced a little over fifteen blocks, and laid just south of Russell's donation, and west of Rattan's addition to New Mexico.

The first railroad addition to Monroe, was made on the 15th of November, 1854. It embraced about five blocks and laid just north of where the track is now located.

In May, 1855, W. Foster made his second addition to Monroe. It laid just east of Rattan's addition to New Mexico, and south of Foster's first addition to Monroe. It embraced about fourteen blocks.

On the 12th of February, 1856, Evans' addition to Monroe was made by Enoch Evans, surveyed by George M. O'Brien. It laid just west of Russell's donation.

Bloom's addition was made by George Bloom in February, 1856. It laid just southeast of Evans' addition, and adjoining Russell's donation.

On the 4th of July, 1856, Wescott's addition was made by E. and N. L. B. Wescott. It laid just west of the original plat.

Scott's addition to Monroe was surveyed on the 24th of June, 1856, by George M. O'Brien for Jane Scott. It laid west of Evans' addition, and embraced about twelve whole blocks.

The second railroad addition was made in May, 1856. G. M. O'Brien was the surveyor.

Brodhead's addition was surveyed in November, 1856, by W. W. Card. The proprietors were: Edward H. Brodhead, B. Dunwiddie, A. Ludlow and John A. Bingham.

Julius Austin made an addition in April, 1856, which laid just west of Emerson & Moulton's addition.

Bartlett's addition was made by Edmund Bartlett, Jan. 1, 1857.

W. M. Tallman made a second addition in August, 1857, of over twenty blocks. It lays in the northern part of the city.

April 14, 1857, Julius Austin made an addition to the western part of the city.

L. & P. D. Hurlbut made an addition April 17, 1857, west of the railroad additions. Moses O'Brien was the surveyor.

Francis Emerson and S. P. Condee made an addition April 18, 1857. It was surveyed by Moses O'Brien, and contained about two blocks.

Simon P. Condee made an addition June 5, 1857, of two blocks.

A. Ludlow's addition was made Nov. 20, 1856; surveyed by J. V. Richardson. It embraced about twenty blocks and laid just east of Payne's donation.

INCORPORATION.

During the winter of 1857—8 the question of incorporating Monroe as a village, under the provisions of the statute, was agitated, and it culminated in the spring of 1858 in the election of officers and organization as a village. The first election for village officers was held in April, when the following named were chosen:

Trustees, John A. Bingham, George E. Dexter, Charles Leissing, Elisha Mosher and John W. Stewart. The first meeting of the board of trustees was held on April 14, 1858, when John W. Stewart was elected president, and William W. Wright clerk of the board.

Among the first official acts of the board, was the passage of the following: "It being creditably represented to this board that the smallpox now prevails in the family of Ulrich Kleb, a resident of Monroe; therefore, it is ordered that the said Ulrich Kleb remain closely within his dwelling, and that he cause each and every member of his family to remain closely within his dwelling until further order of this board." A penalty of $25 was imposed for the violation of this order, and Mr. Kleb was also instructed to post upon his door a sign printed in German and English, bearing the words "Small Pox Here," as a warning.

Another rule was passed at the same time, imposing fine of fifty cents upon each member of the board who should be tardy or absent, "unless a bona fide and satisfactory excuse be rendered."

A number of ordinances were passed by the first board, and the German Hook and Ladder Company was ordered organized.

The following is a list of the officers who have served since the incorporation of the village:

1859.—Trustees, J. W. Stewart, president, F. F. West, Wadsworth Foster, Charles Leissing and B. Dunwiddie; assessor, John Knipschild; treasurer, George H. King; clerk, William W. Wright; marshal, Elisha Mosher; pound-master, William Bowers.

1860.—Trustees, John W. Stewart, president, Charles Leissing, Wadsworth Foster, F. F. West and B. Dunwiddie; treasurer, George H. King; assessor, Chester Witter; clerk, W. W. Wright; marshal, Edmund Hill; street commissioner, William Rean; pound-master, William Bowers; surveyor, F. F. West.

1861.—Trustees, John W. Stewart, president, Wadsworth Foster, Charles Leissing, F. F. West and B. Dunwiddie; assessor, Josiah V. Richardson; treasurer, Samuel Chandler; clerk, W. W. Wright; surveyor, F. F. West; marshal, Edmund Hill; street commissioner, William Rean; pound-master, William Bowers; sexton, Patrick Collins.

1862.—Trustees, John A. Bingham, president, Charles Leissing, E. T. Gardner, W. Foster and B. Dunwiddie; assessor, J. V. Richardson; treasurer, Samuel Chandler; clerk, W. W. Wright; marshal, William Bowers; street commissioner, William Rean; pound-master, William Bowers; sexton, Patrick Collins; chief engineer of the fire department, W. W. Wright; fire warden, Anton Miller.

1863.—Trustees, B. Chenoweth, president, E. T. Gardner, W. Foster, J. B. Treat and B. Dunwiddie; treasurer, Samuel Chandler; assessor, Asa Richardson; clerk, W. W. Wright; marshal, Edmund Hill; street commissioner, William Rean; sexton, Patrick Collins; pound-master, George P. Hedge; chief engineer of fire department, W. W. Wright; fire warden, Anton Miller.

1864.—Trustees, Benjamin Chenoweth, president, E. T. Gardner, W. Foster, J. B. Treat and B. Dunwiddie; treasurer, Samuel Chandler; assessor, Asa Richardson; clerk, W. W. INCORPORATION AS A CITY.

Monroe was incorporated as a city by an act of the legislature, approved March 25, 1882. The act took effect from and after its passage. The incorporation was a surprise to many. The following is a list of city officers for that year:

W. Wright, mayor; G. W. Galusha and Lewis Weber, aldermen in 1st ward. Mr. Weber resigned, and Dr. S. W. Abbott was appointed. George Spangler and John Carroll, aldermen in 2d ward; William Bragg, treasurer; A. S.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Douglass, clerk; Thomas Emerson, assessor J. H. Shawser, street commissioner and marshal.

The following is a list of officers for 1883: W. Wright, mayor; J. B. Galusha and W. J. Miller, aldermen 1st ward; J. P. Carroll and George Spangler, aldermen, 2d ward; Thomas Emmerson, assessor; A. S. Douglass, clerk; John Salley, treasurer; William Rean, street commissioner and marshal.

In 1884 the following gentlemen filled the local offices of this city: George Spangler, mayor; W. J. Miller and W. P. Bragg, aldermen, 1st ward; J. P. Carroll and Stephen Miller, aldermen in 2d ward; Nelson Darling, treasurer; Thomas Emmerson, assessor; A. S. Douglass, clerk; William Rean, street commissioner and marshal.

Under the date of Feb. 10, 1866, appears the following peculiar entry

“On reading and filing the claim of William Rean for pay for one sheep killed by dogs, and on hearing the testimony of George Phillips’ showing that said sheep could not have survived the injuries received by said dogs; and, it appearing that said Rean caused the said sheep to be slaughtered to save its life; and after having read the law on that subject, on motion it was ordered that there is hereby appropriated out of the dog fund in the village treasury, the sum of $4 to be paid to said William Rean, as provided for by the statute in such cases made and provided.”

BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT.

The first stores have already been treated. As a rule they handled general stocks of merchandise, or a little of everything. In a few years, however, as trade increased and the business of Monroe began to assume city proportions, the “general merchandising” gradually separated, and the various stores handled one line exclusively. In 1884, the various lines of trade were represented in Monroe, by the following named firms and individuals.

Dry goods or general merchandise.—J. B.

Treat & Co., S. C. Cheney, F. Chenoweth, J. H. Miller, Hodge & Durst, Schadel & Baker, and J. Bolender & Co. Of those firms the last two mentioned handle groceries.

Groceries and crockery—L. B. Johnson, Treat & Co., D. S. Young & Co., Glascott & Bragg, Roth & Weber, Studley & Lichtenwalner, Carroll Bros. Phifer, Shindler Bros. and Charles B. Churchill. The last named handles crockery exclusively.

Gents furnishing goods and merchant tailoring establishments—Hoehn & Weber, Peter Spahr, Randall, Gibbons & Co., A. Wettengill & Son, J. Cohn and Kneeland & Co.

Boots and shoes—A. W. Goddard, J. J. Tschudy, Adam Smith and Frautschy & Zumbrunnen.

Jewelry—George H. King, A. B. McKelvey, H. G. Van Wagner and R. Fuelleman.

Drugs—Stearns, J. K. Eilert, Studley & Lichtenwalner and George W. Banks.

Books and stationery—Joseph Wood, R. D. Vaughn and Mrs. Wirrich.

Hardware and agricultural implements—Harper and Davenport, Cundrant, Stearns & Co., Miller, Olson & Co., J. S. Bloom and S. B. Mack.

Pumps and sewing machines—N. and Charles Churchill.

Furniture—Henry Foster and Robert Miller.

Banks—First National and Citizens.

Lumber—J. L. Road & Co., and Churchill, Dodge & Co.

Livery—F. North, A. J. Worthington and Campbell.

Butter and eggs.—Mr. Vandervoort and Mr. Gunard.

Confectionery—Nellie Gardner and A. M. Woolcott.

Millinery—J. H. Miller, Mrs. W. H. Allen, Rolfe & Stearns and Mrs. Carroll.

Photographers—H. G. White and Green & Copeland.

Builders—W. M. Wright, Washington Hill, J. Stineman, Ableman, Soper, Thomas Evans and Ellis Smith.

Real estate agents—J. H. Strawser, W. W. Wright and T. L. Summeril.

Painters—H. G. Austin, J. C. Sally and K. Scoville.

Brewery—Jacob Hefty.

Marble shop—Evan Busby and J. D. Mosher

Brick yards—R. Craven and Niles.

Gun shop—George Spangler.

Cigar factories—B. N. Rusch and Charles Snyder.

Wagon, carriage and sleigh manufacturers—Monroe Manufacturing Company, P. Miller, Thomas Patterson, Fitzgibbons Bros., Andrew Buchler and Mr. Lantz.

Harness shops—C. D. Corson, Daniel German, Samuel Shuler and Patrick Shean.

Tin shops—In connection with hardware stores, except that of Charles French.

Meat markets—John Gettings & Son, Roger Gettings & Son, Stephen Miller, Valentine Mattern, Baltz Heasley and T. Patterson.

Blacksmiths—Charles Poole, John Conroy, Snider, Evans, Fred Babler, T. Patterson, Fitzgibbons Bros. and James Nee.

Pop and small beer factories—R. Einbeck and Charles Pickett.

Insurance agents—W. W. Wright, S. W. Abbott and H. H. Cohn.

Attorneys at law—B. Dunwiddie, A. S. Douglas, P. J. Clawson, C. W. Wright, S. W. Abbott, B. S. Kerr and John Luchsinger.

Physicians—Drs. J. C. Hall, Loofbourow, W. O. Sherman, Byers, Monroe, H. D. Fuller, Confer, Boardman, Mrs. Bennett, Miss Bingham and Mrs. Dixon.

Dentists—Dr. Soseman and J. S. Reynolds.

U. S Express agent—William Blunt.

Railroad agent—P. W. Puffer.

BANKS.

The first bank in this city was established, in 1854, by John A. Bingham, and was known as Bingham's Exchange Bank. The following fall the firm became Ludlow, Bingham & Co., composed of A. Ludlow, J. A. Bingham and Asa Richardson. In 1856 the company erected a building for banking purposes, during which year J. W. Stewart became interested in the business. His connection with the bank, however, was of short duration.

On the 1st of May, 1856, the bank of Monroe was organized under the State laws, with John A. Bingham, president; A. Ludlow, vice-president, and J. B. Galusha, cashier. In 1881 Richardson & Ludlow became sole proprietors.

On the 12th of January, 1864, the First National Bank was organized, and a few years later the Monroe Bank was merged into it. The first officers of the National Bank were:

John A. Bingham, president; B. Chenoweth, cashier; directors: G. W. Huffman, Joseph Perrine, John A. Bingham, B. Chenoweth and M. Marty. In June, 1865, Asa Richardson became president and J. B. Galusha, cashier. The directors were: A. Richardson, A. Ludlow, William Brown, G. W. Huffman and Joseph Perrine. Mr. Galusha has since held the position of cashier. In January, 1875, A. Ludlow was elected president and has since retained that position. The present officers are: A. Ludlow, president; Joseph B. Treat, vice-president; J. B. Galusha, cashier, and Henry Ludlow, assistant cashier. The present condition of the bank is shown by the facts that it has a capital stock paid up of $100,000; surplus fund, $45,000; undivided profits, $3,970; individual deposits subject to check, $110,583; certificates of deposit, $132,947.17; total, $437,501.04. The bank is well equipped with fire and burglar proof safes.

The Citizens Bank, located on the south side of the square, was organized March 19, 1883, and opened on the 1st of April, 1883. The following were the first and are the present officers: Directors, J. Bolender, president; H. C. Witmer, vice-president; Samuel Lewis, cashier, H. Durst and G. Hodges. The bank is a reliable and permanent institution, and does a large business.

HOTELS.

This city has six establishments devoted to this branch of business. The first building erected for hotel purposes was the second frame house built in the place, and located in Mexico, near the present site of the railroad bridge. It was built in 1836, and being 26x36 feet, the main part two stories, was considered at that time a fine establishment, and "Our Hotel" was a source of pride to the embryo town, and frequent allusion was made to it, as a substantial improvement, sufficient to meet the wants of the people for a long time to come. In this building was held the first term of circuit court, and it was used for various purposes many years. This building now constitutes a part of the "Monroe Planing Mill." Boarding houses and small hotels were improvised and variously constructed from time to time, and after a brief existence were merged into other improvements, but during early days the "hotel par excellence" was the one mentioned. It was built by Joseph Payne, Smith and Binninger.

Another hotel of an early day was called the "Monroe House," and was built in 1843 by John Walling, but before entirely finishing it, he sold out to Joseph Payne. In the spring of 1845 it was transferred to Joseph Kelley, who built an addition and improved its appearance generally. In connection he erected a feed stable, and continued in the hotel business there for eleven years, when the property was sold to Willard Payne, and afterward gave way to more pretentious buildings, and was moved back from the north side of the square. It is now occupied partly as a dwelling house and partly as a store house.

Another was the American House, which was originally an old store building, reconstructed and opened by Edward Reynolds some time about 1845. It passed through various hands, and seemed at times to have a sort of precarious existence, having suffered much by fire and disaster. There was a livery stable in connection, run by J. Campbell. The whole property is excellently located on the southwest corner of the public square, but the building is not in good condition. It was bought in 1862 by Joshua Trickle, who utilizes a portion of it for a saloon and billiard hall. The stable portion is used for a tin shop by Charles French, and the cellar for a pop factory by Louis Stoll.

Another hotel was known by the name of Spring Hotel, and was owned by Rudolph Greenwald, and was located near the present site of the Green County House.

Following are the hotels now occupied and in running order in the village:

The Green County House is a two story hip-roofed buildings containing twenty-nine rooms, and was erected in 1866 by Rudolph Greenwald, who was himself the proprietor for a number of years, when he sold out to Emanuel Weismiller, who continued as landlord a number of years, when the property again changed hands and came into the possession of John Eisley, who ran the same a short time, and traded it to Mr. Freidley. Meanwhile the property had been encumbered, and soon after the latter transfer, fell into the hands of A. Ludlow, who leased it to Jacob and William Osborne, who together managed the affairs of the house for a season, or until Jacob took entire charge. At the expiration of their lease Mr. Ludlow made an arrangement with his brother, Calvin, who immediately assumed the duties of landlord, and continued in the business six years, or until 1882. On the 1st day of March, of that year, Fred Thomm became the owner, and is now the proprietor. The property is valued at $10,000. In connection with the house there is a feed stable, 32x100 feet, where fifty-four horses can be accommodated.

Fred Thomm, proprietor of the Green County House, was born in Switzerland, Dec. 25, 1843. When eight years old he came to America and located in the town of Washington, this county, on a farm, where he remained until 1864, when he went to St. Louis; thence to Illinois, and worked on the river, floating logs on rafts. He then, after a short time, returned to St. Louis and worked in a butcher shop, and subsequently followed the same business in Milwaukee and Monroe. In February, 1868, he went to California, where he engaged in all kinds of work. He also visited Oregon and Washington Territory. In the fall of 1871 he came to Monroe, and again engaged in the butcher business. In 1882 he bought the Green County House. April 15, 1871, he was married to Maldda Kafer, by whom he has three children—Mary, Freddie and Frankie. He is a member of the I.O.O.F. and A.O.U.W.

The Monroe House was built by Casper Oswald in 1865, and is located on Jackson street, near the public square. It is a two story frame building, containing twenty-one rooms. Mr. Oswald ran the house for a time, and then rented it to Casper Baker, his brother-in-law. At the expiration of Baker's lease, or before, the property was sold to Peter Zweifel, at a cost of about $4,000. With his brother he managed the house about four years, when it was rented to Fred Thomm and John Blum for one year, the rental agreed upon being $600. After that Mrs. Zweifel ran it until May, 1883, when Wittwer & Isely, the present proprietors, bought the property for $7,500, and manage the business themselves. They also have a feed stable for the accommodation of patrons, which will hold twenty-seven horses.

The City Hotel is on the corner of Racine and Jackson streets. A part of the building was erected in 1854, and used many years for a furniture shop. It was built and the business carried on by Antoine Miller, who, in 1879, concluded to keep hotel, and after making some improvements and additions, opened it to the public. It is a two story building, containing thirty rooms, and has in connection one of the largest stables in the city. This property is valued at $9,000.

The United States Hotel was erected many years ago, by Charles Hart, who conducted the business for a time and was succeeded by K. Reynolds. Robert Witter came next, and was succeeded by Mr. Lambert, followed in turn by E. Hill, E. Mosher and Ruegger & Schuetze. On the 7th of March, 1865, Louis Schuetze purchased the property and is still proprietor and landlord. He is the oldest hotel keeper in the city. The hotel building proper is 38x100 feet in size, two stories and a basement in height and contains sixteen comfortable sleeping rooms. Mr. Schuetze has two other buildings which he runs in connection with the house, making an addition of seventeen rooms. There are four stables in connection, furnishing a capacity for 100 horses.

Louis Schuetze, proprietor of the United States Hotel, at Monroe, was born in Prenzlau, Prussia, Jan. 9, 1842. In 1855 he emigrated to America with his parents who located at Stevens Point, Wis., and there he resided until Aug. 7, 1861, when he enlisted in the 9th Wisconsin Infantry, as private. He was subsequently promoted to the rank of 2d lieutenant. He participated in many engagements, and was aid-de-camp upon Gen. Steele's staff on the Red River expedition. In July, 1863, he was promoted to the rank of 1st lieutenant. In November of the same year he went to Little Rock, Ark. He was mustered out of service by reason of expiration of his term of enlistment, at Milwaukee, Dec. 7, 1864. Then he came to Monroe and engaged in keeping hotel, which business he has since followed. He was married in Monroe, to Anna Spahr, Dec. 7, 1865, who died ten weeks after. He was again married to Caroline Miller, Oct. 26, 1867. By this union there are six children—George H., Albert J., William H., Louis G., Frederick W. and Alma. Mr. Schuetze is a member of the I. O. O. F., the G. A. R. and of the Turner society. Of the latter he has been an active and useful member. He has been in the hotel business nineteen years.

The Sutherland House is well known to the traveling public. A portion of the building was erected at a very early day, and owned by

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Noah Phelps, who occupied it as a residence. Some additions were subsequently made to the building, and it was then converted into a water-cure establishment. In due course of time the property came into possession of Mr. Glessner, who enlarged the house and opened it as a hotel under the name of the Glessner House. It was run by Mr. Glessner for some years, and then sold to Oscar Warfield, who changed its name to that of the Warfield House. In the summer of 1883 it passed into the hands of its present proprietor, Benjamin Sutherland, who changed its name to the Sutherland House. It has a good run of patrons.

The place known as Copeland's, is on Jackson street, near the public square, and was built for a boarding house, by Van Wagenen.

The Monroe Manufacturing Company was established in 1865, by J. B. Treat, Thomas Patterson, H. W. Whitney, L. T. Pullin and Edward Billings. H. W. Whitney was elected president and secretary, and Thomas Patterson general superintendent. They purchased land and buildings in the vicinity of Jefferson and Racine streets, and opened up a foundry and machine shop. They manufactured agricultural implements and wagons, and did general repairing. In 1873, they were burned out. A short time afterward a stock company was formed, with $40,000 capital. H. W. Whitney was elected president, and J. B. Treat, treasurer. Commodious buildings were erected, and furnished with the most improved patterns of modern machinery. Wagons, and all kinds of agricultural implements are manufactured. The present officers are as follows : J. B. Treat, president; H. W. Whitney, secretary; John Boland, treasurer, and Thomas Wirrich, general superintendent.

SAW MILLS.

The first saw mill in this place was built in 1849 by Bingham & Hulburt. Before completion, however, Mr. Bingham sold out his interest to F. H. West, now of Milwaukee. The mill was then finished and operated for two years, when Hulburt sold out to West. Then Oscar Pinney purchased a one half interest, and the firm became West & Pinney. Pinney was captain in the 5th Wisconsin Battery, Light Artillery, and was fatally wounded at the battle of Stone River. The mill was next owned by J. V. Roberts, who sold it to Jarvis Rattan, now of California, who laid out Rattan's addition to New Mexico, and will be remembered, in connection with the early history of the place. He in turn sold to a Mr. Williams, who run the mill successfully, and engaged in buying black walnut logs and converting them into valuable lumber, for which he received a good price, the venture proving remunerative. Mr. Williams is now farming in California. The property was next purchased by J. T. Dodge, a railroad engineer, but finding his former business better than cutting logs, the mill was abandoned, and has not been in operation since 1880. The premises are now rented by the Planing Mill Company for a log yard.

Near the old saw mill, stands a mill of more recent date and greater capacity. It was built by Churchill, Dodge & Co., in 1874, and has been in operation continually since. J. T. Dodge originally owned a one half interest, but sold out to his brother, A. C. Dodge and Mr. Warrick, since which time it has been operated by Churchill, Warrick & Dodge. They cut annually about three quarters of a million feet of lumber, nearly all of which is used for the manufacture of cheese boxes, and in the manufacture of wagons. The latter class of lumber they sell to dealers, and the former is entirely used by themselves. In connection with this mill they have a factory, known as the Monroe Planing Mill Company Works, which is an industry of considerable importance. It was built in 1858 by N. Churchill, and by him operated until 1866. He then sold a one quarter interest to George Churchill and three quarters to J. T. Dodge. He soon afterward bought back from Dodge a one quarter interest, which he still holds. This factory contains a full set of machinery for planing, making doors, sash, blinds, etc. A set of turning lathes with all needed improvements for a first-class shop, and furnishes employment for about fifteen men, doing a business of about $2,700 annually.

Another mill in the city is known as "Hulburt Saw Mill," which was moved here from Richland Timber in 1872, having previously been set up at Juda. It has always been owned and operated by C. D. Hulburt. It is running only about three months each year. Mr. Hulburt buys logs, and also does custom work. It is equipped with a good engine and a four and one half foot circular saw, and has a capacity of about 5,000 feet per day. Oak and black walnut are the principal logs cut, the former for wagon makers supplies, etc., and the latter for furniture, mainly chairs.

GRIST MILL.

In 1850 the people of Monroe and vicinity were extremely anxious to have in their midst a flouring mill, and to this end a public meeting was called for consultation, and to devise means for securing the same. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested, and a committee appointed to see what could be done, and $2,000 was raised by subscription for a bonus to any responsible party who would build a good mill. The work was undertaken at once by Isaac R. Moulton and Charles Fish, dry goods merchants, who erected the mill according to contract. It was 35x70 feet, including engine room on the ground, the main part being four stories high, having two run of buhrs, and costing them about $12,000, including machinery. About the time of completion they failed in business, having operated the mill but a short time. They sold out, and it was owned by various parties, among whom were Walworth, Moulton and Sutherland. When owned by O. D. Moulton, it was closed out under a mortgage, and again fell into the hands of Walworth, who sold it to Churchill & Bingham. These latter parties went to work with a will, and a determination to make it a success, and to commence with expended over $10,000 in additions and improvements, adding machinery and increasing its capacity to 750 barrels per week. In 1861 Churchill sold his interest to his partner, Bingham, who continued to operate it, and ran it until the time of his death, in 1866. After that time it was rented and managed by different parties until about 1875, when it was closed, and has not been in operation since. It belongs to the Bingham estate, and is now considered dead property.

POSTOFFICE.

The first postoffice in this vicinity was established in 1838, under the name of "New Mexico." It was kept on the site of that village, now included in the southern part of the city, by A. J. Haughton. A few years later the office was merged into the Monroe post office and removed to the site of Monroe. Succeeding Mr. Haughton as postmaster, in turn, came:

Judge Andrick, Jacob Ly Brand, Demas Beach, Charles Hart, John Walworth, C. S. Foster, Alfred Goddard, Edmund Bartlett, D. W. Ball, Z. H. Howe, Mrs. Howe, D. W. Ball, H. Medberry, D. W. Ball and John S. Ball. The latter is present postmaster, and makes one of the most accommodating and efficient officers in the State. The office is well equipped and furnished. It is located on the southeast corner of the court house square.

John S. Ball, the present postmaster of Monroe, was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, July 25, 1844, and came with his parents to Green county in 1849. He was educated in the common schools and at Point Bluff Academy, and also took a course at Bryant & Stratton's Business College. In September, 1866, he was married to Ellen M. Bloom, a daughter of J. S. Bloom, of Monroe. They have been blessed with three children—William H., Edith K. and Carrie M. Mr. Ball is a member of the Methodist Church, where the family worship. He is a strong supporter of the temperance cause.

MONROE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The earliest move toward the organization of fire department in Monroe is found in the records of the village council, under the date of April 14, 1858. At this time the village board passed a resolution authorizing the organization of the German Hook and Ladder Company, to be composed of John Linder, Conrad Ott, J. A. Gleissner, Henry Schneider, Joseph Felber and thirty others.

In 1859 a fire company was organized, which continued in existence some years. In 1861 the secretary of the company ordered an engine from L. Button & Son. The engine came, but the fire company could not pay, and the village would not pay for it, so in 1865 it was returned to the manufacturers. It was used two or three times while here. The early records of the company—if any were kept—cannot now be found. From the records in the hands of the city clerk, it is learned that the following named have served as chief engineer: W. W. Wright, N. Churchill, E. Ruegger and J. S. Harper. The following, at an early day, served as fire wardens: Anton Miller, Abraham Kobb, S. W. Abbott and W. W. Wright.

The first organization was not permanent and for a number of years Monroe was without a very efficient fire organization, but on the 23d of February, 1870, the organization was effected of the present Monroe fire department, and it has since continued in existence, growing in efficiency.

The records in the hands of the secretary of the fire department, so far as relates to the meetings, date from 1873. The regular meeting of that year was held on the 4th of September, at which time the following officers were elected: Chief engineer, Norman Churchill; treasurer, Anton Miller; secretary, Fred Wettengel; trustees, C. E. Adams, A. Buhler and C. D. Corson.

At the annual meeting of the department, held on Aug. 5, 1874, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chief engineer, Norman Churchill; treasurer, Anton Miller; secretary, L. Schuetze; trustees, C. E. Adams, A. Buhler and C. D. Corson.

The next annual meeting was held on the 15th of September, 1875, when officers for the ensuing year were elected, as follows: Chief engineer, N. Churchill; treasurer, Anton Miller; secretary, W. S. Bloom; trustees, Edward Ruegger, C. E. Adams and C. D. Corson. At this meeting the following resolution was passed, and the trustees were appointed a committee to present it to the village board, at its next session:

“Gentlemen: In view of the fact that your fire department has maintained its organization under discouraging circumstances, for the past six years, performing, in the meantime, a vast amount of hard service, for which they have received nothing, as compensation; therefore, in justice to ourselves and for the welfare of our department, we ask that the sum of thirty cents per hour, be paid each member of the fire department for actual service rendered in the extinguishment of fires; each member so paid to be required to furnish a certificate of actual service, signed by the chief engineer and secretary.”

At about this time, the State law relating to the city council electing the chief of fire departments went into effect. The custom has since been, for the department to recommend the person whom they desired for chief, and have the city council confirm it. At a special meeting, held June 6, 1877, it was voted that Edward Ruegger be recommended to the council for the position of chief.

At the annual meeting held on the 11th of September, 1878, the following officers were elected: Chief engineer, Edward Ruegger; treasurer, Anton Miller; secretary, W. S. Bloom; trustees, George Churchill, one year; Charles D. Corson, two years; Fred Wettergel.

In October, 1879, the following officers were chosen: Chief engineer, J. S. Harper; secretary, R. Kohli; treasurer, Charles Corson; trustee, N. Churchill.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

In September, 1880, officers for the ensuing year, were selected as follows: Chief engineer, J. S. Harper; secretary, J. H. Foster; treasurer, C. D. Corson; trustee, (for three years), N. B. Treat.

At the annual meeting, held on the 21st of October, 1881, the following officers were chosen:

Chief engineer, J. S. Harper; secretary, J. H. Foster; treasurer, C. D. Corson; trustee, F. Wettengel.

September 13, 1882, officers were selected for the ensuing year, as follows: Chief engineer, J. S. Harper; treasurer, C. D. Corson; secretary, J. H. Foster; trustee, N. Churchill.

At a meeting held in July, 1883, it was voted to change the time of holding the annual meeting, to the second Wednesday in May, each year. It was further provided that the officers hold over until May, 1884.

In June, 1883, a set of uniforms were purchased by the department at a cost of about $5 each. The uniform consists of a belt cap, and shirt.

The statutes of Wisconsin provide that all insurance agents in the State who insure property in any incorporated village or city, shall pay to the fire department two percent of all the premiums received for the insurance of property. Article VIII of the constitution of the Monroe fire department provides that "the funds accorded to the department under the statute shall be held as a relief fund, and shall not be paid out for any purpose except for relief of members of the department." It is further provided, that "no member shall be entitled to draw relief from the funds of the department except for injuries received while in actual service as a fireman, and under the direction of the department. That the amount of relief furnished to any member for injuries received, shall be determined by a two-thirds vote of all the members present—the amount not to exceed $10 per week to any member." In case of death resulting from injuries received by any member, it is provided that their families shall be cared for in like manner, and $30 be paid to defray funeral expenses. This fund has continued to accumulate, as the department has only paid $100 for relief, and there is not a salaried officer in the department. In September, 1882, the time of the last report, the fund amounted to $1,361.71.

The first engine used for the extinguishment of fire here was a Button hand engine, purchased by the village in 1870. On the 19th of February, 1883, the present steam fire engine was purchased from the La France Steam Fire Engine Company, of Elmira, N. Y., at a cost of $3,000. A hose cart was purchased at the same time for about $125. The department now has 1,500 of hose which cost nearly $1 per foot. The water supply in the city is not very good. The reservoir on Spring square, and a cistern at the court house, are the principal places of resort in times of fire.

The engine house is located on Spring square. It was put up a number of years ago by the village. All the meetings of the department and companies are held here. In March, 1884, the contract for building a new engine house was let to Wash. Hill, of Monroe. It is to be about 60x35 feet in size, two stories high, to cost in the neighborhood of $3,000 and to be located near the site of the present engine house.

In 1884 the Monroe fire department consisted of two companies: the Engine Company No. 1, and the Hook and Ladder Company No. 1.

ENGINE COMPANY, NO. 1.

This company has about sixty members. The officers of the company serving the year preceding May, 1884, were as follows: N. B. Treat, foreman; John Connery, first assistant foreman; J. H. Foster, second assistant foreman; A. F. Lichtenwalder, secretary; F. P. Treat, treasurer; Warren Babbitt, steward. This company holds its meetings on the second Thursday in each month. The following is a list of the members of this company as it stood in March, 1884:

Norman Churchill, Charles Churchill, Robert Miller, Charles Robertson, C. D. Carson, A. M.

RECORD OF FIRES.

In this connection is presented a brief record of the fires that have occurred in the city since the organization of the present Monroe Fire Department. The dry details, as far as possible, are omitted, and the estimates of loss and insurance have been verified by the records of the department and memory of those who were interested in many of the fires or suffered loss.

The first fire after the organization of the department, was that of Jacob Steinman's barn which occurred on the 17th of May, 1870. The department turned out in full force, but upon the arrival of the engine there was no water to be had. So the only thing the foreman could do was to work with the hooks and ladders and buckets, to keep the fire from spreading to adjoining buildings. The loss on the barn was $150; no insurance.

On the 19th of January, 1871, the Center school house burned. The department turned out, but no water could be got in the neighborhood and the building burned to the ground. Loss $7,000; no insurance.

On the 18th of October, 1871, an alarm of fire was given at about 2 o'clock in the morning. The building known as Treat & Durst's block was all ablaze; but owing to the dryness of the material of the buildings the department could do nothing to stop the fire. So they devoted their attention to the surrounding buildings and confined the fire within those limits. The firemen worked four hours. Loss $22,000; insurance, $5,000.

Sept. 15, 1871, A. J. High's dwelling house burned. The department turned out and located the engine at the court house cistern. After putting out all their hose they could not reach the burning building. Loss $1,500; insurance, $1,200.

On the 18th of November, 1871, the dwelling house of Joseph Cross, in the southern portion of the town, burned. The department turned out, but owing to the great distance and the muddy roads, the firemen got there too late to do any good; besides the fact that there was no water to be had. Loss $500; insurance, $400.

On the 11th of January, 1872, the empty dwelling house of William Baxter took fire.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

The department turned out and after half an hour's work with the engine succeeded in quenching the flames. Loss about $100; no insurance.

Feb. 10, 1872, an alarm was sounded at about 2 o'clock, A. M., the American House, owned by Robert B. Allensworth, being on fire. The department turned out in full force, and the engine was set so as to draw from two different cisterns. The firemen worked steadily for four hours, when the fire was put out and the house partially saved. Loss $3,000; insurance, $6,000.

On the 25th of the same month, the dwelling house owned by Mrs. M. Buhler, and occupied by Warren Babbitt, was discovered to be on fire and the alarm was given at about 1 o'clock, A. M. The department turned out, but upon their arrival at the fire no water could be found at which to set the engine. The fire caught the house of Fred Schriener, which was within four feet of Mrs. Buhler's, and both houses were burned to the ground. Loss about $1,500; insurance, $500

On the 13th of April, 1872, the dwelling house owned and occupied by Samuel Copeland near the fair grounds, caught fire, and the alarm was given at about 9 o'clock, A. M. The department arrived in time to save the building, the roof and upper story being partially destroyed. Loss $200; insurance, $500.

On the same day another fire alarm sounded, the county barn at the jail being on fire. The fire was put out, however, before the engine arrived.

On the 6th of June, 1872, the dwelling house of A. Krebley caught fire, but before it got any headway the engine arrived and it was put out. Loss $50; no insurance.

On the 22d of June, 1872, the buildings of the Monroe Manufacturing Company took fire, and the alarm was given at about 6:30 o'clock, p. M. The department turned out in full force, but owing to a scarcity of water they could not work to good advantage. They saved the greater portion of the valuable machinery and kept the fire within limits. It was at one time feared that the fire would reach the south side of the square. Several members of the department were severely hurt by falling timbers. Loss $35,000; insurance, $10,000.

At 1 o'clock, A. M., July 7, 1872, the house of I. C. Solomon took fire and the alarm was sounded. The department turned out and arrived in time to save the house from total destruction. Loss $400; insurance, $800.

On the 5th of October, 1873, the empty dwelling house owned by William Gorham, took fire, and the alarm was given at about 2 o'clock A. M. The department turned out, but upon their arrival no water could be found for the engine; so they worked with buckets to keep the fire from spreading to other buildings. Loss $600; insurance, $500.

On the 15th of February, 1873, the old Monroe House, owned by Harris Poole took fire, and the alarm was given. The department turned out and extinguished the fire before any damage was done.

On the 6th of March, 1873, the furniture factory of Anton Miller took fire, and the alarm was given. The fireman turned out in full force and worked hard, succeeding in putting out the fire before the entire property was destroyed. Loss $2,000; no insurance.

On June 7, 1873, an alarm was sounded at 2:30 o'clock A. M., the house of David Ressigen being on fire. The department turned out, but were unable to render any assistance on account of the distance and lack of water. The house burned to the ground. Loss, $1,000; insurance, $1,200.

Sept. 10, 1873, the dwelling house of Mrs. Burtis took fire, and the department turned out before any serious damage was done. Loss, $150; insured.

On the 12th of September, 1873, the department was called out to a fire in the east part of town. They got as far as the fair grounds, and discovered that it was a house owned by Robert B. Allensworth, and as they saw they could not reach it in time, and no water was to be had, they turned back. Loss, $1,000; insurance, $1,500.

On the 4th of June, 1874, an alarm of fire was sounded, announcing the burning of a barn owned by J. Trockenbrod. It burned to the ground.

Aug. 7, 1874, the barn of J. B. Dunlap caught fire at about 4 o'clock A. M. The department turned out; but when they arrived the barn was all in flames, and no water could be got at; so they worked with hooks and buckets, and kept adjoining buildings from taking fire. A span of ponies burned with the barn. Loss, $800; no insurance.

Sept. 8, 1874, the house of Stephen Patterson caught fire, but the firemen arrived and extinguished it before any serious damage was done.

Sept. 28, 1875, the house of August Schuetze caught fire and was burned to the ground before the alarm was given. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $800.

On the 27th of December, 1875, an alarm of fire was sounded at 12:30 o'clock A. M. The brewery of Jacob Hefty was on fire. The weather being very cold, the members could not get more than one stream upon the fire. They work for seven hours, steadily, and finally succeeded in putting it out. Loss, $12,000; insurance, $5,000.

An alarm of fire was given at 9 o'clock A. M., March 2, 1876, and the Commercial House barn was discovered to be on fire. The department turned out and worked hard. There was great danger that the hotel and other buildings would be burned, but the members succeeded in keeping it confined to the barn. A few days before the department was called out for the same barn, but the fire was put out before they arrived.

On the 18th of March, 1876, an alarm of fire was given—this time the brewery of G. Leuenberger & Co. There being plenty of water near by, the department succeeded in putting out the fire before any serious damage was done. Loss $50.

June 6, 1877, the house of James Fitzgibbons, near the depot, caught fire. The department turned out and extinguished the fire after a damage of $250 had been done.

June 29, 1877, an alarm of fire was sounded, it being the mill of Rood & Co. It was totally destroyed. 'The department turned out, but there being no water near by, they did what they could to save lumber and other buildings in the vicinity. Loss $5,000; no insurance.

Feb. 26, 1878, the dwelling house of G. Leuenberger caught fire. It was quickly put out. Loss $25.

On the 22d of May, 1879, fire was discovered at 11 o'clock P. M., in the Empire block at the southwest corner of the square. The department was soon at work, but did not succeed in stopping the fire until seven buildings were destroyed.

May 20, 1881, an alarm of fire was given, and the department turned out and extinguished a fire upon a building owned by Peter Wells, on Farmer's street. The building was partially burned.

An alarm was sounded on the 22d of November, 1881. This time it was a building owned by E. R. Copeland, near the northwest corner of the square. The department soon put out the fire. Loss $112.

The alarm sounded again May 10, 1882. A building owned by Conrad Keller burned to the ground. Loss $1,050.

Aug. 8, 1882, the department turned out in answer to an alarm, and put out a fire in the rear end of the basement of McKee's block, occupied by Mr. Klebb, with a saloon.

Oct. 27, 1882, the department were again called out, and extinguished a fire in a house owned by A. Buhler. Loss about $150.

RELIGIOUS.

The first Methodist preacher in Green county was Rev. DeLap. Other early preachers were Revs. Harcourt and Ash. Meetings were held in an early day at the house of Elijah Austin and Enoch Evans, in the town of Clarno. Shortly after the school house was built on the present site of the city of Monroe, a class was formed there. In January, 1842, Jacob Ly Brand deeded to the trustees, a lot situated on Washington street, in consideration that they build a church there. The following named were the trustees at that time : Rev. Robert De Lap, Asa Brown, Elijah Austin, Enoch Evans and Joseph Wardle. The church was built. It was a plain frame structure, and the first church building erected in the city. In 1858 it was remodeled, and was used until 1869, when the present building was erected at a cost of $17,000. It is a handsome building of Milwaukee brick. The names of the different pastors who have served here are as follows : Allen Dudgeon, Butler Drew, Wilson Williams, McGinley Swetland, Wirrich Springer, Tasker Burton, Crandall Aspen wall, Wilson Palmer, Kellogg Bushby, Evans Irish and Searles Deite, the present pastor.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

Early in 1883 a series of meetings were held by Rev. D. R. Glover, assisted by George Little, an evangelist from Pennsylvania. Many were converted and a class organized of about fifty members, with Moses Witham, class leader; Elias Walters, Laura Eley and Mrs. Agnes Corson, stewards; Elias Walters, William Ault, E. Woodle, D. A. Duncan and Levi Duncan, trustees. The class was increased to some extent since its organization. They met for worship in the Congregational church. Rev. D. R. Glover is still pastor. A union Sabbath school is held with the Congregationalists.

THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL REFORMED CHURCH.

The church building of this denomination was erected in 1869. The building committee was Albert Albright and Peter Lichtenwalner; the treasurer, Robert Shaw. This church was organized by Rev. Donmeyer. The first preacher was Rev. John Bloom, The original members of the society were: E. Albright, Robert Shaw, Mary Shaw, Joseph Lichtenwalner, Peter and Sarah Lichtenwalner, and Benjamin Neaz—five male and two female members. This little band erected the church. The building is 36x40 feet in size, and cost $2,200. Rev. Bloom was succeeded in turn by Rev. Hammon, who remained four years; then Rev. Reese, two years; Rev. Rupley, two years, and Rev. Grosscup, the present pastor. Services are held every Sunday. The society started under very discouraging circumstances, but by perseverance they have succeeded and are now in a flourishing condition. The Sabbath school was organized about thirty years ago.

GERMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The first members of this Church were Mr. Esser, Jacob Meyers and Andrew Wyman. The church building was erected in 1859 or 1860, at a cost of $1,000. Father Obermiller was priest at the time the church was built. Among the prominent workers in this Church at that time were: Joseph Gleissner, Andrew Wyman, George Reinhart, Stephen Sickinger, Frank Frey, George Sickinger, Joseph Shaver, Henry Wilbers and Jacob Kimpster. There are now about twenty families members of this Church. Rev. H. O'Brien was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1844. His parents were natives of Ireland and emigrated to America in 1841. When sixteen years old he was sent to St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, where he remained eight years. In 1868 he was ordained and sent to Watertown, Wis., where he remained a short time and went to Elba, thence to a station near Milwaukee. In the fall of 1883 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. Father O'Brien is a man of more than ordinary ability, and of fine address.

ST. VICTOR'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The first mission from which the present Church grew, was established late in the decade between 1830 and 1840. Father J. Colton, who was then stationed at Shullsburg, came through this county for a number of years, holding services. In 1860 a church building was erected and the organization was made permanent. Father H. F. Sullivan was stationed here at the time, and remained six years. He was succeeded by William O'Connell, who remained one year; then in succession came Thomas Murphy one year; J. Casey three years; Michael Wenker, one year; E. M. McGinnity, until 1880; Rev. Wrynn, until September, 1883, and Father H. O. Brunn, the present pastor. Father Brunn also has charge of the mission in the town of Adams. Among the first and prominent workers in this Church were the following, with their families, some were living in Adams and others in Monroe: Patrick Sheehy, C. Dillon, John Gettings, Patrick Shean, Roger Getting, Michael Crotty, Martin Mullen, John Michaels, Peter O'Donnell, Daniel Flynn, Edward Burry, Morgan and Moses O'Brian, John Murphy, Patrick Murphy, John McManus, Thomas Coyan, Patrick Masterson, Thomas Maley, Patrick Maley, John and Richard McGraw, Michael McCogg, T. Riley, Walter Dunlavey and James Riley. The church building, as stated, was erected in 1860. It is 40x50 feet in size and cost $3,000. In 1870 the building was enlarged to 40x90 feet. A neat parsonage has been erected at a cost of $1,800. The church is in a good condition, the membership numbering 120 families. In the town of Adams, there are seventy-five families. The present officers are: William Hogan, R. Gettings, Michael Herne, Patrick Shean, John Gibbons and William McCurry. There is a Sunday school in connection, which is in a flourishing condition.

EVANGELICAL, OR GERMAN METHODIST.

The first meetings of the Evangelical Association were held in 1859, at the old school house, by Rev. Jacob Sill, then stationed at New Glarus. The Church was organized in 1860, by Rev. Andreas Tarnutzer, with seven members, as follows: John J. Ruegger and wife, John Staller and wife, Catharine Shindler, Mary Glohr and Henry Becker. The pastors have been as follows:

Revs. Andreas Tarnutzer, who was stationed at New Glarus; Tenohard Von Wald, resident pastor, remained two years; J. G. Esslinger, two years; W. F. Schnider, one year; C. F. Finger, two years; William Hudster, two years; J. M. Hammeter, two years; Leonard Buchler, three years; J. C. Brendel, two years; Henry Uphoff, three years; Peter Held, two years; C. Grum and A. Lahr, the present pastor, who has been here two years. The first trustees were J. J. Reugger, Ulrich Losli and J. Bowman. The first church building was erected in 1859, by John Staller and Henry Schindler, at a cost of $200, and was known as the "Staller church." In 1863 a new church building was erected, 32x48 feet in size, at a cost of $1,400, which is still used. The old church was moved back and used as a parsonage. At present the church is in a good condition, numbering about ninety members. There is a Sabbath school in connection, which has about seventy members. The present trustees of the church are: Herman G. Gloege, Henry Babler and Frederick Cramer. The Sunday school has a library containing 250 volumes. The officers are as follows: Herman Gloege, superintendent; Frederick Kramer, assistant; Henry Babler, secretary; Jacob Frautschy, treasurer; William Bauman, librarian. There are fifteen teachers.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Rev. Charles A. Boardman, late pastor of the Presbyterian Church, in Youngstown, Ohio, in connection with the Presbytery of Trumbull, having arrived at Monroe, Oct. 26, 1854, with the design of spending the remainder of his days under the care of his daughter, Mrs. Orinda S. McEwen, began to preach in Monroe, on Sabbath, Oct. 29, 1854. A remnant of a Presbyterian Church, with two resident elders and a few members—the whole in a state of disintegration—was found in Monroe; but there was no church edifice belonging to either the Presbyterian or Congregational denomination in the town. A church building occupied by the Christians and one belonging to the Methodists, were the only houses for public worship then in the village. By the labors of Deacon Robert Love, who resided here but a few months, the seminary building was obtained as a place for worship, and a small audience regularly assembled on the Sabbath. It was soon decided by a majority of the members that Congregationalism was preferred. Mr. Boardman continued to preach, and after a few weeks the formation of a Congregational Church began to be talked of, and at length, on Sabbath, Dec. 17, 1854, a notice was published from the pulpit, calling a meeting on the following Thursday, of all those interested in the formation of a Congregational Society. This agitation culminated on the 28th of December, 1854, in the organization of a society and the adoption of a constitution. The first members were as follows: Robert Love, Martha M. Love, Benjamin I. and Abigail Tenny, Charles C. and Elizabeth Righter, John H. and Mary Bloom, Thomas Dumars, Ared White, Mrs. Sarah B. Morse, Mrs. Orinda McEwen, Homer Boardman, George W. Tenny and Thomas M. Dunbar. On March 3, 1855, Benjamin I. Tenny and Robert Love were elected deacons. Rev. Boardman supplied the pulpit until July, 1858, when he was succeeded by Rev. D. H. Blake, of the Union Theological Seminary, New York. On the 19th of December, 1858, Rev. S. E. Miner, became pastor. Since that time, the following named have filled the pulpit for the society: Revs. E. Morris, J. B. Fairbanks, George B. Rowley, of Camden, N. Y.; H. A. Miner, of Menasha, Norman McLeod, A. J. Bailey and T. A. Gardner. Services were held in the seminary building, then in the court house until the erection of their church edifice, in 1860. Death and removals have reduced the membership greatly.

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH.

In 1859 Rev. Jehabad Coddling, a Universalist preacher came to Monroe and delivered a course of lectures in the court house. Mr. Coddling is well remembered as being one of the most noted abolitionists in the county, and one who trained with such men as Garrison, Sumner, Phillips and Lovejoy. Sumner pronounced him to be one of the most brilliant orators in the United States. It was through his influence that the Universalists of Monroe were brought together. In 1860 a society was organized at the Christian church by Rev. Z. H. Howe. Among the early members were: J. B., N. B. and E. T. Treat, Norman Churchill and wife, Hiram Rust, C. S. Foster and wife, A. Ludlow and wife, J. A. Bingham, Asa and J. V. Richardson, and Peter and Jerry Chandler. Early in 1860 a stock company was formed to build a church, and ground was broken in March of that year. They were unable to pay, and before the building was finished it was sold on a mechanic's lien, but was bought in for the stockholders. A subscription was started, of which H. W. Whitney was the prime mover. The people subscribed liberally, and the debt was soon cleared up, and to-day, though small in numbers, the organization is strong financially. The building cost about $12,500, including a beautiful pipe organ of seventeen stops. The first services held in this house was the funeral of Oscar F. Pinney, captain of the 5th battery, Wisconsin Light Artillery, killed at the battle of Stone River in 1863. The first minister was Rev. L. Conger, who remained three years. He was succeeded by Rev. Butler, who remained between four and five years. Then came a Unitarian minister—Rev. Powell, who preached here two years. He was succeeded by Rev. Fisher, another Unitarian minister, who remained with them three years. At this time the building was in need of repairs, and for two or three years no services were held. The next to occupy the pulpit was Rev. L. W. Brigham, who closed his engagement in April, 1884. The first trustees of this Church were H. W. Whitney, A. Ludlow and Norman Churchill. Before the completion of the building J. T. Dodge, C. S. Foster and L. Wolcott were also appointed trustees. The present trustees are Henry Ludlow, J. B. Treat and Norman Churchill. The lot on which the church stands was donated by Jacob Ly Brand, one of the founders of the city of Monroe. This was the last piece of land Mr. Ly Brand owned in the State of Wisconsin. The church is built of brick and stone, in Romanesque style, low tower and circular openings. It was dedicated June 24, 1883. Rev. D. P. Livermore, of Chicago, preached the dedicatory sermon. The congregation at the present time is made up of about equal numbers of Universalists and Unitarians.

SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS.

The first meeting of this denomination, in Monroe, was held in the court house in 1860, with William S. Ingraham as pastor. The class was organized in October, 1861, with twenty-five members. The first officers were as follows: George Adair, elder; Matthew Hackworth, deacon; and J. H. Franenfelder, clerk. They held services in the court house until 1864, when they purchased a church building of the New Lights or Christians. It was located on Washington street, one block west of the court house square. In 1869 they sold that building and erected a new one on Clinton street, south of the railroad. They now have forty-five members. The present officers are as follows: E. R. Gillett, elder; William Kerr, first deacon; A. C. Atwood, second deacon; and M. S. Gillett, clerk. The pastors who have succeeded each other in charge of this congregation are: William S. Ingraham, Isaac Sanborn, G. C. Tenny and William Sharp. The Sabbath school was organized in 1864 with M. Hackworth as superintendent. A. T. Atwood is the present superintendent.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Shortly after the war, three missionaries of the Episcopal faith, from Milwaukee, came to Monroe and held services in the court house. While the people of that denomination were of good cheer, a minister, Rev. Wright, came here from Janesville and organized a class at Temperance Hall. Among the first members were: John J. Cook and wife, Henry George and wife, Dr. Johnson and wife, and George King and wife. Services were held in Temperance Hall for about a year, when a frame church was erected. Many pastors have held forth in this Church, but at the present time the pulpit is empty.

CHRISTIAN OR DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

The first Church of this denomination was organized in about 1848. Among the first members were: James L. Powell and family, George Eley, William Hodges and wife, James and John Ely, and Mr. Parks. The first preacher was Rev. Elijah Gleason, who held the first services at the house of William Hodges. The Church flourished and continued in existence until the breaking out of the war, when many of the families moved away, and the Church was broken up and the organization finally abandoned. In 1871 the members of this denomination again began meeting for worship. On the 30th of November, Rev. Charles W. Sherwood began preaching in the Universalist house of worship. He continued to hold services irregularly until a Church was organized on the 2d of February, 1872. The charter members were as follows: William Monroe, George Eley, Emily J. Nance, Michael, Felix, Catharine H. and Elizabeth Bennett. The society rented the Baptist church at $1.50 per night and held services there, as the Church record says, "until the Baptists permitted the house to be locked against us, without notice; until our congregation met at the house on the evening of June 24, 1872, and found the house locked." After this services were held in the various churches until 1873 when a church was erected. The building committee was composed of John H. Bridge, William Hodges and William Monroe, and these gentlemen all contributed very liberally toward the erection of the edifice. The building was so nearly completed Sept. 7, 1873, that services were then held in it by Rev. C. W. Sherwood, aided by Rev. R. D. Cotton. The first officers elected were: Secretary,

The first full set of officers elected as shown by the records were as follows: Elders, John H. Bridge and D. G. Nance; deacons, N. A. Loofbourow, Felix Bennett, Fletcher Buzick and J. B. Vandervoort; treasurer, Felix Bennett; secretary and clerk, J. T. McKibben. The pastors who have had charge of this congregation are Elders D. R. Howe, G. L. Brokaw and Norton. Elder Howe is the present pastor. The cost of the church was $2,600. They have a membership of 100. The present officers are: D. G. Manie, D. R. Howe and J. H. Armstrong, elders; L. D. Vanmatre, Felix Bennett and Grant Sutherland, deacons; and Joseph McKibben, clerk.

CIVIC SOCIETIES.

Knights of Pythias, Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 41, was organized Feb. 14, 1883. The following were the charter members: J. B. Treat, A. S. Douglas, George W. Doty, H. D. Fuller, S. M. Hughes, J. S. Reynolds, V. A. Riton, Frank Turner, William Ludlow, P. W. Puffer, E. G. Green, N. A. Loughburrow, G. H. Wedge, S. E. Gardner, William Monrow, Robert Miller, T. W. Goldin, A. J. Worthington, A. F. Glasscott, T. Crago, William P. Bragg, T. W. Goldin, A. J. Worthington, A. F. Glasscott, T. Crago, W. P. Bragg, Ogden H. Feathers, G. C.; J. A. Hinsley, P. G. C.; C. B. McClure, G. P.; W. C. Williams, G. V. C.; Frank Kraus, G. M. of E.; Frank Jones, G. M. of A.; H. L. Kebest, G. I. G. J. A. Scott, G. V. G. L. W. Coe, G. K. and R. S. The first officers were as follows: A. S. Douglas, P. C.; J. B. Treat, C. C.; J. S. Reynolds, V. C.; N. A. Loofburrow, P.; William Ludlow, M. of E.; P. W. Puffer, M. of F.; G. W. Doty, K. of R. S.; S. E. Gardner, M. of A.; Frank Turner, I. G.; S. M. Hughes, O. G.

The lodge has prospered, and now is in good condition, having forty members. The present officers are: J. B. Treat, P. C.; N. A. Loofburrow, C. C.; H. D. Fuller, V. C.; T. W. Goldin, P.;

Robert Miller, M. of F.; William P. Bragg, M. of Ex.; S. Schrake, K. of R. and G.; G. T. Hodges, M. of A.; Frank Turner, I. G.; A. J. Worthington, O. G.

Concordia Lodge, No. 124, I. O. O. F., was organized on the 14th of March, 1867. The first officers were: Lewis Ullman, N. G.; Edward Ruegger, V. G.; Louis Schuetze, Sec. and P. S.; J. A. Gleissner; trustees, Anton Miller, Andrew Buehler and John Linder. The following were the charter members: Lewis Ullman, J. A. Gleissner, Anton Miller, Edward Ruegger, John Linder and A. Buehler. The following became members on the night of organization: Louis Schuetze, Samuel Shuler, H. Hoehn, A. Wetingel, John Shuler, L. Sickinger, F. Stirling, John Kappel and Henry Watter. The lodge has had, in all, a membership of 139. The present membership is sixty-nine. The past grand's have been as follows: A. Buehler, L. Schuetze, G. Leuenberger, H. Watter, J. Detwiler, L. Kochler, S. Schuler, R. Buri, C. Zimmer, E. Ruegger, L. Sickinger, J. Schnipp, D. German, J. Rufi, T. Hafner, C. Grochowsky, G. Witterer, A. Aberdroth and John Blum. There have been two deaths in the order. The lodge has flourished, and is in good financial standing, having $2,328.60 in the treasury, $2,138 of which is in cash and notes. The present officers are as follows: Nicholas Gerber, N. G.; John Fuchs, V. G.; Carl F. Ruff, R. S. and P. S.; Louis Schuetze, treasurer.

Germania Lodge, A. O. U. W., was organized July 16, 1881, with nineteen members, as follows: R. Fuelleman, G. Wittmer, R. Buri, F. Grunert, R. Schneider, C. Goetz, William Hersig, R. Lowenbach, E. Ruegger, F. Hoffner, L. Sickinger, F. W. Byers, P. Wohlwend, C. Kundert, A. Tschobold and J. Biller. The first officers were: R. Fuelleman, P. M.; G. Wittmer, master; B. Buri, treasurer; R. Schneider, overseer; C. Kundert, guide; F. Grunert, secretary; L. Sickinger, cashier; C. Goetz, F.; J. Biller, G.; W. Hersig, O. G. At present there is a a membership of forty-six in good standing. There have been two deaths of members—J. Witmer and C. Getz.

Forest City Lodge, No. 44, A. O. U. W., was organized Aug. 31, 1878, by A. Tasey, deputy grand master of the State. The charter members were as follows: A. J. Kane, C. E. Evans, W. S. Bloom, S. C. Cheeney, W. H. Cheeney, George W. Banks, D. S. Young, F. C. Bennett, A. F. Glasscott, N. A. Loofbourow, A. F. Lichtenwalner, F. Wettengel, J. H. Strawser, W. H. Miller, C. J. McCracken, Thomas Weirich, R. T. Blair, J. A. Barling and John Kleckner. The first officers were as follows: C. E. Adams, P. M. W.; A. J. Kane, M. W.; S. C. Cheeney, foreman; C. D. Corson, O.; G. W. Banks, recorder; F. Wettengel, financier; W. S. Bloom, R.; W. D. Matthews, guide; U. F. Zeigler, I. S.; J. A. Barling, O. S.; Dr. Loofbourow, Med. Ex. The present officers are: J. W. Edleman, P. M. W.; S. P. Schadel, M. W.; E. Busby, foreman; George Durgan, O.; A. F. Lichtenwalner, recorder; A. F. Glasscott, financier; F. C. Bennett, R.; W. H. Weaver, guide; S. O. Shult, I. W.; A. J. Lizer, O. W.; Dr. Loofbourow, Med. Ex. There is at present sixty-two members. There has been two deaths—J. C. Barber and John Sisson.

A lodge of the Sons of Temperance was instituted on the 25th of April, 1848. The charter members were J. V. Richardson, Alfred Goddard, C. S. Foster, John Walworth, S. P. Condee, Dr. J. C. Crawford, Charles Weaver, A. Ludlow, Fred. F. West, W. C. Fillebrown, L. Hurlbut, William Tucker, Milton H. Reed and F. Emmerson. The first officers were: J. C. Crawford, W. P.; F. F. West, W. A.; J. V. Richardson, R. S.; Charles S. Foster, A. R. S.; A. Ludlow, F. S.; Francis Emerson, T.; Milton H. Reed, C.; W. C. Fillebrown, A. C.; S. P. Condee, O. S. S.; John Walworth, chaplain. The whole membership of this lodge during its existence was about 275. This order was finally, in about 1858, merged into the Good Templars, and a few years later suspended.

In January, 1864, it was again organized as the Monroe Lodge No. 218 and is still in existence, having prospered. It now has a membership of about eighty in good standing. The present officers are as follows: A. C. Dodge, W. C. T.; Mrs. Charles Corson, V. W. C. T.; Norman Churchill, D. W. C. T.; Cora Corson, R. S.; Silas Judd, F. S.; Rose White, T.; Rev. L. W. Brigham, P. W. C. T.; Mrs. J. C. Cook, Chap.; Ernest Gorham, marshal; Ada Caughey, I. S. G.; Henry Caughey, O. S. G. The Good Templars hall is well furnished, and cost about $1,800.

The Washingtonian Temple of Honor, No. 41, was organized in 1876.

O. F. PENNEY POST, NO. 102, DEPARTMENT OF WISCONSIN, G. A. R.,

was organized on the 20th of August, 1883, by chief mustering officer, L. O. Holmes, and comrades from W. H. Sargent Post, No. 20, E. Hoyt Post, No. 69, and W. W. Patton Post, No. 90. On motion of comrade S. C. Cheney, the following were selected as a committee to choose a name for the post, W. F. Boyd, Samuel Lewis and A. F. Glasscott. The committee reported the name, O. F. Penney Post, No. 102, which was duly accepted. The first officers were as follows:

S. C. Cheney, post commander; S. E. Gardner, senior vice commander; W. J. Miller, junior vice commander; J. C. Hall, surgeon; Nelson Darling, officer of the day; S. P. Shadel, chaplain; A. F. Glasscott, quartermaster; C. H. Robinson, officer of the guard; C. E. Tanberg, adjutant; J. C. Baker, sergeant major, and M. P. Maine, quartermaster sergeant. The following comrades were mustered: F. W. Byrne, B. S. Kerr, Samuel Lewis, George O. Putzash, Joseph Wetzler and J. C. Smith.

The post meets on the second and fourth Thursdays in each month, and there are now seventy-two men on the roll call. The post has been in camp twice, at Racine in 1882, and at Janesville in 1883.

The Monroe Brass Band was organized in 1853 with the following members: M. S. Corson, Charles D. Corson, H T. Corson, W. H. Corson, A. V. Corson, Joseph Davies, D. T. Lindley and Jacob Davies. M. S. Corson was leader. The organization was kept together until 1859, when several of the members went to California. There were several others who took an active part in the band—C. A. Booth, George W. Tenny, George Churchill, Joseph Mabott, G. H. King, Jabez Stearns, Hank Rowley, John Zeigler, A. Clark and Daniel Cady. The band was composed of the best young men in the town, and they became quite good musicians. At that time there were but few bands in the State. The band in Monroe at the present time is called Monroe Cornet Band, and is one of the best in the State.

They have magnificent uniforms and a splendid set of silver instruments.

MONROE RIFLE CLUB.

This club was organized on the 18th of October, 1869, with the following officers: Edward Ruegger, president; B. Tschudy, vice-president; Henry Hoehn, secretary; John Schuler, treasurer. There are at present twenty-two members in good standing. In July, 1882, the Monroe team took part in the tournament at Milwaukee, and carried away the first prize against fourteen other competing teams. In 1876 they were represented in Philadelphia. They have a park of six acres, about a mile and a half east of the city, and a target and shooting house. The club is out of debt, and owns property valued at $1,200. They use the Ballard breech loading guns.

THE CITY GUARDS.

The Monroe City Guards, company H., was organized March 28, 1882: Samuel J. Lewis, captain; S. P. Tschudy, 1st lieutenant; Andrew Arnot, 2d lieutenant; J. D. Dunwiddie, 1st sergeant; D. A. Stearns, 2d sergeant; R. D. Evans, 3d sergeant; George Voight, 4th sergeant; F. E. McLean, 5th sergeant; C. S. Young, 1st corporal; William Blunt, 2d corporal; William Gibbons, 3d corporal; C. B. They have an arsenal 20x60 feet, with sixty stand of arms. The company is composed of the best of Monroe's young men, and is a company of which the city may well be proud.

THE ROYAL ARCANUM.

[By Prof. N. C. Twining.]

This beneficent order was incorporated under the general laws of Massachusetts, Nov. 5, 1877. The Royal Arcanum is a beneficiary secret order. Several gentlemen, residents of Boston, felt that there was great need of a social order, not altogether unlike existing orders, but, while it should combine all their best points, it should also contain other and prominent features of a purely beneficiary character. It is well calculated to meet the growing demand for a larger death benefit than any kindred organization existing. While it is intended to be the competitor of none, one of its aims is to labor with all in promoting the cause of benevolence, charity and fraternity. The lapse of time is sure to be followed by cold indifference, seeming unconcern, and to a certain degree, neglect; thus, it was felt, the societies already existing, boasting of ancient origin, even in Biblical times, had become largely negligent of duty, alarmingly indifferent to the just claims of their members, eminently unsocial, even in their closest relations. The charter members of the Royal Arcanum, who laid the foundation of the order, are gentlemen of broad culture and wide experience representing every secret order in our land worthy of Christian membership; hence they had the broadest field possible, as limitless as the historical past, as expansive as the living present, from which to select the pillars, the essence and strength of their new order. How well they have accomplished their self-imposed task, we leave the candid reader to judge from the fruits of their labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ORDER.

1. To unite fraternally all white men of sound bodily health and good moral character, who are socially acceptable and between twenty-one and fifty-five years of age.
2. To give all moral and material aid in its power to its members and those dependent upon them.
3. To educate its members socially, morally and intellectually; also, to assist the widows and orphans of deceased members.
4. To establish a fund for the relief of sick and distressed members.
5. To establish a Widows' and Orphans' Benefit Fund, from which, upon the satisfactory evidence of the death of a member of the order, who has complied with all its lawful requirements, a sum not exceeding $3,000 shall be paid to his family or those dependent upon him, as he may direct.

It will be seen upon a careful reading of the above enumerated objects of the order, that a perfect fraternal union, a cemented brotherhood, a united social order has been outlined. One feature is so vital, so characteristically unselfish, that it must claim the attention and receive the plaudits of men, thinking, sober men; the absolutely untrammelled benevolence to the living, suffering brother, the unselfish Christian charity bestowed upon the widow and orphans. The government of the order is under the control of a supreme council, grand council and the local subordinate councils, scattered, as other societies are, wherever they are organized. The supreme council is composed of members elected by State or grand councils, The grand councils, or State councils, are composed of members elected by the local councils; each member of the grand council must be a past regent of a subordinate council.

The order has but one degree, having properly received this, the brother is entitled to all the benefits and emoluments enumerated in constitution and by laws.

We now call attention to and ask a careful consideration of the following condensed table containing the rates for the Widows and Orphans Benefit Fund. It will be perceived that the ages between twenty-one and fifty-five years are given, and the assessments upon members joining, having attained to the specified year of age:

Between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-two, -----	$1.00.
Between the ages of twenty-two and twenty-three, ----	$1.04.
Between the ages of twenty-three and twenty-four, ---	$1.08
Between the ages of twenty-four and twenty-five, ----	$1.12.
Between the ages of twenty-five and twenty-six, -----	$1.16.
Between the ages of twenty-six and twenty-seven, ----	$1.20.
Between the ages of twenty-seven and twenty-eight, --	$1.24.
Between the ages of twenty-eight and twenty-nine, ---	$1.28.
Between the ages of twenty-nine and thirty, -----	$1.32.
Between the ages of thirty and thirty-one, -----	$1.38.
Between the ages of thirty one and thirty-two, -----	$1.44.
Between the ages of thirty-two and thirty-three, -----	$1.50.
Between the ages of thirty—three and thirty-four, ----	$1.56.
Between the ages of thirty-four and thirty-five, -----	$1.62.
Between the ages of thirty-five and thirty-six, -----	$1.68.
Between the ages of thirty-six and thirty-seven, -----	$1.74.
Between the ages of thirty-seven and thirty-eight, ----	$1.80.
Between the ages of thirty-eight and thirty-nine, -----	$1.86.
Between the ages of thirty-nine and forty, -----	$1.96.
Between the ages of forty and forty-one, -----	$2.06.
Between the ages of forty- one and forty-two, -----	$2.16.
Between the ages of forty-two and forty three, -----	$2.26.
Between the ages of forty-three and forty-four, -----	$2.36.
Between the ages of forty-four and forty- five, -----	$2.46.
Between the ages of forty-five and forty-six, -----	$2.58.
Between the ages of forty-six and forty-seven, -----	$2.70.
Between the ages of forty-seven and forty-eight, -----	$2 82.
Between the ages of forty-eight and forty-nine, -----	$2 96.
Between the ages of forty-nine and fifty, -----	$3.10.
Between the ages of fifty and fifty-one, -----	$3.26.
Between the ages of fifty- one and fifty-two, -----	$3 42.
Between the ages of fifty-two and fifty-three, -----	$3.60.
Between the ages of fifty-three and fifty-four, -----	$3.80.
Between the ages of fifty-four and fifty-five, -----	$4.00.

The explanation of the above table is easy! A man at twenty-one years old, not having reached his twenty-second year, will pay an assessment of $1, and receive a benefit certificate for $3,000, or by paying fifty cents per assessment, will receive a benefit certificate for $1,500, to be paid in either case, to widow, orphans, or to whomsoever he may direct, provided always that the one receiving the benefit is a dependent upon the deceased brother, thus cutting off all speculation.

COST OF JOINING THE ORDER.

Each member at initiation must pay to the collector as follows:

An initiation fee, at least -----	$5.00
For medical examination, including both local and State examinations -----	$2.50
One quarter's dues, in advance -----	$1.00
For Benefit Certificate -----	$1.00
One assessment, in advance, if 21 years old -----	$1.00
Total cost to members at 21 -----	$10.50.

This will be found to vary somewhat. The initiation must be $5, at least—may be more. The dues may be more or less than $4 per annum, governed entirely by the expenses incurred by running the local-council. As there is but one degree, but two medical examinations and one benefit certificate, the expense—$8.50—will never recur, but dues and assessments must necessarily recur; dues either quarterly, semi-annually or annually, entirely at the option of the local council. The assessment recurs, not at regular intervals, and yet it may be looked for quite regular, at least from seven to ten times per year; the brother has forty days in which to pay the assessment.

Suppose a man joins who is between forty and forty-one, please note the cost to him the first year, on the supposition that ten assessments are called to the supreme treasury:

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Initiation -----	$5.00
Medical examination-----	$2.50
Benefit Certificate -----	$1.00
Dues in advance -----	$4.00
Ten assessments, $2.06 each-----	$20.60
Total cost of first year -----	$33.10
Deduct initiation, medical examinations, Benefit Certificate, as these will not be repeated -----	$8.50
Total cost each year -----	$24.60

This is the total cost each year on a benefit certificate of $3,000, or $12.30 on a benefit certificate of $1,500, payable in either case to his widow and orphans at his death, within thirty days. We are aware that this unselfish benevolence, this Christian charity of this noble order, has caused insurance companies to reduce their rates; has invited, or rather called into being, other kindred orders, yet not one of them can present a claim to higher standing as a purely beneficent order, not one of them pays as large a benefit as the Royal Arcanum. Each brother that dies in the order costs the one who joins at twenty-one years of age about two cents. There have died since the organization of the order, in 1877, 1,014 members in good standing, the widows and orphans of whom have received the amount of their benefit certificates, if full benefit, $3,000, if one-half benefit, $1,500 each; 1,014 deaths at two cents each amount to $20.28! Again: Each member that dies in good standing costs the man who joins at forty years of age about six cents. The 1,014 deaths at six cents each amount to $60.84! To resume:

The one joining at twenty-one years of age in 1877, at the time of the organization of the order, would now hold receipts showing that he has paid, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of deceased brothers, $20.28, and holds his benefit certificate for $3,000, which will be paid to his heirs or devisees within thirty days after his death. Similarly, the man joining at forty years of age would hold receipts showing that he had paid $60.84 for the relief of widows and orphans of deceased brothers, and also his benefit certificate, securing to his widow and orphans, or devisees, $3,000, within thirty days after his death. Since the organization of the order fifty-seven assessments have been called to the supreme treasury, and an order issued to collectors to collect assessment fifty-eight by June 11, 1884.

We desire to call attention to this last call for members to pay another assessment. I will say right here these calls include about thirty-five deaths each; the present one, number fifty-eight, includes the number of deaths from Feb. 27, 1884, to April 10, 1884, a period of forty-three days. The order has about 70,000 members at present, hence the death rate is about five members to each 10,000 for the forty-three days. The principal cause for this low rate is the extreme rigidity of the medical examinations. The thirty-five members whose deaths make up the last call paid into the supreme treasury the sum of $1,497.32. Their widows and orphans, or devisees, drew from the supreme treasury, on the benefit certificates held by themselves, $103,500! Kind reader, consider the virtue, mercy, charity of the noble order. Well may it claim for itself leadership in the attempt to establish and maintain an order purely beneficiary. The youngest in this death list of thirty-five was twenty-three when initiated in 1879. As he died March 1, 1884, he had paid $48.60 into the supreme treasury—his heirs have received ere this the $3,000 from the supreme treasury. The oldest in the above list was initiated at fifty-five July 18, 1879, dying Feb. 24, 1884. He had paid into the supreme treasury $180.60—his heirs have received before this time, May, 1884, the full amount of his benefit certificate, $3,000, from the supreme treasury. When the order was organized the applicant for membership must be between twenty-one and sixty years of age. The requirement now limits the superior number to fifty-five. The average age in the above death list at initiation was less than forty years, being thirty-nine years and a fraction. Now that we have given the order in general a brief notice, we invite the attention of the reader to the subordinate council at Monroe, being the only council in Green county. In the summer of 1881 several citizens of Monroe became interested in the Royal Arcanum, and after some weeks consultation, asked Paul Binner, of Occident Council, Milwaukee, Wis., to come and institute a council at Monroe. Accordingly, on Aug. 30, 1881, Perseverance Council, No. 613, Monroe, Green Co., Wis., was organized, embracing some of the most public spirited and intelligent men of the city, eighteen in all. The following is a list of the charter members: N. A. Loofbourow, M. D., E. H. Austin, Charles Ball, S. C. Cheney, William S. Davenport, J. W. Edelman, J. W. Faubell, S. E. Gardner, A. F. Glascott, W. G. Koken, R. F. Lund, Robert Start, A. C. Stuntz, Frank Turner, R. C. Whitcomb, William Zilmer and N. C. Twining. The following officers were elected for the year ending Dec. 31, 1881: N. C. Twining, regent; A. F. Glascott, vice-regent; A. C. Stuntz, past regent; W. S. Davenport, secretary; R. F. Lund, collector; W. C. Whitcomb, treasurer; Robert Start, chaplain; E. H. Austin, guide; Frank Turner, warden; W. G. Koken, sentinel.

The officers elect were duly installed, and the council was declared legally instituted, and possessing the powers of a subordinate council of the Royal Arcanum under the jurisdiction of the grand council of the State of Wisconsin. Brothers S. E. Gardner, Charles Ball and William Zilmer were elected trustees. Dr. N. A. Loofbourow was elected local examiner, or examining physician, which responsible position he has filled with great credit to himself and advantage to the council ever since. From the very day of its birth, this local council at Monroe, has prospered; the more its members know of it, the more they are attached to it; perhaps it is enough to say, the ladies regard it with high favor; well they may, for it aims at the welfare, and also at the well-being of their infant and dependent children. Although Perseverance Council has met with no loss by death among its members, it has contributed with a willing grace to emancipate 940 bereaved homes from immediate want. The council cares for its own sick; helps the families of sick or disabled brothers, when necessary; looks after the moral welfare of its members also. At the close of the year, Dec. 31, 1881, Bro. A. F. Glascott was elected regent, and Bros. W. S. Davenport and R. C. Whitcomb were re-elected to their respective offices; Bro. J. J. Tschudy, Jr., was elected collector. Past Regent, N. C. Twining, was sent as representative to grand council held at Milwaukee; Sr. Past Regent, A. C. Stuntz was chosen as alternate; both of whom were in attendance at the grand council. Several members were added during the years 1881 and 1882 to the chartered list. The close of the year Dec. 31, 1882, brought but little change except increased membership, and a steady growth of fraternal feeling. Bro. W. S. Davenport was elected regent, and Bro. N. C. Twining, secretary for the year of 1883. The council sent as its representatives to grand council this year, held as before, Bro. N. C. Twining and A. F. Glascott, both of whom attended the session in Milwaukee. For the year, 1884, the officers are as follows: N. C. Twining, regent; A. C. Stuntz, vice regent; W. S. Davenport, past regent; Ferd Grunert, secretary; D. S. Young, orator; James Faubell, guide; B. T. Hoyland, chaplain; J. J. Tschudy, collector; R. C. Whitcomb, treasurer; Samuel Schuler, Jr., warden; Charles Ball, sentinel; N. A. Loofbourow, M. D. examiner; Jacob Steinman, Robert Start and J. K. Symonds, trustees. The representatives to the grand council held at Oshkosh, were Bro. A. F. Glascott; Bro. W. S. Davenport, alternate.

In the spring of 1866 the Union school district No. 1, of the village of Monroe, was organized, and the first election was held July 9, of that year. The following board of education was chosen: Director, E. E. Bryant; clerk, C. S. Foster; treasurer, B. Dunwiddie; assistant directors, J. V. Richardson, H. Medberry, George H. King and E. T. Gardner. The first set of teachers employed by this board was composed of the following named: Miss Churchill, Mrs. Farnham, Miss Ritten, Miss Salley, Miss Fenton, Miss McFarland, Miss Matthews, Miss Prescott, Miss Bently and Miss McWade.

A special meeting of the electors of district No. 1, village of Monroe, Wis., was held March 16, 1871, at which $15,000 was voted to build a school house. Shortly afterward the contract was let to J. M. Hinkley for $14,977. By the time the building was finished it had overrun this amount considerably.

At a school meeting held at the center school house on June 12, 1882, it was voted that a new school house be erected on the north side, to cost not more than $15,000. In February, 1883, the contract of building was let to Jacob Stimmon, for $12,100. The building was at once commenced and was finished in 1884.

A PLEA FOR POPULAR EDUCATION.

[By Prof. W. C. Twining.]

God has destined man to be the prime agent on earth, to reign by means of the arts, and, as it were, to complete His work, by subduing, regulating, and co-operating with the powers of nature, by favoring the development of the various organizations, and by transforming, combining, and appropriating its productions to a multitude of uses. He has inspired this superior agent, therefore, with an unbounded desire for action ; exciting him to both internal and external activity, the former consisting in the exertion of the will, the latter, in the full play of the physical organization. From these two sources of action, properly directed, may spring abundant external fruits, and the most delightful internal state. If, on the contrary, this fundamental, imperious desire is not satisfied, if due precaution is not taken, or should it be satisfied blindly, we may fear all kinds of destruction and disorder without and within, every species of trouble, suffering, error.

The rightly directed exercise of activity is also the essential condition of the development of the faculties of the mind and heart; it is necessary that it should mark the progress, prepare their application, and preserve habitual harmony among them. It is to the health of the soul, what activity is to the health of the body. It is of a good and wise civil government to prepare the means in the external world, for individual activity to take its regular course, and to divide the labor of life thus, even before those who are to perform it, are born.

The wisdom of such a government will consist, especially, in leaving all paths free; in removing obstacles and extending impartial protection to all men, not only living, but men of the future. Government not only exhibits marks of wisdom in building for the present, but in laying a broad and liberal foundation for the ages yet to come.

It is also the part of a good government to help its citizens, to regulate the activity of each individual, by pointing out the most useful career, by keeping him in it, and ordering the employment of all his faculties, in a manner the most likely to make him pass through this career profitably and with honor. Hence all legislation designed to aid in this direction, must be founded upon experience, and woven for the future. We cannot expect to mould the character of the adult, all we can do is to direct his energies. But the mind of the youth presents itself, susceptible of most perfect and lasting impressions; it is upon this mind, like wax, clay, or putty, that we are to exercise our plastic art. A mind thus equipped with nought but God-gifted susceptibilities, is relegated to us with all the possibilities of the future before it. Recreant, indeed, would we be, were we deaf to its demands and necessities. When the child is born, he is surrounded by circumstances not of his own creation, often alien and repugnant to his tastes; he is often found to err from lack of proper guidance during his youthful days. One of the greatest and most weighty duties of any government, whether National, State or family, is to provide for the proper education of its future citizens; and there are but two levers in the hands of the government with which to accomplish this successfully: the educated public, and the educated parent. There is still another and most potent influence—the Church. But this is not an instrument or means in the hands of the government; individuals and communities must direct its energies, according to their various wants and necessities, while the general government is left to adjust and administer the functions of government that apply to the training of intellect and the more general questions of moral action. There is not a little truth in the old saying that “most of the human passions are only the overflowing of an activity which has mistaken its true course.” In this sense, and in this only, “the wicked man is a strong child;” or in other words, wickedness is a power unable to regulate, because it is ignorant of itself.

In the great trust bequeathed to the government, is the all important duty to teach its subjects self control which prevents and restrains all aberrations, merely products of the mind’s excrescences. It prepares for the study of self; we must be self-collected, before we can study ourselves; we must learn to measure our strength, before rushing upon the arena; we must employ all the authority we can obtain over ourselves, in order to oblige our heart to reform its desires, and our understanding, its judgment. A mind well-balanced, a nature rightly expanded, a culture carefully and systematically obtained, leads us to repress those foolish inclinations which seek the impossible; to accommodate ourselves to the sometimes hard and severe exigencies of reality; to conquer the difficulties which can be overcome, how hard soever they may be; to stop before those which are insurmountable; and to rise up courageously after falling into mistakes. It regulates the action and measure of all our faculties, and prevents them from being wasted.

Beside choice and unity of purpose, two special conditions are necessary to prevent activity from being destructive, and to make it fruitful; these are perseverance and method, which, when united, compose conduct; but which, even separate, are rarely well observed, and whose union is rarer still.

A good internal government, that is, self control, contributes very much to fulfill these conditions. The child left to grow up subject only to his own will and inclinations, his mind untrained, unpruned, has his career marked out more by the result of chance and circumstance, than by cultured calculation; his most mature deliberations are not guided by an intelligent will, although they are to exert a most important influence over his destiny; he may be likened to the seaman guiding his bark through the trackless ocean, trusting to an imperfect compass. He then moves on, not knowing whether the rocks of Scilly, the Charybdis or Maelstrom, shall seal his fate! He cannot resist any occasion that solicits him. He does not even choose, but merely accepts. He alone chooses, who commands; but he can only command himself, not events.

When the child grows up, not knowing what circumstances depend upon himself, and what absolutely resist him, he must struggle against the inevitable, and consequently neglect the possible. He is unable to create a condition conformable to his character, nor can he conform his character to inevitable conditions among which he must, especially, include those arising from social institutions and conventional arrangements. Hence proceed so many false and incomplete situations in the world, and the uneasiness which is the legitimate consequence of them; and hence constraint, uncertainty, confusion and suffering, in the exercise of activity. It will be seen that a man’s action thus guided by chance, whose every act is determined by an uneducated mind, is unconnected, and is not constructed from parts of the same plan; it has no relation to anything.

His life is not formed of a single tissue, but is composed of inlaid work, joined, and not woven together.

On the other hand, where all human action is energized by the free act of an intelligent will, unity of purpose economizes the faculties, redoubles their energy by concentrating them, and makes them conspire together to lend each other mutual aid. But there can be this unity only where there is law which assigns and preserves to each thing its rank; in society, this is administered by public authority; in the arts, by genius; by reason, in the sciences, and in the conduct of life, by self control; but by self control, only so far as it is the minister of virtue.

Again: Education is the handmaid of inspiration, which makes men of talent, while experience, men of skill; the first conceive, the second execute. These observations do not apply merely to works of art, and the management of affairs; they apply equally to the general plan of our conduct, in which our morality and happiness are involved. Here the application seems less evident; manifestly the State should have nothing to do with the religious training of its youth, only so far as a common and highly acceptable code of morals is concerned; and yet the child must be cared for to a greater degree than the parent or guardian is able to reach, or else that fabric of education founded by our fathers, though broad, philanthropic and intensive, must yield to the inevitable and fail of its most important result, namely, to educate the child wholly, symmetrically. Is it not a deplorable fact, that those minds whom nature has endowed with eminent power, and treated with especial favor, and which at the same time have grown up without training, are lamentably deficient in perseverance? We can almost assert that perseverance is a compensation granted to mediocrity. Not unfrequently, distinguished minds have sentiments superior to their station, and views more extensive than the sphere in which they are placed. They contain mysterious things within themselves, for which they cannot account, and which being developed, modify their dispositions. Let nature's sunshine of genius enter the soul of the uneducated child, let him grow to man's estate, and he will be exposed to be diverted from, and to mistake, the course which is suitable for him and to be dissatisfied with whatever he has begun, he seems to struggle with destiny; nature is full of problems of vast promise, but he has no key to their solution. Moreover, he is unable to guide himself by his experience, for it has been nothing but disaster, disappointment he cannot penetrate into unexplored regions, as they rise higher and higher, he can find no well beaten track, he gets entangled in the midst of trackless, wild woods, and yawning precipices, he is always forced to retrace every advance, to abandon every enterprise, however munificently it may reward his educated brother. He is thus driven to abandon all that his sentient soul prompts; moved by his heterogeneous impulses, he is drifted by cruel, luckless, hapless chance.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

If the reader has gone with the writer carefully over the preceding pages, he will now, of his own accord, both ask and answer the following momentous question: Were not our fathers, who framed and so exactly perfected our school system, fully aware of their responsibility to the children of the whole country?

Our condition in life furnishes us the most important part of the circumstances which educate us, and influence our character more than all the lessons of our masters; and though independent of our will in some respects, yet it is modified by our co-operation, and even by the manner in which we resign ourselves to what is inevitable. Fully aware of this, our fathers laid the foundations of the common school system, not for their own day, not to meet fully all the requirements and necessities of the youth of their time, but for the future, more for the millions of unborn, than for those already environed by the old system, no system. At birth, each child is heir to these influences cast about it by the school system. We can no longer say the conditions environing the child are "hard." But, on the contrary, gentle in their influences, powerful in their molding effects.

We proudly point to our school system as an heir-loom to our children, and as the conditions that surround us in our youth, and those that are to surround us during our development and march to manhood, really have more to do with our moral and social worth, in shaping our destiny in life, we submit our children, the little men and women of our Nation, to these most benign influences cast about them by the public school system.

We cannot claim for the framers of our State constitution greater dignity, deeper penetration of thought, nor broader motives, nor still more comprehensive ideas, than have guided other legislators; they did most assuredly make some invaluable provisions, the full fruition of which have scarcely begun to be realized. The common district school, the immediate product of the constitutional provisions, has flourished to abundant prosperity. The public school has also reached a highly advanced state of perfection. The normal school, a most powerful and influential factor in our system of education, has reached proportions potent for usefulness, little suspected by its founders.

At first, to educate the youth was thought to be sufficient; but now, a still greater care rests upon our system of public instruction, the especial education of our educators. The experience is not a limited one, that to make a Nation strong, enduring and prosperous, its people must be educated. Education is the only requisite that many Nations lack to fit them for freedom. May we not say that the schools and universities of the great German empire are the chief bulwarks of her strength, the strong arm of her national liberties? On the other hand, the manifest weakness of some other continental Nations of Europe is directly attributable to the ignorance of the laboring classes.

We need intelligence, and that generally diffused to keep watch and ward over our liberties. May we not be entitled to speak still plainer—this education must be a popular one.

No Nation can long be safe that educates the aristocracy only; the majority cannot, nor will it long be governed by the minority; the people must all be elevated alike; education begets love of freedom, and consequent independence. An educated Nation cannot be bound by chains of servitude, bonds and fetters. Oppressive laws and edicts, whether of Church or State, must crumble and fade in the presence of a rightly educated people. The real aristocracy, if aristocracy there be, is the whole people. Where a whole people is intelligent, if guided by no higher motive than local self-interest they will maintain their freedom against usurpers of all kinds, whether ambitious rulers or base demagogues. A liberal education, such as is now afforded by our school system, makes all positions of honor in our land possible and attainable; the poorest, humblest subject, be he honest, industrious, intelligent, sees all the avenues to honor, preferment and distinction open up before him like measureless vistas, and along the line of their path he sees the full fruition of his every thought, wish, ambition. A capital of a common school education secures to each citizen the possibilities and extreme probabilities of an honorable and successful career through life; each one becomes the architect of his own fortune.

So great and manifold are the blessings bestowed through the agency of the district school, that the poet has set his praises and degree of usefulness in not very ungraceful trochees:

“The common school, oh, let its light,
Shine through our country’s story;
Here lies her health, her wealth, her might,
Here rests her future glory.”

Perhaps one of the wisest provisions made and provided in the statute is that one forbidding all teaching of a sectarian character. We may dismiss the matter without offense to any one by simply saying, both Church and State thrive better when separate, and in a strict sense, independent of each other; hence, being a mixed people, professing the various beliefs religiously, we cannot allow any one, much less all the dogmas of belief to be given to our youth at the expense of the State. Here, too, our national poet comes forward in sweet trochees, as before, and sings of Church and State both free, but schools all the more prosperous and effective for good:

“Nor heeds the skeptic’s puny hands,
While near her school the church spire stands;
Nor fears the blinded bigot’s rule,
While near her church spire stands the school,”

We have always felt that the spirit which directed the founders of the common school system was nothing less than that of inspiration, for certainly no man could have measured the extent of the consequent blessing, much less could he have measured the consequence of such broad and philanthropic principles. It being thoroughly democratic, it fell upon and amongst the masses like the genial rays of the glorious sun, long detained by heavy murky clouds, upon flower, shrub and tree. Perhaps the law was but a nucleus of the glorious system now in full operation throughout the length and breadth of our land. The beginnings were like flashes of lightning, low in the horizon, ominous, but for good, presaging not evil to the crops and fruits of the husbandman, but harbingers of the advent of an era pre-eminently revolutionary, reformatory.

Time witnessed longer and more continuous flashes and outbursts of light from our educational horizon, until at last the very zenith of our native land is radiant as if lighted by torches that glow with an ever increasing brilliancy.

The relation of our schools and our school system, to our native land, may be compared with the relation that the central sun sustains to the system of planets that revolve about him, although at times he exhibits spots, enormous, expansive; and when viewed with a powerful glass, they cause terror even to astronomers, yet closing up, seems to glow with increased brilliancy, giving additional warmth, imparting new life to all planets and their inhabitants.

The school system may exhibit some weakness, may contain some points antagonistic; yet, when put in working order, like the fire of the forge, glowing all the brighter. After receiving its baptism of water from the hands of the smith, it kindles with an increasing brilliancy, bringing life, joy, intellectual vigor, and consequent mental improvement to the rising generation.

There is no Nation on the earth that can, for a moment, compare with our country, in this respect. England is fifty years our junior in school work; France has scarcely begun the great work; Germany, although many educators are extolling her, giving to her precedence in all educational matters, is still far behind us. Our free schools are freer, better, more advanced, more thorough than hers. Her free schools are lacking in system, direction, thoroughness, especially in discipline. More attention is given in Germany to the physical, doing less to the mental discipline, more to what are called common branches, less to the fundamental principles that underlie and make these common school branches possible. The works being translated from the German, treating of educational work, contain mostly methods used by American teachers for the last fifty years, not essentially new, although they may contain some original points. The same remarks may also be applied to works translated from other languages. The scientific works of the German scholars are amongst the foremost, in fact they are the very best within the reach of our higher schools. We still look to the works of our own educators for positive helps in advancing the great cause of education, and spreading broadcast throughout the land, intelligence.

We have settled beyond all question that the public school system of education furnishes but one plane for a social and a political status; it provides for no castes, no discrimination, no exception, no aristocracy. Every post of honor from the rail splitter, from the canal boy to the Presidency, is open for competition to all our citizens. Honesty, energy, virtue are alone needed to increase the probabilities of success, and, at the same time, diminish the possibilities of defeat. Our youth are encouraged by the powerful incentive of their seniors rising to places of honor and profit through the blessings wrought by a common school training. The fact that children are but little men and women, is a sufficient guaranty that the affairs of State and society of the near future, will be the affairs of the little men and women of today; it is also a further assurance to the youth that there is an intrinsic value in the education furnished by our common schools, for with it and by it, they will be enabled to express thoughts and feelings in terse Anglo-Saxon that shall move millions to arms in defense of liberty, and turn to flight the foe of freedom and progress. The great question of how quantity and quality of matter is to be given to our schools was, and still continues, in certain phases, to be a matter of discussion. Although we say still continues to be, yet, we at the same time admit "that the three R's" are as well established in the minds of the people, as constituting the school course as is the school course itself. Wherever a further advance has been made it has been done by the aggressiveness of law makers and law breakers, for most assuredly nothing less than "the three R's" will ever be tolerated in our school system.

In this respect our teachers and school officers are quite active; while the people are more conservative, resisting almost to stubbornness, any advancement or improvement in the matter and method of school work.

We have found by experience as teachers, that an advance unsanctioned by the people, is really no advance, but simply a wave to be hurled back with deadening effect upon the line of true advantage. Whenever and wherever local legislation is needed, we can expect it only from those who have reaped the advantages of a more liberal culture than is obtained from the provisions in the general statutes. The last remark must not be understood in its absolute sense; for, while the statute is over explicit in, defining what shall be taught in the district school, it also empowers the district board to form and carry on a school of higher grade than the common district school, whenever and wherever it may become necessary; hence our public graded, and our free high schools, greater boons than which do not exist.

THE MONROE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

As long ago as 1858, the citizens of Monroe felt that the time had come to take advantage of this special provision and establish a public school for the more perfect training of its youth.

To trace the history of the public schools of Monroe, would require more space and more time than we can command. Many of the noble pioneers who pushed their thoughts to a full expression in the early school work, have passed away, leaving their thoughts and labors so thoroughly enstamped upon methods, and so stereotyped in local legislation, that they are no less bright and shining lights today than a quarter of a century ago in school matters. We hold them in grateful recollection, although the schoolmam's rap on the window is hushed forever, the master's ferule, unused, the "district board" disbanded, yet the school. mam's bell, the master's firm and persuasive voice, the board of education's prompt and decisive action are all the more prolific in consequence of their succession, for never did pioneers do more thorough work; work that was calculated to reach down and affect posterity, than those who immediately preceded us. They ushered in and fought through the aggressive period. Like the Revolutionary Fathers, they have left us their declaration on our statute books, and in the exemplifications to be found traditionally, or fresh in the minds of octogenarians.

After establishing sites for, and building several school houses in Monroe, and maintaining schools for several years in the "wee village," the authorities finally bought the "seminary" which gave to the school a more definite existence and abiding place. This was in 1857 or 1858. The purchase of this building was followed by the building of the "South School Building" on the site of the present High School Building in 1863, and 1864, a very good frame or wooden building and quite commodious in its way. The fire fiend very soon did its work, by reducing this new school building to ashes. This was in 1870, and many a tale of heroism is related of the teacher, and pupils, in decamping from the would be crematory; all escaped, we believe, without accident. One of the older boys says: "I went up into the high school room fifteen or twenty minutes after all had been so miraculously snatched from their impending fate, and got my books, and was surprised to find that there was but little danger yet." A new, commodious, substantial white brick building was immediately designed and built upon the very spot, three stories high, containing five rooms, and conveniences that are now transformed into four recitation rooms. The new building was dedicated and opened to the public, by due ceremonies, in 1871, and designated as the "High School Building." The school building known as the "South School," was built in 1859, and contains two school rooms and two recitation rooms. The building will accommodate 130 pupils, providing that there are not over fifty for the upper room. Teachers have a faculty of packing little folks, that is well nigh marvelous, placing from three to five in a seat, when it would be death to cats to pack more than two in such close proximity. It has ever been the plan and purpose of the board of education, and the corps of teachers of the public schools of Monroe, to provide carefully for the children, by anticipating every want and need, as to room and convenience. The little folks are not kept in school all day, they are dismissed at 10:40 A. M., and 3 P. M., thus freeing them from the restraint and crowded condition of the school room. As teachers, we have found that it brings blessings in a two fold way; the children advance faster as a-b-c-d-arians and second, the teacher has more leisure to bestow her undivided attention upon the older pupils under her charge. The grading of the school has been a matter of study by both teacher and board of education for years. We can safely say, the present state of perfection has been reached through these two agencies, and also by advisory aid from the best school talent in the State.

In no case has a grade been established without due reference to the capacity of the children to be thus classified. In every case where a grading has been found inadequate, it has been immediately supplanted by one meeting the wants, and satisfying the conditions of environment; the whole system being based upon the lowest grade of minds, and thence expanding toward the plane of highest attainment. The course of study adopted for use in the different department is a very liberal one, embracing in its entire compass, all contemplated by the statutes, distributed through ten grades, besides the high school. In contemplating the course in all its bearings, the one thought pervaded the whole: That in no state of the child's advancement could he be entirely outside of the three and most natural divisions of any well regulated school course: Primary, intermediate and grammar. The primary course is made to include every species of instruction presentable to a child; such as primary numbers, the elements of reading including First Reader, an almost exhaustless fund of general information which may be very appropriately styled miscellaneous. This course of primary instruction is well calculated to induct the child into not only the school room, and school methods, but to wean him somewhat from his home, to engage his attention, thus training his faculties in a pleasant way, and rescuing him from the maelstrom of tricks by keeping him agreeably employed. The length of time given to this part of the course depends altogether upon the child's capacity and thoroughness; from three to four years may be very profitably spent in opening up to the child the great field, and vast expanse before him. In no case is a child ever detained beyond the period that his advancement indicates; there is no waiting for his class. In the intermediate course is embraced a more definite amount of labor, being much better defined, both as to matter and method. Here the child begins to think and work out by processes of his own the little problems thrown in his way. The Second and Third Reader employ his time devoted to reading written spelling, as well as oral, makes him a more perfect speller in his own language; the field opened up to him in the primary room is broadened and extended in all directions, thus increasing the horizon of his school experience. Very simple, yet correct, analyses in mental arithmetic are here introduced and insisted upon, until the little tyro becomes quite a reasoner. Geography, in its simplest form, dooryard, school-yard and home geography, as we term it, is presented to the child without text book. The reading, and in fact every lesson imparted, is more a language lesson than a reading lesson, in the old acceptation of the term. Writing is taught more to enable the child to secure a good legible, rather than an artistic hand. Two years are usually required to prepare the intermediate pupil for grammar work. Here is the great battle ground of our school course. We lose more pupils from our schools while passing over the grammar course, than during any other stage of school work. The boys and girls have now reached an age when their physical labor is of some advantage to the home force in the struggle for bread and butter; hence many, too many, of our children are withdrawn from our schools and their advantages, and cast upon society—to toil in comparative darkness all their life, regretting the necessity, and deploring the circumstances that called them from their studies and consigned them to a life of toil long before their tender age and development would warrant. The course in the grammar room or rooms is largely a language course; the pupil is taught arithmetic and geography by means of a text book, although the intrinsic value of the instruction imparted to the pupils, emanates from the teacher herself, and is given to the pupil by means of blackboard and oral instruction. A careful, conscientious, intelligent teacher, if she be ingenious, is of far greater value to a school than many text books. The drill that the grammar teachers are enabled to give their pupils cannot be measured by words. It is discernible in their degree of advancement. Four years are usually given to grammar work, although five are none too much; in most cases we find the time not sufficient; not that the amount set apart for the time is too great, but that the mind of the child has not developed sufficiently to allow him to be advanced to higher work. The child should do efficient work in all the studies enumerated in the statutes before he is put at higher work. The time required by ordinary minds to accomplish the course is ten or twelve years. This includes all work from a b c's through grammar room, but the most of our pupils reach the high school at about the age of twelve years, and are thus enabled to graduate from high school at sixteen; but few remain until they are eighteen.

We are frequently told that we are hurrying the children and thus preventing mental growth, and we may add also that we are as often told that we are holding the children back, thus preventing, or rather stultifying growth. We think, on the whole, the first class do not weigh well the entire course, each part sustaining certain dependencies, and the whole mutual relations, so that unless the parts be regarded, there can be no whole. While the second class, having no idea of the foundation lying at the base of the whole fabric, would rush the children over the course, regarding it as a mere tramway of slats or warp, and no filling, which is indeed the most important part of the whole structure.

Could book-keeping and United States history be added to our grammar work, the graduate from the grammar course might be regarded as well fitted for his duties as a citizen. But these studies demand a higher degree of cultivation than the grammar pupil can possibly attain to. It would require six years of unremitting toil for him to reach the modes of thought and powers of expression necessary to master history, accounts and civil government. These studies most emphatically constitute a part of the high school course.

It has seemed at times almost advisable to establish a course of two years between the grammar and high school, for such as desire to take advantage of its provisions. Why it is not generally done we are not able to say; it has some very serious objections, known only to teachers of considerable experience. Under these circumstances we must accept the situation, and trim our course accordingly. This real hiatus between grammar and high school must be bridged over by what is known as first year in high school.

It will be seen by reference to our high school course, below, that the first year of the course is given to grammar, geography, arithmetic, reading and spelling, composition once a month, physical geography and algebra. However much this first year's course may be applauded, it has some very serious defects; it does not represent, fully, grammar work, while it fails of securing to the pupils genuine high school work.

Spelling, as a class exercise or drill, should have been finished long before this stage of the pupil's work. Spelling from a spelling book has been very justly condemned by all ripe educators; it does not present to the child either spoken or written language, but a garbled, disintegrated, meaningless, monotonous series of lists of words by far the greatest number of which can never enter the child's vocabulary for his busy, active, business life. Would it not be better to require the pupil to both commit the definitions of the principal words in use, and at the same time employ them to express his thoughts on paper, instead of simply writing them for criticism? He would then subject himself to double criticism, namely, definition and correct spelling. When definition and correct spelling are compared, they compare as iron and gold. Iron is of manifold use, the most useful of all metals; gold glitters, catches the eye, arouses the greedy, but cannot be brought into any just comparison with iron. Like the Word of Truth the use of iron will descend to our children to bless them, but gold to molest and curse them. The love of the spelling book which was aroused by Cobb, Dillworth and Noah Webster, has come, I fear, to stay; no generation of intelligent school masters can circumvent or counteract it.

The last quarter of a century in the school room has told with marked effect upon our methods in teaching; it has revolutionized the presentation of language to children; it has removed forever Kirkham, Smiley, Murray, etc., from the halls of learning, and replaced them by language methods, free, easy, natural. We have now a generation of teachers that require work, not simply parsing, but composition, in other words, the teachers of to-day require the pupils to think out their analyses, their solutions, and commit them to writing, which must be in good, clear, lucid, correct English. The school child of twenty years ago, could not indite a correct sentence, could not put its lesson upon slate or paper, but behold the transformation! Many a child now can, and does present every day, his lesson clearly, freely and artistically expressed upon slate or paper, as required. This change has been brought about by a system of language lessons and teaching that cannot well be described; if any reader be inclined to be a skeptic, he is most cordially and earnestly invited to visit some of our public or mixed schools, and observe for himself. I have thus singled out language to illustrate the tidal wave that has been moving onward in our system of education. I might have taken history, arithmetic or philosophy, but let the above presentation of the method of teaching language suffice for all. The yeomanry and peasants of education have not accepted the really improved methods in spelling; we are in imminent danger of being thrown back and of losing all vantage ground gained. The land is full of spelling books, the product of some morbid octogenarian mind, or the very unostentatious book of some "very nice school master." The second year in high school contains some very fine studies both for mental discipline and intellectual culture; the "ologies" here make their first appearance, only to be emphasized through the two following years.

Some regard the study of the ancient classics as a mooted question, thinking the study of our own tongue sufficient to secure a liberal education to the rising generation. The opponents of the study of the Latin and Greek in our schools may be classified under two heads: 1st. Those who have never studied these languages, whether from accident or choice matters not; 2d. Those who have had more or less experience in their study, but from various causes utterly failed to accomplish their supposed purpose. It would be a difficult thing to-day to find a cultured scholar of the classic school who would acknowledge that the study of either of the great classics is a failure; and surely, the judgment of one less qualified to speak, would be most emphatically worthless, though harmful. Those pupils who graduate from our High School, having the drill and discipline of the classics, are by far stronger intellectually than those who receive the common English training. The classicals also make the better teachers in our schools. The pupil who accomplishes the course prescribed for the second year comes to the third year pretty well prepared to master its problems. There are in this year experimental as well as objective studies; physics and chemistry, being experimental, are more than counterbalanced by botany, a delightful and altogether objective study. The senior year, or fourth year of the course, is given up to English literature, moral philosophy, general history and political economy; at least these are the leading studies. The training the pupil gets from these last named studies is of incalculable worth. His experiments in physics and chemistry are well calculated to train him to close, careful, thoughtful investigation of the momentous problems of his responsible life. English literature must, if it do not awaken a taste for higher literature, develop his already feeble taste and strengthen it for accurate and exhaustive research in the realm of letters, pure, spotless. The valueless must give place to the best, the hurtful to the invigorating, trash to sense, and all that is ephemeral to history, philosophy and jurisprudence. The course in the classics is not outlined, but consists of a thorough training in the grammar, reader, Caesar, Cicero and Virgil. The course in Greek is optional, embracing only two years time. The grammar, reader, Xenophon, Euripides and Homer's Iliad constitute the course. Our high school graduates are admitted to all the courses of the university, provided they take our classical course.

They are admitted to the university as follows

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

(without examination): To the classical, both ancient and modern; to the scientific, to any special course. We deem this a great privilege, and one which our graduates feel sworn not to betray. The most of our graduates are admitted to advanced standing at the university, and many of them have received first honors at graduation from the scientific and classical courses of the university. So exactly is this the case to enter the university from the Monroe High School, is to enter with high honor and standing.

CONCLUSION.

The people of Monroe have toiled without ceasing, have waited for long weary years that they might have a school in which to educate their children; they now feel they have not waited in vain. The public school as it now exists, has grown from a mere nucleus to a school of the first rank. The opponents of the "high school system" are usually, 1st, the bigoted and ignorant; 2d, the educated who are personally interested in some private school, or those too intent on present money making to assist in public improvements, especially when they demand any outlay of public money. There is still another element that quite frequently presents itself, the demagogue, who, for political or other reasons, usually local, harangue the dear people, and stir them up to oppose the unjust school tax. We can say without any fear of successful refutation, Monroe has never been cursed by the blasting influences from any of these antagonistic agencies. The people one and all have always heartily supported their schools. Very soon after the schools were graded, the school board were fortunate in securing the service of distinguished educators as principals, assisted by a corps of competent teachers. I may be pardoned for mentioning the names of the gentlemen who have been instrumental as principals, in bringing the schools up to so high a standard of perfection.

E. E. Woodman, widely and favorably known, since leaving the schools, as a civil engineer and editor, was a teacher of fine ability. We think he succeeded Prof. W. D. Parker, now president of the River Falls Normal Schools. Prof. Parker is one of those aggressive educators, who continually push on toward the light seen in advance. His executive ability is of the highest order, akin to that so often found in the discipline of the regular army. In rank, he stands at the head of his profession; many inferior to him, but few, if any, his equal.

Prof. R. W. Burton, now of the Janesville public schools, can also be put down as one of the very foremost educators in our public schools. In him the Monroe public schools had a thorough disciplinarian, a gentleman of culture, and a teacher of undoubted integrity. Bold, even to rashness, he ruled so that no rogue could ever say "I beat the professor." His pupils had great respect for him, because of his real manliness and unflinching courage, his perseverance and courtly manner.

Last, but not least, of this brace of four principals, is Prof. B. M. Reynolds. A New Englander by birth, he imbibed that almost sacred Puritan system of discipline, not of the Connecticut blue law stripe, but of that noble outspoken kind that sends terror to the hearts of rogues, and conviction to the heart of the honest and deserving pupil. His will is unconquerable, his heart as tender as a child's, his purpose as fixed as the "rock-ribbed hills," yet discourtesy is a word not known to his vocabulary. Untiring in industry, every teacher in his corps knows that under Prof. Reynolds, she must consider work as of the first importance. in his every day discipline he is strict to severity, exacting to the least minutiae: stern, without smile or blanching cheek, he compels obedience by his frowns, wit, biting sarcasm, or stinging rebukes; he reduces irrepressibles by testing the stitches in their coat collars. Thus firm and resolute, he carries all by storm; his pupils recognize in him a model worthy of imitation. Although Prof. Reynolds remained in the public schools of Monroe but one year, he left impressions for good that will long remain. These impressions are amongst us to-day to aid us in our work, to strengthen our efforts. We think his work did more to unify the schools of our city than any other influence wielded in their behalf. The writer of this article followed Prof. Reynolds in 1873, and has had charge of the schools since that time June, (1884.)

A. C. Dodge, a gentleman of high standing in the community, and well and favorably known in this State for his lofty public spirit, has been president of the board of education for a great many years, and by his tact and ability, aided always by a full corps of six members, made up of the best citizens of Monroe, has contributed very much to the present prosperous state of the public schools.

I have always been assisted and sustained by my corps of teachers, by the board of education, and by the good people of our city in my school labors. This assistance, though unsought, has come to me while surrounded by toil, trial and perplexity, to cheer me on, to sustain my feeble efforts and to supplement a needed want. Of the many teachers who have aided me so effectively, I might, in justice, say very much; they have been constant, untiring, patient, enduring. Their number is not legion, for a very wise policy has been pursued by the board; teachers have held their positions not by favor, but purely by merit. Our teachers, with but one exception, are high school graduates, all having received diplomas from the high School during the past eleven years, except two, who graduated previous to 1873. The question, "can I have my place next year," is rarely ever heard here; the question "do you desire to remain another year," has completely displaced it. We regard this as a wise policy and cannot fail of bringing in its train blessings untold for the schools. We have been most effectively aided, too, by the county superintendents; here, too, the people of Green county have been both felicitous and wise, During the past eleven years we have had but two different persons elected to the office. I say for the last eleven years, I might extend the time still further back and still speak the truth. D. H. Morgan and T. C. Richmond are the two gentlemen referred to. Mr. Morgan was succeeded by Mr. Richmond who held the office one or two terms, I do not remember which, and he in turn was succeeded by Mr. Morgan, who still holds the office. Mr. Richmond is a gentleman of most approved manners and a scholar of acknowledged ability. While in office, he labored with zeal and assiduity, never flagging but always renewing and redoubling his best efforts to advance the cause of education in the whole county. I am largely indebted to him for strong support and scholarly advice in my arduous labors. We regretted his determination to leave the school work for a different field of labor. Since leaving the educational field he has graduated from the law department of our State University, has been a student of "Old Harvard," and has now a law office in the city of Madison. He has made for himself a name coveted by many, in the oratorical field, pleading for prohibition, and demanding that the most wicked of all things, "Rum" shall be banished from our midst.

Mr. Richmond was succeeded in the superintendency by the man whom he succeeded, D. H. Morgan. My poor words must surely fail to express the deep feeling of regard that the people of Green county hold, in both heart and memory, for her most popular educator and citizen. Nor have the people of this county deceived themselves in this respect; nobly has he responded, and nobly does he continue to do so. To see Mr. Morgan, is sufficient; he expresses in his every look, word, act, his genuine honesty, his upright integrity, his unquenchable love of justice. His education was academic, hence exact, thorough, practical; now past middle life, he has gleaned from every golden educational harvest, for years, sheaves heavy with wisdom, fraught with knowledge and full of the bread for the intellect. Modest, yet unflinching in duty; inclined to reticence, yet eloquent when duty calls him to the front, for actual and needed service, although timid almost to a loss of self possession, yet bold, aggressive and persevering beyond all expectation, when the bugle blast of duty sounds the advance. His sensitive nature is most prominent, yet self is the last thought; duty, the sublime cause of education, and his friends receive his most untiring efforts, his every careful thought, feeling and purpose. There is no man in Green county, to whom the county owes deeper and more lasting gratitude. He has not wrought for self; while others work to increase the amount of stock, the number of bushels of grain; have added acres to their estate, thousands to their bank account, Mr. Morgan has labored to exalt the happiness of every home, by educating the heart and intellect of its members. His work is a work that tells for the future, not for the present, and knowing him and his work so well, I can safely say that long after he has resigned all, his office and its duties to his successor, his soul to God, he will be most blessed by his fellows. Strictly temperate in all his acts, no one will ever have opportunity to learn from him aught but sobriety. Aside from his school work, he is a valued and valuable member of the community; no man is better or more favorably known in "Sylvester," than he; the sick, the poor, the unfortunate, the needy; whether it be of advice or aught else, ask him, freely for relief, it is bestowed as freely, for Mr. Morgan knows full well the intrinsic worth of the old maxim, "He who gives quickly, gives twice."

THE CHURCHILL SCHOOL.

The pupils and teachers of the first ward were made happy in February, 1884, by the occupancy of the new building called the Churchill building, in honor of Norman Churchill a member of the board of education, a mechanic, machinist, and an appointee of the board to superintend the erection of the building. The entire board are deserving of great credit for the excellent building with its unique appointments. The building is two stories high, with a basement containing three large furnaces. There are six school rooms, ample as to size and convenience. According to the last school census, the number of boys and girls were about equal, the whole number being 1,400 of school age. Of these at least 1,200 attend school during the year.

CORPS OF TEACHERS IN 1883 AND 1884.

N. C. Twining, Principal.

The following are the members of the board of education, for 1884: A. C. Dodge, president; S.W. Abbott, clerk; A. W. Goddard, treasurer; Hon. John Bolender, Hon. John Luchsinger, S. C. Cheny and N. Churchill.

PROMINENT CITIZENS.

The following named citizens are representatives of the character and enterprise of the population of the city of Monroe.

Enoch Evans, the oldest person living in Green county, was born in Stokes Co., N. C., Oct. 27, 1788. When he was in his fifth year, his parents with a colony of about sixty families, emigrated to Kentucky. They made the journey through the wilderness with horses, carrying their goods on the backs of the animals. They spent about a year at Boone Station. His father then bought government land in Garrett county, which was in the vicinity of the home of Daniel Boone, with whom the subject of our sketch was well acquainted. Here the subject of our sketch grew to manhood, and was married Oct. 17, 1808, to Elizabeth Burton. She was born in Virginia, Jan. 3, 1788. He bought thirty-six acres of land in Garrett county, and lived there until 1816, then emigrated to Indiana, and settled in Jennings county, where they were pioneers. He bought government land five miles northwest of Vernon, the county seat, and built a log cabin, into which the family moved before the doors or windows were put in. This was their home until 1824. During that year a mail route was established from Indianapolis to Lawrenceburg, and he having secured the contract, removed to Indianapolis. He carried the mail six years, always on horseback. His horse was his boat in high water and his bridge in low water. When the water was so high that the horse was obliged to swim, Mr. Evans would throw the mail sacks over his shoulders and hold the straps with his teeth. While carrying the mail he had bought eighty acres of timber land, a half mile from the northeast corner of the plat of the village of Indianapolis. He settled on that land in 1830, and lived there two years, then sold and moved to Parish Grove, or the lost land, as it was then called, twenty miles west of Indianapolis. The following year the land there came into market, and he bought 120 acres and lived there until 1840. He had sold the land in 1839, and invested the money in live stock, and in 1840 started with a drove of stock for the northwest. As he traveled along, he was looking for a good place to settle, but did not find a suitable location until he arrived in Green county. He had sold all his stock in Illinois. He purchased 160 acres of land in the town of Clarno. The following year he bought forty acres that cornered his first purchase. He lived there twelve years, then came to Monroe and bought twenty-two acres of land, that he laid out into town lots and made it an addition to the village of Monroe. He lived here until 1868, then sold and moved to West Virginia and bought two lots in Charleston, built a house and lived there three and a half years, then returned to Green county and lived for a time in Monticello and Brodhead. His home is now with his son, William, in Monroe. In 1875 he met an irreparable loss in the death of his wife, which occurred July 9, of that year. There were eleven children born to them, four of which are now living—Thursey, now the wife of William Carson, lives in Missouri; Elijah lives in Nebraska; Elisha lives in Charleston, W. Va., and William, who lives in Monroe. Mr. Evans was county treasurer in Jasper Co., Ind., and also postmaster there. He has been a member of the M. E. Church for seventy-one years, having joined in 1813. Now in his ninety-sixth year, he enjoys very good health and retains his mental faculties in a remarkable degree.

Joseph Kelley was born in Pike Co., Ohio. When a boy, he went to Indiana, where he remained until 1835. He then came to Green county. He was a bold, daring man, without fear for anything, and accumulated a large property. He was for many years among the mountains in California. In 1856, he went to Charles City, Iowa, where he at present resides. He owned the site and was the founder of Charles City.

Thomas L. Wells, one of the pioneers of the town of Clarno, was born in Muskingham Co., Ohio, April 2, 1830. When he was five years old his parents came to Wisconsin and located in Green county. He attended school in a rude log cabin, with a puncheon floor, slab seats and windows made of greased paper. There were many Indians in the county at that time, and the settlers were often frightened by them. On Jan. 14, 1856, he was married to Mary A. Niffenegger. Five children blessed this union—Sarah Etta, born Nov. 7, 1856, and died Dec. 19, 1863; William F., born Sept. 8, 1860; Lillie A., born Dec. 31, 1862; Henry E., born Jan. 9, 1867, and Rosetta, born March 16, 1870. When Mr. Wells came to Green county, there was not a house upon the site of the present city of Monroe.

Peter Wells, who settled in the town of Clarno in 1835, is a native of Muskingum Co., Ohio, born in November, 1814, son of Mathew and Sarah (Beard) Wells, who settled in Vermilion Co., Ind., in 1828, and came to Wisconsin in 1836, then a Territory, and took up land in Green county, removing to Fayette Co., Iowa, in 1848, where they remained until their death, which occurred in 1854. William, one of the boys, was the founder of "West Union." Peter came west with his parents. He was married in Indiana to Jane Bowman in 1834. They had eleven children, six of whom are now living—Charles, Adeline, Matthew, Thomas B., Catharine and Joshua. In February, 1853, Mrs. Wells died. She was a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Wells came to this county a poor man, but by industry, hard work and good judgment, he has accumulated property, until he is among the wealthy business men of the county. At one time he was the owner of 1,000 acres of land, but has divided it up among his children.

Alpheus DeHaven, one of the earliest settlers of the county, was born in Montgomery Co., Penn., Oct. 22, 1800. His parents were John and Mary (Supplee) DeHaven, and they had ten children, six sons and four daughters. Alpheus, the subject of this sketch, when seventeen years old, was apprenticed to the trade of carpenter and joiner. After learning this trade he worked and traveled in several States, among other places, he went to New Orleans, and while on a trip up the Mississippi, was on the boat Helen McGregor, which blew up at Memphis. In 1828 he went to Cincinnati and engaged in the lumber trade, and was also a contractor and builder, which he followed for some time. In 1832, he was married to Diadama Tillotson, by whom there were four children, one of whom is now living—Stephen B., residing in Missouri. Mrs. DeHaven died May 3, 1840.

She was a member of the M. E. Church, a sincere Christian, and highly respected in the community where she lived. In June, 1841, he was again married to Elizabeth Hawley, by whom he had eight children, six now living—Olive, wife of Dr. F. W. Byers, of Monroe; Wesley W., Willard G., Laura E., wife of M. P. Maine; Martha Alice, now Mrs. Charles Stoneman, and George W. His second wife died in April, 1860. She was also a member of the M. E. Church. In October, 1860, he was again married to Mrs. M. P. Maine nee Sarah Drummond, whose parents died when she was a child, and she was brought up by an uncle, and in 1837, was married to M. P. Maine. There were three children by this union, all of whom are now living—Frances C., now Mrs. A. B. Webber, of Lawrence, Kansas; Mortimer P. and Orville B. In April, 1836, Mr. DeHaven came to Green county and settled in what is now the town of Clarno, but then an unorganized territory, and engaged in farming. In February, 1877, he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. He is one of the leading members of the M. E. Church, and the present class leader. He is one of the oldest Odd Fellow's in the west. He was initiated in Pennsylvania Lodge No. 1, of Philadelphia, in 1824, and assisted in organizing the first Odd Fellow's lodge in the State of Ohio, namely—Ohio No. 1, of Cincinnati. He is now an honorary member of Monroe Lodge No. 72, of this city.

George W. Bridge, one of the early settlers of this county, was born in Preble Co., Ohio, May 25, 1827. His parents were David C. and Catharine (Voorhis) Bridge, who were the parents of five sons and three daughters; six of these children are still living. When the subject of this sketch was nine years old he came with his parents to the Territory of Wisconsin, and settled on section 31, town of Jefferson, and received his education in the pioneer "log cabin" schools of that period. He was married Aug. 31, 1850, to Sarah M. Delapp, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Eddinger) Delapp, of Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Bridge are the parents of three children—Belle N., now the wife of S. P. Noble, of Clarno; Mary C., wife of J. M. Noble; and John F. Mr. Bridge after marriage engaged in farming, and followed that occupation until 1881, when he removed to Monroe. He came to this county in 1836. He has been identified with this county a long time, and has witnessed its development from a wilderness to a desirable and fully settled country, possessing advantages and resources, far beyond the anticipations of many of the pioneers. The substantial and commodious frame house has supplanted the primitive log cabin, and the evidences of thrift and enterprise abound. Mr. Bridge has done his part in effecting this transformation, and for a time subjecting himself to many privations and hardships, he now has the pleasure of a home honestly won, a property fairly gained.

Thomas J. Bragg was born in Fauquier Co., Va., Jan. 15, 1813. His parents were Dashur and Hannah (Muffitt) Bragg. In 1823, they all emigrated to Boone Co., Ky. In 1829 they removed to Edgar Co., Ill., and were among the first settlers of that county. The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and received but a limited education. In 1836 he came to Green county and for some time made his home at the house of Daniel Sutherland, working at various occupations and following various kinds of business. During the time he located 160 acres of land on section 13, town of Monroe, where he opened up a farm. In October, 1841, he was married to Emily J. Nobles, a native of Kentucky, born April 4, 1821. By this union there were five children—William P., of the firm of Glasgett & Bragg; Alice, now wife of A. Glasgett; Thomas J., Jr.; Emma C., wife of Rice D. Gorham, and Charles. Mr. Bragg followed farming until 1881 when he moved to Monroe where he is now living a retired life. When he came to this county he was in very limited circumstances, but by industry and good management has accumulated a considerable property and is to day among the "well-to-do" farmers of the county. At one time he owned 700 acres of land, and has divided it mostly among his children leaving enough to support himself and wife.

S.S. Bragg, a resident of Edgar Co., Ill., was born in Fauquier Co., Va., Dec. 10, 1807. On the 2d of December, 1822, his parents, Dashur and Hannah (Moffett) Bragg, removed to Boone Co., Ky., where they engaged in farming. In January, 1829, they removed to Clark Co., Ill., where Mrs. Bragg died, Aug. 13, 1829. In the spring of 1831 Mr. Bragg removed to Edgar Co., Ill., where he died in 1841. The subject of this sketch came to Illinois with his parents, and in the fall of 1831 returned to Kentucky, remaining there until the fall of 1833. On the 4th of April, 1834, he was married to May M. McClansey, of Edgar county. She was the widow of James Jackson, who died in 1832. Mr. and Mrs. Bragg were the parents of six children, two of whom are living—A. J. and Mary M., wife of Robert Fleming. Mr. Bragg settled in Edgar county, a poor man, financially, but by hard work has accumulated a comfortable property and home. Mrs. Bragg died Sept. 29, 1882. She was a life long member of the M. E. Church, and was highly respected and beloved in the community where she lived.

Jonas Shook is a native of St. Clair Co., Ill., born May 9, 1805. His parents went to that Territory in 1797. He is one of two living children from a family of seven. After making a settlement in Illinois, there was considerable trouble and great distress among some of the pioneers. His mother was a sincere Christian, a member of the Baptist Church, and was highly respected by all who knew her. She experienced many of the hardships and trials incident to pioneer life. She died in Illinois. The subject of this sketch was brought up in a new country and educated in the pioneer schools of primitive date. In December, 1827, he was married to Polly A. Land, who was born in South Carolina, April 11, 1809. By this union there were seven children, two sons and five daughters, six of whom are now living—Asa L., Samuel, Susan, Catharine Maria, Berthina and Sarah Jane. In 1837 he left Illinois and emigrated to Wiota, Lafayette Co., Wis. The following year he located in the town of Adams, this county, on what is known as "Shook's Prairie," a location named in honor of himself, where he remained for over forty years. In 1881 he came to Monroe, where he is now living a retired life. In 1827 he enlisted in the Winnebago War, and was sent to Fort Clark, where Peoria now stands.

John Connery was born in Iowa county, Territory of Wisconsin, Jan. 29, 1838. He is a son of James and Elizabeth (Cosner) Connery. His father was of Irish parentage, and his mother of German descent. His father came to Iowa county in the fall of 1836, it then being a wild wilderness. Being a millwright, he engaged in building some of the first mills in the county; also farmed on a small scale, as most of his time was taken up at his trade. He remained in the part of the county known as Lafayette county, since the sub-division, until his death, which occurred at Wiota, July 29, 1854, of cholera. John Connery, the subject of this sketch, was brought up on a farm, until the year 1852. When but a little past thirteen years old he engaged to learn the blacksmith trade, with his uncle, the Hon. Samuel Cole, then carrying on the business in Gratiot. He lived with his uncle, as one of the family for years. In the spring of 1863 he came to Monroe and worked at his trade, in this city, until 1866, when he went to Green Co., Iowa, and remained there until May 25, 1868. He then went to Cass Co., Mo., where he resided until 1880, in which year he returned to Monroe on account of the bad health of his wife, and again engaged at his trade. He was married July 3, 1864, to Lydia Ann Trickel, a daughter of Ashford Trickel. They have five children—Charlie A., G. Edgar, Ida J., Emmett and S. Alma. Mr. Connery is one of the oldest residents of Iowa county. He is a member of the Masonic order, and also a worker in the Temple of Honor, and is an ardent temperance worker.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

A Ludlow, president of the First National Bank, of Monroe, was born in Burlington, Vt., June 21, 1818, and is a son of James and Rosana (Morton) Ludlow, natives of Vermont. The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm, and obtained his education in the common schools. In 1838 he went to Lyons, Iowa Co., Mich., where he was employed as mail carrier between Grand Rapids and Livingston county, then a wild unsettled country. About eighteen months later, he went to Chicago and engaged in the peddling business, his route being through Monroe to Madison, Wis., traveling with a wagon. At that time there was but one house between Madison and Monroe, neither were there any bridges, and he was compelled to ford or ferry the streams. In 1846 he engaged in business in this city. Having accumulated some property and good credit, he was able to get all the goods he wanted. In 1846 he was married to Caroline Sanderson, of Winnebago Co., Ill., and a native of Cambridge, Mass. Five children have been born to them—Henry, now assistant cashier of the First National Bank, of Monroe; Edwin, manufacturer of mixed paints, at Davenport, Iowa; Willis, farmer in this county; Addie and Nellie. Mr. Ludlow has been closely identified with the business interests of the county since 1839. He is an enterprising and public spirited citizen and has done much to advance the public interests of the city of Monroe.

A. W. Sutherland was born in Madison Co., N. Y., June 10, 1822, where he received a common school education. In 1836 he went with his parents to Coles Co., Ill., then an unbroken wilderness; from thence to Wisconsin. They arrived in Green county about the 20th of May, 1839, and located in the town of Sylvester, on section 10, where A. W. grew to manhood. In May, 1847, he was married to Esther J., a daughter of Col. James Sutherland, a soldier of the War of 1812, who afterwards commanded one of the militia regiments of Genesee Co., N. Y. The colonel came to Wisconsin in 1838 and died in 1843, which was supposed to be the first death in the town of Sylvester. A. W. Sutherland, the subject of this sketch, has two children—Oscar and Lois. He came here when it took some push and energy to get a start in life. In about two years he became of age and found himself the fortunate possessor of $47, which not being enough to locate his land he borrowed $3 and made his first purchase. The following year he raised his house and commenced housekeeping. The furniture was of the rudest kind, and made by his own hands. He now owns 230 acres of land worth $65 per acre; the Skinner flouring mills at Browntown valued at $10,000 and a residence in Monroe, with seven acres of land, valued at $3,000.

Ashford Trickel, who settled in this county during the spring of 1840, was born in Pickaway Co., Ohio, Nov. 7, 1813. He is a son of Robert Trickel, a native of Virginia, who located there at an early day, and Catharine (Bensyl) Trickel. There was a family of eight sons and one daughter, all of whom are now living but one. In an early day Robert Trickel moved to Indiana, and thence to Vermilion Co., Ill., near Danville, and subsequently to Danville where he built the first mill in the county, and thence he went to Champaign county in 1828, and in 1836 to Ford county of the same State. About 1845 he came to Green Co., Wis. and spent the rest of his days. The subject of this sketch was brought up on a farm, and received his education in the primitive log school house. In the fall of 1840 he was married to Eliza J. Morton, a daughter of James and Mary (Montgomery) Morton, who came to the county that same year. By this union there were eleven children, eight of whom are now living—Mary C., wife of William Renhart; Robert W., Julia A., wife of Perry Rhodes; Lydia A., wife of John Connery; Joshua, John J., Jennie, wife of Sylvester Dwyer, and Amy Ellen, wife of Thomas Dwyer. Mr. Trickel owns 140 acres of land valued at $65 per acre, besides other property which he has accumulated by his own exertions.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

J. H. Bridge first came here in 1835, but did not settle here permanently until 1840. He was born in Preble Co., Ohio, April 3, 1815. His parents, Jonn and Deborah (Clark) Bridge, were natives of New Jersey, and emigrated to Ohio in an early day. They were the parents of five daughters and three sons, of whom three are living. The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm, and obtained his education in the log school house of pioneer days, which had puncheon, floors, slabs for seats, and desks made by driving pins into the logs, with slabs laid upon them, and lighted by cutting out a log, putting up sticks and pasting greased paper over the opening. Mr. Bridge was married to Nancy Sample, a native of Virginia. By this union there were six children, one of whom is living—Joseph T. Mr. Bridge, on coming to the county, first located in Jefferson on section .30, and was elected the first treasurer of that town at its organization. In 1874 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. He came to the county in limited circumstances, but by industry and judicious management, has accumulated a competency. Mr. and Mrs. Bridge are members of the Christian Church.

Henry Thorp, one of the prominent men of the county, was born April 11, 1838. In 1840 he came to Green county, where he received a liberal education. He was married March 10, 1864, to Remember Bowen, a daughter of Hon. Thomas Bowen, one of the early settlers of the county. She was born in Green county, Jan. 28, 1847. By this union there are three children—George E., Frank W. and Eugene B. Mr. Thorp has always taken an active interest in agriculture and stock growing. He is at present president of the agricultural society of the county. He is one of the influential farmers, and a large land holder, owning 440 acres of valuable land in the town of Clarno. He removed to Monroe in 1883, where he is leading a retired life.

Norman Churchill, one of the early settlers of Green county, was born in Troy township, Madison Co., Ill., Jan. 17, 1826. His father, William B. Churchill, was a native of Vermont, and left his native county when a boy, removing to New York and remaining in that State a short time, then removing to Illinois. His mother, Almira Humes, was a native of New Hampshire. The family consisted of the parents and five children. The subject of this sketch left Illinois and came to this county in 1840. From 1842 to 1847 most of his time was spent in the pineries on the Wisconsin river. Then he learned the trade of millwright, which he followed for a number of years, and then engaged in house building. In 1858 he built the first planing mill in the county, having an interest in the same. In 1854 he was married to Anna E., daughter of Dr. Sherman, of this place. By this union there were six children, four of whom are living—Carlos B., William, Minnie and Ernest. Mr. Churchill is now engaged as part owner of a saw mill, a planing mill and cheese box factory. He is an enterprising citizen, and has done much toward the development of the town and county.

George W. Thorpe, one of the influential business men of the county, was born in Green Co, Wis., Nov. 17, 1841, and was brought up on his father's farm, receiving his early education in the log cabins of his native county. He afterwards attended the academy at Saville, Ohio, also Oberlin College one term. In January, 1867, he was married to Flora Mease, a daughter of Dr. L. A. Mease, of Freeport, who was widely known through this portion of the country, and was one of Stephenson county's most prominent physicians. The doctor was a native of Union Co., Penn., and came to Stephenson county in 1845, immediately after graduating at Rush Medical College, and later at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Thorpe are the parents of four children—Edwin M., Lizzie C., Lura L. and Nora S. Mr. Thorpe has been largely engaged in farming and stock growing. He has a beautiful farm in the town of Clarno, of 428 acres, valued at $55 per acre. In 1864 he enlisted in the 38th regiment, serving until the close of the war, and was mustered out at Madison, Wis. Mrs. Thorpe was a graduate of the high school at Freeport, and attended the State Normal one year.

J. B. Miller, one of the pioneers of the county, was born in Lebanon, Madison Co., N. Y., Aug. 15, 1814. His parents were William Miller and Lucy (Ford) Miller, the father formerly from Vermont and the mother from Worcester Co., Mass. They were married in Madison Co., N. Y., and were the parents of nine children, four of whom are now living. About 1828 the parents removed to Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., and in 1842 came to this county, where they both died. The mother had been a life-long Christian and at the time of her death was a member of the Free Will Baptist Church. The subject of this sketch was brought up in Madison Co., N. Y. He was married in Cattaraugus county, of that State, by Elder Platt, to Patty Crowel, a native of Penfield, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1839. She was a daughter of William and Polly (Day) Crowel. By this union there were four children—Lucy Jane, born Oct. 29, 1841, and died March 12, 1859; Mary Ann, now Mrs. Albert Post, of Chippewa Falls; Eugene, born Aug. 12, 1849, is married and lives on the farm where he was born; and Viola D., wife of James R. Campbell. On the 21st day of April, 1841, they emigrated to this county, coming through with a team in eighteen days, and located in the town of York, on section 24. Here he took up wild land, and while building their shanty, which was 18x20 feet in size, lived with William Green. Mr. and Mrs. Miller came to the county with about $50 in money, a good team and a poor harness and wagon as capital, but by energy and hard work they have placed themselves in comfortable circumstances. He has held local office, and is among the solid men of the county. They are members of the Free Will Baptist Church.

A. L. Cleveland, a native of Washington Co., N. Y., was born July 23, 1820. His father, Job Cleveland, was a soldier in the War of 1812. His mother, Almira (Fenton) Cleveland, was a native of Connecticut. About 1836 they removed to Genesee Co., N. Y., where they lived for many years. Job Cleveland died at the age of seventy-four. His wife is still living at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in his native State, attending Alexander Classical Seminary. In 1842 he came to Green county, where he was employed in teaching school seven years. About 1845 he went to Rockford, Ill., and took a course of study in surveying, under Prof. Huntington. He went, in 1850, across the plains to California, where he was engaged in the mines three years. In 1853 he was united in marriage with Lucy Charles, and soon after came to Green county, which has since been his residence. He has held the office of county surveyor, school commissioner and other offices in this county.

Jacob Hammon, who located in this county in September, 1841, was born in Jackson Co., Ind., on the 3d day of April, 1820. He is a son of John H. and Catharine (Isimenger) Hammon. The former was a native of Georgia and the latter of Pennsylvania. They were married in Ohio, and soon after went to Jackson Co., Ind., where they remained a short time, then removed to Morgan county, and thence to Vermilion county. In 1842 they came to Green county and purchased land in the town of Sylvester, on section 17. He died in Monroe in 1873. Mrs. Hammon died in 1861. They were members of the M. E. Church. Jacob Hammon, of this sketch, was married Jan. 21, 1841, to Eliza James, a daughter of Dr. William and Mary (Wasson) James, and a native of Vermilion Co., Ind. In September, 1841, Mr. Hammon started for Green county with his wife and all their worldly goods, which consisted of a pair of plug horses valued at about $70, and an old wagon, besides $10 in money. On their arrival he set himself about making a home, but the first few years met with many difficulties and discouragements. He persevered, however, and is now in prosperous circumstances, having 252 acres of land, valued at $40 per acre, and forty-two acres within the city limits, valued at $150 per acre. Mr. and Mrs. Hammon have had six children, five of whom are living—Jane, now Mrs. M. Hurlbut; Sarah, wife of A. E. Hare; Ida A., wife of Albert Berryman; Amos N., married to Ida Sissons, of Monroe; and Mary E., married to Richard Smith.

George Adams, a native of Bedford Co., Penn., was born May 27, 1802. He is a son of Jacob and Clara Adams, of German descent, who were the parents of ten children, five sons and five daughters. The father and mother both died in Bedford Co., Penn. The former was a man of sterling qualities, and quite prominent in the community where he lived. The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm and received his education in the subscription schools. He was married Nov. 17, 1825, to Margaret Mills, of Bedford Co., Penn. Six children blessed this union, four of whom are now living—Jacob, living in Monroe; Michael, living in Washington Territory; William, now in Missouri; and Clarasa, wife of Abram Smith, now in Iowa. In the fall of 1835 he left Bedford Co., Penn., with teams, crossing the mountains and locating in Hardin Co., Ohio, then a wilderness. There he purchased land and cleared up a farm. They had to go forty miles for provisions and family supplies. They built a small log cabin, with puncheon floor, and endured the privations of pioneer life. There Mrs. Adams died, Aug. 20, 1839. In the fall of 1842 he came to this county and the year following located some land. He was again married Oct. 18, 1843, to Jemima Boyls. She was born in Green Co., Penn., Dec. 16, 1817. She was a daughter of Capt. William and Mary (Robins) Boyls. Her father proposed the name for the State capital of Wisconsin which was adopted, and also the name of the city of Monroe. Her father came to this county in 1835 from Indiana, where he had settled in 1826. He was a soldier of the Black Hawk War, and in 1836 and 1837 was a member of the Territorial legislature. In 1860 he removed to Black Hawk Co., Iowa, where he died in the fall of 1881. Her mother had died some years previously. By the second marriage there were eight children, seven of whom are living—Margaret, wife of W. Counet, now living in Nebraska; Mattie, wife of Peter Withington, now of Montana; Lissie, Charles H., a resident of Nebraska; Helen, wife of Eugene White; Tyre A., wife of Thomas J. Stauer; and A. V., married to Ollie Morton, and lives on the homestead. In 1876 Mr. Adams removed to Monroe, where he is living a retired life.

B. L. Wood came with his parents, Stephen and Betsey (Loveland) Wood, to Green county in 1844. They first lived in the town of Jefferson upon a farm owned by Joseph Forbes. They afterwards removed to the village of Exeter, where they resided a number of years. B. L. Wood lived at home, until he was fifteen years old. He then purchased a farm of 110 acres in the town of Mount Pleasant, which, in 1866, he sold, and removed to Monticello. He purchased another farm of 260 acres upon which he lived until 1876, then bought the farm known as the Adams place, in the same town. It consisted of 360 acres. In 1880 he sold this place and bought a farm in the town of Monroe, containing 260 acres. He commenced business in Juda, buying and shipping grain and stock in 1883. He was married Nov. 3, 1861, to Judith Griffin, daughter of Hiram and Helen (McCall) Griffin, of Dane county. They have three children—Alva S., Stella M. and Helen P. Stella is married to W. C. Sheffer and living in Juda. Mrs. Wood's parents live in Michigan, where her father is engaged in the business of growing and shipping fruit. Mr.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Wood's parents are dead. His father is buried in Monticello, and his mother in Pennsylvania. Mr. Wood was born in Madison Co., N. Y., Feb. 14, 1838.

J. H. Foster was born in Kennebec Co., Maine, June 5, 1831. His parents were Wardsworth and Lucy (Haywood) Foster. In 1845, his father emigrated to this county, having in early life followed the ocean, plying between Nantucket and the West Indies. He settled in Monroe, and purchased land adjoining the village limits, and laid out what is known as Foster's addition. Mr. Foster, Sr., was a man highly respected in the community, and was twice elected to the office of county treasurer, and was a member of the board on the organization of the town. The subject of this sketch in 1855, engaged in the furniture business. He was married in 1861, to Helen Scovil, a daughter of Lyman Scovil, one of the early settlers of the county. Four children blessed this union, three of whom are now living—Eva, Nellie and Florence. Mr. Foster has been closely identified with the county for nearly forty years, and has seen the development from a vast wilderness to one of the best counties in the State. In 1859 he was appointed deputy sheriff, and served six years. He is a member of the Masonic lodges, Blue and Chapter.

George Goodrich, retired farmer, is a native of Saratoga Co., N. Y., born April 9, 1812. He is a son of Jacob and Betsey (Ames) Goodrich, who reared a family of five sons and five daughters, of whom George, subject of this sketch, is the only one now living. He was brought up on a farm, and educated in the common schools. In February, 1841, he was married to Marthena Cushman, a daughter of Oliver and Clarissa (Thomas) Cushman. In 1845, they came to Green county; traveling with a team to Buffalo, thence by water to Little Port, a small harbor north of Chicago, completing the journey from that point by team. They settled in the town of Clarno, where he broke the prairie and opened a farm. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich came to Green county, poor in purse, but with good health and plenty of energy. They have accumulated a competency. He owned at one time, 330 acres of fine land, which he sold for $65 per acre. In 1870, they came to Monroe, where they are now living in the enjoyment of the fruits of their past labor.

J. Jacob Tschudy, one of the prominent men of Green county, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, June 26, 1826, where he grew to manhood, receiving his early education in the schools of said canton. In 1844 he graduated at Aarau (Switzerland) College. In 1846 he came to Wisconsin, being sent by the trustees of the emigration association of said canton of Glarus, as assistant leader (or supervisor) of the Swiss colony of New Glarus, which was founded in 1845. In 1854 he resigned this office, soon moving away from New Glarus to a farm and thence to Dayton. In 1858 he was elected register of deeds of said county of Green, and re-elected in 1860. In 1863 he was elected clerk of the town board of Monroe, and in the winter of 1863—4 he was appointed recording clerk, and subsequently assistant clerk (of the chief clerk) of the Senate in Madison. In 1864 he was elected clerk of the county board of supervisors, after having served over one year as deputy, as such clerk. For this office he was elected four times, serving nearly ten consecutive years in said office. In 1883 he was elected by the first ward of the city of Monroe, as its representative in the county board of supervisors, and is serving now as the chairman of the building committee for the construction of a new court house. In 1848 he was married to Barbara Hottinger, from Switzerland, by whom he had ten children, of whom nine are living. In New Glarus and Monroe he was one of the founders of the German Church congregations, Reformed Evangelical Church, and is now a member and trustee of said Church in Monroe.

George Spangler, gunsmith, is a native of Pennsylvania, born Dec. 23, 1829. He was a son of Samuel and Catharine (Zimmerman) Spangler, who emigrated to this county in 1844, and in 1846 settled in Monroe, and started the first gun shop in the county. The subject of this sketch succeeded his father in business, and has prosecuted the same since. In 1858 he was married to Kate V. Zimmerman, by whom he has one child—Anna M. Mr. Spangler is a member of the I. O. O. F., and president of the sharpshooters society. He has been identified with the county for more than forty years.

James Ely, one of the pioneers of this county, was born in Green Co., Penn., on the 22d day of February, 1822. His parents were John and Catharine Ely, natives of the same State. About 1829, John Ely emigrated with his family to Knox Co., Ohio, which was then an unbroken wilderness, infested with Indians. Here he cleared a farm, which he afterwards sold, and removed to another. He came to Monroe in October, 1846, traveling overland with teams. They were twenty-two days on the road, crossing the Black Swamp on corduroy bridges, and fording streams. Mr. Ely died in 1850. Mrs. Ely died in the fall of 1846. They were both members of the Christian Church for many years. James Ely, subject of this sketch, was reared and educated in the wilds of Ohio. The first school that he attended was in a log cabin with a puncheon floor, slab benches and desks, with windows of greased paper. He was married in Ohio, to Sarah E. Corbin, daughter of William K. Corbin, a native of Washington Co., Penn., who settled in Ohio in 1823. Mr. and Mrs. Ely had twelve children, nine sons and three daughters, eight of whom are living—William K., Sophia, Jerome C., Minerva, James M., Thomas B., Edwin E. and Francis M. Two of the sons, Erastus and William K., enlisted in the 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery. Erastus died in the service, while on board the steamer Julia, in 1864, from eating cakes containing poison, which he had obtained from a rebel woman in Memphis. He was much esteemed by his comrades, and a favorite in his company. Mr. Ely came to the town of Monroe in 1846, took land and made a home, where he lived twenty-nine years. At that time, 1846, the country was new. There were no mills in this section, and the settlers were compelled to go to Beloit for their milling. At one time he hauled wheat to Milwaukee and sold it for thirty-seven and a half cents per bushel. Mr. and Mrs. Ely, on their arrival in this county, were in limited circumstances, $8 and an old team and wagon comprising the whole of their worldly goods. Coming through Indiana and Illinois, they contracted the fever and ague, from which they did not recover for a year. Being nearly out of money, he was obliged to find employment at once, and went to a man by the name of Rust, who, after some deliberation, concluded to hire him, agreeing to pay him fifty cents per day. The following winter, he tried hunting, but found that tramping through the snow and roughing it were not particularly beneficial to the ague, and abandoned it. He finally struck a new source of revenue in the manufacture of splint baskets which he contracted to Isaac Moulton, he to receive fifty cents each for bushel baskets, and to take his pay in groceries. The next spring he went to work for Mr. Rust, but in May he was taken sick with the ague, and for one year was unable to do any work. In a new country, sick, and with but little to subsist upon, his experience was hard indeed, to endure. In the fall of 1850 he purchased 160 acres of land, and built a log cabin 18x20 feet. Their furniture was of the rudest kind, all home made. This was their beginning in this county. They are now in possession of a comfortable fortune, which is due to their perseverance, industry and economy. Mr. and Mrs. Ely are members of the Christian Church.

Lucius Wolcott, a native of Wyoming Co., N. Y., was born Feb. 6, 1816, and is a son of Daniel and Maria Wolcott, natives of Connecticut, who settled in Genesee Co., N. Y., when young people. They were the parents of ten children, nine of whom reached maturity. Daniel Wolcott was, in early life, a whig, but afterwards voted with the republican party. He held the office of justice of the peace for fifteen years, and was several times assessor, town clerk and supervisor; a man of superior ability. He died in 1849. Lucius Wolcott, subject of this sketch, was married June 2, 1840, to Olive W. Chandler, a native of New Hampshire, born Oct. 2, 1822. He lived in Wethersfield, until 1842, when he removed to Burlington, Iowa, and in 1846 moved to Monroe, Wis., since which time he has been a resident of this county. He started the first nursery in Green county. It was known as "Wolcott's Nursery." He followed that business about twelve years. He was elected to the office of county treasurer, which office he held two terms. He has also held many offices of minor note. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott have two children—Albert M. and Florence E.

Alanson Corson, a native of Somerset Co., Maine, was born Dec. 25, 1808. He was a son of Moses and Roxy (Carpenter) Corson, natives of the same State, who were the parents of eight children, seven of whom lived to an adult age. The father died about 1876, and the mother was again married to Levi Bean, and afterwards married a man by the name of Lord. The subject of this sketch, when a young man, learned the trade of harness maker. He was married in Somerset county to Harriet Benson, six children were born to them, five of whom are still living—Moses Sylvester, William H., Henry T., Mary M., who was married to Otto Leicering, and now Mrs. M. Rosenblatt; Emma J., now Mrs. Moses Rutter. Mrs. Corson died in 1847. He was again married to Harriet Drave, a daughter of James and Margaret (Frazie) Drave, from Maryland, who emigrated to Green county in 1846. By this union there were born—James W., Walter S., Louisa (deceased) and Hattie. In April, 1842, Mr. Corson arrived in the village of Monroe, then a small hamlet, having but a few log cabins. Here he started the first harness shop, and made the first harness manufactured here. He drew by team his lumber from Chicago, at that time a small, muddy village. He built the first brick building where J. Bolender's store now stands, by whom it is still used. He followed the harness business many years, and afterward engaged in the boot and shoe business, and kept a general store, drawing his goods from Chicago. In 1863 he went to California, taking twenty-two horses and crossing the plains. In 1871 he went to Sioux Falls and built a hotel called "Cataract House." This was the first hotel in the city. Mr. Corson has always led an active life. He has for many years been a democrat, and although commencing poor, has an abundance for all the wants of life.

John L. Perrine, one of the early settlers of the county, was born in Middlesex Co., N. J., Sept. 12, 1803, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the subscription schools. When seventeen years old, he was apprenticed to the trade of blacksmithing. His parents were Robert Perrine, a soldier in the War of 1812, and Catharine Anderson, a daughter of Col. Anderson, of the Revolutionary War, who were the parents of eight children. The subject of this sketch was also in the War of 1812, under his father. In 1827 he was married to Eliza Ann Gordon, by whom there were eight children, two of whom are now living—William, of Green county, and Rebecca F., wife of Foster Barber, of Stephenson Co., Ill. In the fall of 1847, Mr. Perrine came to this county and first settled in Monroe; afterwards he opened up a farm in the town of Washington. Mrs. Perrine died in about 1855. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, a sincere Christian, and beloved by all who knew, her. He was again married March 26, 1859, to Emily Carpenter, who died without children. In June, 1875, he was again married to Mrs. Elizabeth A. Green, a daughter of John Dedrick, of Ohio. This third wife was formerly married to Charles E. Green, a native of New York, who settled in Green county, in 1847, by whom there were two children—James and Olive. Mr. Perrine has been successful and, by his own industry has accumulated a good property, and is in the enjoyment of a good home.

Jacob Hefty, brewer, was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, April 15, 1835. He came with his parents to Green county in 1847, who made settlement on section 4, town of Washington, where they took up land and made a farm. His father died in 1871. He came here poor, but at the time of his death had accumulated considerable property. In 1873 his mother died. They were both members of the Lutheran Church, and at the time of their death had 640 acres of land. The subject of this sketch was married in 1857 to Catharine Blumer, by whom there were six children, five now living—Maggie, Katie, Fred, Annie and Emma. In 1868 he came to Monroe and engaged in the brewing business, which he has since followed.

Willard E. Grinnell was born in Montgomery Co., N. Y., Sept. 21, 1824. He is a son of Robert P. and Esther (Montgomery) Grinnell. The latter was a relative of Gen. Montgomery, of Revolutionary fame. In 1836 the family removed to Monroe Co., N. Y., and in 1847 came to Green Co., Wis., and located in the town of Adams, where Mr. Grinnell, Sr., took land and opened a farm. The subject of this sketch came to this county with his parents. He was married in the spring of 1847 to Mary Hanks, of Erie Co., N. Y. By this union there were eleven children, nine of whom are living—Louisa, Anson, Willis, Harry, Serepta, Alice, Esther, Walter and Bertie. Mr. Grinnell is a staunch republican, and has held several local offices. He came to Green county when it was in a wild, unsettled condition. He has lived to see it transformed into a populous and well cultivated country, and comfortable and beautiful homes now stand where formerly stood the primitive log cabin of the pioneer. He came here poor, but by energy and close attention to business, has accumulated a competency.

C. D. Hulburt, one of the early settlers of the county, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Nov. 26, 1829. He is a son of Julius and Sarah M. (Vosburg) Hulburt, who came to Green county in 1847. They were the parents of three sons and one daughter, of whom the subject of this sketch is the only survivor. In the winter of 1850—1 Julius Hulburt was a member of the State legislature. He died Oct. 19, 1881. Mrs. Hulburt's death occurred two years previously. They were life-long members of the Baptist Church, and were highly respected in the community where they lived. C. D. Hulburt was married Oct. 13, 1852, to Sarah E. Searles, a daughter of Dennis and Adeline (Doolittle) Searles. They first settled in Albany, in this county, where Mr. Hulburt was for some years engaged in the carpenter and joiner business. He afterwards engaged in lumbering, a business which he still carries on, and removed to Monroe in December, 1874. April 19, 1865, Mr. Hulburt sailed from Boston in the ship City of Boston, on a voyage around the world. Mr. and Mrs. Hulburt have one child—Lorraine S., who is a graduate of the State University at Madison.

David Wakeman Ball was born in 1818. He was a native of Jefferson Co., Ohio. At the age of fourteen years he was converted to the Christian religion, became a Methodist, and for the remainder of his life never severed his connection with that Church. He was married to Catharine E. Smock in 1843, in Ohio. To them were born nine children, eight of whom are living, grown to manhood and womanhood. They live to honor their father's name, respected and useful members of society. He came to Green county in 1849, and has lived here ever since. In his early life he was a farmer, and until quite recently was interested in that branch of industry, directly or indirectly. He recently disposed of his large farm east of Monroe, and had put his affairs in the best shape possible. He was taken ill on the 12th of April, 1883, with pneumonia, which from the first he believed to be the beginning of the end with him on earth. He died on Thursday evening following, surrounded by his family. When death came he was ready for the summons, and as the spirit went out of the body, a smile passed over the silent features that was born of heaven. The funeral took place on Sunday, from the Methodist church, and notwithstanding the extremely stormy weather, more came than could get into the building. No services were held in any other church, and people, without distinction of faith or belief, came to pay their respects to the memory of the departed. The rites were impressively conducted by Rev. J. S. Thompson, assisted by Revs. L. S. Morton and L. W. Bingham. The choir also comprised members of the several Churches. The pall bearers were: Judge B. Dunwiddie, L. Davenport, J. H. Bridge, William Gray, Harrison King and B. Lemont. At 12 o'clock noon the procession started from the church, and the mortal remains of D. W. Ball was laid in the quiet grave until the final day. Mr. Ball soon became prominent in this section, and in 1857 was elected county treasurer. In 1861 he was appointed postmaster, and held the office for six years, with great acceptability to the people. In 1874 he was elected sheriff. In this office he was remarkably successful. He was a clear headed-man in all things, cool and deliberate in his actions, and an excellent judge of human nature; He performed the sometimes unpleasant duties devolving upon him impartially, but in as pleasant a manner as circumstances would permit. In fine, he possessed executive ability of a high order. In 1876 he was again appointed postmaster, serving four years, with honor to himself and justice to the people. In November, 1882, he received the appointment of postmaster for the third and last time. His administration of the post office has been eminently successful, and the hope has been fondly entertained that its affairs would remain under his supervision for many years to come. In view of these things, next to his family, the community has met with a most serious loss in the death of D. W. Ball. As a friend remarked on the day of the funeral, "there was only one D. W. Ball in Monroe." Such expressions of esteem show in what high regard he was held by the citizens. The kind remembrances, of friends in the shape of the florist's art at the church were profuse and appropriate, and showed in part how high the deceased was esteemed. The floral tributes were exquisite for their workmanship, and were composed of a pillow of pansies, finely designed cross, wreaths, star, beautiful bouquets, etc. The presence of the gifts upon and around the coffin spoke more than words could express the sentiments of the donors for the deceased.

C. M. King was born in Erie Co., Penn., Aug. 4, 1808. He is the son of Robert and Sarah (Martin) King, who were the parents of two children—C. M. and Julia A. Mrs. King died, and Robert King was again married to Lydia Randall, and by this union there were four children, only three of whom are now living. Mr. King died in 1839. His wife is still living in Iowa, at the age of ninety years. The subject of this sketch was reared to agricultural pursuits, and received a common school education. He was married in 1831, in Erie county, and soon after removed to Ashtabula Co., Ohio. In the spring of 1849 they came to Green Co., Wis. They have had five children, four of whom are living—Charles D., William W., Robert R. and Zaphna L. Mr. King is one of the staunch republicans of the county. In 1860 he went to California and engaged in mining a short time, then returned and worked at the carpenter and joiner's trade. Three of his sons were in the service during the late war.

Joseph Perrine, one of the pioneers of Green county, is a native of Middlesex Co., N. J., born May 20, 1806. He is a son of Robert and Catharine (Anderson) Perrine, who were the parents of eight children, four sons and four daughters. Mr. Perrine, Sr., was a soldier in the War of 1812, and held a commission as captain. He was a man of superior ability. Joseph Perrine, subject of this sketch, learned the mason's trade in New York city, where he took contracts and employed at times as many as sixty men. July 1, 1827, he was married, in New York, to Jane Brush, by whom he had eight children, two of whom are now living—Sarah, now Mrs. John F. Brown, and Mary, wife of Gershom Bintliff. Mrs. Perrine died July 22, 1839. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and highly respected. Mr. Perrine's second wife was formerly Mary O'Conner, and by this union there were ten children, seven of whom are living—Jane, now Mrs. J. B. Galusha; Henry, Erastus, Lucy, now Mrs. Ferris Miller; Hale, Elgin and Emma. Mrs. Perrine died Jan. 26, 1881. In the spring of 1849, Mr. Perrine came west and traveled extensively through the northwest. In the spring of 1850 he moved his family to Monroe, where he purchased a quarter section adjoining the town. His first house was built opposite the M. E church. He is one of the staunch republicans of the county. Mr. Perrine came to the county in limited circumstances and has been successful in amassing a considerable property.

H. G. Cleveland, a native of Maine, was born in Somerset county, Jan. 26, 1829. He remained in his native State until twenty-one years old, spending his time upon a farm and attending the common schools. In 1850 he came to Green county with his parents, who located in the town of Jordan on a farm. In 1863 he enlisted in the 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and before leaving the State was commissioned as 2d lieutenant of his company. The following March his company joined the regiment at Black River Bridge, Mississippi. July 21, in front of Atlanta, he was wounded in the left arm, in consequence of which he was obliged to suffer its amputation. He then went home on furlough, with the intention of again joining his regiment, but failed to do so on account of sickness from loss of arm. He was discharged at Louisville, Ky., Nov. 17, 1864.

James Cleveland was born in Somerset Co., Maine, Oct. 5, 1799. March 15, 1827, he was married to Edith Cragin, a native of the same county, born Jan. 18, 1802. They were the parents of nine children, five of whom lived to an adult age. Mr. Cleveland was a man who never sought office, although always well posted in regard to the political affairs of the county and State. He was an old line whig, but afterwards affiliated with the republican party. He held several local offices in the town. He was an honest, upright man and respected by all. He died in February, 1868. Mrs. Cleveland is still living with her son in Monroe.

Henry Schindler, a native of Switzerland, was born in canton Glarus, Aug. 15, 1815. His parents, Andrew and Anna (Zimmerman) Schindler, had five children, three sons and two daughters—Rosina, Jacob, Henry, Andrew and Anna. Henry, the subject of this sketch, when twenty-two years old, learned the carpenter's trade. He was married in his native country to Catharine Zapfi, who was born Feb. 21, 1826. By this union twelve children were born, seven of whom are living—Anna, Henry, Adam, Katie, Maggie, Andrew and Jacob, five of whom are living in California. Henry Schindler came to America in 1845, and first settled in Syracuse, N. Y. Two years later he went to Milwaukee, and in 1850 came to Monroe, which then consisted of a few poorly built houses. There was but one family of Germans in the place at that time. Mr. and Mrs. Schindler, like many others, came to Green county in very limited circumstances, but are now in possession of a comfortable home, which is due to their own exertions. They are members of the Evangelical Church.

Peter Spahr was born in canton Bern, Switzerland, in September, 1814. When thirteen years old he commenced to learn the trade of a tailor in his father's shop. He was married Jan. 24, 1833, to Anna Jacobs, by whom he had seven children, five of whom are living—Barbara, wife of John Klub, of Shelby Co., Iowa; Mary, wife of Ernest Hahn; Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Schuler; Rosa, wife Jacob Schuler; and John, who married Jennie Aldrich. In 1851 Mr. Spahr left his home in Switzerland and emigrated to America, locating in Monroe, where he has followed his trade since. Mr. and Mrs. Spahr have lived together as man and wife for fifty-one years. In 1883 they had their golden wedding. They are members of the German Lutheran Church, being among the first members of the same. He has always taken an interest in the Church and has done much for its support.

Charles D. Corson was born in Athens, Maine, Nov. 22, 1834. His parents were D. F. and Deborah (Norton) Corson, both natives of Maine. The subject of this sketch was educated in his native State. When fourteen years old he learned the trade of harness maker and saddler in his father's shop. In 1851 he came to Monroe and worked at his trade. In 1856 he formed a partnership with his father under the firm name of D. F. Corson & Son. In 1858 he was married to Frances Davison, a native of New York. Three children blessed this union—Clara, Cora and Frank E. Mr. Corson is one of the strong temperance workers of the town. Is a member of the Good Templars, Temple of Honor and A. O. U. W. Mr. and Mrs. Corson are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

R. Craven, brick maker, was born in Washington Co., Penn., Dec. 28, 1828. He is a son Joshua and Elizabeth (Blain) Craven, natives of the same county, where they reared a family of ten children, nine of whom are now living. Mrs. Craven died in April, 1843. Mr. Craven was again married to Margaret Study, by whom he had two children, both of whom died. in childhood. In 1856 Mr. Craven, Sr., went to Tyler Co., W. Va., where he remained until the time of his death in 1882. The subject of this sketch received his education in the subscription schools. He was married March 23, 1862, Anna M. Miller, a daughter of Peter and Lydia Miller, of Northampton Co., Penn. Four children blessed this union—Alma, Charles M., Nettie and Harry B. In the spring of 1851 he came to this county, making the journey by team. It was an extremely rainy season and the roads were at times almost impassable. They were forty-three days on the road. During the next six years he was engaged in wagon-making, and mining a little at intervals, in the fall-of 1857 he commenced making brick, which occupation he has followed up to the present time. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Encampment.

Fred E. Legler, of the firm of Treat & Co., was born in New Glarus, Green Co., Wis, Sept. 2, 1851. His parents were George and Anna (Durst) Legler, who emigrated to America in 1846, with a colony, and made settlement in New Glarus, where he took up land and engaged in farming. The father was poor, and participated in all the privations and hardships endured by that colony, but his reward came, and he is now in the enjoyment of a competence fairly won, a home honestly gained. At one time he owned 380 acres of land. The subject of this sketch was brought up on a farm, and received his early education in the common school; subsequently he attended school at Plainfield, Ill., and at Evansville Seminary, Evansville, Wis. He there taught school for two years. In 1873, he engaged in the mercantile trade in New Glarus, which occupation he followed nine and one half years, then came to Monroe and formed a partnership with J. B. Treat. In 1873, he was married to Rosa Hefty. They have three children living—Georgia, Sylvia M. and Alice L. Mr. and Mrs. Legler are members of the Evangelical Church.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

John Beach, a native of Lincolnshire, England, was born May 30, 1828. He is a son of George and Fannie J. Beach, who were the parents of twelve children, eleven of whom grew to maturity. The subject of this sketch was reared in his native country until twenty-three years of age, when he emigrated to America. He landed in New York in 1852, and in 1854, came to Green county. He took a claim of eighty acres of government land on section 36, town of Jordan. He was married in Lincolnshire, Aug. 19, 1845, to Susan Martin, daughter of Joseph and Jane (Bedford) Martin. Mr. and Mrs. Beach have had nine children born to them, five of whom are living—Joseph, Robert, Mary A., wife of William Roberts; William and Jane, wife of Jesse Trickel. When Mr. Beach arrived in New York city in 1852, he had but $1 in his pocket, and to-day he owns 330 acres of land, valued at $30 per acre. He has forty acres near town, valued at $100 per acre. In the spring of 1882, he removed to the city of Monroe, where he lives a retired life.

Ben L. Hoyland, cabinet maker, was born in Geauga Co., Ohio, on the 12th of March, 1827. When he was quite small his parents removed to Erie Co., Penn., and soon afterwards to Mercer Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood. The first school he attended was in a log cabin, in which the chimney took up one end of the house. The seats were slab benches, and the school was kept up by subscription. When twenty years of age he taught school in his native county. On the 9th of April, 1850, he was married to Sarah Stephenson, of Mercer Co., Penn. In 1852, he came to Green county, and located in Monroe, and followed the carpenter business. In 1864 he enlisted in the 38th Wisconsin Infantry, company D, and participated in some stirring scenes during his time of enlistment. He was at the blowing up of the fort at the Horse Shoe, Weldon Railroad; and was ordered to reinforce the corps at Reams Station, being under fire nearly the whole of the time. He was discharged on account of the death of his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Hoyland were the parents of four children, three of whom are living—John A., Ella, wife of William Bowell, and Emma. Mrs. Hoyland died in December, 1864. She was a member of the M. E. Church, and highly respected by all who knew her. Mr. Hoyland was the second time married in Pennsylvania in the fall of 1865, to Mrs. Linsey (Stithers) Stephenson, widow of John Stephenson, who was killed in the war. The result of this union was two children—Charles S. and Jessie. In 1881, he embarked in the furniture business. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

Lewis Gapen, one of the prominent business men of Green county, is a native of Green Co., Penn., born June 19, 1811. His father was John Gapen, a soldier in the Revolutionary War, who was one of the sixty who were sent out at the time of St. Clair's defeat near Cincinnati, to look after the dead, and from there in search of Daniel Boone, in Kentucky, whom they supposed had been killed by the Indians. After the war he returned to Green Co., Penn., where he was married to Sarah Swope, a native of Pennsylvania, and eleven children were born to them, seven of whom are living. The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm, and obtained his education in the subscription schools. In October, 1830, he was married to Maria Titus, a daughter of Benjamin Titus, who was also a soldier in the War of the Revolution. Eight children blessed this union, three of whom are now living—Sarah E., wife of Daniel J. Patton, Marion T. and William R. Mrs. Gapen died in the summer of 1849. She was a member of the Regular Baptist Church, a sincere Christian, and much respected by all. Mr. Gapen was again married Feb. 14, 1850, to Martha Jamison, a native of Green Co., Penn. By this union there were three children, of whom Levi H. is the only one now living. In the spring of 1853, Mr. Gapen took a tour through the west in search of a favorable location, and in the following October removed with his family to Green Co., Wis., and settled in the town of Jefferson, on section 17, where he followed farming successfully for thirty years, accumulating a handsome fortune. He is now a resident of the city of Monroe, Green Co., Wis.

John Moreland, one of the early settlers of this county, is a native of Mercer Co., Penn., born Sept. 7, 1823. Mrs. Moreland, the mother of the subject of this sketch, died Sept. 21, 1870. Mr. Moreland, Sr., and his wife were members of the United Presbyterian Church, and consistent Christian people, and died in the full hope of a glorious reward, and a happy eternal home. John M., the subject of this sketch, came to this county in 1853. In October, 1860, he was married to Anna Irwin, daughter of J. Irwin and Elizabeth (Smith) Irwin. Her father was of Lancaster Co., Penn., and her mother of Crawford county, where she died in 1825. Mr. Irwin went to Crawford county when seven years old, and afterwards moved to Mercer Co., Ill., and died in 1864. Mr. and Mrs. Moreland are the parents of one child, who died in infancy. They have brought up two children, treating them as their own. In the spring of 1883 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. Mr. Moreland has been a successful business man, and now owns 154 acres of land, valued at $65 per acre, besides other property.

A. W. Goddard, one of the prominent business men of Monroe, is a native of Mercer Co., Ohio, born in 1832. His parents, Jabez and Beulah (Armstrong) Goddard, settled in Ohio about 1821, and removed to Indiana while A. W. was a boy, where he was apprenticed to learn the trade of tanner and currier. He came to Monroe, Green county, in 1854, and was there employed in a tannery for several years. In 1855 he was married to Sophronia Lindsley, who died in 1856, leaving one child—Henry, who is now a railroad agent in Oregon. Mr. Goddard was again married to Sarah McMannor, a native of Pennsylvania. By this union there are four children—Edmund, Emma, Jessie and Milton. Edmund and Emma are now students at the State University. He has always taken an active interest in the cause of education, and has for eight years been a member of the board of education. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. Mr. and Mrs. Goddard are members of the M. E. Church, where the family worship.

Capt. Henry Hoehn, a native of Switzerland, emigrated to this country with his parents, Jacob and Anna (Hottinger) Hoehn, in 1854. He was born July 18, 1842, and received a liberal education in his native country. His father by trade was a shoemaker and settled at New Glarus, where he followed the trade until his death which occurred in 1876. His mother is still living. The subject of this sketch enlisted in the army Oct. 7, 1861, in the 9th regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company K, and was mustered in at Milwaukee, Nov. 16, 1861, as a private. In March, 1863, he was promoted to corporal. In March, 1864, he was promoted to the rank of sergeant. In October, 1864, he was transferred to the 45th Regular Infantry, and was promoted to the rank of captain, and served on detached duty on the staff of Gen. Miller, at Nashville. He was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., in August, 1865. Soon after leaving the service he received a position as clerk with Roth Bros, remaining with them until 1870, when he embarked in his present business under the firm name of Hoehn & Stingl. In 1875, Mr. Weber purchased the interest of Mr. Stingl and the style of the firm became Hoehn & Weber. In 1883 they erected one of the finest business houses in the city on the northeast corner of the square, and known as Ludlow's old stand. Their salesroom is 28x95 feet, two stories and a basement, and they carry a stock of $20,000. In 1866, Mr. Hoehn was married to Eliza Kaderly, by whom he has four children—J. Albert, Huldah E., Ida and Sophia.

LeRoy S. Smock, one of the prominent business men of the county, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, June 1, 1839. He is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Teple) Smock, early settlers in Columbiana county. They were the parents of nine children. Peter Smock was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., in 1795. In 1820 he went to Ohio, and in 1854 came to Green county and located near Shueyville, town of Clarno. He died in this county in 1868. In the days of slavery he was a strong abolitionist, and did all in his power to forward the antislavery cause. He was also a firm advocate of the temperance cause, a member of, and one of the most active workers of the State temperance organization. He organized many lodges throughout the State. He would never sell a bushel of grain to be distilled into high wines. Throughout his whole life, by precept and example, he was an earnest advocate of the right, always ready to lend a helping hand to any enterprise for the welfare of his fellow men, and fearlessly condemning the wrong, especially slavery and intemperance. For nearly a half a century his life was cheered by the partner of his bosom, who preceded him across the dark river, but a few months. LeRoy S. Smock was reared upon a farm and educated in the common schools. He came to Green county, with his parents, in 1854, and in December, 1869, was married to Lucretia Rittenhouse, a daughter of William and Sarah (Moore) Rittenhouse, mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Smock was born in Monroe, Jan. 10, 1842. Mr. Smock removed to Monroe, in 1860, where he has since been variously engaged, but principally in stock growing and dealing. Mr.

Smock has profited by his father's example and precepts, never having tasted a drop of liquor in his life. He is one of the staunchest of republicans and has never sought office. He is largely engaged in grain and stock business in Nebraska.

Samuel Schuler, harness maker, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, July 7, 1838. He is a son of Henry and Barbara (Tschudy) Schuler, who came to America in 1854. They stopped a short time in New Jersey, and the same fall came to New Glarus, Green county. In 1860 they removed to Monroe, where Mr. Schuler died in 1874, and Mrs. Schuler, in 1883. The subject of this sketch began learning his trade, at the age of seventeen, in the shop of D. F. and L. Corson, of Monroe, with whom he remained about four years, then went into business for himself. In 1861 he was married to Elizabeth Spahr, a daughter of Peter Spahr. Mr. and Mrs. Schuler are the parents of five children—Samuel, Jr., Otto, William, Elizabeth and Henry. Mr. Schuler began business with limited means, but by industry and fair dealing has acquired a comfortable property. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Turner's society and the Hook and Ladder Company.

He was married to Mary Wood, who was born in Middle-bury, July 6, 1794; and by this union there were seven children, two of whom are now living—Mary J., wife of Rev. H. A. Mayhew, of California, who has a wide reputation as a preacher of the Gospel. He formerly preached at Austin, Minn., where he was instrumental in building a fine church edifice; Catharine is now the wife of L. T. Pullin, a prominent banker at Evansville, Wis. In 1826 Mr. Pike emigrated from Norway to Kingfield, Franklin (formerly Somerset Co.,) Maine. He followed farming for two years at that place, then went into trade and lumbering. At that time he owned one whole township of land, and dealt extensively in cattle, which he would drive to Brighton, Mass. Mr. Pike first visited the west, traveling extensively in Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and locating land in several different places. He returned in the fall of the year to Maine. In 1855 he came to Wisconsin and settled at Argyle, in Lafayette county. Mrs. Pike died Nov. 21, 1859. She was a sincere Christian and esteemed by all. Mr. Pike was again married to Mrs. F. J. Way, widow of G L. Way, Dec. 24, 1861. in April, 1866, they came to Green county and settled in Monroe.

Roger Gettings, proprietor of a meat market in the city of Monroe, was born in Ireland, in May, 1831. In 1847 his parents emigrated to America and settled in Delaware Co., Penn., where Mr. Gettings, Sr., engaged in farming, and died in 1853. In 1855 Roger Gettings came to Monroe, where he has since resided. In February, 1855, he was married to Bridget Byrne. By this union there were eleven children, seven of whom are living—Michael E., Maggie, Kate, Maria, Teresa, Miles and James. Mr. Gettings began with nothing, but by fair dealing and industry has accumulated a fine property, and to-day is among the well-to-do business men of the county. In 1860 he embarked in the butchering business, which he has followed successfully since. Mr. and Mrs. Gettings are members of the Catholic Church of Monroe.

J. L. Rood, one of the most prominent stock growers of the county, is a native of Chittenden Co., Vt., born in 1837. After his birth his parents removed to Cook Co., Ill. In 1841 they removed to Grant Co., Wis., where his father engaged in the mercantile business. In 1855 he came to Monroe and embarked in the drug business, which he continued until 1859, when he went into the lumber business. He followed the latter business until death called him to a better world. He was a man of more than ordinary ability, He was a staunch republican, and while in Grant county was elected to the State legislature. While at Hazel Green he laid out what is known as the "Rood addition" to that city. J. L. Rood, the subject of this sketch, came to the county with his father and followed various occupations. He is at present engaged in the lumber trade, and raising fine stock. He has been twice married, and has two children.

Charles Frey was born in Baden, Germany, Jan. 28, 1842. His parents, Frank Frey and Francesco (Mantz) Frey, emigrated to America in 1854, and in the fall of 1855 came to Monroe. Charles Frey, subject of this sketch, enlisted Aug. 4, 1861, in the 2d Volunteer Light Artillery, and participated in the engagements at Suffolk, Williamsburg, Yorktown and West Point. His regiment was stationed at Fort Monroe, eight months. He was a faithful soldier, and always at his post, never losing a day by sickness. He was mustered out of the service, July 10, 1865, and soon after veteranized. After the close of the war he returned to Monroe, where he was married, Nov. 20, 1865, to Annie Reinhart. Mr. and Mrs. Frey are the parents of five living children—Edward, Louisa, George, Albert and Tillie. Mr. Frey is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

William Brown, one of the prominent men of this county, was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1823. In 1842 he left his native country, came to America, and located in Erie Co., N. Y., where he remained about eight years, and meanwhile formed the acquaintance of Elizabeth Chamberlain, to whom he was married in 1846. In the spring of 1850 he came to Green county, purchased land on section 25, and the following spring moved his family here and commenced farming. His first crop of wheat was drawn to Galena, and sold for fifty cents per bushel. The following fall he hauled wheat to Milwaukee, making a trip in six days, and selling the same for forty cents per bushel. Mr. Brown came to this county a poor man, but by hard work and fair dealing, has accumulated a competency. He has held several local offices. In 1851 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. Alexander McNish, retired farmer, was born in Argyleshire, in the highlands of Scotland, Sept. 18, 1818. His parents were John and Catharine (Balentine) McNish. The former died in Scotland, and the latter died at sea, while on the voyage to America. The subject of this sketch learned the blacksmith trade in his native country, but after coming to America worked at gas fitting, first in Cleveland, then in Cincinnati, Nashville, Evansville, Dayton and other places, in all, seven years. His brother, one of the early settlers of Green county, induced him to come here to visit him and see the country, with which he was favorably impressed, and subsequently settled permanently in the county. Soon after Mr. McNish's first visit to the county, his brother died, and in 1857 Alexander came here, and April 22d of that year was married to his brother's widow, who was formerly Elizabeth Chadwick. She had two children by her first marriage—Clark C. and Alexander G. The latter is deceased. By the latter union there are seven children—John, Amanda L., Mary C., William L., Edith J., Albert J. and Elizabeth. Mrs. McNish died Dec. 9, 1872, and is buried in Juda cemetery. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and a true Christian. Mr. McNish first settled on a farm owned by his wife, on section 13, where he lived nine years. He then removed to section 11, where he owns 180 acres of land. In 1884 he removed to the city of Monroe where he owns a pleasant residence on the corner of Wisconsin and Clinton streets. He has retired from active business, and is politically, a republican. He has returned to Scotland twice; first in 1855, when he went after his mother, who died on the voyage as before stated; and again in 1881, for the benefit of his health.

Nelson Darling is a native of Yates Co., N. Y., born, June 11, 1827. He is a son of John and Roxana (Butler) Darling. The former was a native of Massachusetts, and the latter of Seneca Co., N. Y. They were married in the State of New York, and were the parents of seven children, all of whom reached maturity, and five of whom are now living. John Darling was by trade a shoemaker, and followed that occupation for many years. He removed to Green county about 1858, where both he and his wife died. He was, in early life, a "Jackson democrat," but afterwards joined the republican party. Mrs. Darling was a member of the M. E. Church. Nelson Darling commenced to learn the mason's trade when fifteen years of age. In May, 1842, he was married to Matilda Andrews, a daughter of Solomon Andrews, of Saratoga, N. Y. By this union there were seven children, five of whom are living—Austin L., of Albany, Green county; Frank E., of Neillsville, Clark county; Scott M., of Albany; Clara C., wife of Charles Sanborn, and Fred E., of Monroe. Mr. Darling came to Monroe in January, 1857, since which time he has been a resident of Green county. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company G, and participated in the engagement at Brentwood Station, in March, 1863, where he was taken prisoner, and with a number of his comrades sent to Libby prison, and was soon afterwards paroled and sent to Benton Barracks at St. Louis. He was exchanged the following June, and went with the regiment to Nashville. In July they went to Murfreesboro, and remained through the following winter, then joined Sherman at Lookout valley, participating in the capture of Atlanta, then on account of poor health he was sent to Chattanooga, and there mustered out, May 23, 1865. He was a member of the regimental band up to the time of the Atlanta campaign, when he was detailed at the hospital as assistant. He returned to Monroe after the close of the war, and has remained here since, with the exception of a short time in New York. Mr. Darling, in politics, is a staunch republican, and in 1884, was elected treasurer of the city of Monroe. He is a Master Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F. and the G.A.R.

Ogden Combs, who located in Green county in 1857, is a native of Trumbull Co., Ohio, born Jan. 10, 1810. He is a son of Ebenezer N. and Mary (Humiston) Combs, who emigrated to Ohio in 1798. That country was then a vast wilderness. Ebenezer Combs was a soldier in the War of 1812. Ogden Combs was reared in the wilderness, and educated in the log school house of pioneer times. When he was ten years old he commenced the manufacture of wooden clocks, and continued the business until he was twenty-two. He was married Feb. 5, 1829, to Mary Peck, daughter of Martin Peck. They had five children, four of whom are living—N. E., Margaret M., Cornelia and Henry D. Mr. and Mrs. Combs removed to Waukesha county, from Ohio, in 1856, and the following fall came to Green county, where they have since resided.

Capt. Samuel Lewis, cashier of the Citizens' Bank, Monroe, is a native of Fayette Co., Penn., born Aug. 17, 1842. His grandfather was a soldier in the War of the Revolution. His father, Thomas Lewis, was a native of New Jersey, and his mother was Catharine (Schnatterly) Lewis a native of Pennsylvania. His father was by trade a tailor, and followed that business many years, and served in the War of 1812, and died in 1850. In 1858 his mother came west and settled in Monroe, Green Co., Wis. At that time, Samuel, the subject of this sketch, was about sixteen years old, He at once engaged as clerk in a dry goods store, where he remained for three years. In September, 1861, he enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin Light Artillery, and participated in the following engagements: New Madrid, Mo., Farmington, Miss., and siege of Corinth, Miss. In 1862 the division of Gen. J. C. Davis, to which the 5th Wisconsin Battery belonged, was ordered to report at Murfreesboro, and he was engaged in the battles of Perryville, Lancaster, Nolansville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Hoover's Gap and Tullahoma. On August 17 they started out from Winchester for Chattanooga, the division crossing the river at Stevenson, Ala.

He was engaged on the extreme right wing in the flank movement which forced Bragg to evacuate Chattanooga, and brought on the battle of Chickamauga. He was at Chattanooga through the siege, where the soldiers suffered from short and poor rations. He also participated in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the campaign against Atlanta, was engaged at Resaca, Rome, Dallas, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Smyrna Camp Ground, Chattahoochee River, Peach Tree Creek, the various engagements in front of Atlanta and the battle of Jonesboro. The captain was mustered out Oct. 1, 1864, at Atlanta. In the fall of 1865 he engaged in the mercantile business at Juda. He was married Dec. 30, 1865, to Agnes Witmer, a daughter of David Witmer. Two children have blessed this union—Letha and Ralph. In the fall of 1868, he was elected to the office of register of deeds of this county for two years, and in 1870 was re-elected. In the spring of 1873 he engaged in trade at Monroe and was thus occupied until 1881. In April, 1883, he engaged in the banking business, having been elected cashier. In 1882 he was instrumental in organizing the Monroe City Guards, and was chosen captain of the company.

Washington Hill, carpenter and joiner, was born in Montpelier, Vt., on the 19th of March, 1819. His parents were Rufus and Naomi (Jewell) Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Hill were the parents of fifteen children. Mr. Hill died in about 1825, Mrs. Hill in 1878. The subject of this sketch was the youngest of the family. His father died when he was small and he learned his trade partially with an older brother. In 1836 he went to Oneida Co., N. Y., where he married Julietta Terry a daughter of Henry Terry. By this union there were three children—Mary, wife of D. R. Condon; Alice, wife of Frank L. Stone and Norman. In 1855 Mr. Hill crossed the plains to California. Here he remained about one year and a half. In 1857 he removed to Janesville, Wis., and the following year came to Monroe, where he has resided since.

E. Mosher, one of the early settlers and prominent men of the county, was born in Washington Co., N. Y., on the 15th of December, 1800. His parents were Elisha and Eunice (Agard) Mosher, natives of Dutchess Co., N. Y., who removed, the next year, (1801), to Saratoga county where the subject of this sketch resided for many years. He was married in 1820, January 6, to Elizabeth Allen, and eight children were born to them, three of whom are living—Cordelia, Henry P. and Joseph D. Mrs. Mosher died Feb. 17, 1868. She was a worthy member of the Christian Church and esteemed by all who knew her. Feb. 2, 1869, Mr. Mosher was again married to Mrs. Electa Carrington, widow of Roland Carrington. She was born in Hartford, Washington Co., N. Y., March 23, 1810. She was the mother of thirteen children, eight of whom are living—Nancy, Rinie, Sally A., Victoria, Louisa, Prentiss G., Adelbert R. and George S. In 1846 Mr. Mosher removed to Lafayette Co., Wis., and from there to Rock county, where he engaged in farming near Janesville. In 1846 he came to Green county and purchased a steam saw mill which he operated three years, then sold out and engaged in the mercantile business. Mr. Mosher had one son in the army—Stewart E., who enlisted in the 3d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and was killed at Harper's Ferry. Mr. Mosher is a member of the I. O. O. F. He has always taken an active interest in the political affairs of the county, and has held several local offices. He has been instrumental in the building up of the city of Monroe. He was the first to introduce French plate glass into that city. In 1838, he was appointed postmaster under President Van Buren, at South Leroy, Genesee county. From that place he went to Pavilion, same county, and was re-appointed postmaster in 1842.

Garrett Van Wagenen came to Green county and engaged in the lumber business, in 1858, being the second to engage in that business in this town. He was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1817. When a young man, he learned the trade of harness maker. He was married in New York, in March, 1845. Mr. Van Wagenen, in 1862, sold his lumber interest and opened a harness shop. In 1859 he built what is now known as the Copeland House, which he kept as a private boarding house for about eight years. About the time of the breaking out of the war, he contracted with the government to furnish knapsacks and haversacks. Soon after he was appointed sutler of the 16th Pennsylvania Cavalry, which position he held till the close of the war. In 1866 he went, in company with his eldest son, to Montana, remaining there about one year. At present he is engaged in dealing in coal, in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Van Wagenen are the parents of three children—Edward, Emma and Henry. Emma is principal of the grammar school at Monroe, where she has been a teacher for fourteen years. Henry is a jeweler in this city.

Capt. F. K. Studley, son of Capt. Eliakim and Betsey (Hallett) Studley, was born in Barnstable Co., Mass., March 8, 1833. Capt. Eliakim Studley followed a seafaring life for many years, his principal business being with the West Indies. The subject of this sketch, when a mere boy, accompanied his father on his voyages, and at the age of twenty-two years became captain of a vessel, his trade being in the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indies. In 1858 he was married to Eliza A. Crowell, and three children were born to them—George G., Lelia C. and Orrin B. In 1860 he abandoned the sea and came to Green Co., Wis., where he engaged in farming at Monticello. In 1875 he was elected superintendent of the Grange Store, serving two years. In the fall of 1876 he was elected sheriff of the county and moved to Monroe, January, 1877, to fill that office, and was re-elected in 1880. In 1883 he built a fine residence, in which he now resides. He is at present engaged in the drug and grocery business.

A. C. Dodge, lumber dealer, was born in Barre, Washington Co., Vt., on the 6th day of November, 1834. His great-grandfather, Nathaniel B. Dodge, was a soldier in the War of the Revolution, under Gen. Greene, whom he used to term "a cross, surly old dog." His grandfather, Asa Dodge, was one of the earliest settlers of Barre, and a volunteer at the battle of Plattsburg. He was among the number who crossed Lake Champlain, while McDonough was successfully fighting the famous naval battle, which caused the British land forces to beat a hasty retreat. Joseph Dodge, father of the subject of this sketch, was also a volunteer, although only eighteen years of age.

A. C. Dodge was brought up on a farm, and obtained his education at Barre Academy. In 1854 he came west, living some time in Chicago and later in Janesville, Wis. in 1861 he settled in Monroe, where he has since resided, teaching school several terms before entering the lumber business in 1865. He was married in 1860 to Sarah E. Kidder, whose people came from Maine. Three children were born to them—Charles S., Flora E. and Lewis. In politics Mr. Dodge is a republican, and has been chairman of the county central committee many years, and was elected in 1884 a delegate from the third congressional district to the republican national convention which was held in Chicago, June 3. He has also been twice elected chairman of the county board of supervisors, and has filled for nine years the position of president of the board of education in Monroe. The present course of study, rules and regulations of the school were prepared by him, and adopted by the board. Mr. Dodge is also a member of the I. O. O. F., Grand Lodge and Encampment.

Thomas Patterson, wagon and carriage manufacturer, is a native of Scotland, born in Fifeshire, Feb. 26, 1827. He is a son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Arnot) Patterson, who emigrated to the United States about 1840 and located in Hartford Co., Conn., where he was superintendent of a woolen mill for eight years, and in 1850 went to Lafayette Co., Wis., and located some land with a warrant. The subject of this sketch served his time as carpenter and joiner in Connecticut. He was married in 1849 to Jeanette Kenlock, by whom he has two living children—Jane, now Mrs. Jacob Benkard; and Jessie. In 1854 he went to Lafayette county, remaining there until 1864, when he located in this city, where he has since followed the carriage business.

John S. Niles, son of Nathan and Silence (Sawyer) Niles, was born in Grafton Co., N. H., April 25, 1820. His parents reared eight children, five sons and three daughters. His father, Nathan Niles, is still living in Vermont, at the age of eighty-seven years. He was a strong supporter of the old Clay party, and a man who kept well posted in regard to current events. He removed in 1823 from New Hampshire to Orange Co., Vt., where John S. grew to manhood, and received a common school education. In 1849 he removed to Rock Co., Wis., and taught school one winter. He lived in the town of Magnolia twenty years. He was a member of the town board and justice of the peace, holding the latter office eight years in succession, and was repeatedly elected to minor offices during this time. He was married in 1854 to Sarah E. Carpenter, a daughter of Isaiah Carpenter. Two children have been born to them—Charles F., now a student at the State University of Wisconsin; and Tom N. Mr. Niles is a man of more than ordinary intelligence and general information. He traveled quite extensively in early life, in the capacity of a commercial salesman, having his headquarters at Washington, where he became acquainted with many of the leading men of that day. He removed to Monroe in 1864, since which time he has been a resident of Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Niles are members of the Disciple Church. Andrew Buehler, manufacturer of carriages and the Buehler wagons, was born in Baden, Germany, Sept. 2, 1836. In 1852 he came to America and located in Blair Co., Penn., where he learned his trade. In 1855 he went to Belvidere, Ill., and there worked as journeyman. He came to Monroe in 1864, since which time he has resided here and carried on his present business. He was married in 1867 to Catharine Bleiler. They have three children living—Fred, Henry and Lizzie. Mr. Buehler is a member of the I. O. O. F., also of the Turner's Society of Monroe. He came to the county poor, but by honesty and industry has built up a business of which he may well be proud. Besides doing a large amount of repairs, he manufactures about 100 wagons and sleighs a year, and employs seven men.

Jonas Cohn was born in Baden, Germany, July 1, 1824, receiving his education in the schools of his native place. When thirteen years old he was apprenticed to learn the trade of tailor, and served three years. He was a soldier in the revolution in Germany, in 1848, enlisting in the 4th Baden Sharpshooters, and taking a part in the battles of Ladeburg, Waghansel and Rachstadt, and was on guard at the time Carl Schurz was a prisoner. Mr. Cohn was taken prisoner, tried by a court marshal and remanded, but made his escape to France, and afterwards to the United States, landing in New York in 1853. In 1854, he was married, in New York city, to Sophia Rothkopf, by whom he has one child—Henry, born May 6, 1855. He is now extensively engaged in the tailoring business in Monroe, where he settled in 1865. Mr. Cohn has a sash which he secured from a Prussian general, who fell at the battle of Ladeburg, and a relic in shape of a powder horn, picked up at Wayhausel.

Andrew Arnot is a native of Scotland, born in January, 1842. When six months old, his parents emigrated to America. His father, Andrew Arnot, was a soldier in the Mexican War, enlisting in the 2d United States Heavy Artillery, and participated in the battles of Vera Cruz, and at the fall of the City of Mexico, at the close of the war. After the close of the war he emigrated to Argyle, Lafayette Co., Wis., where he commenced farming. He was reared on a farm, and received a common school education. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company G, and participated in the following engagements: Lookout Mountain, Resaca, New Hope Church, Burnt Hickory, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochee, Atlanta, Peach Tree Creek, with Sherman on his march to the sea and at the grand review at Washington. Soon after leaving the army, he came to Monroe and learned the trade of blacksmithing, which he has followed since. He was joined in wedlock to Catharine Heitz, by whom he has had two children—Charles and Belle. He is a member of the National Guards of this city, and is commissioned as 2d lieutenant. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Henry Durst, of the firm of Durst & Hodges, was born in Switzerland, Nov. 29, 1835, and received his education in his native State. In 1846, he came to America with his parents, who located near New Glarus, Green Co., Wis. The following year his father hired him out at $16 per year, for which he received a yoke of steers in payment. In 1848, he went to Madison, where he was employed in a livery stable for a number of years. When sixteen years old, he purchased a third interest in a threshing machine, and followed that business for ten years. He and two other young men purchased the machine on credit and were to pay for the same the following January. The money was ready three days before it became due. He was married in 1861 to Louisa Jackson, a native of New York, by whom there were five children, three of whom are living—Nellie E., William A. and Louisa E. In 1866, he came to Monroe, where he embarked in the grocery business, which he followed up to 1871. In 1872, he built his present store building 22x90 feet in size, at a cost of $7,000. In 1882, he commenced his present business. Mr. Durst is a member of the I. O. O. F. He came to the county a poor boy, but by hard work, fair dealing and good management, has accumulated a competency, and to-day is among the well-to-do business men of the county. He had nothing but home made clothes until he was twenty-three years of age, nor did he have a pair of boots until that age.

P F. Chase, a native of Oxford Co., Maine, was born March 28, 1834. He is a son of Rev. Sibley and Charlotte (Heath) Chase. The former was of English descent, and the latter of Scotch. They were married in Oxford Co., Maine, where five children were born to them, three of whom are now living. Rev. Sibley Chase was a man of fine qualities, a sincere worker in the Church, and highly esteemed by all. Rev. Sibley Chase departed this life at Paris, Maine, June 10, aged fifty-five years, five months and fifteen days. He was converted at the age of twenty-nine years, under the labors of Rev. James Farrington, and united with the M. E. Church. His experience and daily life was characterized by so much zeal and devotion that he was immediately chosen class leader, which office he continued to hold, with other responsible trusts, in the Church of his choice, during the twenty-six years of unwearied service. Two years from the time of his conversion he became strongly impressed that it was his duty to consecrate himself more fully to the work of calling sinners to repentance. He received an exhorter's license, and labored acceptably and efficiently, as time and opportunity presented. For many years he held the position of local preacher, engaging in every enterprise having for its object the salvation of men and the glory of God. He left a wife, one son, three daughters, an aged father, brothers and sisters and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. His death cast a gloom over the entire community, for he was extensively known and tenderly loved. The town lost a worthy citizen, the poor a sympathizing friend, and the cause of Christ an earnest and successful laborer. On his first attack, nearly three months previous to his death, he remarked that he firmly believed it to be his last illness. He expressed himself perfectly resigned to the will of his divine Master, undisturbed by a single earthly regret, except the absence of his only son in the far west. In conversation with a Christian brother, who watched by his bedside on the last night of his stay, he exclaimed, with fervor, "This is the hour for which I have been living for twenty-six years." Thus passed away to a glorious reward a man who had lived a faithful, consistent life, and one well fitted to share the glories of everlasting life. The subject of this sketch received a liberal education, and in 1855 left his native State and came to Wisconsin, stopping first in Sheboygan county. He afterwards went to Oshkosh, and thence to the pineries, where he remained during the winter and spring, thence to Wausau, Marathon county, then known as Big Bull Falls, on the Upper Wisconsin, and remained until fall. He next went to the Chippewa, and in the spring of 1859 went to Grant county and commenced farming. In August, of that year, he was married to Corrina C. Stowell, daughter of Lewis B. Stowell (a soldier of the War of 1812). Mr. Chase enlisted in the 33d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company B, and participated in the following engagements: Meridian, Cold-water, and capture of Vicksburg, Jackson, Mississippi, Red River expedition under A. J. Smith, and battle of Tupelo, where he received partial sun stroke and was sent north. He was discharged at the close of the war, at Jefferson Barracks, May 27, 1865. In 1866 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. He is a member of the G. A. R.

John Hawes was born in Genesee Co., N. Y., in 1818. He lived there until he was fifteen years of age, when he went to Cattaraugus county with his parents, where he received a liberal education, attending the high schools for eight years and in the meantime read law. In 1841 he went to Ohio, where he was married, in 1845, to Charlotte Carlton, by whom he has two living children—Horace and Nancy—the latter now a teacher in the public school. Soon after he was married he went to Lenawee Co., Mich., where he taught school for two years. In 1847 he removed to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., in what is known as the "Tucker neighborhood," where he taught school and engaged in farming. In 1850 he crossed the plains to California, remaining one year. He then went to Society Islands, where his brother, Horace, was consul, and was afterwards appointed Territorial governor of California. In 1866 he came to Monroe, where he has since resided.

S.C. Cheney, one of the prominent merchants of Monroe, was born in Hoxburrrough, Canada, July 13, 1833. When he was six years old, his parents emigrated to Waukesha Co., Wis., then a Territory. In 1843 they removed to Rock county. He remained at home until twenty-one years old. He then engaged in mercantile business at Johnstown, Rock Co., becoming a member of the firm of Cheney & Blackman, successors of H. Cheney. He remained in business two years, then sold out and went to Chicago, where he was employed as clerk in a wholesale store. In 1857 he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak, where he prospected one summer. The following winter he spent in New Mexico, in company with his brother. He was there employed as teacher, receiving $100 per month. The following July he went to California Gulch, where he joined his brother, who had preceded him, and struck a fair paying lead. He sold out in the fall and returned home, and soon after went to work for M. C. Smith, of Janesville. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the 12th Battery, Light Artillery, Wisconsin Volunteers, and participated in the engagements of Iuka, Jackson, Champion Hills, siege and capture of Vicksburg, where they were under fire for forty-seven days, and from the piece of which Mr. Cheney had charge, 1,365 rounds were fired. From Vicksburg he went to Chattanooga, where he was detailed on recruiting service, and came to Janesville and opened a recruiting office. While here he was promoted to 2d lieutenant. He afterwards participated in the march to the sea; was then promoted to 1st lieutenant; the siege of Savannah, and battle of Bentonville. In the fall of 1867 he came to Monroe where he engaged in the mercantile business. In 1864 he was married to Mary North, and they have five children—Grace N., Minnie L., Nellie H., James H. and Margaret. Mr. Cheney is a member of the A. O. U. W., and Royal Arcanum, and the G. A. R.

Isaiah Johnson, of the firm of Isaiah Johnson & Son, grain dealers, was born in Vermilion Co., Ill., June 26, 1821. His parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Starr) Johnson, were married in North Carolina, and soon after went to Georgia. The following spring they returned to North Carolina, where they remained a few years, then went to Tennessee and settled near Nashville. In February, 1814, they removed to Illinois, opposite Vincennes Ford; in 1820 to Vermilion county; in 1830 to Schuyler county, and in 1836, to Stephenson county. In 1851, they left Illinois and came to Green Co., Wis., settling in the town of Jefferson, where Mr. Johnson Sr. died the same year. Mr. Johnson and his wife were life long members of the Christian Church. Isaiah Johnson, of this sketch, went with his parents to Stephenson county, in 1836. He was married in 1849, to Nancy J. Miller, in Green county. They have eight children—Corwin, Cordelly, Cedora E., Florence G., Eldie, Delpby, Rucy and Olive Leatha. Mr. Johnson came to Green county in 1868, where he has since been engaged in the grain business. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are members of the M. E. Church.

Lewis D. Van Matre came to Wisconsin in 1827, and first engaged in mining in Lafayette county. He was born in Clinton Co., Ohio, Sept. 20, 1807. His parents, Morgan and Mary (Pierce) Van Matre, were married in Pennsylvania, and soon after went to Kentucky, near Cynthiana, and afterwards to Clinton Co., Ohio, where Mr. Van Matre, Sr., died about 1811, and Mrs. Van Matre was again married, to Nathan Kelley, a prominent farmer of Warren county. Lewis received his first schooling in a log cabin, with slab seats, and holes cut in the logs with greased paper pasted over them, for windows. He was about twenty years old when he came to Wisconsin. He was married in 1833, to Nancy Donaldson, and soon after went to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., near White Oak Springs. In 1836 he settled in what is now Stephenson county, where he remained until 1868, when he removed to Green county. Mrs. Van Matre died in October, 1855. She was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Van Matre was again married, in 1856, to a widow of Thomas J. Van Matre, who died in California. By the first union there were eleven children, seven of whom are living—Melissa, Thomas J., Mary, Joseph, Caroline, Lucy and William N.; and three children—Emma, Nora and Matilda, by the second union. Mr. Van Matre came west a poor boy, but by energy and perseverance has acquired a comfortable property and home. He was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, and remained until its close. Mr. and Mrs. Van Matre are members of the Christian Church.

Capt. S. P. Schadel, of the firm of Schadel & Baker, Monroe, was born in Centre Co., Penn., Jan. 27, 1844. In 1856 he went to Stephenson Co., Ill., then a boy twelve years old. Being left an orphan, when five years old, he was early thrown upon his own resources. In 1863 he enlisted in company A, 46th regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He participated in the following engagements: Jackson, Miss., Clinton, Miss., siege of Fort Blakely and Spanish Fort. At the latter places, the command was under fire for fourteen days. The regiment was sent to the Red river and Texas, where they were employed gathering up government property, and establishing "Freedmen's Bureaus." He was mustered out at Camp Butler, Springfield Ill., in March, 1866. After the close of the war, he returned to Stephenson county and took up the trade of carpenter and joiner. Jan. 15, 1867, he was married to Emma Hussinger, and the following year came to Monroe, where he has since resided. Mr. and Mrs. Schadel are the parents of three children—Frank, May and George. They are members of the Methodist Church. He is a member of the G. A. R., and A. O. U. W., and captain of company H, 1st regiment W. N. G.

James C. Baker was born in Holmes Co., Ohio, 1833. When ten years old his parents moved to Crawford county, where he grew to manhood. In 1852 he turned his face towards the setting sun, and located in the town of Cadiz, Green county. In September, 1861, he enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin Light Artillery, participating in the battles of Corinth, Miss., Perryville, Ky., Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Atlanta, and on the memorable march to the sea. At the battle of Stone River, he showed himself to be one of the bravest of the brave, and was the means of saving one of the guns which was threatened by the rebels. After the battle Rosecrans issued an order that a certain number should be chosen out of each regiment as a roll of honor, and he was one of the chosen few. He was in the service for four years, and was always found at his post, never shirking his duty. Soon after returning home he was married to Mary McKibben, by whom he had three children—Sarah, James and Owen. Mr. Baker engaged in farming and followed the same until 1881, when he came to Monroe, where he formed his present partnership, as the firm of Schadel & Baker. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and G.A.R.

J. S. Reynolds, dental surgeon, of the city of Monroe, was born in Juniata Co., Penn., March 6, 1847. His parents were Curtis and Sarah (Moist) Reynolds, natives of the same State. They were the parents of seven children, all of whom lived to an adult age. When the subject of this sketch was about eleven years old, his father died, and one year later his mother died. Being thrown upon his own resources, he went to work on a farm, and was afterwards employed as clerk in a drug store. At the age of fifteen he entered the office of Dr. G. L. Derr, of Mifflin, and spent three years under his instruction. He then established himself in business, opening an office at Middleburg, Snyder Co., Penn. He continued there one year, then went to Stephenson Co., Ill., and located at Orangeville, where he succeeded in building up a lucrative business. In the fall of 1868 he came to Green county and settled at Brodhead, remaining there until 1875. He came, that year, to Monroe, where he has an extensive and lucrative practice. He is a member of the Wisconsin Dental Association, of which he is president. He is a Sir Knight and a member of the K. P. He was married in Albany, of this county, in December, 1875, to Katie Hohn, a daughter of John Hohn. They have one child—Frank W.

Prof. Nathan Crook Twining, A. M., was born in Boston, Erie Co., N. Y., Sept. 27, 1834. He is a son of John and Sarah (Hampton) Twining, natives of New Jersey. The former was born Dec. 2, 1784, and the latter Aug. 2, 1807. They were Quakers of the Elias Hicks school, and like the majority of that sect were quiet, industrious and simple hearted, free from guile, their code of morals being embraced in the Golden Rule. Their ancestors, on both sides, came to America with William Penn, the father being of Welsh and the mother of Scotch descent. His father, notwithstanding his Quaker scruples on the subject of "bearing carnal weapons," was a gallant soldier of the War of 1812, and his great-uncle, Nathan Crook, whose name he bears, was a midshipman on board the Lawrence, Commodore Perry's flag ship, and was killed at the battle of Lake Erie about ten minutes before the commodore abandoned the vessel. His mother was a niece of Gen. Wade Hampton, not less famous in the struggle of 1812. The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm, and in childhood was an ardent lover of books and music. He never, however, developed a taste for fictitious literature, historic, scientific and linguistic works being his chosen companions, even in childhood. He moved west with his parents in 1844, and settled in Waterloo, Jefferson Co., Wis. He was educated at Milton College, Milton, Wis., taking the full course of study, comprising mathematics, ancient classics, metaphysics and the natural sciences. He became one of the best Greek-and Latin scholars, as well as the most accomplished mathematician of the day, and was honored by his alma mater with the honorary degree of A. M. After graduating he was appointed to the chair of mathematics in the same institution, which position he retained eight years, discharging his duties with eminent credit to himself and to the utmost satisfaction of all concerned. He resigned his professorship in 1868, and from motives of the highest consideration resolved to devote the remainder of his life to public school teaching, a profession which he has followed to the present date, with the utmost success. He has taught the higher branches in the public schools of Chicago and Batavia, in Illinois, and Boscobel and Waterloo, in Wisconsin. For the past eleven years he has been principal of the High School of Monroe. The success which has attended his labors in this field, and the esteem in which he is held by all who know him, attest his ability as a teacher, and his eminent fitness for the responsible position which he occupies. It is not too much to say that, as an educator, he has few, if any, superiors in the State, or in the west. The schools of Monroe rank with the foremost in Wisconsin. He is a leading member of the State Teacher's Association, and at a meeting of that organization, was appointed by his associates to prepare a curriculum of studies for the public schools, to be submitted to the legislature with a view of being embodied in the school laws of the State. He is, moreover, a gentleman of the highest moral character, an incessant student and an untiring worker. In politics he has always been republican, and, like the sect from which he sprang, was an uncompromising opponent of slavery. During the late war he served one year in the army as captain of company C, of the 40th Wisconsin Infantry. He took part in the second battle of Memphis, in 1864, and various other engagements and skirmishes. He was a leading member of the Union League during the existence of that organization. On arriving at an age of discretion, he embraced the orthodox faith, and united with the Congregational Church, to which he still adheres. He was married Nov. 18, 1861, to Phebe Ann Barber, daughter of Lillibridge Barber, of Hopkinson, R. I. She died Jan. 16, 1866, leaving three sons—Harry Le Verne, Clarence Walter and Nathan C. June 18, 1873, Mr. Twining was again married to Margaret Rockwell, daughter of James Rockwell, Esq., one of the early settlers of Chicago.

W. B. Patchin, son of Azar and Electa (Wanzy) Patchin, was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., July 21, 1817. He was reared upon a farm, and received his education in the subscription school, paying for the same by cutting wood at twenty-five cents per cord. In 1844, he came to Wisconsin, and located in the town of Clarno, Dane county. His father's family came in the spring of 1846. The neighbors were few and far between, and he at one time traveled ten miles to hang an ax. May 26, 1860, he was married to Ruth J. Barmore, a native of Green Co., Penn. She died Nov. 21, 1879. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and much respected by all. Mr. Patchin went to Dane county in very limited circumstances, but by energy and economy has accumulated a comfortable fortune. He is now reaping the reward of industry. He has lived to see the wild unbroken prairies transformed into beautiful farms, and commodious and comfortable dwellings occupy the places where stood the rude log structures of early times.

Robert Fuellemann, jeweler, was born in canton St. Gallen, Switzerland, May 1, 1850.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

When a boy sixteen years old he was apprenticed to the trade, paying $250 for the privilege. Here he spent three years. In 1870, he embarked in the business on his own account. In 1872, he came to America, landing in New York. Being out of money, and not finding a job, he sold a watch and with the proceeds went to Milwaukee, where he worked as a jeweler for a few years. In 1878, he came to Monroe, where he has since resided. In 1880, he was married to Ida Lowenbach, a native of Milwaukee, by whom he has had one child—Burnhardt. Mr. Fuellemann is a member of the Shooters Society, Turner's and Hook and Ladder company.

Peter Lichtenwalner, one of the prominent farmers of the county and the town of Clarno, was born in Northampton Co., Penn., May 1, 1820. He was a son of Peter and Susanna C. (Oswalt) Lichtenwalner, who were married in Lehigh Co., Penn., and were the parents of five sons and two daughters, three of whom are now living. His father was a life long member of the Lutheran Church, and his mother belonged the German Reformed Church. The subject of this sketch, when eighteen years old, he was apprenticed to a trade and served three years. In 1842, he was married to Sarah Kepler, by whom he had seven children, five now living—Mary C., wife of Matthew Wells; Hugh H., Lydia A., now Mrs. James Schneider; Ida E., now Mrs. Joseph Trumpy; and John P. In 1854, Mr. Lichtenwalner left his native State and emigrated to Green county and purchased land in the town of Clarno, on section 28, where he engaged in farming. In 1881, he came to Monroe, where he is leading a retired life. He was twice elected supervisor of the town, and for many years was school director, always taking an active interest in education. He is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and done much toward the support of the same. He now has 268 acres of land, valued at $65 per acre.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

TOWN OF MOUNT PLEASANT.

The town of Mount Pleasant comprises congressional township 3 north, range 8 east, of the fourth principal meridian. It is bounded on the north by the town of Exeter; on the east by Albany; on the west by Washington, and on the south by Sylvester. The surface of the town is drained by Little Sugar river, and its numerous tributaries. The south half of the town is principally prairie, while the north half consists of oak openings. The soil varies. On the prairies it is a rich, dark loam; on the low lands a dark muck; and on the rolling lands it is mixed with clay. The sub-soil is clay.

The assessed value of the farming land in Mount Pleasant is $411,270, or $18.33 per acre; of village lots, $18,615. The total value of real estate and personal property is $609,333. The principal farm products grown in the town of Mount Pleasant during the year 1882, were as follows: 1,850 bushels wheat; 69,800 bushels corn; 83,930 bushels oats; 195 bushels barley; 320 bushels rye; 5,270 bushels potatoes; 2,555 bushels apples; 68 bushels clover seed; 40 bushels timothy seed; 1,450 pounds tobacco; 2,890 tons of hay; 53,450 pounds butter; 86,300 pounds cheese. The acreage of the principal farm products growing in the town at the time of making the annual assessment for the year 1883, was as follows: 252 acres wheat; 3,215 corn; 3,340 oats; 15 barley; 50 rye; 82 ½ potatoes; 123 acres apple orchard; 3,135 bearing trees; 2,771 acres grass; 2,420 acres growing timber. There were 1,345 milch cows in the town, valued at $30,465. In 1883 there was the following live stock in the town: Six hundred. and forty-eight horses, average value $55.60, total $36,035; 2,566 head of cattle, average value $18.90, total $48,415; 3 mules, average value, $88.33, total $265; 4,026 sheep, average value $1.87, total $7,535; 2,486 swine, average value $6.01, total $14,965. The populations of the town in 1875, was 1,120; in 1880, 1,086.

THE PIONEERS OF MOUNT PLEASANT.

The exact date of the first settlement in this town is unknown, but that it was made by Henry Mitchell, hardly admits of a doubt. He was a native of England, and came to the United States in 1832, immediately making his way to the lead mines of southwestern Wisconsin. In 1837 he was living in a log cabin on section 9, where he did some breaking. His family was still living in England and he spent the greater portion of his time in the mining districts. In 1847 his family joined him, after which he devoted his attention to farming until his death, in 1861. His widow, now ninety-three years of age, is still living on the homestead, which is managed by James Richards, a son-in-law.

At about the same time that Henry Mitchell settled on section 9, Elias Lutherell entered land on the north half of section 28. He erected his log cabin near the spring of water which gushes forth from the ground at that place. He also spent the greater part of his time at the lead mines, and thus found little time to make improvements. In 1839 Justus Sutherland visited the land and cultivated the same. In 1843 Mr. Lutherell sold the property to William Boyls, Jr., and left the county.

Mr. Boyls was a native of Pennsylvania. He improved the farm and remained a resident of the place for many years.

A. F. Steadman, a prominent citizen of Athens Co., Ohio, settled on the northeast quarter of section 18 in 1841. He afterwards removed to Iowa.

Archibald and Prosa Whaley, natives of the State of New York, settled on the southeast quarter of section 25, in 1841. They improved some of the land, then sold out and emigrated to Iowa.

John Troy, in 1842, took up his abode on the southwest quarter of section 28. He remained a few years then sold out and went to Iowa. Mr. Troy was a native of Pennsylvania.

In 1842 the settlement was increased by three brothers—John, Benjamin and Daniel Rima and Michael McNutt, who came from Ohio. The Rima brothers settled on the northeast quarter of section 23, where Daniel died. John now lives in the town of Exeter, and Benjamin removed to Rock county, and afterwards to Nebraska. Mr. McNutt settled on the northeast quarter of section 26. He afterward removed to section 29, where he resided until his death.

In 1845 Pliny Colton, Christopher Silver, Artemus Silver, Daniel Tree, Thomas Stewart, Stephen Wood and George Mears, with their families, left the State of Pennsylvania to seek homes in the far west. They traveled by steamboat down the Ohio and up the Mississippi river to Galena, and thence overland to Green county, and soon the larger number of them chose land in what is now Mount Pleasant, and settled down to begin life anew.

Christopher Silver was born in Grafton Co., N. H., May 5, 1797. He remained in his native State until twenty-one years old, then went west and settled in Erie Co., Penn. He was married in that county March 2, 1820, to Marinda Loveland, who was born Aug 11, 1803, in Hampshire Co., Mass. They remained in Erie county seven years, then removed to Mercer county where they lived until 1845, at which date they came to Green county. He died here on Aug. 30, 1881. Mrs. Silver is still living, and occupies the homestead. They were the parents of thirteen children, seven of whom are living—Sarah, Artemas, Azariah, Clarrissa, Willis, Ann and Alonzo.

Azariah Silver, son of Christopher and Marinda (Loveland) Silver, was born in Erie Co., Penn., May 3, 1838, and was seven years old when he came with his parents to Mount Pleasant. Here he spent his younger days in school and upon the farm. He remained with his parents until 1860. He was married on the 20th of May, of that year, to Elizabeth J., daughter of James and Elizabeth (Duckworth) Compton, a native of Lake Co, Ohio. He bought land in the northwest quarter of section 11, upon which stood a log cabin. In that they began housekeeping. He improved the land and lived there until 1866, then purchased land in the northwest quarter of section 14, where he lived in a log house five years. He then erected a good frame house. His farm now contains 191 acres. He has engaged in raising grain and stock, and is a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Silver are the parents of eight children—Marinda E., Ella M., Arthur F., Elbert U., Emery H., Norman B., Nellie M. and Maudie E.

Willis Silver, son of Christopher and Marinda (Loveland) Silver, was born in Erie Co., Penn., on the 25th of April, 1842. When three years of age his parents removed to Green Co., Wis. He grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his education in the district school. In 1865 he went to Boone Co., Iowa; remaining there a few months, he went to Kansas, lived in that State about a year, then returned to Wisconsin. He was married on the 22d of March, 1868, to Kizpah A. Colton, born in Green county. They lived in the town of Mount Pleasant until the fall of 1869, then went to Osage Co., Kansas, and purchased a farm. In 1876 he returned to Rock Co., Wis., and rented a farm near Evansville for one year. He then removed to Mount Pleasant, this county. He now lives on section 15. Mr. and Mrs. Silver have two children—Herbert E. and Cora M. J. While in Kansas Mr. Silver was employed by the government, and drove a team laden with supplies to Colorado.

Artemas Silver, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in the town of Salem, Erie Co., Penn., Dec. 11, 1822. When he was three years old, his parents moved to Mercer county, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1844 he came to the Territory of Wisconsin and visited Green county, but did not settle here at that time. He returned to Mercer county where he was married March 12, 1845, to Harriet Colton, a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y., born Oct. 21, 1824. Five weeks later they started for Wisconsin. They came by way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, to Galena, and completed their journey to Green county, overland. They stopped three weeks in Monroe, where he rented a piece of land and put in a crop, then came to Mount Pleasant and lived with Pliny Colton until fall. He then entered forty acres of land, on section 11, of township 3, range 8 east, now known as Mount Pleasant. At the same time he laid claim to other lands, hiring money to enter the same, at 25 per cent. He first built a log house which they occupied eight years. He then built a good frame house, in which the family now reside. The same year he erected a frame barn. In 1869 he built another barn, Larger than the first. He has engaged largely in raising grain and stock. Mr. and Mrs. Silver have four children—Marion, Lewis; Truman and Flora, who is now married to Amos Pierce and living in Emporia, Kansas.

Daniel Tree settled on section 12. In 1860 he sold out and removed to the Pecatonica river, where he died.

Pliny Colton settled on section 10, and there made his home during the remainder of his life.

Stephen Wood settled in the town of Exeter. Thomas Stewart remained but a short time and returned to the State from whence he came, and George Mears settled at Monroe.

A widow lady by the name of Newcomb came in 1845, and settled on section 27. She afterwards married John Snell and removed to the State of Minnesota.

Hugh McClintock, a native of Virginia, in 1846, purchased land on section 7, and resided there until 1854, then removed to La Crosse.

Mr. Bushnell, and family settled on section 14, some time previous to 1844. Gideon Gillett purchased the place, and the family left the county.

Ira Foster, a native of Vermont, settled in 1844 on the southwest quarter of section 7, and there died.

Peter Wilson, a carpenter by trade, came with Ira Foster. He at first worked in various parts of the county, but finally settled at Monticello, where he now resides.

Walter Bedell also came in 1844, and for a few years resided on the southeast quarter of section 15.

During the same year Mr. Ingalls settled on the northwest quarter of section 15, and there resided for several years.

John Lewis, a native of Wales, settled on section 12 in 1846. He still resides on the place he first chose.

John Lewis was born in South Wales, Nov. 30, 1813. He was there reared to agricultural pursuits. At the age of twenty-one he commenced work in an iron foundry, which he continued until 1841, then, having heard of the vast prairies of the United States, he resolved to see the country for himself, and came to America. He located first in Trumbull Co., Ohio, where he engaged in farming until 1845. The first year he received for his work $100, and for the next three years $120 per year. In the fall of 1845 he came to Wisconsin and located on Eagle Prairie, in Waukesha county, and there spent the winter. In 1846 he came to Green county and settled in township 3, range 8, town of Mount Pleasant. He bought land on section 13, and built a log house, in which he lived until 1865. He then built the frame house he now occupies. He has engaged largely in raising cattle, horses and sheep, and has made a large addition to his landed estate, and now owns 648 acres, the greater part of which is improved and fenced. He was married April 19, 1841, to Kesiah Richards, a native of South Wales. Six children have been born to them, two of whom are now living—John and Theophilus Mrs. Lewis was born Oct. 29, 1819, and died March 19, 1853. From that time until Mr. Lewis' second marriage, April 11, 1861, he and his sons "kept bach." His second wife was Olive Lee, a native of Oswego, N. Y.

Thomas Fenton, a native of Pennsylvania, came from the eastern part of Wisconsin in 1847, and resided on section 1 until his death.

The first school in the town was taught in the village of Monticello, in the summer of 1845. This was a subscription school, taught by Orinda Foster, at the house of A. F. Steadman.

The first public school was taught in 1848. In that year the people erected a rude log building near the southwest corner of section 7, called it a school house and employed Marantha Niles to take possession as teacher and give instruction to all who wished to attend. As there was no other school near the attendance was quite large.

In 1851 the people became tired of the log building and erected a neat octagon frame school house on the northwest quarter of section 8, and employed Dr. Adams as teacher. In 1854 this building was moved into the village of Monticello and continued to be used for school purposes until 1860. It is now used as an ice house. The present school house of Monticello was built in 1860. It is a frame building two stories in height.

School district No.1 was organized in 1849, with the following named persons as the first officers: Thomas Fenton, director; Arantha

Thomas, treasurer; Ephraim Moody, clerk. A log house was built on the northwest quarter of section 12, and Lyman Dexter was the first teacher. The log house was in use until after the war, when the present frame building was erected. There had been a school taught in the neighborhood before 1849, in a log house located on the southeast quarter of section 4.

The first school house in district No. 2 was built in 1849, and was located on the southwest quarter of section 10. Dr. Adams, Samuel Aiken and Melger Colton were among the early teachers. The present school house, which is located on the site of the first, was built in 1877, and Miss M. Edwards was the first to occupy it as teacher.

The first school in district No. 4 was taught by Mandana Newcomb in a log house owned by Gideon McNaught. In 1850 a log school house was erected on the south half of the northeast quarter of section 28, and James Powell was employed as teacher. The log house soon gave place to the present frame building, which occupies the old site.

School district No. 7 was organized in 1858, and the first school was taught during the following winter, in a log house owned by John Sutherland. It was located on the northwest quarter of section 35. Stella Wheeler was the first teacher. In the spring of 1859 a stone school house was built, and Stella Wheeler and Amelia Woodworth were the first teachers in this.

The first school taught within the limits of district No. 9 was in a very early day in a frame house built by John Williams. The district was re-organized in 1871, and the present school building erected on the northwest quarter of section 21. The first teacher in this house was Hattie Ross.

The first school in district No. 8 was taught in the winter of 1854—5 by Hannah Noble, in a log house owned by Thomas Seers. The following summer the present building, located on the line between sections 4 and 5, was built and George Ray served as teacher.

The first school in district No. 5 was taught in 1853 by Julia Stevens, daughter of Dr. J. D Stevens, of Monroe. The stone school house is still standing, and is now used as a stable by J F. Annie. The district now has a good frame building.

In 1849 the town of Mount Pleasant was divided into five districts. The officers of the various districts at that time were as follows:

No. 1.—Thomas Fenton, director; Aranthus Thomas, treasurer; Ephraim Moody, clerk. No. 2.—Amos Perry, director; James Bedell, treasurer; Lyman Wright, clerk. No. 8.—Henry Adams, director; A. F. Steadman, treasurer; John Manly, clerk. No. 4.—William Lowe, director; A. P. Jewell, treasurer; William Boyls, clerk. No. 5.—Benjamin Rima, director; Joseph Conklin, treasurer; David McKee, clerk. James L. Powell was town superintendent of schools. On the 1st of September, 1849, the reports of the district clerks show that there were 210 scholars in the town. At that time districts Nos. 1 and 4 had log school houses; 2 and 5 stone school houses, and No. 8 was without a house.

TOWN ORGANIZATION.

The town of Mount Pleasant was organized in April, 1849. Aranthus Thomas, Henry Adams and James L. Powell were among the first officers elected.

At the annual town meeting held on the 3d of April, 1850, there were seventy-four votes cast. The following officers were elected: Supervisors, Henry Adams, chairman, L. W. P. Morton and J. Moody; clerk, James L. Powell; assessor, Thomas Fenton; treasurer, D. Bragg; superintendent of schools, James L. Powell; justices of the peace, Henry Adams and Aranthus Thomas.

At the general election held in November, 1849, there were forty-nine ballots cast. The following is the roster: Abraham Pratt, James L. Powell, Lyman Smith, Thomas Morton, Henry Adams, William Boyls, Hall Bedell, Abner Aiken, Benjamin Robey, Josiah Marty, Alfred Rogers, Aranthus Thomas, I. Jewell, James Gillett, James Truax, Joseph Moody, Paul Castle, John Troy, William H. Castle, Wesley Truax, Benjamin Truax, A. F. Steadman, Lewis Morton, William Lowe, Willard Stephens, Gideon Troy, Daniel M. Tree, Nathaniel Lewis, A. L. Wood, Thomas Fenton, Ephraim Moody, James Bedell, William Morton, James Broderick, George L. Barks, R. Taylor, R. R. Jennison, Abraham Pratt, Jr., John Hulett, Porter Pratt, Amos Perry, Christopher Silver, Thomas Raymond, William Foster, Ira L. Foster, William Hitchcock, Lyman Wright, O. H. Woodworth and Noah Cryst.

The following is a list of the gentlemen who have served as chairman of the board of supervisors of this town: Aranthus Thomas, Henry Adams, Thomas Fenton, Samuel Johnson, J. Troy, Ransom Drake, Charles F. Thompson, Jesse Gist, John V. VanSlyke, G. W. Baker, A. H. Pierce, F. K. Studley, A. H. Pierce and Franklin Pierce.

The town clerks have been as follows: James L. Powell, Mathias Marty, C H. Woodruff, Alonzo H. Jennison, James Broderick, F. R. Drake, Cyrus Troy, John V. VanSlyke, W. E. Noble, B. C Baker, Samuel Johnson, F. K. Studley, David Sears, H. H. Bissell, M. H Fitzgerald and E. F. Wright.

The following named in succession have held the office of assessor since the organization of the town: Thomas Fenton, Ransom Drake, Henry Barkey, B. C. Baker, Samuel Johnson, Joel Wood, Henry Adams, A. H. Pierce, E. R. Gillett, Thomas Gravenor, Franklin Pierce, Jesse Gist, L. W. Wright, Cyrus Troy, J. F. Annis, Charles Morgan, L. F. Moore and John Stauffacher.

The following named have filled the office of town treasurer: D. Bragg, John Troy, William Foster, Pliny Colton, Joseph Moody, Edward Gillett, E. C. Fessenden, George W. Bridges, Joel Ward, W. C. Kessler, A. M. Barber, Warren Jones, W. E. Noble, J. Bowen, Cyrus Troy,

VARIOUS MATTERS.

In June, 1844, Author Smith, a native of the State of New York, was killed by some unknown person. Mr. Smith had just sold his claim on section 17 for $200, but was to do some breaking on the place. This he was engaged at, and it seems that while in the act of sharpening the plow, he was approached from behind by some unknown person, who dealt him a fatal blow with a hatchet. His body was dragged some ten or fifteen rods, and left on some low ground, and the cattle with which he was plowing were left to wander about the field. Mr. Smith was a young man, and at the time was keeping "bach." He had been in the habit of calling at A. F. Steadman's, and as he did not call as usual, Mr. and Mrs. Steadman went to his house where there found things in disorder. This aroused suspicion, and Mr. Steadman immediately went to Exeter to enquire if he had been seen; he also went to his uncle's at Monroe, but as he had not been there, search was commenced by the citizens, which resulted in the finding of his body in a partly decayed state. An inquest was held at Exeter, but no clue to the murderer could be found. It appears the murder was committed for money, as his trunk had been ransacked, but the money was afterward found wrapped up in some cloth. His body was buried on the Steadman place, but in 1882 was removed to the Monticello Cemetery.

In 1856 Charles Gilson committed suicide by cutting his throat while laboring under a fit of insanity. He had had an attack of fever and ague which, had deranged his mind. He left no family.

The first death occurred in 1841, Samantha, daughter of A. F. and Patty Steadman. The remains were buried on the land owned by Mr. Steadman.

The first burial place was on the farm of A. F. Steadman, where six bodies were interred. One has since been removed, and five remain, but there is nothing to mark the spot. There were also a few bodies buried in the southwest quarter of section 6. The first being a daughter of David Smith.

VILLAGE OF MONTICELLO.

The land now occupied by this village was entered in 1843 by Robert Witter, who was acting as agent for his brother, Chester Witter. He immediately commenced making improvements, and the following winter completed the first saw mill at this place. In 1846 A. F. Steadman purchased the property and platted the village. In 1847 Hugh McClintock purchased a half interest; but in 1848 Mr. Turman became sole proprietor of the property. He, however, owned the same but a few months, when he sold to Jacob and Mathias Marty. These gentlemen divided the property, Jacob taking that part lying on the north side of the river, and Mathias that on the south. The latter vacating his portion, Jacob Marty, in 1850, gave one lot to Peter Wilson on condition that he at once erect a house, whereupon Mr. Wilson built a frame dwelling, 16x24 feet in size, one story in height. This was the first building in the village, and it now forms part of the Rural House

The first store building was erected in 1851 by Sylvester Hills, who became the first merchant. He carried a general stock of goods, and continued in trade two years, when he was succeeded by George Campbell, who soon sold to Mathias Marty. He was succeeded by S. S. Hills & Co. in 1855. J. W. F. Randall afterward owned a half interest for a short time. In 1857 George Gibson purchased the business and finally closed it out.

The first hardware and tin shop was started by David and S. S. Hills and L. B. Conant, but was continued but a short time.

The Marty Bros., who were prominent among the pioneers of Monticello, were natives of Switzerland. They were well educated and good business men. Mathias was married to a daughter of Josiah Pierce, and is now a resident of California, whither he went on account of his health. He is also a large property holder in Kansas City, Mo. Jacob Marty married a daughter of Sylvester Hills, and is now a resident of Paola, Kansas.

George Bowes was the first blacksmith, although his shop was not within the village limits, it being located on the south side of the river. George Rolland built a shop on the north side in 1849, and remained two years, then went to California. This branch of industry is now represented by Thomas Mitchell and David Pratt.

Thomas Mitchell, blacksmith and wagon maker, began business in Monticello in 1877. In 1878, he erected the shop which he now occupies, a commodious building, 26x32 feet. He is engaged in the manufacture of wagons and carriages, and does shoeing and general blacksmith work. He is a first-class workman, and is liberally patronized. He is a native of Bohemia, born Dec. 9, 1838. At the age of eleven he was apprenticed to a blacksmith to learn the trade. He served three and a half years. When he was sixteen years old, he left his native land and came to America. He first located at Rock River, Dodge county, where he worked at his trade until 1856, then went to Bad Axe, now Vernon county, and opened a shop at Liberty Pole. He remained there one and a half years, then went to Madison, where he worked as journeyman one year, then to Minnesota, where he stopped a short time in Nininger City. In 1858, he located in New Glarus, Green county, and in the fall of that year, was married to Catharine Schindler, a native of canton Glarus, Switzerland. In 1861, he enlisted in the service as blacksmith, and served six months. He then established himself in business at Rockport, Atchison Co., Mo., continuing there until 1873, when he sold out and returned to Wisconsin. He opened a shop at Junction House, three miles west of Monroe. Six months later he went to Adamsville, Iowa county, and remained until 1875, then went to Dane county and remained two years, and, as before stated, came to Monticello in 1877. He owns a residence here, besides two store buildings, one of which he rents, and in the other has a stock of groceries. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell are the parents of seven children—Elizabeth, May, Agnes, Clara, Katie, Edith and Thomas.

The first wagon shop on the south side of the river was opened by Robert and George Bridges and their father. The first shop on the north side was opened in 1857 by Ralsey Knight, who continued in business until 1861. Thomas Mitchell now represents this line of work.

The first harness maker was William Jordan. He established his present business in 1862.

The first shoemaker was Frank Drake, who came in 1853. He enlisted in the Civil War, and served as a soldier. He is now living in Idaho. The present shoemaker is Fred Swighey.

The grange store was established in 1875, with F. K. Studley as agent and business manager. He was succeeded, in 1877, by E. S. Sears, and he, in October of said year, by John Richards, who had charge until 1884, when he resigned and Pelter Holland was appointed. This business was owned and conducted exclusively by members of the Patrons of Husbandry until 1880, when the charter was so amended as to allow others to hold stock. I. T. Humiston is president and J. F. Sears clerk of the association. A large stock of general merchandise and hardware is carried, and a profitable business conducted.

Ira T. Humiston, senior deacon of Monticello Union Lodge of A. F. & A. M., was born in Allegany Co., N. Y., Dec. 19, 1824. His parents removed to Chautauqua county when he was four years old. He obtained his education in a subscription school, and at the age of fourteen years was apprenticed to a blacksmith, to learn the trade. He served five years, then opened a shop in Chautauqua county, where he continued business until 1856. He then came to Wisconsin, and established himself in business at the village of Monticello, and remained there until 1861. In November, of that year, he enlisted in company I, of the 2d Wisconsin Cavalry. He went to Milwaukee and in February following went south. He served until April 18, 1863, when he was discharged on account of disability, and returned home with an impaired constitution. He has never recovered sufficiently to perform any manual labor. He purchased a farm in 1864, located on section 3, to which he removed, living there until 1882, when he came to Monticello, which is his home at the present time. He was married in 1849 to Helen M. Woodworth, who was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., March 31, 1826. They have two children—Robert and Fred W. Fred W., the youngest son, was born Aug. 31, 1855. His early education was received in the district school, and advanced by one year attendance at Cedar Valley Seminary, at Osage, Iowa. After this he engaged in teaching. He was married Dec. 31, 1879, to Kate Hayden, born at Attica, Green Co., Wis. They have two children—Myrtie T. and Ivan R. He now occupies the old homestead.

THE MONTICELLO UNION CHEESE MANUFACTURING

Company was organized in 1878, and received its charter on the 18th day of March. The charter members were: L. W. Wright, C. H. Baxter, Peter Wilson, S. C. Taft, W. P. Clement and C. W. Whittier. The first officers were: Peter Wilson, president; C. H. Baxter, secretary; David Sears, treasurer; S. C. Taft and Amos Clement, trustees. The association purchased a lot on which they erected a building, which, when furnished, cost $2,000. The first year they leased the factory to parties who bought the milk. Afterwards the patrons hired the building, and gave as rent, thirty cents per 100 pounds of cheese manufactured. A good grade of cheese is here made, which is sold in Chicago market.

The first hotel was built by Jacob Marty, in 1851, who kept the place about two years, then sold it to George Campbell. In 1854 Daniel Taft purchased the property, and one year later he sold to Thomas E. Fitzgerald. The property has changed hands several times since, and the house has been enlarged. It is now owned by Peter Wilson & Son.

Peter Wilson, one of the pioneers of Green county, is a native of Huntington Co., Penn., born April 16, 1818. When he was four years old his father died and his mother went to live with her parents, and with them emigrated to Ohio and settled in Stark county, where he spent his early life and obtained his education in the public schools. At the age of eighteen years, he was apprenticed to a carpenter and joiner, whom he served twenty months, then went to Cincinnati and worked under instruction sixteen months. He then went to Randolph Co., Ind., and worked at his trade two years, then returned to Ohio, and settled in Mercer county, where, in 1841, he was married to Sarah, daughter of Ira and Jane (Linden) Foster. In October, 1843, he started, in company with his father-in-law and family, for the Territory of Wisconsin. They traveled with teams, bringing with them a portion of their household goods. On reaching Kane Co., Ill., they stopped and remained until January, 1844, then pushed on to Wisconsin. Mr. Wilson lived with his father-in-law until March, and in the summer of 1844 worked at his trade in the town of Sylvester. In the fall he went to Monroe and worked upon the court house until it was completed. In 1845 he moved to Monticello and lived until 1847, when he made a claim on section 1, of township 3, range 7 east, now known as the town of Washington. He built a log house and improved a few acres. In the spring of 1848 he sold this claim and bought eighty acres in the same town, which he sold the next fall and purchased 160 acres, also in the same town. This he sold after breaking thirty-five acres. In 1850 he built the first house ever erected on the present site of Monticello, which he occupied eight years. In 1852 he went across the plains to California, and was five months on the road. He engaged in mining there until 1854, then returned by the way of the Isthmus of Panama. Soon after he built a saw mill in company with S. C. Taft. In this he owned an interest until 1866. In 1872 he bought the "Monticello House," in company with his son, and has lived here since that time, with the exception of the winter of 1882—83, when he purchased a residence in Albany, and spent the winter there. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of four children—Julia, Alonzo, Ira and Harriet.

Ira Wilson was born in the town of Washington, Green Co., Wis., Feb. 22, 1848. He was reared and educated in his native county. Feb. 22, 1865, he enlisted in company G, of the 49th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south to Missouri. He served until after the close of the war and was discharged with the regiment in November, 1865. In 1866 he commenced to learn the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked for several years. He was married in 1870 to Temperance Loveland, a native of Pennsylvania. They have three children—Emery, Laban and Marion. In 1870 Mr. Wilson went to Michigan and remained one year, then returned to Monticello, and in 1879 moved to Warren, Ill., where he lived three years, working at his trade. Since that time he has resided in Monticello, where he is engaged in company with his father, in keeping the "Monticello House."

The Monticello grist mill was built in 1854 by Orrin Bacon. It is 30x40 feet in size, and three and a half stories in height, and has two run of stone. Various improvements have been made from time to time, and the mill at all times does first class work. The dam is a substantial structure, built of stone and earth, there being a solid stone wall four rods in length.

POSTOFFICE.

The Monticello post office was established in 1848, and A. F. Steadman was appointed the first postmaster, and he kept the office at his house. The office was located on the mail route between Janesville and Mineral Point, and between Monroe and Madison. It is now on the route between Monroe and New Glarus. Mr. Steadman was succeeded in office by Mr. Turman, and he in turn by Mathias Marty, Vinie Godfrey, Dr. Wilcox, James Butts, A. Gorland, Frank Drake, L. B. Aldrich and E. F. Wright.

MONTICELLO PHYSICIANS.

Dr. E. S. Knapp, who located at Monticello in 1854, was the first resident physician. He was a graduate of Rush Medical College, and a man of superior attainments. In 1859 he went to Kansas, but afterwards returned to this place. He is now a resident of Wiota, Wis.

The second physician to locate here was Dr. Jeremiah Wilcox. He remained here for about four years, then removed to Iowa.

Among others who have been located at Monticello are: Drs. Ruttan, Bradshaw, Coblen, Stair and Minkler.

In 1884 the only representative of the medical profession at Monticello was Dr. Flower, who located here in 1875.

CIVIC SOCIETIES.

Monticello Union Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation Oct. 5, 1865, with the following members: James Butts, S. C. Taft, Joshua Crowell, S. Johnson, I. T. Humiston, T. C. Scott and B. F. Fessenden. A Charter was granted them July 13, 1866, and the following were the first officers: James Butts, W. M.; S. C. Taft, S. W.; Franklin Pierce, J. W.; S. Johnson, secretary. Joshua Crowell died before the charter was granted. The following have served as past masters: James Butts, S. C. Taft, F. R. Drake and H. M. Barnes. The lodge now has a membership of over thirty, and its regular communications are on the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Mount Pleasant Lodge, I. O. G. T., was organized Jan. 28, 1883, with thirty-nine charter members, and the following officers were elected: A. R. Taft, P. W. C. T.; Fred Sears, W. C. T.; Martha Magood, W. V. T.; Charles Barlow, W. C.; G. E. Knight, W. A. S.; Florence Buck, W. F. S.; Lewis Thompson, W. T.; William Barlow, W. M.; Ella Magoon, W. D. M.; Mattie Sears, W. I. G.; R. A. Barney, W. S.; Lottie Barlow, N. H. S.; Barbara Meredith, L. H. S., and James Moore, L. D. The lodge is in a flourishing condition, and now has a membership of sixty. Its meetings are held weekly.

Rescue Division, No. 201, Sons of Temperance, was organized May 17, 1883, with the following named persons as officers: Thomas Sears, P. W. P.; J. F. Sears, W. P.; Susie Buck, W. A. P.; Henry Pickford, R. Sec.; Hattie Trogner, Asst. R. Sec.; J. H. Trogner, F. Sec.; Mrs. Henry Pickford, treasurer; R. P. Hyde, Condt.; Mrs. R. Magoon, Asst. Condt.; Mrs. D. W. Pratt, I. S.; R. Magoon, O. S., and Elder Burnham, chaplain. The division now has a membership of thirty-five. Regular communications are held weekly.

RELIGIOUS.

A Methodist Episcopal class was organized as early as 1848, and the meetings were held at the log school house, located on the southwest quarter of section 8, Elder Phelps being the first pastor. Among the first members were Ira Foster and wife, Elijah Roby and wife, W. H. Coates and wife. Elijah Roby was the first class leader. There were several revival meetings held, and the class afterwards held meetings in the octagon school house until 1861, when a neat frame church edifice was erected. The following have been pastors of the society: Revs. Phelps, Frazier, Jones, Harris, Knox, Waldrown, Sample, Briggs, Burnish, Lawson, Allen, Lewis, Bean, Russell, Walker, Fancher, Hurd, Lake, Dudgeon and Gould.

In 1854 Elder Patton, a regular Baptist preacher, organized a society at what was known as the Truax log school house, and the following named were among the first members: Benjamin Truax, Benjamin Smaley and wife, Samuel Whitesit and wife, Elisha Gord and wife, Edmund Irish and wife, W. W. Martin and wife, W. W. Truax, Daniel Titus, Samuel Gord, Martin Purintun and wife, Leonard Gord and wife, Thomas J. Wittsitt and wife, James Truax and wife, E. B. Gord, S. Eldridge, Martha M. Wittsitt, Charlotte O. Conklin and Jane DeFord. The first deacons were: Benjamin Truax and Martin Purintun. Elder Patton was assisted in the organization by Elders Reece, Pool and Clack. As a great many members have moved away, meetings are no longer held regular.

The Monticello Free Will Baptist Church Society was organized Dec. 1, 1855, by Rev. J. F. Hill. The first members were: David Sears and wife, O. M. Baker and wife, Cyrus Robinson and wife, Laura A. Johnson, Robert S. Bridges, Robert Moore and Otis Bridges. The deacons were: O. M. Baker, and R. S. Bridges. Meetings were held at the octagon school house until 1861. The society then erected a neat stone church, which in May, 1862, was dedicated to the worship of God by Rev. Horace G. Woodworth, who took as his text on that occasion. "In the name of God we unfurl our banner." The following pastors have had charge of the society: Revs. William Small, R. R. Davis, Edward Berry, Mr. Felt, J. S. Dinsmore, Jefferson Bradley, M. M. Thompson and Rev. True, the present pastor. The society has a membership of about forty. The deacons are J. H. Trogner, Ralzy Knight and T. Z. Buck, and J. F. Sears, clerk.

THE MONTICELLO CEMETERY.

The land occupied by the Monticello cemetery was donated for burial purposes by Mathias Marty and Robert Bridges, and on the 10th day of January, 1852, an association was formed to take care of the same. The first trustees elected were: Henry Adams, R. Garland,

P. Pratt, M. Marty, F. R. Drake and R. S. Bridges. Ransom Drake was appointed secretary, and R. S. Bridges treasurer. Money was raised by taxation to fence the ground, and lots were sold at $7.50 each. The association failed to meet according to law, and thus lost their charter. A new association was formed in 1881. The new association took immediate steps to clear the ground, repair the fence, and now keep the same in good order.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

William Boyls was a native of Green Co., Penn., born in 1795. He was brought up on a farm, and received a liberal education. He was married to Mary Morris, a native of Pennsylvania, and settled in Lafayette county, where they remained some years, then moved to Indiana and settled in Vermilion county. Here he bought timber land and opened a farm. In 1835 he sold out there and went to Illinois. He spent one summer in Stephenson county, and in the fall of the year came to the Territory of Wisconsin, and settled in what is now the town of Clarno. He entered land and improved a farm, making it his home for some years, then sold out and bought land on section 15, where he also improved a farm, and remained several years. He then sold his farm and removed to Monroe, where he lived until 1861. In that year he removed to Black Hawk Co., Iowa, where he died in August, 1881. His wife died a few days previously. They were the parents of ten children, six of whom are now living—Jemima, now the wife of George Adams, of Monroe; Lucinda, wife of John Brown; Matilda, now the widow of George Franklin, and living in Iowa; Casander, wife of Isaac Fan, of Lone Rock, Wis.; Sarah Ann, wife of L. W. P. Morton; and William, who lives in Nebraska. Mr. Boyls was one of the earliest settlers and to him is said to belong the honor of naming the county.

Josiah Pierce, the first settler in the town of Washington, was a native of the Bay State, born in New Salem, Hampshire county, May 21, 1783. He was married to Ruth Ayers, of Granby, Conn. In 1827 they removed to New York, and settled in Otsego county, where they lived until the spring of 1837. Mr. Pierce then being in failing health, concluded to try a change of climate, and came to Milwaukee, where he was engaged by Col. Bird, the contractor who was building the State capitol at Madison, to proceed to that place and open a boarding house for the accommodation of the workmen. Accordingly, he joined Bird's party and they started overland with four teams, carrying provisions, tools and other necessary articles. A part of the way they were obliged to cut a road, and in some places to build corduroy roads. He became the second settler in Madison, but remained there only until fall, when he came to Green county, and entered land on section 13, of township 3 north, range 8 east, now known as Washington. His nearest neighbors were at Exeter, seven miles distant. Although his health was quite poor at this time, he was able to be about and attend to business for several years. His death occurred Dec. 25, 1843. He was a man of good education, intelligent, public spirited and enterprising, and in his death the county lost one of its most useful and respected citizens. He was one of the first commissioners of Green county. His widow died June 8, 1863. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom, are living.

Franklin Pierce, son of Josiah and Ruth (Ayers) Pierce, was born in New Salem, Mass., July 17, 1823. He was four years old when his parents moved to Otsego Co., N. Y., where his younger days were spent in school and upon the farm, until he was fourteen years old. He then came with his parents to Wisconsin. At the age of twenty-one he went to the pineries and worked one year. On his return he entered land on section 24, of the town of Washington, and commenced to improve a farm. He was married, in 1848, to Orinda, daughter of Ira L. and Jane (Lindsey) Foster. He built a log house in which they commenced housekeeping. In 1851 he went to California and engaged in mining three years, then returned to Green county. In 1854 he sold his farm and purchased another on section 25, of the same town, where he lived until 1869. He then sold and moved to Monticello. One year later he bought a farm on section 16, of the town of Mount Pleasant, on which he resided until 1876. He then rented his farm and bought a farm adjoining the village of Monticello where he now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce are the parents of five children—Ellen, Byron, Waldo, Ida and Frank L. Mr. Pierce has been, for many years, identified with the interests of both town and county. His first office was that of superintendent of schools, in the town of Washington. He was elected to that office at the organization of the town. He was also assessor of that town, and for several years, chairman of the board. Since living in Mount Pleasant he has served as a member of the town board, and as chairman, five years, an office which he still holds.

Albert Pierce, son of Josiah and Ruth (Ayers) Pierce, was born in New Salem, Hampshire Co., Mass., April 28, 1820, and was seventeen years old when he came with his parents to Wisconsin. He was married in November, 1852, to Sarah E. Becker, a native of Jefferson Co., N. Y. He settled at the time of his marriage on section 19, of the town of Mount Pleasant, where they remained two years, then sold his farm and bought another, in the town of Washington, upon which they lived until 1868, then sold and moved to Monticello and purchased land near the village, where he resided until the time of his death, Feb. 11, 1882. He had been prominently identified with the affairs of both town and county and filled offices of trust to the satisfaction of all. He also represented his county in the Senate of Wisconsin. He was always foremost in every enterprise for the public good, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of all. At the time of his death he was president of the Monticello Mercantile Association, the Mount Pleasant Fire Insurance Company and the Monticello Cheese Factory Company. He left a wife and four children to mourn his loss. The children are—Ruth, Irwin, Florence and Burton.

L. W. P. Morton, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in Spencer Co., Ind., June 28, 1821. His father had a farm, but being a millwright by trade, worked at that a great part of the time. In 1838 he decided to remove to Wisconsin, but before his arrangements for removal were complete, he was taken sick and died in January, 1839. In the month of April following the subject of this sketch, accompanied by his mother, started for Wisconsin with a team, carrying a portion of their household goods and provisions for the journey. They camped out on the road. On their arrival in Green county, they settled on a rented farm in the town of Clarno. In June of the same year, other members of the family came, driving their stock with them. In 1841 his mother bought forty acres of land in Monroe which was unimproved, and on which they resided until 1843. He then engaged to build a barn for his brother-in-law, Asa Brown. He had learned the carpenter's trade while living in Indiana. After this he rented half of Mr. Brown's farm upon which he lived until 1847. He was then married to Sarah Boyls, who was born in Virginia in 1826. He purchased forty acres of land in township 3 north, range 8 east, now known as the town of Mount Pleasant, where he erected a small frame house and commenced to make improvements. He has been industrious and energetic. These qualities, combined with good judgment, have made him the owner of 300 acres of land, which is well improved and fenced. He has engaged in raising stock and grain. Mr. and Mrs. Morton are the parents of eight children — Ruey A., Isabelle, William, Imogene, Volney, Wallace, Frankie and Fred. Ruey A. is married to Amos Rutledge; Isabelle is the wife of Luther Goltry, and Imogene is the wife of Talbot Purinton. Mrs. Morton removed to Buchanan county where she died.

Erastus Hulburt was born June 18, 1803. He was married to Laura Webster Jan. 20, 1825. They first settled in Manlius, Onondaga Co., N.Y. They removed to Wisconsin in 1839, and settled in the town of Sylvester, Green county. Afterward they removed to Decatur, where they resided at the time of their decease. They were the parents of thirteen children, six of whom lived to manhood and womanhood, five sons and one daughter—John, the eldest, was born in New York State, Jan. 18, 1833, and was married in 1859 to Lorinda Smiley; they reside in Mount Pleasant, Green Co., Wis.; Lydia L. married Timothy Kellogg, and at present is living at Fergus Falls, Minn.; Hiram H. is living in Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa; Lorrain D., still owns the homestead; Judson E. died Oct. 1, 1862, aged twenty-three years; Webster, the fourth son enlisted in the War of the Rebellion for three years. He served his time and re-enlisted, serving till the close of the war, and died on board a steamer between New Orleans and Vicksburg on his way home to be mustered out. He died the 19th of December and his father died in Iowa at his son John's, the 11th of the same month. His remains were brought to Albany for interment, and taken to the house of his brother Julius, his own farm being rented. They kept the body as long as convenient, awaiting the coming of the soldier son, knowing that he was on the way home. They buried him, and soon after returning from the funeral, a messenger came telling them that the son's body would soon be there. It was brought in, the coffin placed on the same chairs (which had not been moved) from which his fathers had just been taken. The mother died at her home Sept. 16, 1863. They were constituent members of the Monticello, Prairie Baptist Church, for which they labored much.

John Hulburt, son of Erastus and Laura (Webster) Hulburt, was born in Onondaga Co., N.Y., Jan. 18, 1833. In 1839 his parents came to Green county, where his childhood and youth were spent. He was married in 1859 to Lorinda Smiley, daughter of Daniel and Ellen (Bemus) Smiley, pioneers of Green county. She was born in Janesville. They settled in Howard Co., Iowa, where he purchased unimproved land. They lived there two years, then returned to Green county, and after remaining two and a half years went again to Iowa and settled in Harrison county, where he purchased land and engaged in farming. In the fall of 1866 he came back to Green county and settled on the old homestead in Decatur. In the fall of 1870 he rented his farm here and went to Jasper Co., Mo., where he rented a farm and lived one year, then returned to Green county and resided in the village of Albany two years. He then sold his farm in Decatur and bought his present farm, located on section 26, of the town of Mount Pleasant. It was first improved by Charles F. Thompson, and contains 320 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Hulburt are the parents of four children—Dan, Nellie, Julia and Johnnie.

Joseph McGoon, a native of New Hampshire, came to this county in the fall of 1841, and settled in the village of Exeter, where he lived some years, engaged in teaming. He died at the home of his son Richard, in the town of Mount Pleasant.

Richard McGoon was born in Cayuga Co., N.Y., Jan. 17, 1826. When he was six years old his parents removed to Michigan and lived three years, then to Ohio, and settled in Mercer county, where they remained until 1841. Richard McGoon was married in November, 1847, to Maria, daughter of Stephen and Betsey (Loveland) Wood. In March, 1848, they settled on section 4, of Mount Pleasant, and commenced improvements. He enlisted Aug. 29, 1864, in company I, of the 43d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went to Tennessee. He participated in the battle of Johnsonville and other minor engagements, and served until after the close of the war. He was discharged with the regiment in June, 1865, returned home and resumed farming. In 1878 he sold his farm and purchased land adjoining the village plat, upon which was a small frame house, to which he has since built an addition and still occupies. Mr. and Mrs. McGoon are the parents of twelve children—Maroa, Martha, Franklin, Jackson, Sarah, Ella, Addie, Albert, Arthur, Etta and Ernest. Emma, the fourth child, died at the age of nine years.

Charles Parkin is a native of England, born May 28, 1823. He was reared upon a farm, where he remained until sixteen years old. He then engaged in mining. At the age of twenty he came to America with his parents. They stopped for a few months in St. Louis, then came to Green county and settled in the town of New Glarus, where they were among the first settlers. They lived in that town a few years, then removed to Exeter, where his parents died a few years later. The subject of this sketch made his home with his parents until the time of their death. He was married in January, 1854, to Annie E. Stamm, who was born in Norway, and came to America when eleven years old. They settled on the homestead in Exeter, where they lived until 1864, then moved to Minnesota and remained one year, then returned to Green county and lived five years in the town of York. He then went to New Glarus and bought the farm upon which his father had first settled, lived there three years, then sold out and moved to Mount Pleasant and purchased a farm of 200 acres on section 2. Here he erected a frame house and granary, and resided until his death, Dec. 9, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Parkin were the parents of ten children—Emma A., Carrie E., Eliza J., Mary J., Addie L., Josie M., Clara B., Charles E., Annie M. and Gracie A.

William Clark, son of D. W. and Elizabeth Clark, was born in Vermilion Co, Ill., Dec. 22, 1841, and was three years old when his parents came to Green county. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving his education in the public schools. In 1866 he visited Montana Territory, where he remained a few months and returned to his home in Green county. He was married March 17, 1867, to Hannah, daughter of Richard and Ann (Pickup) Barlow, a native of Derbyshire, England, born Jan. 1, 1847. They first settled at the old homestead with his parents, where they remained one year, then went to Boone Co., Iowa, and purchased a farm in Worth township. He built a house, broke and fenced several acres of the land, and lived there four years. He then traded for his present farm, located on sections 20 and 21, of the town of Mount Pleasant, where he has since resided. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have three children—Charlie, Wesley, and Daisey Pearl.

James H. Conway, an early settler in Green county, was born in Salem, Washington Co., N. Y., in 1792. He spent his younger days in his native county, and when a young man learned the shoemaker's trade. He was married to Mary Carlton, a native of New Hampshire, and a few years later moved to Ohio and settled in Licking county, where they lived a short time, then removed to Huron county and bought timber land and cleared a farm. In 1845 he came to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled in Green county. He purchased land of Sylvester Hills, on section 8, township 2, range 8 east, now known as Sylvester. He improved a farm and made his home there until the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1876. Mrs. Conway died in 1879. They were the parents of eight children, all of whom lived to an adult age, but only three of them are now living—James B., Thomas C. and Werlin.

Thomas Conway was born in Huron Co., Ohio, Aug. 25, 1837, and was eight years old when he came to Green county. He lived with his parents until 1866, then bought land on section 28, of the town of Mount Pleasant. Upon this place was a small frame house in which he lived until 1881, when he erected the commodious frame dwelling in which he now lives. He was married, in 1864, to Eliza A. Edwards, and they have four children—Adrian, Mary, David and Jesse.

Theodore Chamberlain, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in Huntington Co., N. J., May 12, 1812. When he was twelve years old his parents moved to Ontario Co., N. Y., where he spent his youth and learned the shoemaker's trade. He was married Nov. 7, 1833, to Emeline Green, who was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y., April 10, 1812. In the spring of 1834 they removed to Ohio and settled in Vienna, Trumbull county, where he worked at his trade and farmed until 1845. In that year he came to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled in Green county. He entered land in township 2, range 7 east, now known as Monroe. There was a log house on this land, in which they lived two years. He then sold his land and went to Walworth county, and one year later to Rock county, where he spent one year. He then returned to Green county and bought land on the southwest quarter of section 35, of the town of Mount Pleasant. He built an addition to a log house, which stood upon the land, and resided here until the time of his death, in 1865. He left a wife and three children to mourn his loss. Their son, James, was born in Ohio, and came with them to Green county, remaining with them until the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, when he enlisted in the 8th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, went south and died in the service. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Chamberlain has occupied the homestead. The children living are—Mary, Albert and Theodore.

Anton Stauffacher, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, in 1814. He was reared on a farm, and also worked in the slate quarries. He was married to Annie Stauffacher. In 1845, they left their native home, and in company with several other families, came to America, and settled in Green county, in the town of New Glarus. He remained there a short time, then went to Sylvester, where he was employed for several years by Mr. Thompson. In 1849 he had accumulated enough of his hard earnings to purchase a farm, and came to Mount Pleasant and bought land on section 32, where he built a log house and commenced farming. He was successful in his enterprises, and afterwards bought more land and erected a stone house with a frame addition. He died here Nov. 4, 1883. His wife died in 1879. Eight of their children are now living. Their son, John, was born in the town of Sylvester, July 16, 1847. He was reared upon a farm and educated in the public schools. Feb. 7, 1865, he enlisted in the 46th Wisconsin regiment and went south. He served until December of that year and was then discharged with the regiment, and returned home. He was married in 1876 to Magdaline Nordor, a native of the town of Sylvester. They have three children—Anton, Otto and an infant not yet named. Mr. Stauffacher occupies the homestead.

William H. Coates, a pioneer of Green county, was born in the town of Abington, Luzerne Co., Penn., Nov. 22, 1818. When he was quite young, his parents moved to Huntington, in the same county, where he was reared and educated in the district schools. In his youth he worked in a broom factory and learned the trade of broom making. In 1838 he went to Susquehanna county and made a claim of government land, on which he made some improvements, and lived seven years, then in 1846, started west to seek a home. He was accompanied by his family. They embarked on a canal boat at Elmira and went to Buffalo, thence by the lakes to Chicago, where he hired a team to take them to Roscoe, a few miles from Chicago. There they spent three months. He then hired a team to bring them to Green county. He bought a claim on section 19, of township 4 north, range 8 east, now known as Exeter. There was an unfinished log cabin on the place which he completed and built a frame addition to. In the spring of 1848 he sold this place with some stock, for $300, which comprised the sum total of his wealth. He then moved to Mount Pleasant and bought forty acres of land on section 5. He subsequently purchased more land and his farm now contains 240 acres. In 1862 he rented his farm and removed to Monticello, where he bought village property and erected a commodious frame house, which he has since occupied. He was married in 1839 to Jane Morely, who was born in Susquehanna county, Sept. 28, 1818. Eight children were born to them—Hamilton J., Washington B., Ellen S., Elisha M., William M., Mary Jane, Coralee and Luella. Mr. and Mrs. Coates are members of the M. E. Church.

Peter Jenny, a pioneer of Green county, was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, in 1811. He learned the business of wood engraver, and followed his trade in his native country until 1847, when he came to America and landed at New York. He went up the Hudson river to Albany, then by the Erie canal to Buffalo, thence by steamboat to Milwaukee. At the latter place he hired a team to carry himself and family to New Glarus, this county. He purchased land in that town and occupied it two years, when he sold out and purchased another piece in the same town. He erected a log house, and also built a good log stable. He improved a portion of the land, and made it his home until his death, which occurred in 1858. He was married in the old county to Sarah Frauld. Three children blessed this union—Fannie, John and Annie. Mrs. Jenny died in 1882. Their only son, John, was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, on the 22d of March, 1839, and was but six years of age when his parents came to America. In December, 1858, he was married to Ursula Baumgardner, born in canton Glarus, Switzerland. They settled on his father's old homestead, but only lived there one year, when they removed to the town of Mount Pleasant, and purchased 160 acres of land on section 28. His land is mostly improved. He has a nice, large frame house and out buildings, and has shade, fruit and ornamental trees set out. Mr. and Mrs. Jenny have ten children—John, Anton, Magdaline, Matilda, Lucy, Annie, Peter, Emma, Lydia and Whilmi.

John H. Trogner, deacon of the Baptist Church in Monticello, was born in Lewis Co., N. Y., Dec. 13, 1848. When he was five years old, his parents removed to Wisconsin and settled in the town of New Glarus, where his younger days were spent. He obtained his education in the district school. Dec. 29, 1863, he enlisted in company K, of the 16th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. The regiment remained at Camp Randall until the following March, then went south to Vicksburg, thence by way of Cairo to Clifton, Tenn., and soon after to Rome, Ga., where they joined Sherman's command. He participated in the battles of Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta, where he was severely wounded, on the 21st of July, 1864. He was sent first to the field hospital, then to headquarters hospital at Rome. As soon as he was able to make the journey, he was granted a furlough and returned home. At the expiration of his furlough he reported at Madison, and was sent to the division hospital at Camp Randall, and there discharged, May 23, 1865. He returned home, and as soon as he was able to work rented a farm in New Glarus, lived there two years, then moved to Mount Pleasant and farmed one year. He then bought a farm in the town of York, which he sold one year later and moved to Exeter, where he lived five years, then went to Monroe and remained until 1877. At that date he came to Monticello and engaged in the flour mill, where he has since been employed. He was married in 1868 to Esther Roby, a native of Ohio. She died in 1872. In 1873 he was again married to Hattie Buck, daughter of Theodore Z. and Lucia W. (Harper) Buck. Four children have been born to them—Ora A., Verne, Evelyn and Walter C.

Thomas Sears, one of the pioneers of Green county, was born in the town of Knox, Waldo Co., Maine, Oct. 18, 1819. He was reared on a farm until fifteen years old, when his parents moved to the town of Freedom. His father owned a woolen mill there, which he afterward gave to Thomas and his brother. Soon after this the mill burned and they erected a saw and shingle mill, which they operated until 1844, then went to Georgia and worked as millwright through one winter, then returned to Maine and remained until fall, then returned to Georgia and spent the most of the time until July, 1847, then returned to Maine and was married December 29, of that year, to Adeline Holt. She was born in the town of Clinton, Kennebec county, Nov. 29, 1827. They remained in Waldo county until the fall of 1849, then came to Wisconsin, starting on a steamer for Boston, thence by railroad to Buffalo, thence by the lakes to Milwaukee, and there hired a team to bring them to this county. He bought land on section 8, with a little improvement, including a log house, into which they moved and spent the winter in company with two other families. Four years later he erected a frame house and occupied the same until 1879, when he built another which he now occupies. Mr. and Mrs. Sears are the parents of five children—Wilmer, Sarah, Ella and Fred. Carroll, the third child, was born June 12, 1855, and died March 27, 1858.

Charles St. John, an early settler of the town of Mount Pleasant, was a native of Pennsylvania. When he was quite young his father died, and his mother soon after moved to Ohio and settled in Trumbull county, where he grew to manhood and was married to Mary Shoop, a native of Ohio. They remained in Trumbull county until 1849, then came to this county, making the trip overland, a distance of hundreds of miles, bringing provisions along and camping on the way. He purchased a tract of land on section 25, town of Mount Pleasant. There was a log house on the land, in which the family lived some years, when he erected a frame house. He died there Feb. 14, 1863. His widow died Feb. 8, 1881. They had six children who reached the age of maturity—Thomas, Catharine, Margaret, George, Charles and Amos. The younger son, Amos, now owns and occupies the homestead. He was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1842, and was but seven years old when he came to Wisconsin with his parents. Here he grew to manhood, living with his parents until the time of their death. He was married on the 24th of November, 1863, to Margaret Grovenor, a native of Wales. They have three children—Mary, George and Roy.

John U. Elmer, Jr.; third son of John U. and Verena Elmer, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Nov. 22, 1847. When he was two years old his parents came to America and settled in Green county. He attended the district school, and afterwards three terms at Evansville Academy, and five terms at Naperville, Ill., where he graduated in the German course in 1868. He then taught school one term in Sauk county. He commenced preaching in the German Evangelical Church, and traveled on the Kickapoo circuit one year, then on the New London mission, then two years on the Hartford circuit, two years on the Black River mission, one year on Alma mission, and one year on the Brandon circuit. He located at Brandon and remained one year, then in 1878 bought a farm on section 29, of Mount Pleasant, where he since engaged in farming and teaching school, as well as in preaching. He was married May 6, 1874, to Rosa Wurster. She was born in Fond du Lac Co., Wis., Nov. 22, 1850, and died March 23, 1877, leaving two children, one of whom is now living—Adeline. He was again married May 16, 1878, to Sophia Shultz, a native of Racine county. By this union there is one child—John M.

Thomas Fenton came to this county in 1846. He was born in Washington Co., Penn., Dec. 6, 1806. When he was quite young his parents removed to Trumbull Co., Ohio, where his pioneer life began. His father owned a large farm in Pennsylvania; also a mill and a distillery, the products of which he used to take down the rivers to New Orleans, on flat boats. Soon after their removal to Ohio both he and his wife died, leaving four children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the oldest, and nine years of age. He went to live with an uncle in Trumbull county, to whom he was bound until twenty-one years old. When he was eighteen his uncle died, but he continued to live with his aunt until his term of service expired. He then engaged at farming in the neighborhood, receiving $8 per month, and continued working for the same man seven years, then rented the farm and engaged extensively in stock raising, paying particular attention to fine stock, and making a specialty of fine wool sheep. He remained on this farm until 1846. In the fall of that year he came to Wisconsin by way of the lakes, hiring some one to drive his stock. He located in Ottawa, Waukesha county, where he rented a farm and engaged in raising broom corn. He had an interest in 500 sheep, many of them full-bloods, which were brought from Ohio, but the climate not agreeing with them, about half of them died the first winter. In 1848 he came to Green county and purchased a claim on section 1, township 3, range 8 east, now known as Mount Pleasant. He entered the land with a land warrant, at Mineral Point, Dec. 1, 1848. After entering this land he returned to Waukesha county and remained until 1849. In the spring of that year he removed here with his family and stock. He afterwards entered and purchased other land, and engaged in stock raising. At the time of his death he was the owner of 514 acres. He was married to Ellen Buchanan, who was born at Little Britain, Orange Co., N. Y., July 6, 1812. Eleven children were born to them, of whom ten are now living—Sally E., Agnes Jane, Robert P., George, Maria, Eliza, Emeline, William, Abigail, Jennie and Thomas. Five of the daughters were school teachers. Mr. Fenton died April 3, 1866, and Mrs. Fenton died Feb. 23, 1881. Possessed of a vigorous mind, and energetic in action, he was well calculated to exert influence and to gain respect, which was so plainly manifested in choosing him at various times to fill offices of trust and responsibility in the town, county and State in which he lived.

William, son of Thomas and Ellen (Buchanan) Fenton, was born in Waukesha county, Jan. 3, 1847, and was two years old when his parents removed to Green county. He spent his younger days in school and on his father's farm. He was married in March, 1875, to Elizabeth Smith, a native of New York, and now occupies the homestead. They have one child—Polly.

Charles H. Baxter came with his parents to Green county, in 1853. His father purchased 240 acres of land on section 20, and drew lumber from Janesville to build a house. The subject of this sketch assisted his father in improving a farm. He received his early education in the district school, and afterwards attended Evansville Seminary, two terms. In August, 1861, he engaged to teach school the following fall, but changed his mind and enlisted in company H, of the 8th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, State service, and went into camp at Madison. The next month, he enlisted in the United States service, and soon after went to Missouri and did guard duty on the line of the Iron Mountain Railroad, making Pilot Knob headquarters until November, 1861, then went to Sulphur Springs, and remained stationed there until January, 1862, then went to Cairo and in March following, to Point Pleasant, Mo. There, provisions gave out, and they were obliged to forage for what they had to eat, often having nothing but corn, which they ground in the plantation mills. His health failed, and April 26, he obtained a furlough and returned home. At the expiration of his furlough, he reported at Camp Randall, and remained in the division hospital until July, when he was transferred to Keokuk, and there discharged on account of disability, Nov. 26, 1862. He returned home and was unable to do much work for three years. In 1866, he bought land on section 18, which was timbered, with the exception of a small tract that had been cleared. He improved a farm and lived here until 1881, then rented the place and moved to Monticello. In 1882 he sold his farm and purchased a house and two lots in the village where he now resides. He was married in 1866 to Mary E. Schoonover, formerly of Lagrange Co., Ind., They have one child—Phila.

George W. Baker came to Green county in 1853, and lived near Monroe until the fall of 1854, then came to Mount Pleasant, and bought land on section 34. He had bought a log house near Monroe, located on what is now the "county farm," moved it to his land, put it up, and lived there one and a half years, then sold out and purchased forty acres on section 27, erected a frame house, and has continued to make that his home until the present time. He has bought land adjoining, and now has eighty-five acres, the greater part of which is improved. He is a native of Washington Co., Penn., born March 20, 1825. He was reared to agricultural pursuits in his native county. When he was twenty-two years old, he went to Ohio and settled in Warren county, where he lived until 1853, then came to Wisconsin and spent two months in Iowa county, previous to coming to Green county. He was married in 1854, to Martha Whitesitt, who was born in Vermilion Co., Ill. They have three children—Mary B., Charlie W. and Lettie Medora.

Asahel Wilcox, a native of the State of Connecticut, came from Janesville in 1853, and settled on section 3, of Mount Pleasant, where he resided until the time of his death which occurred in January, 1868. His widow died in March, 1879. They were the parents of ten children, three of whom are living—Lodena, Junet and Edgar. Lodena is the wife of James Barnes, and lives in Kansas; Junet lives in Trail Co., Dak. Edgar was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Aug. 19, 1838 and was but eight years old when his parents came to the Territory of Wisconsin and settled at Janesville, where they resided until 1853. He was married, Dec. 1, 1870, to Eliza, daughter of Thomas and Ellen Campbell. They have four children—Edgar E., Eliza A., Nellie M. and William H. He settled at the time of his marriage, on his present farm, which he had previously purchased. The land was timbered, but is now cleared and fenced and in a good state of cultivation. He has erected good frame buildings, set fruit trees and has a desirable home.

John Blumer, one of the most extensive farmers in the town of Mount Pleasant, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 16, 1816. When he was twelve years old he commenced work in a woolen mill and continued in that occupation until twenty-four years of age, then engaged in farming. He was night watchman in the village of Schwanden nine years. He was married, in 1836, and his wife died in 1849, leaving five children—Annie, Ezra, John, Sarah and Caroline. In 1853 he took his five children and started for America, making the voyage in a sailing vessel in thirty-five days. He landed in America with $4 in his pocket, and the five children dependent upon him for support. He went to New Glarus and engaged in farming, working in the harvest field for cents per day. His oldest son worked through the summer and received a small calf for his labor. In the fall Mr. Blumer bought forty acres of land in the town of Washington. He built a log cabin doing all the work with his own hands, as he had no money with which to buy nails, he made wooden pins to use instead. He also made table, chairs and bedstead with which to furnish the house. He was very industrious, and soon was able to buy more land. He improved a farm and lived there sixteen years then sold out and bought another farm in the same town, where he lived until 1881, then bought his present place which contains 317 acres, a part of which is in the town of Mount Pleasant and a part in Washington. The build are located in the town of Mount Pleasant and include a nice frame house well furnished, two large barns with basements, a granary and cheese factory. He keeps sixty cows and from the milk makes imitation Swiss cheese. He was married the second time, in 1853, to Maria Stussy, also born in Switzerland. They first met in the ship on their journey to America. They have seven children—Sula, Mary, Fred, Samuel, Katie, Lizzie and Jacob. Their son, Samuel, now assists the father in the management of the farm. He was born in the town of Washington, in October, 1859, and was married to Augusta Wilhelmina Butts. One child has been born to them—John Herman.

John H. Titus commenced in the grocery business in Monticello during the fall of 1874. He was born in Orange Co., Vt., Jan. 8, 1825. When he was seven years old his parents removed to Wolcott, Lamoille county, and there he grew to manhood, being brought up on a farm. When he was twenty-one years old he went to Boston and worked at lathing for three years, then six months at bakery business, then was engaged as cook in a restaurant. He then engaged in stucco work in the city three years. In 1854 he came to Wisconsin on account of his health and spent one year in the town of Mount Pleasant. He then returned east and was married in the town of Wolcott, in February, 1856, to Lucinda Courier, who died the following year. He remained in Vermont and Massachusetts until the fall of 1860, then came to Green county and worked two years at farming, then engaged as carpenter and joiner until 1874, when he engaged in trade as before stated. His second wife, to whom he was married in October, 1879, was Alice Barlow. They have one child—Ila G.

Jacob H. Elmer, the sixth son of John U. and Verena Elmer, was born in the town of Washington, March 11, 1854. His youth was mostly spent in the town of Mount Pleasant, where attended school. He was married Oct. 4, 1877, to Verena Hefty, who was born in the town of New Glarus, and is a daughter of Casper and Elizabeth Hefty. They have four children—Elma, Lillian, and Alvin and Alonia, twins. At the time of his marriage he settled on his present farm, located on section 31, town of Mount Pleasant, and a part of sections 5 and 6, of the town of Sylvester.

Sweting C. Taft, came to Green county in 1854, and located at Monticello. George Campbell gave him a lot in that village, on condition that he build a house, which he proceeded to do immediately, erecting a frame house, into which he moved before it was completed. He then commenced working upon the grist mill, for Mr. Bacon. In 1854, in company with his brother, John, he built a saw mill on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 8, which they operated until 1863. He enlisted December 22, of that year, in the 5th Wisconsin Battery, and was mustered into service Jan. 7, 1864, at Camp Randall, where he remained until the last of February, then went to Nashville, and from there to Chattanooga. He was soon after taken sick and sent to the hospital, where he spent six weeks, then joined the battery at Rossville, and went with Sherman to Atlanta. After remaining there a few days he was sent back to Chattanooga, thence to Jefferson, Mo., Hospital, where ten days later he was transferred to Prairie du Chien. He remained there until June, 1865, then joined the battery at Madison, and was there discharged, and returned home. As soon as able he took charge of the saw mill, which he then owned in company with Peter Wilson. In 1866 they sold out to the Monticello Woolen Manufacturing Company, taking their pay in stock of the company. Since 1854 he has worked at his trade (millwright) in different places in Minnesota, Iowa and Michigan, but his home has been at Monticello. He was born Dec. 19, 1819, at Springville, Susquehanna Co., Penn. When he was five years old his parents removed to Virgil, Cortland Co., N. Y., where he grew to manhood. At the age of twenty-one he commenced learning the carpenter and joiner's trade. His first work was framing barns. In 1846 he went to Steuben Co., N. Y., and there worked at his trade as carpenter and joiner, and also worked as millwright, remaining there until 1853, when he came to Wisconsin and spent one year at Janesville. In the spring of 1854 he came, as before stated, to Monticello. He resides at present on the south side of the river, near the village. He was married Sept. 28, 1843, to Elizabeth Gray, who was born in Cortland Co., N. Y., in October, 1820. She died June 28, 1846. Mr. Taft was again married Oct. 25, 1849, to Electa W. Fluent, a native of New York, born in Cameron, Steuben county, Jan. 27, 1825. By this union there are four children living—John O., Appleton R., Ogden G. and Franklin D.

Richard Barlow first came to Green county in 1854, and engaged in farming in the town of Jefferson. Five years later, he came to Monticello, purchased village property and engaged at his trade as merchant tailor. He continued in business here until 1883, when he removed to his farm on section 16, and remained until 1884. He then moved to Monroe. He is a native of England, born at Berry, near Manchester, July 13, 1823. His father, Charles Barlow, was pressed into the British service when but thirteen years old, and served on board a man-of-war until the age of thirty-one. He participated in the battle of New Orleans in 1814. In one of the many engagements in which he took part, he received a wound, from which he suffered until the time of his death. The subject of this sketch was, in his youth, apprenticed to a tailor, to learn the trade. He served until twenty-one years of age, then worked at his trade in Manchester and Derbyshire until 1851. In that year he came to America and spent some time in New Jersey, after which he returned to England and remained two and a half years. He then came back to this country and settled in Green county, purchasing a farm in the town of Jefferson. Soon after he moved to Monticello, and traded his farm for a farm in Iowa, which he again traded for the farm which he now owns. He was married in April, 1846, to Ann Picup, who was born in Manchester, England. Mr. and Mrs. Barlow are the parents of ten children—Hannah, now the wife of William Clark; Charles, Emma, wife of Charles Emmons; Alice E., wife of John Titus; Martha A., wife of Edward Stout; Mary E., wife of Edwin Strink; George E., Joseph H., Lottie E. and Willie L.

James Whitcomb, a pioneer of Green county, was born in Steuben Co., N. Y., May 17, 1812. He grew to manhood in that county, and was there married Sept. 15, 1833, to Nancy Goltry. She was born in Steuben county, Aug. 7, 1814. In 1838 they emigrated to Indiana and settled in Jennings' county, where he purchased timber land and cleared a farm. The location proved an unhealthy one, and in 1846, he sold his farm and moved to Wisconsin, and located in Rock county. He bought land four miles from Johnstown, where he lived three years, then came to Green county and settled in the town of Mount Pleasant, having traded his farm in Rock county for land on section 36. Here he made his home until the time of his death, which occurred April 12, 1854. Mrs. Whitcomb died in May, 1883. There are four of their children now living—Rhoda, now the wife of John Clemmer; Rosanna, now the wife of Lindsey Neal; Rufus and James Martin. The latter, James Martin Whitcomb, was born in the town of Mount Pleasant, Aug. 19, 1853. His early education was received in the district schools. When he was eighteen years old, he went to Janesville and studied vocal and instrumental music three years. Since that time he has devoted his time to teaching music and is well known as a successful teacher. He was married in 1874 to Lena daughter of Daniel H. and Cordelia (Walling) Morgan. She was born in Green county. In 1877 he bought the interest of his brothers and sisters in the old homestead, on section 36, where he now lives. They have two children—Harry and Luie.

Benjamin Lewis, a native of South Wales, was born Oct. 14, 1820. When seventeen years of age he commenced work in an iron rolling mill, which he continued until 1844. In the month of February, of that year, he set sail for America, and landed at New York city April 3. He then went to Maryland and was there employed in a rolling mill until 1847, when he went to Kentucky and engaged with the Hillman Rolling Mill Company, on the Cumberland river, for whom he worked a few months, then went to Pittsburg, and worked in a rolling mill until 1850. He then went to Brady's Bend Iron Works, where he was employed until 1854. In that year he came to Wisconsin, and bought a farm on section 11, of the town of Mount Pleasant. There was a log house on the place which the family occupied for a time. He then built another log house, in which they lived until 1870, when he erected the frame house which they now occupy. He was married in 1845 to Elizabeth Lewis, also a native of South Wales. Ten children have blessed their union—Daniel, Edward, Elias, George, William, Silas, Thomas, Mary, Ellen S. and Freddie F.

Milo L. Barney first came to this county in 1855. He was a young man at that time, and like many others, had come west to seek his fortune. His first employment was type sticking in the Sentinel office at Monroe, at which he worked a few months. In the winter of 1855—6 he taught school in Clarno, and the following spring returned to his home in New York, where he spent the summer. In the fall of 1856 he came back to Green county and taught school in the town of Adams. In 1857 he bought land on section 23, of the town of Washington, forty acres of which was fenced, and twenty acres broken, and a small frame house was standing upon the place. The same year his parents moved to the county, and bought a farm on section 24. He lived with them from that time until 1859. In 1859 he worked a portion of his father's farm, having rented his own land. He was married Jan. 1, 1859, to Annie Burtis, who was born at Saratoga, N. Y. Seven children were born to them—Grace, Eugene, Belle, Robert, Fannie, Mary and Maud. In 1860 Mr. Barney settled on his farm and remained until the spring of 1866. He then bought another farm on section 28, upon which he lived until June, 1879, when he rented it and moved to Monticello. His residence is not in the village, but is pleasantly located on the south side of the river. He was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., Sept. 14, 1837. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving his education in the public schools. He made his home with his parents until 1854. His father, James Barney, was a native of Vermont, born in 1801. When he was quite young his parents removed to Jefferson Co., N. Y., where they were early settlers. He was twice married and Milo, the subject of this sketch, was a son of his second wife, whose maiden name was Matilda Walsworth. She was a native of Jefferson Co., N. Y., where they resided until 1857, when, as before stated, they came to Green county and settled in the town of Washington. James Barney died in 1875 and his wife in 1879.

Isaiah Baebler came to Green county in 1854 and first bought forty acres of land on section 31, town of Mount Pleasant. He erected a log house and immediately commenced improving the land. He soon after bought adjoining land, and lived there until 1868, then bought his present farm on sections 29 and 30. He now owns 259 acres of land, has good buildings, including a large frame house and two barns. He keeps a dairy of fifty cows. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, April 24, 1831. He was married in 1851 to Annie Rhiner. They have nine children now living—Henry, Mary, Chloe, Jacob, Annie, Celia, Verena, Susie and Barbara. They made their home in Switzerland until 1854, when they came to America, making the voyage in a sailing vessel in thirty-nine days. They landed at New Orleans, then came up the river to Galena, where they located, Mr. Baebler having fifty cents left with which to make a start in what was to them a new country.

Henry Baebler, son of Isaiah and Annie Baebler, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Feb. 16, 1853. He was two years old when his parents came to America and settled in Mount Pleasant, Green county, where he was reared and educated in the district school. He remained at home with his parents until 1874. He was married January 1, of that year, to Anna Bloom, also a native of Switzerland. He then purchased a farm in the town of Washington, on which he lived six years, then sold and bought his present farm on section 18, of Mount Pleasant. Mr. and Mrs. Baebler have five children—Isaiah, Freddie, Anna, Henry and Lena.

Albrecht Baebler came with his parents to Green county in 1855. He is a son of Christopher and Chloe (Elmer) Baebler. They settled in New Glarus and remained some years. Christopher Baebler is now living at Monroe at the advanced age of eighty-two years. The subject of this sketch was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, March 11, 1832. He was reared upon a farm and remained with his parents until 1853. In that year he came to America. In 1855 he was married to Annie Barbara Veagley, who was born in the canton of Glarus, May 16, 1836. At the time of his marriage he purchased land on section 33, of the town of New Glarus, and erected a log house, in which they lived a few years. He then built a large frame house, also a large frame barn, 54x80 feet, with a stone basement. In 1878 he sold his farm and moved to Monroe, and there engaged in dealing in live stock until 1883, when he came to Monticello and purchased a farm adjoining the village, where he now owns 230 acres of well improved land. Mr. and Mrs. Baebler are the parents of seven children—Rachel, Chloe, Christopher, Barbara, Albrecht, John and Henry.

Dietrich Stauffacher was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, in June, 1830. He attended the public schools there until he was fourteen years of age. From that time until eighteen years old he worked on the farm and in the slate quarries. Then for four years he was engaged in herding cattle on the Alps. In 1854 he left his native country and came to America, taking passage on a vessel the 11th of February, and arriving at New Orleans the last of April. He went to St. Louis, Mo., and worked in a dairy for a year, when he came to Green county and commenced working on a farm. In about a month he purchased eighty acres of land on section 32, from Charles Thompson, and worked for him a few months in part payment. He purchased a pair of oxen and commenced improving his land. The following winter he split and hauled rails enough to fence a part of his farm. In 1856 he was united in marriage with Annie Norder, born in canton Glarus, Switzerland. He erected a small frame house and commenced house-keeping. He has been successful in life, and has added a large addition to his residence; also built a large frame barn, with a stone basement. He has also added largely to his landed estate. He took his first crop of grain to Janesville, and sold it for seventy-four cents per bushel. He is now engaged in stock raising and dairying. He has sixty cows, and makes cheese during the summer season. His farm now contains 558 acres, the greater part of which is improved. Mr. and Mrs. Stauffacher have twelve children—Katie, Euphemia, Dietrich, Jacob, Annie, Nicholas, John, Leonard, Mary, Mathias, Elizabeth and Edward.

Ralsey Knight, the first wagon maker in Monticello, is a native of the town of Pike, Allegany Co., N. Y., born Oct. 12, 1815. He remained in his native State until twenty years of age. He was educated in the district school and afterwards attended two terms at Leroy Seminary, and five terms at Middlebury Academy. At the age of sixteen, he went to

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Orleans county and engaged in farming. Four years later he went to Canada, where he taught school one winter, then returned to Orleans county and purchased an interest in a wagon shop. He continued in that business until 1854, then started for Wisconsin, bringing with him a horse and three vehicles, which he shipped to Detroit. At that point he started overland. He sold two of the vehicles in Michigan, and continued his journey with the horse and buggy. On reaching Monticello, Green county, he traded his horse and buggy for land, a part of which is now included in the cemetery. He then returned to his home in New York, and remained until the fall of 1856, then moved his family to Green county, and located permanently, at Monticello. He bought a house and lot in the village and spent the first winter in building sleds. In 1857 he erected a wagon shop in the village, in which he worked until 1860. He then went to Tennessee, and in company with others, engaged in manufacturing wagons, at a point eleven miles from Murfreesboro. In 1861, at the breaking out of the war, he thought it best to return to Wisconsin, and as he could not travel by rail, drove through with a pair of horses and wagon, bringing his family. They took their own provisions and camped on the way. They arrived at their destination after thirty-two days travel, and settled on his farm in the town of Exeter, where he lived a year, then came to town and worked at his trade until August, 1864, when he enlisted in company D, of the 35th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south. He remained in Arkansas for a time, then went to New Orleans, and soon after to Mobile Bay, where he participated in the siege and capture of Fort Spanish, from there to Fort Blakely, participating in the capture of that point, thence up the Tombigbee river, in pursuit of a rebel fleet, which was captured. Here he was taken sick, and did no more duty. He was discharged at the close of the war, at Jonesville, Texas, July 10, 1865. He returned home and worked at his trade in Monticello, until 1868, then moved to his farm in Exeter, and remained until 1870, then sold that farm and bought a farm on section 7, of Mount Pleasant, and section 12, of Washington. He has since purchased land on section 5, and now owns 169 acres. Mr. Knight has been twice married. First, in 1837, to Caroline Murdock, who died in 1852. He was again married in 1853, to Emma Wood, a native of Rensselaer Co., N. Y. By the latter union there are two children—Adelbert and George. Mr. Knight has held offices of trust in the town, having been treasurer and justice of the peace. The latter office he filled for a number of years.

Theodore Z. Buck, carpenter and joiner, came to Monticello in 1856, and purchased a farm in the town of Mount Pleasant, which he lived upon one season, then removed to the village and engaged in working at his trade, which he has continued the greater part of the time since. In 1863 he bought land near the village, and erected the commodious frame house which he now occupies. He enlisted Feb. 22, 1865, in the 49th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company G, and went to Missouri. He was discharged in November, of the same year. He was born in Canada, June 15, 1822. His father, Reuben Buck, was born in Clarendon, Rutland Co., Vt., and when a young man went to New York, where he made the acquaintance of Polly York, who became his wife. She was born in Philipstown, Schoharie Co., N.Y. They settled in Ontario county, where they lived until 1822, when they went to Canada and remained six months. During that time the subject of this sketch was born at Norwich, in the province of Ontario. They returned to New York and settled in Chautauqua county, and afterwards removed to Belvidere, Boone Co., Ill. Theodore resided with his parents until 1850, when he went to Janesville, Wis., and worked at his trade, which he had learned of his father. He remained there until 1856. He was married Dec. 24, 1841, to Lucy W. Harper, who was born in Vermillion, Huron Co., Ohio, Oct. 26, 1826. They have five children living—Orlando H. Alda, Hattie, Susie N. and Florence A. Their eldest son, Walter, was born in Belvidere, Ill., Feb. 15, 1846. He lived with his parents until Feb. 17, 1864, when he enlisted in company E., of the 5th Wisconsin Battery. He died in the service at Louisville, Ky., Sept. 24, 1864.

Michael Kealey, a native of Ireland, was born in county Wexford, Sept. 29, 1824. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and in 1844 left his native land and came to this country. He landed at New York city, and went to Schenectady Co., N. Y., and remained there and in Albany county until 1856, when he came to Green Co., Wis., and settled at Albany. He was in the employ of the Warrens, at that place, the greater part of the time for twelve years. He then purchased the farm on which he now lives, on section 22, of the town of Mount Pleasant, where he has since been engaged in farming. He was married Jan. 28, 1856, to Celina Riley, who was born in Limerick Co., Ireland. They have one son—George. Mr. Kealey enlisted Jan. 22, 1864, in company E., of the 13th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and went south, to Tennessee and Alabama, where the regiment were engaged in fighting bushwhackers and doing provost duty until after the close of the war. They were then sent to Texas, and there discharged, in December, 1865, and returned home. Mr. Kealey is a great reader, and well posted upon all subjects. He is a Protestant in religion.

Hanford M. Selleck came to Green county in 1856, and purchased a farm in the town of New Glarus. His children managed the farm while he worked at his trade as carpenter and joiner in different parts of the county. In 1870 he sold the farm and went to Monticello, and bought a house and some land adjoining the village, and has since made that his home. He was born on Hart Island, Long Island Sound, Aug. 20, 1820. When he was but an infant his parents moved to Connecticut, lived at Stanford a short time and then moved to Greenwich. He made his home with them there until fourteen years old, then went to live with an uncle on Long Island, where he remained one year, when he went to New York city and apprenticed to a carpenter and joiner to learn the trade, and served five years, nine months and seventeen days. He then did journey work in the city for a short time, then engaged with Peter Lorillard, at Westchester, and worked for him two years. Then in 1845, went to Pittsburg, Penn., and remained one year; then, 1848, went to Nashville, Tenn., and spent one year, then returned to Pittsburg, where he remained until 1855; then he came to Wisconsin, and located at Janesville, where he remained one year, then came to this county. He has been twice married. His first wife, to whom he was married in 1842, was Catalina Cunningham. Seven children blessed that union—George, Annie, Alfred, Guy, Lucian, Catalina and Charles. Mrs. Selleck died April 7, 1872. His second wife was Sarah J. Hill, to whom he was married Dec. 11, 1873, widow of Eli Fitch. She was a native of Lycoming Co., Penn., and has two children—Ernest M. and Floyd H.

Adrian Berryman, son of Ephraim and Mary Berryman, was born near Cedarville, Stephenson Co, Ill., May 9, 1850, and was seven years of age when his parents moved to Green county, and settled in the town of Sylvester, where his younger days were spent. He obtained his education in the district school, and remained with his parents until the time of his marriage, Oct. 7, 1874, to Emma Baldwin, daughter of Harvey and Margaret Baldwin, and a native of the town of Sylvester. They resided in that town until 1880, then bought a farm on section 26, of Mount Pleasant, where they now live. They have two children—Homer and Clyde.

Capt. John Fuett Annis was captain of com G, of the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted April 19, 1861, at the first call for troops, in company C, of the 3d Wisconsin; but that call was filled and he did not serve with the three months troops. He immediately re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, for a term of three years, was mustered in at Fond du Lac, in July, 1861, and went to the front and joined the army of the Potomac, at Harper's Ferry. After serving three months in this regiment, he was detached and joined the signal service, in which he remained until June, 1862. He was then discharged on account of disability, and returned home. July 28, of the same year, he re-enlisted in company G, of the 22d Wisconsin. He was commissioned as 2d lieutenant, and went with the regiment to Kentucky. He was promoted in November, 1862, to 1st lieutenant, and in December, 1863, to the rank of captain. He served until after the close of the war, and was discharged with the regiment, at Washington, June 12, 1865. He was mustered out at Milwaukee, June 22. Among the more important battles in which he took part, were, first: while serving in the signal corps, at Mill Spring, Ky., then, when a member of the 22d, at Thompson's Station, Tenn., Brentwood, in the same State, where he was taken prisoner, sent to Libby prison and confined one month, then exchanged. He joined Sherman's army at Chattanooga, went with them to Atlanta, participating in the battles on the way. From Atlanta he returned to Lookout Mountain, and was on detached duty in eastern Tennessee, some time. He then went to Dalton where he did garrison duty until March, 1865, then joined Sherman at Goldsboro and proceeded with his army to Washington. Soon after his return home, he moved to Iowa and settled in Taylor county, where he bought land. In 1867 he sold out there and returned to Green county and purchased his present farm on section 25. He has since purchased other land, and now owns 217 acres on sections 23, 24, 25 and 31. He was born at Batavia, Genesee Co., N. Y., July 28, 1841. He remained there until 1856, then engaged in farming one year, in Rock county, then came to Green county, and worked on a farm until 1858, when he returned to New York. In the fall of 1860, he came back to this county and located in Decatur, where he was living at the breaking out of the war. He was married, March 22, 1865, to Olive, daughter of John J. and Magdalena (Fleek) Putnam, a native of Licking Co., Ohio. They have three children—John Burton, born in Iowa; Edith M., born in Mount Pleasant; and Flora B., born in Jo Daviess Co., Ill. In 1875 Capt. Annis rented his farm here and removed to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., where he lived three years, and then returned.

Jabez Clark settled in Green county in 1857. He was born in the parish of Haugham, Lincolnshire, England, March 8, 1828. When he was very young his parents moved to the parish of Minting and there his father died when he was six months old. Soon after his mother moved to Hatton parish, where he lived with her until fourteen years of age. He then went to work to earn his own livelihood, He was employed by a farmer who paid him £3, equal to $14.52, the first year. The second year his wages were increased to £3½; the third year, to £5; and the fourth year, to £7. When nineteen years old he went to Derbyshire and worked upon a farm six months, then went to Yorkshire and spent two years. He then went to Sheffield and engaged in dealing in produce, in which enterprise he was not successful, and continued it but a short time, then resumed farming.. In 1857 he left his native land and came to America, coming immediately to Wisconsin and locating in Green county. His sole capital was good health and willing hands, and he rented land until the fall of 1859, when he bought forty acres on section 18, also a small frame house which he moved to the land and occupied for some years, until he built the more commodious dwelling which he now occupies. He has engaged in mixed farming, raising different kinds of grain and stock. He has been successful, and at different times, has added to his land until he is now the owner of a well stocked farm, containing 240 acres. He was married 1858 to Julia Dyson, who was born in the parish of Kirkburton, Yorkshire, England, Nov. 5, 1823. They have six children—Mary E., William S., George H., Jennie E., Alsinda B. and Burnett L.

Anthony Carroll came here in 1858, and purchased unimproved land on section 4, of the town of Mount Pleasant. Some of his neighbors assisted him to build a log cabin into which he moved, and lived seven years. He then built the frame house which he now occupies. He is a native of Ireland, born in Tipperary county in 1824. He was reared upon a farm, and in 1849 left his native land for America. He took passage in a sailing vessel and after a stormy voyage of five weeks, arrived at New York city. From there he went up the Hudson river to Albany, where he took the cars and went to Buffalo. At that point he embarked on a steamer for Milwaukee. On reaching that city he purchased a horse and dray and engaged in draying, which he continued four years. He then went to Janesville and carried on his brother's farm until 1858. He brought twenty head of cattle with him when he came to Green county, and has since engaged in mixed farming, raising all kinds of grain and grasses as well as stock. He is a successful farmer, and has purchased adjoining land until he now owns 220 acres. He also owns a large number of cattle. He was married in 1849 to Bridget Cary, also a native of Tipperary county, Ireland. They have seven children—John, William, Alice, Mary, Anthony, Catharine and Dennis. Mr. Carroll is serving his third term as a member of the board of supervisors, and has been a director in the school district several years.

Adam Elmer, son of John U. and Franie Elmer, was born in the town of Mount Pleasant, May 12, 1858. Here he grew to manhood, and received his education in the district school. He was married on the 30th of November, 1880, to Mary Prien, born in Trenton, Dodge county.

They have two children—Melvina and a baby. Two years previous to his marriage he settled on his present farm, which is a portion of the old homestead. He has a frame house and barn. He has a cheese factory on his farm, which is run by himself and two brothers.

J. C. Steinman, of the firm of Steinman & Knoble, general merchants at Monticello, was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, May 13, 1854. When he was six years old he came to America with his mother and settled in the town of Washington. His father had previously come to America. He (the father) enlisted in a New York regiment in 1861, and was wounded in battle, in consequence of which he died. Mrs. Steinman was again married to Fred Zimmerman and settled in New Glarus. The subject of this sketch made his home with his mother until he was thirteen years old. He then worked at farming in the neighborhood until 1878. In the meantime he had saved enough of his hard earnings to purchase a farm on section 20, in the town of New Glarus, where he engaged in farming until 1882. He then sold his farm, and in January, 1883, began mercantile business at Monticello, in partner. ship with Fredolin Knoble. They carry a large stock of groceries, dry goods and notions. Mr. Steinman was married in 1878 to Barbara Legler, who was born in New Glarus, Green Co., Wis. They have three children—Lena, Barbara and George.

Fredolin Knoble was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Dec. 7, 1856. In 1860 his parents emigrated to America and settled in New Glarus, Green Co., Wis. In 1861 his father enlisted in company B, of the 31st Wisconsin regiment, and went south. He died in the service. Soon after, his mother married again, and settled in Crawford county. Fredolin lived with his parents until he was fourteen years old, then on account of ill-treatment, he ran away from home, and walked to Green county. He remained with his grandfather, Fred Schindler, six months, then engaged in farming in the neighborhood, receiving for his services $6 per month. At the age of fifteen he attended the confirmation school, and was confirmed the next year. When seventeen years old, he went to work in a cheese factory, in which he continued five years. He then bought a farm in New Glarus and engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1882, when he sold his farm and came to Monticello. He was married in 1877 to Chloe Babler, a native of New Glarus. They have one child—Fred.

Jacob Marty came to Green county in 1864 and bought a farm on section 31, Mount Pleasant. There was a frame house on the place, and he has since built a large frame barn with stone basement. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, in February, 1819, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He was married to Barbara Stauffacher. They have nine children—Henry, Conrad, Jacob, Barbara, Peter, Annie, Fred, Mary and Verena Anna. Mrs. Marty died in September, 1871, and was buried in the Evangelical cemetery, town of Sylvester.

James Pierce came to Green county in 1864, and remained in the town of Washington three months. He spent that winter in Jackson county, and in the next spring worked on the river, rafting lumber. In the fall of 1866 he returned to Green county and engaged in farming with Ira Baxter, in the town of Mount Pleasant. In 1870 he purchased a farm on section 13, in the same town, and followed farming there until 1881, when he sold out and purchased 200 acres on section 19, of Mount Pleasant. A small portion of this farm is in the town of Washington. He has a good frame house and barn on his farm, and in fact, his farm is one of the best improved in the town. He was born in Crawford Co., Penn., July 11, 1845. He there grew to manhood, being reared on a farm. He lived with his parents until 1864, when he came to Wisconsin, as before stated. He was married on the 6th of September, 1868, to Susan Baxter, born in Vermont. This union has been blessed with eight children—Ira, Celia, Arthur, Frank, Clinton, Edith, Lester and Charlie.

John Richards, who was for some years manager of the Grange store, is a native of Cornwall, England, born Feb. 8, 1849. He is a son of James and Elizabeth (Bartle) Richards, who emigrated to America when he was but a few months old. They settled in Iowa Co., Wis., where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the district school. His mother died when he was eleven years old, and six years later his father removed to Mount Pleasant. He resided with his father until 1870, when he as married to Martha J. Lewis, daughter of Nathan and Sarah (Smith) Lewis, old settlers of Green county, where Martha J. was born. After marriage, Mr. Richards went to Exeter and engaged in farming six months; then returned to Mount Pleasant, where he farmed until 1877. He then became manager of the Grange store at Monticello, conducting business successfully until April, 1884, when he resigned, having engaged as traveling salesman for Jacob Wellaner & Co., of Milwaukee, and also as agent for Power, Bayard & Co., commission dealers in produce, at Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Richards are the parents of three children—Alice Blanche, S. Earl and Dane C.

Lewis Franklin Moore came to Green county in 1867. He was born in Gilmanton, Belknap Co., N. H., June 16, 1845. He was left fatherless at the age of nine years, and went to live with a farmer near Moultonboro, with whom he remained two and a half years; then went to Meredith and lived until 1866. In that year he went to Chicago and remained working in a wood and coal yard until the time of his coming to this county. His first employment here was farming in the town of Albany. He was married, June 24, 1869, to Sally A. Douw, daughter of Cornelius and Harriet (Flint) Douw, and settled at that time upon his father-in-law's farm, which he now owns and occupies. He has purchased more land and now owns 251 acres. He has good buildings, including a frame house and commodious barn, which are located on section 24. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have two children—Arthur S. and Emma J.

F. J. Breylinger opened a tin shop in Monticello, in 1872, and soon after put in a stock of hardware and cutlery. He is a native of Feldkirch, Vorarlberg, Austria, born in March, 1847. He was reared in his native country and received a liberal education in the public schools. At the age of nineteen, he came to America. He spent nine months in Pennsylvania, working at his trade, then went to Freeport, Ill., where he worked for a time, at his trade. He then went to Milwaukee and thence to Monroe, where he was employed by Bloom & Ball, to go to Juda and open a tin shop, of which he had charge until 1872, when, as before stated, he came to Monticello. His store is a great convenience to the people in the vicinity, who patronize it liberally. He was united in marriage in 1871 with Mary C. Willoughby, a native of Belleville, Dane Co., Wis. They have two children—Leon and Otis.

August Milbrandt came to Sylvester, Green county, in 1874. He was employed in farming, two years, at Sylvester, then moved to Albany and rented the "Nicholas farm," four years, at which time he had succeeded in accumulating enough to buy a farm, and came to Mount Pleasant and purchased the "Swager" farm of 241 acres, located on sections 15 and 22. There was a log cabin on the place and a frame barn. He lived there two years, then bought the "Hilliard farm" on sections 22 and 23, where he now resides. He has a good frame house and two frame barns, and is now the owner of 421 acres of land. He is extensively engaged in raising stock and grain. Mr. Milbrandt is a native of Prussia, born July 11, 1838. His early life was spent in that country. He attended school until fourteen years old. In 1874 he came to America, landing at New York. He came directly west to Chicago, and from there to Green county. He was married in 1861 to Wilhelmina Lupke, a native of Prussia. They have eight children—William, Frank, Amelia, Augusta, Julia, Charlie, Herman and Henry.

CHAPTER XL.

TOWN OF NEW GLARUS.
[BY CONRAD ZIMMERMAN]

TOPOGRAPHY.

The town of New Glarus is the second in the northern tier of Green county, beginning from the west. It is bounded on the north by the town of Primrose, Dane county; on the east by the town of Exeter; on the south by the town of Washington; and on the west by the town of York. The country is hilly and broken. A bird's eye view of the town might suggest the idea that a gigantic hand had strewed the hills on the surface, hills of the most diversified construction, although generally of about the same height. They are from 200 to 300 feet from the foot of the valley. The ascents to these hills are generally gradual, so that they are accessible with teams from almost any side. The country is very well watered, almost every farm having springs and running streams. The main stream is the Little Sugar river, which is formed in this town by the confluence of a large number of little brooks. The main branch enters the town on the northwest of section 4, takes its course in a southeasterly direction, and makes its exit on section 25. The numerous little streams arising in the western and southwestern part of the town flow through the northern part of the town of Washington, in an easterly direction, and unite with the Little Sugar river in the town of Mount Pleasant. The valleys are winding around in all possible curves and angles, not unlike one of those ancient labyrinths, and just as well adapted to mislead a stranger. They are now widening and now contracting, in obedience to the freakish fancies of those lively promontories, projecting here and there into the valley ground. There is one exception to this rule. The "Shmurzi Thale,"* running nearly due west of the village of New Glarus, is not only straight, but even without springs.

The land is well adapted for stock farms. The rich, well watered meadows in the valleys guarantee a heavy crop of hay, even in dry summers, and afford a rich pasture for the Switzer's favorite, the cow, even at times when on the prairies all the grass is singed by the drought. The blessed timber-clad hills are the progenitors of innumerable springs, which send the refreshing element through those cozy valleys, that never fail to make the Switzer and his "Lobeli"† feel at home. The soil on the hills and slopes is a white clay, with a limestone foundation, whilst in the valley it is a rich black loam. The most common kinds of timber growing are: oak, poplar, hickory, elm, walnut, and cherry. Limestone quarries are numerous. Mineral has never been found.

EARLY SETTLEMENT OF NEW GLARUS.

The settlement of New Glarus is perhaps more peculiar and more interesting than that of any other town in the county, because the social, political and religious conditions of the old and of the new world have come into immediate contact here. It has been remarked very many times in a superficial manner, that those experts, who were sent here from old Glarus in 1845, had selected a very poor locality, at a time, when all the land of the great northwest was open to them. It has been considered strange, that intelligent men, after traveling through the States of Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, should recommend these trough-like valleys, these rough, stony hills as being the most suitable place for a settlement. Many a visitor of this colony has received the impression, that if the same amount of work had been applied on some rich, fertile plain, the result would have been much better, the wealth of the population would now be much greater. Would it? It is indeed quite an interesting occurrence.

Were those experts deep, thorough historians, reasoning from historical facts, that the most energetic, enterprising and enduring people have been educated in and by such localities, where nature mostly depends on human labor and perseverance to do any good for man?

Did they compare the civil virtues of those people living in the naturally richest parts of the world with those living in the poorest? Did they ponder the fact that nature is modifying man, as well as man is modifying nature, and that this reciprocal modification is the natural source of the character of a community, and that consequently the physical disadvantages of country, challenging his industry and stimulating his energy, are more favorable to man's ultimate progress, than the mere agency of a fertile soil, which tends to make the occupant unwilling to perform even the small amount of labor necessary for the reproduction of a rich harvest? Or have they simply been attracted by the similarity of this region with landscapes in Switzerland?

We do not know what idea was predominating in their minds. But one thing we do know, and that is, that no other class of people were as well adapted for this district, or could have made New Glarus what it is to-day. And we feel confident in saying that not only *marriages are contracted in heaven," but that Divine providence also ties the knot that unites men and their habitation. It is an act of great self-denial, a self-sacrifice, a sort of re-generation, that is forced upon every grown person, who undertakes to make a home in the new world. Did you ever notice a foreigner move through the streets of your city or village the first few days after he came across the ocean? Did you ever observe his embarrassment, arising from the consciousness of being different in manners, clothes, appearance, language, in most all the objects of interest, pleasures or aversions? Did you ever stop to think, that every one of these has been taken away from relations and connections, that have become a part of his nature? He has grown up in a country, where the government, the Church, the school, the society, the family,—in short all the public and private relations have virtually guided, directed, superintended and carried him in the way he should go, and prescribed the course that his individual life had to take, leaving hardly any question for him to decide. Did you ever realize that these foreigners had to conform their whole being, physically and mentally to a new world? They have to abandon their old, form new habits, learn a new language, a new way of living and thinking. This is the gravest of all the sufferings that an emigrant has to endure, the root and foundation of home-sickness, which is the most intense of all sicknesses; and the more a person is attached with piety to the venerable customs of the society of the fatherland, the harder will be the combat.

This sacrifice has been offered by the first settlers of the town of New Glarus. They were perfect strangers in every respect. Not even one of them knew how to handle a plow, or how to sow wheat, or to plant corn, or to build a grain stack, or to do anything of the kind that was daily required of them in their occupation as farmers. They only knew how to tend cows. It will never be fully understood by any one who has not had a similar experience, what privations, inconveniences and humiliations they suffered. "We often cried," says one of the old ladies now, jokingly, "until our heads were like *Laegele, and wished we were at home again, even if we had nothing else to live on but †Schotte and Chrut." But it was worse with them than with the Helvetians of olden times, who tore down the bridges and burnt the villages behind them when they started out to take possession of Gallia. They could come back and restore things, and were glad to do so, whilst the New Glarusers were very much in the dilemma of the bird in the adage: ‡"Vogel, friss oder stirb!" They had to stay and try.

It would take up too much room to give a full description of the journey of the first settlers, which took up nearly the whole summer of 1845; but in order to give an idea of what traveling was in that day, we will select some of the dates of a day book which Mathias Durst, one of the fellow travelers, has left us.

We started from Biasche, on the lake of Walenstadt, in Switzerland, on the 16th day of April; 155 persons were expected to assemble there, but when we were ready to start our number was 193. We understood that our contract was including our board, but our captain told us that he had nothing to do with it. This created quite an animated dispute between our leaders and the captain. But we could not take what was withheld from us. When we arrived at Zurich, those of us that had to stay on deck were half frozen, and those who found a standing room in the cabin were half lame. There we learned that there was no room for all of us in the ship that was to take us to Basel. In great haste and during a heavy rain we had to procure four wagons, in which we put our women and children, and were afterwards glad that they could not find room on the ship, because we men suffered greatly of wet and cold. We came to Laufenburg that day, and stayed over night in a large hall of a hotel, where we laid on straw during one part of the night, and walked through the streets of the village during the other, in order to keep warm. We came to Basel at the same time with the wagons. The landlords in the city were very friendly, and took very good pay for their friendliness. From Basel we started next morning on the Rhine, and came to a place in the evening where there was a very big hotel, but they only offered beds to single persons, and would not allow a family to come into the house. I, however, was quick enough to run into the house and take the key from a room with two beds, where I put my family to bed after dark without being noticed by any one in coming or in going. In Mannheim we had to wait two days for the steamer. All our money, that we termed the "beginning fund," was used up for the journey, and still we slept on boxes and benches for many a night. From Dordrecht we were transferred to Rotterdam in two small boats, which were so overcrowded that none of us could lie down, or even fall down.

At New Dieppe we were to embark for Baltimore, but we had to wait one week until the ship was fitted up for us. We slept in the ship, but we had to do our cooking on the shore, like the gypsies. On the 13th of May we bade good bye to old lady Europe, and trusted our lives to God and the ship. Any sea-sickness? Yes, lots of it, but excuse me from describing it; it is altogether too personal, and can only be understood when at sea. On the 21st we had a storm, which lasted nearly a whole week, and was fiercest on the 25th. The ship was laid over from one side to the other, dipping up tons of water, and dispatching the same down into the middle deck. Our trunks became living, every one of them traveling on its own risk now east, now west. A bag of potatoes fell over, and the potatoes were in a hurry to find the lowest place on the floor, but were unable to do it in spite of their running to and fro. A little cask of wine, that some careful passenger has slyly hidden in the corner below his berth is coming forth lively to join the general promenade. A large basket-bottle with still higher graded contents follows the irresistible law of attraction and tumbles clown-like on the battle-field, to be crushed the next moment by two colliding trunks. Another pot of a more prosaic nature rolls forth and upsets. The wine keg of course loses its bung on the way, and mixes its contents with the indescribable chaos. The floor of the deck is inclining at an angle of 45 degrees, and the occupants of the berths have to brace themselves up with all their power, in order to avoid an involuntary somerset. "O, I wish I was at home!" was heard from many sides. But we were on the open sea, and the danger comparatively small.

We had poor board. Our crackers were made of middlings and bran, too hard for wolf's teeth, and coarse enough for a wolf's stomach. It often moved my heart with pity to see the children tire their jaws at them, to no purpose. We were actually suffering from hunger. This morning (June 5) the captain had a pig butchered, and treated every passenger to a ration of fresh pork, for which we were very thankful.

On the forty-sixth day of our sea-voyage we heard the joyous cry: "Land, land!" I tell you it made the roughest thank God. In the evening we saw the lights of the beacon. It made us all rejoice when the pilot came on board our ship. The next morning we were ordered to throw our straw beds into the water, and cheerfully we obeyed; but yet we had to stay two nights on the ship. We landed on the 30th of June at Baltimore.

From Baltimore to Columbia, Penn., we were forwarded by railroad, for the first time on our journey. But we had hardly time to realize the glorious manner of flying through the country, until our glory was at its end again. In the evening we had to leave the cars and walk over a bridge, two miles long, over the Susquehanna. We were placed in canal boats again, like a flock of sheep, from thirty to thirty-five persons in a boat of twelve feet length and about seven feet width. We could not all of us sit down at the same time. Our boats were each drawn by one horse. At Harrisburg the boats with all the freight on them were loaded on cars, which was done by running the cars into an excavation under the canal. At Huntingdon our boats were again set into their element. We moved through laughing fields, over some hills and through others. We saw log-houses and finely dressed ladies in front of them, milking cows. At first we thought that it must be some holiday; but later we learned that American women always wear their Sunday clothes.

Whenever any of our party stepped out to buy victuals, the boatmen used to let them walk along side the boat for three or four miles, before they would give them a chance to step in again. On one of these occasions, when several of the victims were completely tired out, I took a hatchet and threatened to cut the rope instantly, to which the horse was hitched. This made them stop, and from this time this trouble was ended. On the morning of the 9th we reached Pittsburg. As we moved into the city, we sang one or two of our Swiss songs, which drew the windows full of hearers. A great fire has destroyed about 1,200 buildings of this city this spring. But if the work goes along for a few months more, as it has done so far, there will hardly be a trace of the destruction left. Americans are quick.

A steamboat forwarded us from Pittsburg to Cincinnati in one week, and our captain gave us an opportunity here to witness the barbarous custom of running one steamboat into another, much to our terror and indignation. The other ship was badly damaged. Cincinnati has now 72,000 inhabitants, they say. A great many of our party, misled by the cheapness of meat, bought more mutton here than could be used, and we had to throw it into the river next day. The last two nights we have also made intimate personal acquaintance with another American evil, the mosquitoes. They are little, long-legged flies, which draw the blood out of a body, and leave a certain poison in exchange, of which the parts will swell up.

On the 23d of June we came to St. Louis. Here we expected to receive news from the two experts, that had been sent before us to select a place for colony. But instead of that we heard that they were probably killed by the Indians. We rented rooms in the city for a month, and moved into them, with all our baggage, two or three families into one room. After some days however we received a letter from W. H. Blumer, of Allentown, that our experts had gone to Peru, Ill., and it was thought best to send two messengers after them. Jacob Grob and I were chosen. We took passage on a steamer that went up through the Illinois river. But we made more experience in suffering than we liked. The water was low and our steamer run aground many times, which caused long delay. We had no money to pay for a cabin, and had to lay on trunks or on the floor, the mosquitoes feasting on us and nearly killing us. Mornings we were as swollen, tired and scabby as poor Job. We lost several days, sticking fast in the sand at five or six different places; only an iron patience could keep our spirits up. Finally the captain concluded that the ship had to be left altogether. Eight sailors entered a rowing boat and brought us in this way the last five miles to Peoria. The fact that several of them were drunk and required the help of others to keep them in the boat, did not accelerate our progress any. From Peoria we were obliged to walk seventy-five miles to Peru. The fare by stage was $5, which we could not afford to pay, and no boats were going. We traveled through a country, the sight of which is able to encourage the most down-hearted. We saw innumerable herds of cattle grazing on the rich prairies, corn fields in full splendor, pleasant groves and charming little log houses, scattered here and there. But however modest the place of abode may be, the people are able and willing to furnish a good meal on short notice. We arrived in Peru the 3d of August, and learned that Messrs. Durst and Streiff had been here, but had gone to Wisconsin. Now we were indeed in a worse situation than ever. No money, no friends, no knowledge of the country. But we found a helper in our distress. The Lord has gleaners all over his earth. A certain J. Freuler, working there, was not only willing to lend us the necessary money to go by stage to Galena, but he also concluded to go with us. We went by the way of Dixon, Forreston and Freeport to Galena, on a miserable wagon, but drawn by excellent horses. . (In Europe they have luxuriant stage coaches and very poor horses.) At Galena the aim and object of our search was again thirty miles from us. They have gone to Mineral Point, we were told. And when we came to Mineral Point the same thing was repeated.

But the directions became more certain and definite. They have bought land on the Little Sugar river, thirty-two miles east of here. There we found them. And in the meantime the colonists at St. Louis had received news of the whereabouts of Durst & Streiff, and they came up the Mississippi to Galena, and reached there the same night that we returned—the seekers and the seekers' seekers. Hail, Columbia! O, the joy of meeting again! We all made for our new home, the men on foot, the women and children on wagons. Even this second tour had its difficulties. We missed the road, or rather the direction (there was no road) several times. But at last we got there. It was the 15th day of August, 1845. Every earthly trouble has its end, but most generally a new trouble links its beginning to that end.*

Here they were. "New Glarus" shall be the name of this colony. It is a blessed country.

*Here Mr. Durst's day book closes. It was of course written for friends in the old country, and describes things from an European stand point.

Little Sugar river is full of fishes, that feel very much like being at home in spite of the absence of the "Lord of creation," or perhaps because of the fact. Deer with number, rabbits in abundance; they came to inhabit these hills and valleys long ago, without the leadership of any Switzer. Walnuts, hickory nuts, black berries, wild grapes are in great plenty. There is no need of starving. "Our meat market," says one of the settlers, "was round about us in the woods and in the water. Our cooking was done under the great dome of heaven. But our first house was a poor concern. It was a shanty 12x50 feet, just wide enough to hold two rows of sleepers. It was quite a spectacle to see us go to bed. Those that slept on the hind end had to lay down first, and this respective order had to be observed, until all were disposed of for the night. If one had the misfortune to have to step out in the night (which occurred very frequently, for our stomachs naturally revolted against unsalted fish), it always created quite an uproar. 'Can't you keep off from my pillow?' 'O, you stand on my toes!' 'Ou! ouch! you ——!' 'Who is here again?' Such remarks would be thrown at him both ways, and by them we could hear how far or near he was. The shanty was built in a hurry. The boards were hauled from Galena. All the fresh air that we cared for had access through the slits. The sides warped in and out, giving the wind a chance to blow all kinds of minor melodies, reminding us of home. Some of us had brought umbrellas from Switzerland, and we were glad to use them 'in the house' every time it rained, But we erected quite a number of log cabins before winter set in, which were occupied by two or three families each, and gave better satisfaction.

"For our clothes we were dependent on what we could earn or find at other places. Many a woman went to Monroe to wash, and carried her wages back in the shape of old clothes for her family. Even several years after, when we first assembled at our log church, the men went in shirt sleeves, through which their elbows looked out inquisitively. And one of the most accomplished ladies made her appearance at a funeral service in a pair of old men's boots, that had been picked up in the streets of Galena, and brought to her as a present by a gallant landsman. Children's clothes were economically cut out of old bed clothes."

There were several squatters in the neighborhood—Armstrong, Greenwood, Slater, Morley, Britton, Harvey, Lemon, who are often gratefully mentioned by the colonists, as having aided them in many respects during the first years. But the fight for an existence was a hard one, although it did not require more than one year, until they could live on the products of their own land. They broke small pieces of land and raised wheat, which they threshed with hickory sticks. But as soon as they had a surplus, they tried to find a market. And what did they find? Wheat sold for thirty cents a bushel in Milwaukee, and it cost twenty-five cents to get it there. This was slow business to make up money for even a pair of boots. This they stood for several years, and the general impression was, that they could not stay and make any headway, other than merely providing for their daily wants in the most primitive manner. But in 1850, when the railroad came as near as Janesville—forty miles—they commenced to think that the land was worth having. Then the entering period came. Fifty dollars would buy a forty acre piece at the land office in Mineral Point, and every $50 that could be raked up went to the Point. This excitement must be observed in order to be understood. Several neighbors would often cast their eyes on the same forty. The one that could make up $50 first was the victor. Sometimes it was a close shave. It happened more than once, that a man, after he got wind that his neighbor was about going to the Point the next day, started in the night and bought the land before the other came. The land entering period was not the most favorable for cherishing friendly and neighborly feelings.

The school at New Glarus was commenced under great difficulties. One of the scholars of the first English school describes the same as follows: The place where the school was taught was the largest and best house in the settlement, that is to say, a log-house about 18x20, a private house, the one room being kitchen, sitting room and dining-room of a large family, and school-room at the same time. The bed in it was the general depository of all the scholars' books, slates, dinner pails, hats, caps, mittens. etc. Mr. Kilroy, the teacher, had us seated on benches all around the room. He ordered us to learn all together at once. Every scholar studied spelling, reading and writing after his own method, arid at his own time. The only command of the teacher was, Chinese-like, that every scholar must learn aloud. He walked up and down in the room, stick in hand, and punished the disobedient, who did not speak up loud. When he was tired, he would demand and take room of the length of his body on one of the benches, and try to sleep. Then we would learn pretty loud, so loud that Mrs. Schmid, who was cooking and taking care of her children, would emphatically raise her large wooden pot-ladle, and declare in full force and earnest, that she would certainly put a stop to this noise.

The teacher was boarded around, and was treated as nobly as possible. One of the ladies remembers now, that she borrowed a coffee cup for him, so he might drink his coffee from a cup, instead of dipping it with a spoon out of the pan with the family. Whether this was sincere courtesy, or whether she was afraid of the tobacco juice, hanging on his mustache, would surely be an impertinent question. Mr. Kilroy did not teach but two terms. Since that the schools of New Glarus have advanced with the times. A new school house was built in 1849, and a fine bell was presented for it, by friends of the colony from the old home. When the bell was rung for the first time, on a Sunday morning, just after it had been hauled from Milwaukee, by Mr. Baumgartner, it was on the ground, on an elevation just behind the school house, and the people, standing around it were moved to tears. Now-a days, it must be said, there is a great amount of bell-ringing done at New Glarus; but it leaves the great majority of the people cold, up to the heart. Worldly matters are predominant.

The town of New Glarus has been a wheat-growing district for many years. Those hillsides and plateaux have in many instances stood the abuse of being plowed and sowed with wheat for twelve or fifteen successive years. Little else was raised during the time of twenty years, from 1850 to 1870. But when the price of wheat came down, after the close of the war, when the hillsides were cut up by numerous ditches, when the arable portion of the fields was washed away in many places, and above all, when the "chinch bugs" appeared, and ate up the wheat crop year after year, then the farmers were forced to think of the next thing on the programme. The old system had to be abandoned. "Aut Caesar aut nihil!" was the alternative of the captives of the old Romans, when the point of the sword was on their breast. So it was with the farmers of the hilly part of Green county. "Either cheese or nothing!" and happily we got the cheese. The old wheat fields were seeded with clover and grass. Cows were put on them. Cheese factories were built. After the fact was proved, that there was a ready market for cheese, it only took five or six years until cheese-making was the main branch of work for the whole farming population. At present, no less than 800,000 pounds of cheese are annually manufactured in the town of New Glarus during six or seven months. This does not only pay better, but the farms are constantly made more productive.

The grubbing and breaking of land has not ceased yet, and will probably not, until every available piece of land is plowed and turned into meadow. Fortunately nature has furnished some stony hill-sides and ravines, where they can do no better than let the timber grow, or else they would shave the whole town bald. An another important fact, tending to leave some bunches of timber, is, that the sons and grandsons of the first settlers are not quite so ambitious to change the face of the earth, as their fathers were in their days. Fruit trees have never done well. As a rule untimely frosts will destroy the blossoms of the apple trees, and the trees themselves will die soon.

A vineyard was started in 1860, by Mr. North, formerly of Alsace, a great grape district in Germany. Mr. North's vineyard has been a success. It now counts 1,800 plants covering about one acre, and has yielded as much as 500 gallons of wine in one season, 300 being the average. The many large and commodious barns are another pleasant feature of the town of New Glarus. Generally these barns are built on hill sides, with drive-ways from the backside into them, some twelve or fourteen feet above the hay floor, thereby greatly reducing the work of unloading hay. In the stone basement there is room for sixty or seventy, and sometimes over 100 head of cattle.

All practical, agricultural pursuits have been crowned with success. The good improvement of the soil, the fine buildings, the large herds of fine cows, the numerous cheese factories, the well patronized saloons, the comforts and luxuries in every house, the grave-yards with their numerous costly monuments, all unanimously prove the wealth of the population, and even the annual tax roll sometimes in voluntarily confirms the general conviction.

But a historian, in order to be of any value, must be truthful, and present both sides. The progress in New Glarus has been one-sided. The nobler ideal pursuits have not kept pace with the materialistic. The society of New Glarus suffers from insufficient circulation. The social pulse is low. We are missing the stimulating influence of other social elements. This is the case with all colonies, where people from one and the same district of the old world, exclusive of all others, are transplanted into the new world. Their moral and social development becomes suspended, owing to the fact, that they are secluded as well from the new world as from the old. They have no opportunity of observing their peculiarities and infirmities by comparing their Conduct with that of others. They are all so familiar with each other that they fail to see the necessity of restraining those many improprieties that are commonly easily subdued in a society made up of different nationalities. Thus it has been with us. We stand right there, where society stood forty years ago in the canton of Glarus, with the only addition of the new impulse of making money, that was imparted to us by the superlative of good chances, which we found in this country from that impulse. And in a great many this is the predominant trait of character, and perhaps the only one capable of manifesting itself to the outside world. Apparently no other exertion is made. If this confession is humiliating, it is at least true. And if it is true, a wise man may learn by it.

ORGANIC.

The first town election in New Glarus was held April 2, 1850. The following were officers of the election: John Westcott, chairman; J. F. Westcott, clerk; Rudolph Baumgartner and Joseph Trogener, inspectors. The following town officers were elected: John Westcott, chairman, Joseph Trogener and Oswald Baumgartner, supervisors; J. F. Westcott, town clerk; Henry Hoesly, assessor; J. F. Westcott, treasurer; John Westcott, superintendent of schools; Oswald Baumgartner, Joseph Trogener, Peter Young and John Westcott, justices of the peace; Henry Truempy, Henry Hoesly and J. F. Westcott, constables; Joseph Trogener, Henry Albly and J. F. Westcott, road overseers.

The town officers elected April 1, 1884, were as follows: Fred Kundert, chairman, Fred Becker and Jacob Stuessy, supervisors; Matthew Stuessy, town clerk; Adam Schmid, treasurer; Christian Luchsinger, assessor; Christian Luchsinger, Thomas Hefty and Fred Luchsinger, justices of the peace.

SCHOOLS OF NEW GLARUS.

There are but three full school districts in this town—District No. 1 has a two story frame school house located in the village, valued at $2,150. Number of pupils 124. District No.2, a good frame house located on section 33, valued at $400. Number of pupils, thirty-three. District No. 3, stone school house on section 9; valued at $400. Number of pupils, fifty. There are six joint districts—Joint district No. 2, with New Glarus and York, school house in York. Number of pupils in New Glarus, eighteen. Joint district No. 3, New Glarus and York, with house in York. Pupils in New Glarus, fifteen. Joint district No. 4, New Glarus and Washington, house in Washington. Number of pupils in New Glarus, twelve. Joint district No. 4, New Glarus and Exeter, house in Exeter. Number of pupils in New Glarus, eight. Joint district No. 4, New Glarus, Primrose and Exeter, stone school house in New Glarus, section 1, valued at $400. Number of pupils in New Glarus, eight. Joint district No. 9, New Glarus and Primrose, house in Primrose. Number of pupils in New Glarus, three.

PHYSICIANS OF NEW GLARUS.

Dr. Samuel Blumer was the first resident physician of this town. He came here in 1848, and practiced until 1852, when he went to California. Returning to New Glarus, in 1855, he had an extensive practice until 1868, when he left here, and after a few months residence in Monroe, he went to Galena, and later to Sioux City, Iowa, where he died in 1871. The doctor is well remembered as a conservative, old school practitioner. During his residence in California, this town was without a doctor, but the minister of the Swiss Reformed Church, Rev. Mr. Streissgurth, who had a limited knowledge of remedial agents, was often called to relieve his neighbors in sickness.

During a portion of the years 1861 and 1862, Dr. Fred Hees, who came here from Switzerland, practiced medicine. In 1882 he enlisted in the army and died in the service.

Dr. J. J. Blumer, a son of Dr. Samuel Blumer, located here in 1869, and is now the resident physician. He has the confidence of the people and is in every way worthy of it.

CEMETERIES.

In 1884 there were three cemeteries in the town of New Glarus. The oldest one is adjoining the church of the colonists. The grounds forming this quaint church yard, becoming filled with the dead of the congregation, a new cemetery was laid out about eighty rods west of the village, which is well cared for. The grounds are dotted with memorial monuments; for it is the universal custom of the people to mark the graves of their dead.

The third cemetery is located on the same road, about half a mile from the village, and belongs to the German Evangelical Society. It is neatly arranged.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

The town of New Glarus is noted throughout southern Wisconsin for its dairy products. Especially is it noted for its manufacture of cheese, including almost every variety of cheese known to the trade. Eighteen factories are in operation here, and each year notes new enterprises of this kind.

The village cheese factory in 1884 was operated by Henry Holdrich. This establishment uses the milk of about 425 cows. It is owned by a stock company, the officers of which are: Fred Kundert, president; Mathias Stuessy, secretary; Jacob Streiff, treasurer. The product is American and Limburger cheese. This is the largest factory in the town. It was built in 1873.

The Fred Luchsinger factory, located on section 1, was built in 1882. The milk of about 100 cows is used in the manufacture of Limburger and brick cheese.

The Spring Valley cheese manufacturing company built a factory on section 2 in 1876. The company hire the workmen and use the milk of about, 200 cows in producing Limburger cheese.

On section 6 a factory was built by the farmers in 1877, called E. Erickson factory. Jacob Blom was operating the factory in 1884, buying the milk of 100 cows and making Limburger and brick cheese.

The Fred Streiff factory, also on section 6, owned by a stock company, with Nicalaus Zentner, president. This factory is one of the largest in the town. It uses the milk of about 300 cows in making Limburger cheese.

On section 10 a stock company with Fred Becker, president; Adam Schmid, secretary; and Jacob Ott, treasurer, are manufacturing the milk of 300 cows into Limburger cheese. This company have one of the most conveniently arranged factories in the town.

A stock company own a factory on section 13, near the residence of Conrad Zimmerman. This factory was built in 1875. During the first five years it made Limburger cheese. The past four years they have manufactured American cheese, selling their milk to Thomas Hauser, manufacturer.

Paul Kundert, living on section 18, keeps forty to fifty cows, and has a small factory for his own use. He makes Swiss cheese.

On section 19 Joseph Schindler for the manufacture of Swiss cheese from the milk of his own farm, has erected a factory. He has thirty-five cows.

In 1877 a stock company built a factory on section 20. The managers in 1884 were: John Marty and Julius Eichelkraut. This establishment makes Limburger cheese, and uses the milk of about 130 cows.

There was built in 1884 on section 21 by five farmers (neighbors) a factory for making Swiss cheese. Fred and John Legler are managers. Fred Luder buys the milk and operates the factory.

Mathias Elmer, who lives on section 22, owns a private factory, and makes up the milk of his own cows, about forty in number, into Swiss cheese.

On section 25 Melchior & Jacob Stuessy own a factory, built for their own use in 1875. They make Limburger cheese.

Dietrich Stauffacher, living on section 35, for his own use in manufacturing of Swiss cheese, has built a factory. He uses the milk of sixty-five cows.

A stock company own a factory on section 29, which was built in 1879. Jacob Bloom operates this factory, buying the milk of about 120 cows. It makes brick and Limburger cheese.

On section 32 Peter Klassy lives and owns a factory. He uses the milk of his own cows and buys some of neighbors. He manufactures Swiss cheese.

David Hefty built a cheese factory in 1881 on section 33, for the manufacture of Limburger and brick cheese. He uses the milk of about eighty cows.

The Legler factory is also on section 33. Jacob Regetz operates this factory and buys the milk of 200 cows from the stockholders. This company was formed in 1877. They make Limburger cheese.

SAW MILLS.

The first and only saw mill in this town was built in 1851, on the branch of Sugar river which passes through the town, a little east of New Glarus village. This mill site is but a short distance north of the village, the water power was used by the flour mill; the saw mill was built by Joshua Wild. Three years later he sold to David Klassy, who, in 1 860 built the grist mill which now (1884) is owned by Fred Kundert. This mill has four run of stone, two for flour and two for feed. The building is 26x36 feet in size, two and one-half stories high, with small wing for office. The stream furnishes eight head of water here. David Klassy sold the property in 1864 to S. and H. Hoesly, who sold in 1868 to Mathias Schmid. One year later he sold a half interest to Rudolph Kundert. In 1873, upon the death of the latter, his son, Fred, inherited his interest, and later bought the interest of Mr. Schmid. Mr. Kundert rents the property. The saw mill has for long years been among the things that were. The grist mill is now (1884) rented to A. N. Beeny, an English miller of twenty-five years experience—a thoroughly practical man.

Fredolin Kundert, one of the solid men of New Glarus financially, lives about one-half mile north of the village. He owns the mill property and a fine farm of about 500 acres. He is a son of the late Rudolph Kundert, and was born Jan. 28, 1854. His father and mother, Elizabeth, were born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, and came to this town in 1848, first settling on section 11, but sold there in 1850 and bought on section 14, the place now owned by Fredolin. Of the family, one child was brought from Switzerland—Elizabeth, wife of John Klassy. Three were born here—Barbara, now the wife of Thomas Hefty; Fredolin and Adam, who died when six years old. The father, Rudolph Kundert, died April 8, 1871; his widow was married to J. U. Summer, of Monroe, and was living in 1884. Fredolin Kundert, the subject of this sketch, was married to Maria, daughter of Joshua Wild, March 19, 1873. They have six children—Fred, born in 1874; Barbara, born in 1876; Ellen, born in 1878; John H. born in 1879; Edwin, born in 1881, and Rudolph, born in 1883. Mrs. Kundert's father, Joshua Wild, came from Switzerland in 1845 with his family, and lived five years in Syracuse, N. Y., where he was employed in the machine shops of a railroad company. In 1850 he came to New Glarus, and built the only saw mill the town ever owned. In 1854 he bought the general store in the village and continued in trade a few years, then moved to Paoli, Dane county, but after a short residence there, returned to this town, and being out of health, retired from active business life. He died

Sept. 24, 1878 His widow still resides in the village. Five of his children are living—Mrs. Catharine Eichelkraut, Mrs. Barbara Streiff, Mrs. Mary Kundert, John, and Mrs. Ellen Hoesly. Fredolin Kundert is the present chairman of the town board of supervisors.

Albert N. Beeny was born in Herstmonceux, Sussex Co., England, April 21, 1847. His father was a miller and a grain dealer, following this business for about forty years before his death. He was also a manufacturer of brick and ornamental tile. He did an extensive business in both industries. He died in England in 1872, aged sixty-nine years. His wife died many years before him. There were twelve children who lived until the youngest was over thirty years of age before a death occurred among them. The youngest son, Albert N., was educated to the milling business, commencing work at twelve years of age, and under the thorough system of his father, he became proficient in the business. After his father's death, he conducted an extensive business on his own account for five years. He came to the United States in February, 1878. He engaged in the State of New York for two years or more in adjusting buhr's in a flouring mill. He then came west and operated a mill at Pittsburg, Van Buren Co., Iowa, part of one season. He was a short time after in Nebraska. From there he went to Rushford, Minn., and rented and operated a mill eighteen months. He came to New Glarus in the spring of 1884 and rented the mill owned by Fred Kundert. Mr. Beeny is a thorough master of his trade, and is also engaged in the manufacture of yeast-cakes, which are a great favorite with the house-wives.

FIRST EVENTS.

Death is never welcome, but very sad it is when striking one out of a family. After having passed the privations and hardships undergone by the colonists on their journey from Switzerland here, almost in sight of the land of their adoption, between Wiota and the end of their journey, a young son of Mathias and Katrina Schmid was called to the eternal home. Sadly the parents carried the mortal remains of their boy to the end of the journey, and buried him tenderly—their first sacrificial offering to God in “New Glarus.”

The first birth in the new colony made the family number full again, for Dec. 12, 1845, Thomas, son of Mathias and Katrina Schmid, was born.

Among the first (if not the first) marriages in this town was that of Henry Albly and Mary Becker, which was celebrated in the Swiss style, Oct. 26, 1847.

VILLAGE OF NEW GLARUS.

Not after the manner of buying and platting of a village site so usual in our west was new Glarus village started. The colonists, after the fashion at home, clustered here, their lands more or less remote. Next came their church building and school house, and soon the wants of the new colony demanded trade and exchange. A store was opened here in 1850 by three brothers, James, George and Conrad Ott. The building which they erected is now occupied by Hefty & Kundert. They sold not long after to J. J. Tschudy (now of Monroe), who sold to F. Egger. He was succeeded in trade by F. E. Legler, who continued in trade until 1882, and then sold to the present proprietors, Hefty & Kundert.

Fritz Tschudy opened a store in 1866, in a building erected by him in that year. He has occupied this building, with some additions, and conducted the business of general merchandising from that time to this date (1884). He was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, March 1, 1832. At the age of sixteen years he came to the United States, and directly to Green county, by the way of Buffalo and the lakes, to Milwaukee. He was accompanied by Barbara Hottenger, the betrothed wife of J. J. Tschudy, who met them at Milwaukee and was there married to Miss Hottenger. The trio then proceeded to New Glarus, Fritz Tschudy, in 1854, returned to Switzerland, and was married in the church where he was christened, to Amalia Blumer, on the twenty-third anniversary of his birth, and returned to America in 1855. They have four children—Joshua, who is married and living in New Glarus village; Fredolin, Catharine, wife of Henry Luchsinger, and John Jacob. Mr. Tschudy has been in trade at his present location since 1866. He is an enterprising and public spirited citizen. He has served many terms as justice of the peace, and many years upon the school board.

Thomas Hoesly, Jr., erected for trade and residence a building in 1880, and opened a stock of general merchandise. He has continued to this date. He was born in Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 9, 1851. Mr. Hoesly is of Swiss descent. His father died while he was a babe. His mother married again, and died in Spain in 1864. Thomas left his mother when he was but nine years of age and went to Switzerland. After living there three years he came to the United States with a party of emigrants. In the year of 1864 he came to this town. Several years after coming here he lived with his uncle, Andrew Hoesly, on a farm. After he became of age he learned the harness maker's trade, with Henry Munclean, of Evansville, and in the year 1875 he opened a harness shop in New Glarus, and followed this business until 1880, when failing health compelled him to change his avocation. He then erected a building for a residence and store, and opened a general merchandise store, and yet continues in that business, having built up by honesty and energy a good trade. Mr. Hoesly married Ellen Kundert Nov. 23, 1876. She is a daughter of Thomas Kundert, and was born in this town June 21, 1857. They have had four children—Amalia, born November, 1877, died at two years of age; Louisa, born in April, 1879, died in infancy; Amalia C., born in June, 1882; and Thomas A., born in March, 1884.

Mrs. Gabriel Schindler, at the residence of her husband, keeps the millinery store of the village; also a dress making department, a general assortment of goods common to the trade in stock.

Yost Hoesly, Jr., opened a stock of heavy and shelf hardware in 1879, and still continues in this trade.

Peter Streiff, formerly of Monroe, opened a stock of general and shelf hardware early in the spring of 1884.

The first hotel was called the New Glarus House. It was built in 1854, by M. & R. Baumgartner, who sold to Joe Genal, who now keeps the William Tell House at Madison. After several changes it came into the hands of S. Luchsinger, who kept it many years. It is now (1884) kept by Henry Marty.

The Wisconsin House was built for a store, about 1862, by Gustavus Alder, who traded about two years, when Henry Marty bought the building and added to it, and opened a hotel, which he kept about fourteen years. Henry Hoesly and Ulrich Kubly have been landlords. It is now well kept by Henry Albly, Jr.

Henry Albly, Jr., son of Henry and Mary Albly, was born June 7, 1850. His father was a farmer, and to this avocation the son was reared. He lived with his father, in his employ, after becoming of age, until he was married, Jan. 14, 1874, to Mary, daughter of Samuel and Barbara Durot. They came from Switzerland in 1855. Three years after the marriage they lived in the family of Henry Albly, Sr. Then he bought 108 acres of land of his father, on section 18, town of Exeter. In the fall of 1883 he sold his land and bought the Wisconsin House in New Glarus, which he now keeps—and very satisfactorily to his guests—making it a traveler's home. Mr. and Mrs. Albly have four children—Ann Mary, born in 1875; Henry N., born in 1877; Barbara E., born in 1878; and Magdalina I., born in 1881.

In 1872 Marcus Hoesly bought the store and saloon business of Peter Zweifel, and added largely to the building, and now does a hotel business and also keeps a meat market. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Feb. 14, 1844. His father, Matthew Hoesly, with his wife and two sons, Yost and Marcus, were among the first colonists, who came to New Glarus in 1845. Matthew Hoesly was a farmer, and Marcus was reared upon a farm. Yost enlisted early in the year 1863, in the 31st Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry and died in the service, Nov. 3, 1864, at Madison, Wis. He had been home on a furlough, granted on account of sickness, and was returning to his regiment when he was again prostrated by sickness from which he never recovered. Marcus Hoesly was married Oct. 13, 1864, to Anna, daughter of Thomas Kundert, who came from Schweitzer land in 1847, and died here in May 1882. Mrs. Kundert (his widow) and her mother, Mrs. Anna Schindler, are living in New Glarus. The latter is eighty-five years of age. Marcus Hoesly, at the time of his marriage was working at his father's farm, which he continued until the fall of 1872, when he bought the business of Peter Zweifel, store and saloon. The grocery store he kept up about two years. He then abandoned that business and opened a meat market. He has made large additions to his building in the past few years, and as before stated, keeps hotel, also a saloon and meat market. Mr. and Mrs. Hoesly have had seven children—Matthew, born in 1865; Thomas, born in 1866; Marcus, born in 1867; Barbara, born in 1869; Amalia, born in 1870, and died in infancy; Amalia, born in 1872, and John M. born in 1879. Mr. Hoesly has served six years as assessor of New Glarus, and two terms on the town board.

Fred Schindler keeps boarding house, meat market and saloon, (the only saloon aside from the hotels). Mr. Schindler has been in the business since 1880. He was born in canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 20, 1844. His father, Fred Schindler, Sr., came to Wisconsin in 1853. He was a blacksmith. The first year he worked at Monroe, and came to this town in 1854. In 1855 he sent to Switzerland for his family to come to him, and his wife, Elizabeth E., and five children came. The children were—Regula, Barbara, wife of George Legler, now deceased; Kate, wife of Thomas Mitchell, of Monticello; Fred, the subject of this sketch, and Abraham. One sister, and her husband, Leonard Hammerly, came from Switzerland in 1853. They live near Mound Sterling, in Crawford county. Another sister, Dorothea, and her husband Casper Knobel, came 1860. He enlisted in the 31st Wisconsin Volunteers, and died in the hospital in 1864. His widow married a brother of her first husband, Abram Knobel. Fred Schindler, subject of this sketch, married Rosina, a daughter of John J. Durst, in 1866. She was born in Switzerland in 1842. Her father was one of the colonists of New Glarus. He died in 1876. Her mother died in Switzerland. Fred Schindler, Sr., father of the subject of this sketch, died in 1872, his widow survived him and lives with Fred. Mr. and Mrs. Schindler have five children—Elizabeth, Rosa, Barbara, Kate and Fred. They commenced married life on a farm of 200 acres which Fred owned on section 34. He sold this farm to his brother Abram in 1882. Fred bought his property in the village and occupied it in 1880, where he keeps a boarding house, saloon and meat market. He has served two terms on the town board, and is one of the prominent men of the village.

A building was erected in 1867, by Jacob Hefty and Samuel Blumer, intended for a distillery, but never used in that business. The ownership passed into the hands of Jacob Hefty, in 1871, who converted it into a brewery. In 1870 he added to the building largely and continues in the business, manufacturing from 600 to 700 barrels per annum.

J. Jacob Hefty was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, May 8, 1834. His father and family were part of the first colony, coming here in 1845. His father's name was Fridolin Hefty. His mother, Rosina Hefty, died in Switzerland in 1841. His father was married to his second wife when he came to New Glarus. He died in 1854. His widow survived until 1872. The subject of this sketch was married in Switzerland, June 28, 1850, to Margaret Ortle, who was born Jan. 20, 1842. They have five children—Fred, born in 1861; Margaret, born in 1862; Rosa, born in 1864; Casper, born in 1867, and Jacob, born in 1878. Mr. Hefty, in the early, colony days, did a great deal of land breaking with five and six yoke of oxen. The price for breaking was $2.50 per acre. He was afterwards engaged in drawing farm produce to the markets of Janesville and Madison, but has for many years devoted his time entirely to his brewery. Mr. Hefty's recollections of the journey here, made when he was eleven years of age, are vivid. He says, "I had much trouble in biting the 'hard-tack', our regular food. I remember the slow climbing of hills, while canal boats were passed through the lock in Pennsylvania, how we were lodged in a cellar in St. Louis, for weeks, while waiting for the agents to come and pilot us to New Glarus, the tired worn out condition in which we reached our new home, the passing of our first night under a tree, and the next day how father put up a hut covered with boughs, in which we lived for months. Fortunately we had umbrellas, brought with us from our old home, and we used them in our new home every time it rained. Father made a log house before it was very cold and many of the other settlers would come to us daily to get warm, during the following winter. Pumpkins and corn mush comprised our daily food. When I look about now and see the abundance of everything and the comfortable houses everywhere I almost doubt my own memory."

SHOPS OF NEW GLARUS.

The cemeteries of this town are adorned by marble work, the manufacturer of which is John Peter Schmid, who learned his trade while young in Switzerland.

John Peter Schmid came to New Glarus in the summer of 1878. He was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 11, 1846. When thirteen years old he began learning the marble cutter's trade and at sixteen years of age, was earning wages at that work. He came to the United States in 1877, worked a few months in Philadelphia, and from there went to St. Louis, where he was employed a short time, then spent a short time in Ohio, after which he came to New Glarus, where he has since resided. He opened a marble cutter's shop the first year of his residence here, and still continues that business, doing all the marble cutting for New Glarus and surrounding towns. Mr. Schmid was married in Switzerland, Feb. 16, 1867, to Mary Kundert. They have six children—Maggie, now the wife of John Rieder; Melchior, Anna and Mary, who were born in Switzerland; John Peter and Albert Rudolf, born in the United States. Mr. Schmid is an excellent workman and strictly honest and conscientious in all of his dealings.

Gabriel Schindler, proprietor of the wagon and blacksmith shop in New Glarus, commenced in a small way in 1876. His business increasing, he rebuilt in 1881, making a two story building, 22x36 feet in size, and in 1883, added to this of the same height, 22x24 feet, renting the upper room to the United Workmen's lodge. Mr. Schindler is doing a prosperous business. He is a son of Abraham and Anna Schindler, and was born in New Glarus, Jan. 24, 1847. Abraham Schindler, with his wife and three sons, came to New Glarus with the colony of 1845. They were natives of the canton of Glarus, in Switzerland. The three sons were—Andrew, Abraham and Fred. The father and two of the sons, Andrew and Abraham, died with the cholera in 1854. Fred had died previous to that time. The mother died in 1861. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Schindler in New Glarus—Gabriel, subject of this sketch, Jacob, who lives in Ohio, and Anna, widow of Oswald Elmer, living in the village of New Glarus. Gabriel Schindler was married April 15, 1869, to Barbara Hefty, daughter of Sebastian Hefty. She was born in Switzerland, where her parents died. She came to New Glarus in 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Schindler have two children—S. Albert, born in 1871, and Anna, born in 1873. Mr. Schindler is one of the active business men of the town. Mrs. Schindler keeps a millinery store in the village and is a woman of much energy and business capacity.

Melchoir Schmid, one of the mechanics of the village, has been in the blacksmith business since 1874. He is a son of Mathias and Catharina Schmid, who settled in New Glarus with the colony in 1845, and was born in this town Feb. 10, 1850. His parents were both born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland. Their first location here was upon a piece of land one-half mile south of the present village. Mathias Schmid died in 1854 and his wife in 1877. Four of their children, who came with them from Switzerland, are now living—Mathias lives in Dakota; Henry, Adam and Catharine, who is married to Caspar Heuser, reside in this town. Two children were born in New Glarus—Thomas, born Dec. 12, 1845, was the first born child of the New Glarus colonists and Melchoir, the subject of this sketch. Thomas resides in Exeter. Melchoir Schmid was united in marriage with Rosa Durst, Nov. 13, 1873. She is a daughter of Mathias and Verena Durst, also colonists of 1845. Rosa was born May 28, 1854, Mathias Durst died in 1857. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Durst who came with them from Switzerland, two are living—Sebastian and Fanny, wife of Henry Marty. Of those born here two are living—Rosa and Nicholas. The first death among the colonists after their arrival in Wisconsin, was a young son of Mathias and Catharina Schmid—who died after leaving Galena and before they reached their destination. Melchoir Schmid is in the blacksmith business, having owned a shop since 1874.

Constantine Haegele has been running a blacksmith shop since 1861.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

N. C. Durst has been in the harness business since 1872.

Henry Luchsinger established the furniture business in 1883.

Joshua Tschudy, boot and shoe maker, keeps a confectionery and notion stand. He has been in this business about two years.

New Glarus post office was established in 1850. The first postmaster was a Frenchman named Panchouz. He was succeeded by Joshua Wild, and he in turn by J. J. Tschudy; then F. Egger. F. E. Legler and Thomas C. Hefty, who is the present postmaster. The office is in Hefty & Kundert's store.

Thomas C. Hefty, of the firm of Hefty & Kundert, was born in this town, and is a son of Caspar and Elizabeth Hefty. Caspar Hefty was born in Switzerland, and came to Green county and settled in the town of Washington, about 1847. Elizabeth Hefty, also a native of Switzerland, came to this county one year previous to her husband. They were married in the town of Washington, and a few years later came to New Glarus to reside, locating on section 28, where Mr. Hefty bought 250 acres of land. Caspar Hefty died in April, 1876. His widow now lives with a married daughter, Mrs. Jacob Elmer, in Mount Pleasant. They had ten children—Marcus, deceased; Henry, living in Washington; Caspar, living at the homestead; Peter, living in Jefferson Co., Kansas; Melchoir, living in the same county, where they own a large farm of 500 acres; Thomas C., subject of this sketch; Barbara, wife of Anton Richards, of Jefferson Co., Kansas; John and Elizabeth, deceased. Thomas C. Hefty was born March 2, 1859, and was married April 8, 8, 1880, to Elizabeth, daughter of Paulus Kundert. She was born Dec. 30, 1861. They have two children—Lillian E., born in 1881, and Esther S., born in 1883. Mr. Hefty is postmaster of New Glarus. The firm are doing a prosperous business. Although young, Mr. Hefty has the qualifications necessary for a successful business career.

The United Workmen lodge was organized Aug. 25, 1883, with the following officers: M. Hoesly, W. M.; Oswald Babler, P. W. M.; Oswald Elmer, foreman; G. Schindler, overseer; M. Schmid, financier; E. J. Eisner, receiver; T. C. Hefty, recorder; Yost Hoesly, guide; Fredoline Schindler, J. W.; Jacob Hefty, O. W. Charter membership, twenty-six; present membership, thirty-eight. The death of Oswald Elmer, the foreman, occurred shortly after the organization. The vacancy in the official staff of the lodge was filled by the election of Thomas Hoesly.

CHURCHES.

The religion of the people of New Glarus is of the denomination called the Swiss Reformed Church. The first church was a log building erected in 1849, and used as a church and school house. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Streissgurth, who located in 1849 and remained until 1855. In 1884 he was still living, and at the Master's work. He was succeeded by Rev. John Zimmerman, who came from Switzerland in 1852, and came here in 1855. He remained with this people until 1859. He is now the pastor of a German Church in Burlington, Iowa. In 1859 the present church replaced the log church of the colonists. In that year the present pastor was located here, Rev. John T. Ettee. He was born in Switzerland, in 1832. The son of a clergyman, he was educated to the work from his youth. He came to the United States in 1850 and studied English in a university at Chambersburg, Penn. His first charge was in Tennessee, and later he was settled at Sauk City. Going for that purpose, he was married in Switzerland, in 1855. He has only two children living, both now residents of Monroe—Robert and John T. About 1873 the society built a school house for imparting denominational education. The house is also used for an independent school, in which German is taught by Fabian Knobel.

There is another church owned by the German Evangelical society. This building was erected on section 22, and moved into the village about 1860. About fifteen families in this town are connected with this society.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Among the Swiss colonists of New Glarus can be found no more enterprising people than the following, of whom biographical sketches are given.

Oswald Babler, son of Oswald and Ursula Babler, was born June 11, 1835. His parents came here with the colony of 1845. The other children of Mr. and Mrs. Babler, who came with them, were—Elizabeth, deceased wife of John Streiff; Esaias, deceased; Nicholas, who was killed by lightning, in 1853; and Anna, wife of Henry Holsby, living in Oregon. The father died the second year of his residence here. The mother lived with her daughter, Mrs. Streiff, many years before her death, which occurred in 1873. The subject of this sketch, Oswald Babler, went to Madison in 1856, to learn the trade of cabinet maker. He remained there three years. He then commenced improving his share of the land coming to him through the claim made by his father and paid for by the family, eighty acres of which came into his possession. This land is on section 25, and is now a part of his farm of 135 acres. He was married June 15, 1860, to Sarah Kundert, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Kundert, and sister of Mrs. John Luchsinger, of Monroe. Her father died in Switzerland, when she was quite young. Her mother, who came here in 1855, lives with Mr. and Mrs. Babler. Feb. 2, 1865, Mr. Babler enlisted in company I, of the 46th Wisconsin Volunteer infantry, and served until the regiment was mustered out. He was mustered out as corporal. Twelve children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Babler—Henry Lincoln, Emma E., wife of J. Hoesly, of Monroe; Ellen E., Edwin A., Otto H., Victor A. (deceased); Emil E. (deceased); Victor A., Ida E., Lillie M., Ada A. and Alma A. Mr. Babler is a man of energy, and does thoroughly whatever he undertakes. He has a finely improved farm, with good buildings.

John Legler was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, April 16, 1837. His father, Fred Legler, with his family, were a part of the colony that came to New Glarus in 1845. His twenty acre lot was on section 22. He gradually added to his landed estate until he owned a fine farm of 200 acres. At the time of their arrival in New Glarus, Mr. Legler's family consisted of his wife and six sons—Fred, now living in the village of New Glarus; Melchoir, deceased; Nicholas, deceased; George, now living in this town; Andrew, deceased; and John, the subject of this sketch. The father died about 1871. His widow died three years later. John Legler and Dorothea, daughter of Peter Speich, were married in 1861. She was born in Switzerland, June 24, 1844, and came to New Glarus with her brother, Peter, and sister, Barbara, in 1852. Her parents died in Switzerland about 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Legler have ten children—Fred, Peter, Barbara, Dorothea, Elsbeth, Anna, Emma, Mary, Lena and John, all of whom are living with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Legler, for several years after their marriage, lived on the farm of Mr. Legler's father, which they inherited. He afterwards sold the place to his brothers and settled on his present home on section 33, where he owns 160 acres.

Werner Elmer lives on section 2, where he owns a farm of 240 acres, a portion of which is on section 1. His parents, Werner and Ann Maria Elmer, were born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, and came to New Glarus in 1847. Five of their children who came with them are living—Fanny, wife of Jacob Ott; Mary, wife of John Tasher, of Dane county; Euphemia, wife of Nicholas Zentner; Werner and Jacob, who live in Dane county. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Elmer after their arrival in New Glarus—Caspar and Nicholas, who are living at the homestead, and Anna, who lives with her sister, Mrs. Ott. Werner Elmer, Sr., settled in 1847 upon section 11, where he added to his first purchase until he owned 400 acres of land. He died Feb. 6, 1883, aged seventy years. His wife died April 5, 1881, aged sixty-eight years. Werner Elmer, Jr., and Barbara Durst were united in marriage Nov. 17, 1864. She is a daughter of Nicholas and Maria Durst, who came from Switzerland to New Glarus in 1846, and settled on section 10, where Mr. Durst died April 19, 1869. Mrs. Durst still lives at the homestead with her son, Jacob, who now owns the property. Mr. and Mrs. Durst brought seven children to this country with them—Magdalena, who died one year later; Jacob, Henry, living in Monroe; Anna, deceased wife of Samuel Luchsinger; Mary A., wife of Adam Schmid; Margaret, wife of Jacob Streiff, and Barbara (Mrs. Elmer). Five children were born to them after their arrival in New Glarus, only one of whom is now living—Nicholaus, who resides at Monroe. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer have six children—Mary, Werner, Barbara, Nicholaus, Fanny and J. Herman.

Melchoir Stuessy, the owner of one of the fine dairy farms of New Glarus, lives upon section 25, and has large and conveniently arranged buildings. His farm contains 264 acres of good land, 120 acres of which, with his residence, is on section 25, sixty acres on section 36, and eighty-four acres adjoining on the east, in Exeter. Mr. Stuessy was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 20, 1823. He came to the United States in 1845, and spent the following winter in New Jersey and two months of the next season in Pennsylvania. He then returned to New Jersey, where he was employed in a cotton factory nearly two years. In May, 1848, he came to New Glarus and bought 160 acres of his present farm. He was married in 1852 to Catharine Legler, daughter of David Legler. Ten children have blessed their union—Jacob, born in 1853; Samuel, born in 1854; Barbara, born in 1857, and died in infancy; Melchoir, born in 1858; David, born in 1861; Anna, born in 1864; Catharine, born in 1867; Fred, born in 1870;

Henry, born in 1874, and John, born in 1877. Mr. Stuessy's father, Jacob Stuessy, died in Switzerland in March, 1856. The July following his wife came to this town to reside with her son, Melchoir. Mr. Stuessy is one of the solid men of this New Glarus. He has held the office of chairman of the town board ten or twelve terms, and always satisfactorily to the people. His brother, Jacob Stuessy, lives on an adjoining farm, and owns 120 acres, with residence, on section 25, also 220 acres on section 36. He also has fine improvements. He was born in Switzerland Jan. 19, 1829, and came to New Glarus in 1850. He was married in November, 1856, to Catharine Zumbunnen, a native of Berne, Switzerland. She died in 1873, leaving two children—Catharine and Emma. Jacob Stuessy was again married in 1875 to Verena Marty. By this marriage there are five children—Jacob, Mathias, Samuel, Anna M. and Walter.

Andrew Hoesly owns a very fine farm of 167 acres on section 4. He has erected fine buildings upon his farm. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, March 14, 1830. He came to this county, a poor lad of seventeen years, with a brother-in-law, Henry Durst, for whom he worked to pay the cost of his coming, remaining with him nearly six years, in the meantime preparing for a start in life, with some means. He was married in 1853 to Barbara, daughter of Jacob Durst. She was born in Switzerland, and in 1848 came to this county. Mr. Hoesly bought his farm in 1857. He is an honest and prudent farmer, and much respected by all. Mr. and Mrs. Hoesly have three sons—Jacob, living in this town; Andrew, living in York, and David, who is at home with his parents.

Mathias Elmer was born in the town of Washington, Green county, July 10, 1849, the same year in which his parents, John U. and Verena Elmer, came from the canton of Glarus in Switzerland to the New Glarus in America. They brought five children with them—Barbara, now the wife of Abram Kulby; Conrad, now living in Monroe; Magdalena, now the wife of Isaiah Stauffacher, of Sylvester; John, living in Sylvester, and Ulrich, living in Mount Pleasant. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Elmer after they came to this county—Mathias, Verena, now the wife of Chris Brunko; Henry and Jacob, who live in Mount Pleasant; Mary, wife of Peter Stauffacher, of Sylvester; Adam, living in Mount Pleasant and Euphemia wife of Peter Elmer. The subject of this sketch, Mathias Elmer. and Mrs. Anna Marty, widow of Joachim Marty, were married Oct. 14, 1875. She is a daughter of George and Anna Legler and by her first marriage had four children—George, John, Otila and Fred. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer have had three children born to them—Clara, Samuel and Augusta. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer own one of the best farms in the town. It is located on section 22, and formerly belonged to Mrs. Elmer's father, George Legler, who was one of the colonists of 1845. The farm contains 366 acres and is under good cultivation. They have fine buildings and other improvements.

David Hefty is the owner of a fine stock farm on section 33, of New Glarus. It contains 265 acres His father, John Jacob Hefty, came from the canton of Glarus, in Switzerland, in 1847, and settled upon section 29, of New Glarus, where he resided until his death in 1881. His widow resides at the homestead with one son, Melchoir, and three daughters—Margaret, Mary and Madaline. There are also six other children—John Jacob, who lives in New Glarus; David, subject of this sketch; Rosina, wife of J. Becker, of Washington; John, in New Glarus; Barbara, wife of Fred Vaegle, and Elizabeth, wife of Henry Legler. All of the children were born in New Glarus. The homestead contains 140 acres. David Hefty was born June 4, 1851, and married Nov. 2, 1876, to Rachel, daughter of Albert Babler. She was born June 18, 1857. They have two children— John Jacob, born in 1877, and Anna Barbara, born in 1879. Mr. Hefty is one of the most intelligent and enterprising citizens of the town, and is much esteemed.

Fredolin Becker, Jr., owns a fine farm of 298 acres on sections 10 and 11. His father, Fredolin Becker, was one of the colonists of 1845. His parents were married shortly before coming to New Glarus. They settled on section 2, and made a farm of 284 acres. One of the children whom they brought to this town, Barbara, is now the wife of Esaias Babler, of Mount Pleasant. The other, Jost, lives in York. Fredolin, Jr., Jacob and John were born in New Glarus. The subject of this sketch was born June 13, 1851. When eighteen years of age he learned the carpenter trade and in 1870, went to Kansas and remained four years, working there at any employment which offered. From there he went to Colorado and herded cattle one season. After this he worked on a farm in Illinois one year, then in 1876, returned to New Glarus. April 4, 1878, he was married to Fanny Kundert, daughter of Thomas and Amalia Kundert. Mr. and Mrs. Becker now reside on the homestead of her father, Mr. Kundert. They have two children—Fred, born in April, 1879, and Thomas, born in April, 1882. Mr. Becker is a member of the town board. The parents of Mr. Becker are living with their son, Jacob, on section 14. John Becker lives on the old homestead.

Christian Luchsinger was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 20, 1820. In his youth he worked in cotton factories, but at the age of sixteen years, was apprenticed to the watch maker's trade. This work he followed seven years, then was made village clerk. He was in that position until 1852, in which year he came to the United States, and to this town with two of his children—Thomas and Elizabeth. The following year he sent for his wife and the other son, Samuel. Mr. Luchsinger was married in 1842 to Margaret Wild, in Switzerland. He left New Glarus in 1854 for Mineral Point, where he worked in the mines, zinc smelting etc., a portion of the time, and at clock repairing a portion of the time.

In 1884 he enlisted in the 142d Illinois Volunteers, (100 day service) and served nearly six months. The regiment was discharged, and he enlisted again in the 50th Wisconsin Volunteers and served fifteen months. He was mustered out with the regiment and returned to New Glarus, where he bought a home, upon which he now resides. Five children have been born in America—John, born in 1856; Susan, wife of Charles Sheple, of Dayton, born in 1858; Margaret, born in 1860; Mary, born in 1863, and Sophie, born in 1867. Samuel, who came over with his mother, was accidentally killed at Austin, Minn., May 24, 1881, while in discharge of his duty as yard master, in the employ of the C. M. & St. P. R. R. Company. Christian Luchsinger has served as town clerk of this town ten years, and when not in this position has been almost continuously acting as justice of the peace. He is one of the prominent public men of the town. Genial and kindly in his intercourse with others, he has hosts of friends.

Thomas Luchsinger, son of Christian Luchsinger, was born April 5, 1844, in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, and came to New Glarus with his father in 1852. He grew to manhood here and making the best use of his limited advantages, acquired a good education, which with a mind by nature studious, and a retentive memory, have made him a well-informed and useful citizen. He enlisted in February, 1864, in company H, of the 35th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served creditably until the regiment was mustered out of service. He came home an orderly sergeant. After the war he was married, in 1868, to Salome Hoesly, daughter of one of the first colonists, Mathias Hoesly. Both of her parents are living. After coming from the army, Mr. Luchsinger learned the wagon maker's trade, which he followed until 1882, when he moved to Dayton and bought the store and stock in trade of William Green. He continued in business there until the spring of 1884, when he closed out his stock and returned to New Glarus. Mr. and Mrs.

Luchsinger have had five children. The first born, Margaret, died at the age of one year. The living are—Christian, Barbara, Margaret and Salome. Mr. Luchsinger is well and favorably known throughout Green county. He has been the candidate of his party, (democratic) for the legislature, also for important county offices. That party being the minority party, he, though receiving a flattering vote, has never been elected.

Caspar Hauser was born in canton Glarus, Switzerland, Nov. 12, 1838. He came to this country in 1853 with his parents, Oswald and Anna Hauser and three other children—Anna, wife of Thomas Schmid; Oswald lives in the town of York; and Rudolph, deceased. His mother died in 1854. His father is living with Oswald in the town of York. The subject of this sketch, Caspar Hauser, and Catharine Schmid, were united in marriage in January, 1865. They have six children—Catharine, Anna, Fanny, Margaret, Oswald and Louisa. Mr. Hauser owns a fine farm of 220 acres, which is under good improvement. About 150 acres of the farm is on section 5. The other part is on Section 4, where he resides.

J. Conrad Zimmerman was born in canton Schaffhausen, Switzerland, Jan. 18, 1837. He came to the United States in 1854, landing in New York, September 15, of that year. He went directly to Freeport, Ill., where he taught a German school one year. In the fall of 1855 he came to New Glarus, and taught the only school in town, for the next four years. The whole town was included in one school district. The school house was the log church of the colonists. Oct. 14, 1858, he was married to Mary, only child of Peter and Barbara Jenny, of New Glarus. Mr. and Mrs. Jenny were early settlers in the town, coming from Switzerland in 1847. Mr. Jenny brought some money here and made more after his arrival. He was a hard working and prosperous farmer. He died in 1880. His widow still lives at the homestead, which consists of more than 200 acres, on section 13. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman also reside at the homestead. They have two sons—Peter, born in November, 1859, and John, born in October, 1864. Peter is married and rents the homestead, and occupies the former residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jenny. John is attending school at Elmhurst Seminary, in Illinois. The subject of this sketch, J. Conrad Zimmerman, in 1859, moved to Freeport, Illinois, where he taught a German school until 1864. He then returned to New Glarus and has since resided on section 13. Mr. Zimmerman received an academic education in Switzerland and attended the State University in 1857. He has served several terms as chairman of the town board of supervisors, and is one of the prominent public men of the town and county. His elder brother, John Zimmerman, was the pastor of New Glarus from 1855 to 1859. He is now a resident of Burlington, Iowa. Of his four sisters who came to the United States, Magdalena, wife of Rev. C. F. Doehring, died in Missouri in 1865; Verena is the wife of Rev. A. H. Fismer, of Boeuf Creek, Mo.; Catharine is the wife of C. Weber, of Toledo, Ohio; and Ursula, widow of Rev. C. F. Doehring, lives in Monroe, Wis.

Andrew J. Magoon resides upon section 2, of the town of New Glarus. He is a son of Richard and Maria Magoon of Monticello, and was born in Mount Pleasant, June 10, 1856. He was married July 4, 1877, by H. M. Barnes, Esq., of Exeter, to Barbara, daughter of Jacob Burgy of Washington. She was born Nov. 21, 1859. The first year of their married life was spent on a farm in Mount Pleasant. They then rented a farm on section 2, of the town of New Glarus, of his father-in-law. In 1884 he bought the farm, which contains 220 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Magoon have three children—Maud M., born in August, 1878; Melvin Jacob, born in February, 1880; and Clarence James, born in January, 1882. Richard Magoon came to Green county in an early day, there being then only a few houses in Monroe, two or three in Exeter, and one in Monticello. The first year of his residence here, he lived in Exeter. He then moved to what is now the town of Mount Pleasant, where he now lives in the village of Monticello. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Magoon have five children living with them—Ella, Albert, Arthur, Etta and Ernest. One of their daughters, Martha, is a teacher and has taught thirty terms of school. They have also one son and two daughters living in Iowa.

Fred Luchsinger was born in Philadelphia, March 14, 1847. His parents, John and Barbara Luchsinger, settled in New Glarus, in 1856, buying land on section 1, which is now included in the fine farm of 296 acres, owned by the subject of this sketch. The other children of John and Barbara Luchsinger are John, the present county treasurer of Green county; Catharine, wife of Mathias Stuessy; and Barbara, wife of Jacob Burgy, of Washington. Fred Luchsinger was married to Magdalena Durst, Nov. 28, 1869. She is a daughter of John Henry Durst, who came from Switzerland and settled in New Glarus in 1847. He now lives in the village; Mr. and Mrs. Luchsinger have eight children—Barbara, John, Fred, Robert, Maggie, Catharine, Mary and a little girl not yet christened. Mr. Luchsinger's father died in 1862, and his mother in 1868. Fred Luchsinger is a popular and respected citizen and one of the prominent men of New Glarus. He has filled offices of trust.

John Klassy owns a highly improved farm of 300 acres, on sections 23 and 24. He has large and substantial buildings. Mr. Klassy was born in Switzerland, Dec. 5, 1844, and came to this country with his parents, Joachim and Catharine Klassy, in 1860. One other son, Joshua, came with Mr. and Mrs. Klassy to the United States.. Joshua Klassy lives in Jordan. The parents are both living with Joshua. John Klassy was married March 9, 1865, to Elizabeth Kundert, daughter of Rudolph and Elizabeth Kundert. She was born in Switzerland, May 17, 1844. They have two children—John, born in 1865; and Ellen, born in 1874. Mr. Klassy is an industrious and successful farmer.

Fred Streiff was born in Switzerland, Sept. 18, 1838, and came to New Glarus in 1861. He enlisted October 15, of that year, in the 2d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, one of the "Iron Brigade" regiments. His devotion to the land of his adoption was sealed with blood more than once. He has the scars of three wounds to show for his service in the battles of the Union, for which he receives a pension. Recovering from wounds received at the battle of Gainesville, where the Wisconsin boys won the title of the "Iron Brigade," he was again in line at the "pivotal battle of the war," Gettysburg. He was in the following battles: Gainesville, Va., Bull Run, (No. 2.), Fitzhugh's Crossing, Va., Chancellorsville, Va., Gettysburg, Penn., Wilderness, Va., Laurel Hill, Va., Cold Harbor, Va., North Anna River, Bethesda Church, Va., Spottsylvania Court House, Va., Petersburg, Va., Weldon Railroad and Hatcher's Run, Va., and many smaller battles. He was corporal, and was promoted to sergeant on the 1st day of June, 1864, at Cold Harbor. He was married Feb. 25, 1864, while home on a veteran furlough, to Barbara, daughter of Joshua Wild. After the war Mr. Streiff was in trade at New Glarus, in company with his father-in-law, Mr. Wild, and later engaged in the same business at Paoli, Dane county, then purchased a farm in the town of New Glarus, which he commenced improving in 1866. It is located on section 7, and contains 211 acres with very fine buildings and improvements. Mr. and Mrs. Streiff have eight children—Agatha, Joshua, Barbara, Emanuel, Fredolin, John, Anna and Robert. Mr. Streiff has been a member of the town board and is a respected citizen.

Thomas Kundert resides on section 28, on the farm his father formerly owned. He is a son of Belshazzar and Elizabeth Kundert, and was born May 26, 1861. His parents came to this country from Switzerland, in 1854. They settled on section 9, where they remained until 1860, when they purchased the farm on sections 28 and 29, where Thomas now lives. The farm contains 265 acres, and is well improved, and on which Thomas erected one of the largest barns in the town. His father died on the 11th of May, 1881. His mother lives in the village of New Glarus. There are four children living—Barbara, born in Switzerland, wife of Jacob Voegele, living in the town of Jordan; Jacob, born November, 1862; Elizabeth, born in May, 1871, and Thomas. Elizabeth lives with her mother. Thomas was married to Rosina Hoesly, on the 31st of January, 1884. She is a daughter of John and Anna Hoesly. Her father died May 18, 1881. He came from Switzerland in 1854, and was a brewer by trade. His mother lives in the village of New Glarus.

Dietrich Stauffacher lives on section 35, where he owns a fine farm of 354 acres, well improved. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, April 23, 1832, and came to the United States in 1871. He came directly to this town, and purchased his farm the same year. He was married in Switzerland, in 1851, and four children came to this county with him—Barbara, wife of Paul Marty, of Exeter; Euphemia, wife of Oswald Zentner, Jr., of Mount Pleasant; Conrad, who is now married and living on a part of his father's farm, and Mary, who lives with her father. His wife, Verena, died July 28, 1879, aged fifty-four years. Mr. Stauffacher was again married, Aug. 19, 1882, to Mrs. Susan (Babler) Zentner, widow of Oswald Zentner, Sr. She was born in Switzerland. Two of her sons were buried under a landslide in Switzerland, Sept. 11, 1881. She came to this country in May, 1882, accompanied by five sons and four daughters—Hilarious, Oswald, Fritz, Henry, Samuel, Regula, Ellen, Susanna and Mary. Those buried by the landslide were Peter and Caspar. Mr. Stauffacher bought out the last American family in the south half of the town, buying his farm of the heirs of James Lemons' estate. A part of the farm lies on section 2, of the town of Washington.

Jacob Regez was born in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, Sept. 25, 1849. He came to the United States in 1869, and lived in Ohio one year. His father at that time was operating a large cheese factory in France, and having other interests demanding his attention, Jacob returned to France to take charge of this factory. He remained in that country, thus employed, two and a half years, when the Franco-Prussian war compelled a suspension of the business, and he returned to the United States, accompanied by his brother, Rudolph, and the fall of 1872 found him at New Glarus, where he established himself in the cheese manufacturing business. He is at present (1884) operating successfully ten cheese factories. He thoroughly understands the art of cheese making, and has acquired quite a fortune in the business. His father, Jacob Regez, died in Switzerland in 1878. His mother is living in that country. Jacob returned to Switzerland on a visit, in 1883. Rudolph, who came here in 1870, lives in Dane county where he operates six cheese factories. Another brother, Ernest, and a sister, Susan, came to this county in 1880. The former is in the employ of Jacob, and the latter is living in Monroe. A young sister, Rosie, accompanied Jacob on his return in 1883, and is now a member of his family. Mr. Regez was married Jan. 20, 1876, to Louisa Wittwer. Four children have been born to them—Ida, Jacob, Louisa and Edward. Their residence is on section 33.

Henry Holdrick was born in Bavaria, Germany, Dec. 29, 1844. He came to America in 1867, landing at New York city. Being an adept at the dairy business, he sought employment in that line, and succeeded in obtaining work in a cheese factory in Jefferson county in that State. He remained here three years then returned to New York city, and was employed as clerk and salesman in a cheese and butter store. In 1876 he went to Washington Depot, Conn., and worked in a creamery. In the fall of that year he came to Green county. He spent the following winter in Monroe, and the next season was employed in cheese making in Dayton. The next two years he worked in a cheese factory at Monticello, after which he came to New Glarus, where he is following the same business. He was married April 24, 1879, to Mrs. Margaret Disch, widow of Jacob Disch. Mrs. Holdrick has one child by her former marriage—John Disch, born July 27, 1875. Mr. Holdrick thoroughly understands the business in which he is engaged, and is a well informed and intelligent gentleman.

CHAPTER XLI.

TOWN OF SPRING GROVE.

Congressional township 1 north, range 9 east, of the fourth principal meridian, comprises the civil town of Spring Grove, forming the southeastern corner of Green county. On account of the correction lines of the government survey, this congressional township embraces 24,989.92 acres of land. This town is bounded on the north and west by the towns of Decatur and Jefferson, respectively; on the east it is bounded by Rock county, and on the south by the State of Illinois. The surface of this town is quite rolling, but no abrupt bluffs exist except at, or near the Clarence bridge, across Sugar river. This river crosses the north line of the town, by way of the northwest quarter of section 2, and flows in a southeasterly direction, to leave the town through the southeast quarter of section 13. Spring creek, main branch, heads on section 30, and on section 10 is joined by a smaller branch which heads on section 7. The creek, thus formed, flows into Sugar river, from the west on section 12. The soil in Spring Grove is varied. East of Sugar river is a sandy prairie, with timber skirting the river. West of the river, the low lands set in, which are covered with a soil of rich, black loam; these level lands extend from the river toward the higher lands. Except along the river, this land is not timbered. On the farm of Thomas Hamilton, an elevation seventy feet high rises from the level lands around, covering about ten acres. This is called Rock Hill. There is but little soil on the top. The rock crops out on all sides, shaded by scrubby timber. The north tier of sections, west of the river, are nearly all made up of rolling prairie, with a soil of dark loam and clay, and gravel subsoil. Sections 31, 30, 32 and 33, all have more or less prairie land. Originally the surface was timbered with different varieties of oak, maple, basswood and considerable black walnut and other varieties of hard wood. The timber soil is generally a black loam, with a clay mixture, and clay and limestone subsoil.

The natural advantages of this town in wealth of soil, can hardly be overestimated. It will compare favorably with the best in the county. To own a farm in Spring Grove was a passport to credit in early days. The town was settled by men from Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York mostly, and some from Indiana. All the early settlers were American born. A better class of men have never settled in any town in the county. "A good soil attracts good men." At present the town ranks with the best in the county, in real and personal property valuation. Its people are thrifty, enterprising and intelligent. Good residences, fine barns, orchards, etc., are seen in every neighborhood. The farmers generally are giving much attention to stock raising.

The principal farm products grown in the town of Spring Grove, during the year 1882, were as follows: 3,865 bushels wheat; 132,975 bushels of corn; 122,794 bushels oats; 48 bushels barley; 5,786 bushels rye; 8,004 bushels potatoes; 1,734 bushels apples; 155 bushels clover seed; 595 bushels timothy seed; 5,253 tons hay; 190,820 pounds butter; 100,350 pounds cheese.

The principal farm products growing in the town at the time of making the annual assessment in 1883, were as follows: 500 acres wheat 6,005 acres corn; 4,220 acres oats; 103 acres barley; 599 acres rye 102 acres potatoes; 225 acres apple orchard; 12,840 bearing trees; 5,008 acres grasses; 3,515 acres growing timber; 1,200 milch cows, valued at $33,600. The live stock in the town in 1883 was as follows: 788 horses, average value $64.33, total $47,482; 3,010 head of cattle, average value $19.92, total $59,989; 11 mules, total value $640.; 1,849 sheep, average value $2., total, $3,709; 2,237 hogs, average value, $5., total $11,192.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Darius Daniels, formerly from the State of New York, in 1836 bought 160 acres of land on section 30, and the same year erected a cabin, and broke ten acres of land. This was the first cabin erected and the first land broke within the limits now comprising the town of Spring Grove. The following winter of 1836—7 he lived alone; being the first and the only settler in the town at that time. He came here from Shullsburg, Lafayette county, and had no family.

In the fall of 1837 Daniel Baxter came with his family and settled on section 31. He had purchased 280 acres of government land in the previous May, and did a little breaking. Mr. Baxter came from the State of New York. He had made a claim a year or so before in Walnut Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., which he sold the same year that he settled here. After his wife's death in 1845, he sold to John Kryder, whose sons, A. J. and J. J. Kryder, now own and occupy the land.

In 1837 Daniels, who was an acquaintance of the Baxter's, left his land in charge of the latter and returned to his former avocation—lead mining at Shullsburg. The latter sold his land to Baxter, and never became a permanent resident of Spring Grove.

Baxter was accompanied, when he came here, by a son-in-law, Mr. Church, who, however, only remained here a short time. The Baxter family went to Sauk Prairie. One son, Thomas, returned, and still lives in the town.

Isaac Kline and family came from La Porte Co., Ind., in the spring of 1837, reaching this town early in May. Accompanying the party came two married sons, Eli and John Kline, and a son-in-law, Samuel Myers. Isaac Kline was an active man, and pushed new enterprises in the settlement with energy. He died in Missouri. One daughter of John Kline, Matilda, still lives in the town, the wife of Frank Waggoner. One daughter of Isaac, Mary, married J. H. Clemans, who came here in 1839. Samuel Myers died in this town during the war, and his widow now lives in Monroe William Kline was born May 20, 1832, in Indiana, and was not quite five years of age when his father settled on section 29, in this town, in March, 1837. His father was Isaac Kline, and he came here from La Porte Co., Ind., He visited the town in the fall of 1836, and purchased his land and made some improvement upon it. The family consisted of Mr. Kline and his wife, Catharine, their daughters, Catharine, Jane and Mary, and their youngest son, William. Samuel Myers, a son-in-law, husband of an older daughter, Sarah, came here at the same time, also an older son, Eli, with his wife, accompanied the family. Another son, John, came the same year; he also was accompanied by his family. Isaac Kline was a man of much energy. He built the first saw mill in this county, which was in operation early in 1839. In 1843 he built the pioneer carding mill. He died near Springfield, Mo., in 1863. His wife died in this town in 1853. Eli Kline settled on section 34, where he lived until 1866. He then sold out and removed to Rock Grove, Ill., where he died in 1883. John Kline settled on section 29, and some years later sold his land to his father and bought on section 5. His wife died in 1867, and his death occurred in 1873. They left one daughter—Matilda, wife of Frank Waggoner.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Catharine Kline was married in the fall of 1839 to Horace Griffin. Theirs was the first marriage in this town. They removed to Missouri several years ago. Jane died in this town. Mary is now the widow of J. H. Clemans, and lives in Spring Grove. Samuel Myers settled in the southwest part of this town. His widow now lives in Monroe. William Kline, in 1853, was married to Mary Ann O'Neal, daughter of Robert E. O'Neal. Four children were born to them three of whom are living—Luella, wife of D. C. Allen; David L., living in Nebraska; Flora R., wife of Charles Hawkins, of Avon, Rock county. Mrs. Kline died Aug. 5, 1864. Jan. 2, 1871, Mr. Kline was again married to Mrs. Lucinda Newcomer, widow of George Newcomer, who died at Petersburg, Va., in 1865. He was a member of the 38th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, company E. Mr. and Mrs. Newcomer had seven children—Jacob, living in Brodhead; Joseph, living in Clay Co., Neb.; Mary, wife of Jacob Keller; Susan, wife of Peter Wrenchel; Eva, wife of Charles Robinson; Sarah, wife of John Hawkins, and George, deceased. William Kline resided in Missouri from 1856 till the fall of 1861. He now resides on section 20, of the town of Spring Grove. Isaac Kline and his son, John Kline were, by a short time, the earliest permanent settlers in the town of Spring Grove.

James W Kildow is one of the earliest settlers in Green county, living in the town of Spring Grove. His residence here dates from the year 1837. Mr. Kildow was born in the old "Mother of Presidents," Virginia, Nov. 15, 1815. His father, John Kildow, left his home in eastern Virginia, in 1817, intending to go to Ohio and make a home for himself and family. In those days, money was hard to get, and of uncertain value, when obtained. Before starting upon his journey, he changed all his money for Wheeling bank bills, but before reaching that place, was met with tidings, saying, "Wheeling banks are busted." (so in the good old times, banks did burst.) His journey ended abruptly. He stopped in Bridgeport, Fayette Co., Penn., where, being a miller by trade, he rented a grist mill, which he operated about six years. He then rented another mill in the same county, about twenty miles distant, on George's creek. This mill he also operated about six years. After this he followed the trade of millwright, the remainder of his life. He died in Fayette county in 1838. His wife died in 1839. They reared a family of nine children, six sons and three daughters, seven of whom are now living, (1884). James W. Kildow, subject of this sketch, left Pennsylvania, Feb. 22, 1837, in company with James Chadwick, Jo. Reed, William Hurlbut and Dan Goodwin. The party all came to Wisconsin, separating at Galena. James Chadwick and Mr. Kildow coming to Green county, The journey by boat, from Wheeling, occupied twenty days, being delayed by ice and other causes. Mr. Kildow made his first stop at the present site of the city of Monroe where he made a temporary home. In 1839, he bought land on section 25, of the town of Jefferson. This land he partly improved, and held until 1844, when he bought land on section 30, in this town, and made his residence there until 1857, at the same time owning land on section 20. He was married Nov. 12, 1840, to Keziah, daughter of David Davis, mention of whom is made elsewhere in this work. This union has been blessed by ten children—David, born in October, 1841, and died at the age of eighteen months; Levi W., born in February, 1843, and died the same year, Joshua P., born in October, 1844; Thomas C., born in February, 1847, and died in May, 1853; John Q. A., born in April 1849, and died in August, 1850; Josiah N., born in June 1851, Polly, born in August, 1853, and now the wife of J. Clemans; Alfred B., born in July, 1855; James N., born in September 1857, and Willis born in September 1860. Mr. Kildow was the first postmaster of the first post office in the town of Spring Grove, which position he occupied from 1845 to 1857, when he moved from the neighborhood. About two years later, his wife, Keziah Kildow was made deputy postmistress of Pee Dee post-office. She held that position until 1862, September of that year Mr. Kildow was commissioned postmaster, and held the office until 1867. He is a man widely known in Green county, and possesses hosts of friends. His integrity, and firmness in maintaining his convictions of what he believed to be right, are well known. He was, in the old time, an abolitionist of the "Garrison and Wendell Phillips" faith. At the organization of the town of Spring Grove, he was elected chairman of the board of supervisors, from 1842 to 1858. He has held the office of justice of the peace, town clerk, town treasurer, also a member of the side board. He was a voter in the first election held after the organization of the county. He has always been a prominent citizen. His residence is on section 22, Spring Grove.

Joshua P. Kildow is a son of the pioneer, J. W. Kildow, and was born Oct. 4, 1844. He enlisted in company K, of the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Aug. 11, 1862. In March, 1863, he was discharged on account of sickness. Recovering his health he re-enlisted, Oct. 5th, of that year, in Battery D, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, was sent to the Louisiana department and stationed at Fort Jackson from Feb. 1864, to July of the same year. He then went to Brasher City, where he remained till July, 1 865. He was mustered out at Alexandria, Va. Mr. Kildow was married Feb. 21, 1867, to Caroline Keller, a sister of Mrs. George W. Zimmerman. They have eight children—Mary Jane, Rebecca F., James W., Nora E., Attiel B., Nancy E., Charles A. and Ethlyn M. Alfred B. Kildow was married to Mary A. Clawson, Feb. 22, 1881. Her parents were named Hannahs; but they dying when she was an infant, she was adopted by a family named Clawson, and afterwards went by that name.

Horace Griffin came in the fall of 1837. In November of the same year he married Catharine Kline and settled on section 21. After living there about twenty years they removed to Missouri, where he died.

Thomas Judkins had arrived earlier in the fall of 1837. He had entered land on section 29, in 1836, and the following year brought his family, consisting of wife and two sons. They lived here about twelve years' and finally, some years later, removed to the State of Oregon.

Alfred Blakely, a single man came, with the Klines' in 1837, but never made his home here.

David Davis and his family came from Fayette Co., Penn., in 1838, and lived in a cabin owned by Jehu Chadwick, in the town of Jefferson, until Mr. Davis could erect a cabin on the land he had purchased on section 5, of this town. He erected a hewn log cabin and put in the first sawed lumber floor ever laid in Green county.

David M. Davis, son of the pioneer settler, David Davis, resides upon land located by his father in 1838. David Davis (pioneer) came here from Fayette Co., Penn., accompanied by his wife and eight children, six boys and two girls. He purchased 280 acres of government land on section 5. The children were—Nancy, now widow of A. Barmore; Kesiah, wife of J. W. Kildow; Thomas, who returned to Pennsylvania and died there in 1845; James N., living in Cadiz; David M., living on the homestead farm; Joel, living in Rock county; Samuel A., living in Franklin Co., Iowa; and William, who died in 1865. After coming to this county Mr. and Mrs. Davis had five children born—Dr. E. Davis, who lives in Magnolia, Rock county; Zachariah P. who enlisted in company K, of the 22d Wisconsin regiment, and was killed at the battle of Resaca, May 15, 1864; Joseph, who was a member of the same company and regiment, died June 30, 1871; John Quincy, who died Nov. 1, 1876; and Levi, who died Sept. 15, 1874. One of the elder sons of David Davis preceded the family to Green county. Joshua

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

P. Davis came in 1837, for the purpose of looking up a location for his father's family. He died at the home of Jesse Mitchell, in the town of Sylvester, Feb. 17, 1838. David Davis was one of the solid, substantial men of the town of Spring Grove. He was ever kind and hospitable and always foremost in any work tending to the public welfare. A most valuable member in a new community. He was one of the members of the first Baptist Church organized in the county, acting as deacon in that organization. He died Feb. 7, 1882, in his eighty-ninth year, passing away willingly, in hope of a better life, for which he was fully prepared. His wife's death occurred in February, 1871.

David M. Davis was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Nov. 22, 1829. He resided with his parents until he attained his majority. He was married Dec. 25, 1850, to Charlotte Ann South, by whom he had one son—Enoch T. Mrs. Davis died Aug. 16, 1853, in consequence of being bitten by a rattlesnake. Mr. Davis was again married Oct. 21, 1854, to Mary Hugh, who died Sept. 19, 1855. July 10, 1856, he was married to Frances C. Boughton, and by this union there were ten children, of whom seven are living—Charlotte A., Marquis A., John C., Jehiel Z., Viola, Frances C. and Joseph N. The three deceased were—Mary Jane, Leonard J. and an infant. Mr. Davis was again bereaved by the loss of his wife, which occurred Nov. 7, 1882. March 3, 1883, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Davis. One child has been born to them—Bertha Elizabeth, born Jan. 7, 1884. Enoch T. Davis was married Oct. 27, 1874, to Belle Brown and they have two children—Elsie S. and Dallas E. He lives in a separate residence upon his father's farm. David M. Davis succeeded to his father's estate, to which he has made additions and now owns one of the largest farms in the county. It contains 443 acres, all of which, except twenty-three acres, is under cultivation. He met with a serious loss in 1882, having his barn destroyed by fire. His residence is large and commodious. Mr. Davis is a man who commands the respect and esteem of all, and one of the leading men in this community.

In the fall of 1838, Stephen Bowen came from Warren Co., Ind., and settled on sections 18 and 19. He died in Kansas. His daughter, Sarah, married Joseph Grayson, who came here in 1841. Grayson had been through the Canadian Patriot War, sometimes called McKenzie's War. They went to Missouri, where Mrs. Grayson died. Martha Bowen married Isaac Trombley, who came here from Ohio, in 1844. She died here. Mr. Trombley married again and removed to Kansas, where he still lives.

Hezekiah Bussey came from Indiana, and settled with his family on section 20, late in 1843. He died in 1872.

William Bussey, a son of Hezekiah, came in 1838. In 1844 he built a mill on section 15, on Spring creek. John and George, two other sons, came in 1842. John now lives in Arkansas. George lives in Juda. Nelson Bussey, the youngest son, settled here in 1843. He still lives in this town. He served in company B, 31st Wisconsin Volunteers, and later in the 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery. He now lives on section 32.

Daniel and Mordecai Vanderbilts came early in the "forties" and settled on section 18. They were good citizens, active in public matters. Both died in this town.

French Lake was born in Virginia, in 1807: He came to Lafayette Co., Wis., in 1827, and settled in this town on section 7, in 1839, having selected and bought 760 acres of land of the government in 1836. The first night in September, when he moved here alone, (he remained a bachelor until 1851), he tied his oxen to a tree where his fine residence now stands, and removed a small portion of the turf, and making an excavation below, buried his money—of which he had plenty. Replacing the turf and hanging his camp kettle over it, he made his fire and cooked his supper, sleeping soundly, under the wagon box. The kettle hung there until he built his cabin. No burglar-proof time lock safe could have made his money more secure. But his method of deposits became known not long after, for a Mr. Riley came one morning wishing to borrow $10. The parley was concluded by Mr. Lake saying he could have it to-morrow, but Riley must have it to-day. Lake says, you wait and have dinner with me, and ostensibly going to the spring for water, he took his spade, and removing the nicely adjusted turf in the grass plat, where he done his banking, he lifted the old sack, and hearing a step, he turned and there stood Riley, laughing. Lake was confounded and, for some days, could not decide where to locate his deposits again. Mr. Lake is a very energetic man, has always made money and is wealthy, owning nearly 1,300 acres of land. He has been a widower for several years. His love of the south and present sympathy with the "lost cause," has embittered many against him, but for all, he is a good citizen.

Mrs. Rachel M. Ten Eyck, is the widow of the late Jacob Ten Eyck, who was born in Albany Co., N. Y., in 1800. His father, Caspar H. B. Ten Eyck, moved during the early part of the century to Bemroke, Canada West, with his family. Jacob Ten Eyck was married in Green Co., N. Y., Oct. 6, 1835, to Rachel M. Van Der Zee. They lived in Canada until the outbreak of the "Patriot War" or McKenzie's War" so-called, when he went to the State of New York. About the time of leaving Canada Mr. Ten Eyck bought of Rodolphus D. Derrick 540 acres of land, (it being a part of Mr. Derrick's purchase of 1,200 acres) on sections 3 and 4, town of Spring Grove. He settled on this purchase during the spring of 1839. He had for a short time previously lived in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck have had seven children—Lavina, born in Canada, Sept. 17, 1836; Albert A., born in New York, Sept. 1, 1838; Caspar H. B. born July 17, 1840, who died in infancy; Caspar A., born Dec. 1841, died Jan. 22, 1848; Catharine A., born Oct. 26, 1843; Egbert, born Sept. 20, 1846, and Cecelia, born in 1853. Catharine was the first white child born in this neighborhood. Mr. Ten Eyck early gave his attention to growing stock, and improving his herds, and to this can be charged indirectly his death which was a sad event, having been killed by one of his bulls, Sept. 3, 1876. At the time of his death he was one of the largest land owners in the county, having 1,200 acres which is now all in his children's possession. His son Albert A., was married to Amanda M. Moore. They live in Decatur. Lavina was married to M. D. McNair, March 21, 1870. They have two children—Egbert D., born Jan. 7, 1871, and Jacob D., born April 28, 1880. Mr. McNair has a residence joining his wife's property where he resides. Catharine was married to Peter D. Taylor. They live in Spring Valley, Rock county. Mrs. Ten Eyck has been an invalid over thirty years, yet is possessed of a cheerful, patient mind, and a clear and vigorous intellect, often relating incidents of the early settlements especially of Peter Emell, the Frenchman, and his Indian wife, who often called, always decorated in her best apparel to take tea with her, oftentimes bringing others with her. They would follow Mrs. Ten Eyck to the chamber, cellar and garden, when she would supply them with meat and other eatables, and relating of the herds of deer that bounded through the brush and thicket that then surrounded the place, and of the wild turkeys that came and gobbled near the door feeding from the corn they found there.

R. D. Derrick, or 'Squire Derrick, as he was called, bought 1,200 acres of land in the town Spring Grove and Decatur, and settled on section 3, in 1840. He was one of the leading men of his time.

Henry Dixon came in January, 1843, driving a team from New York State and settled on section 2. He left some years later, and lived in Rock county for some time; but finally died in Brodhead.

Elder G. R. Patton came from Pennsylvania, in September, 1843, and lived in this town one year, then removed to the town of Jefferson, where he still resides.

EVENTS OF INTEREST.

Horace and Catharine Kline were the first couple married in this town. The ceremony was preformed in November, 1837. James Chadwick and Nancy E. Davis were married Oct. 7, 1840. James W. Kildow and Keziah S. Davis were married Nov. 12, 1840. J. H. Clemans and Mary Kline were married in November, 1839.

The earliest births in the town were as follows: John, a son of Horace and Catharine Griffin, was born in the fall of 1838. Doctor E., son of David and Mary Davis, was born March 12, 1839. Kate, daughter of Jacob and Rachel M. Ten Eyck, born in 1839, was the first female child born in the town.

The first death in the town occurred in 1839; that of a man named Arnold, a brother of Mrs. Thomas Judkins. He was searching for a horse and dropped dead in the pursuit.

POSTOFFICES.

In 1845, mail was delivered at Monroe to be distributed by James W. Kildow, for his neighborhood. This was continued until 1848, when Mr. Kildow was commissioned postmaster of Spring Grove post office, supplied by the route from Rockford to Mineral Point by the way of Monroe. Mr. Kildow held the office until 1857, when he moved from the neighborhood, and Israel Lake was made postmaster. He lived on section 24, town of Jefferson. Some years later, upon his death, the office was discontinued. After the office had been removed from this town, a new office was established in 1859, called Pee Dee, with George W. Zimmerman as postmaster, office at his residence on section 33. Route, Rockford to Monroe, J. W. Kildow, contractor. A few months later Mrs. Keziah Kildow was made deputy, and the office removed to the residence of J. W. Kildow, on section 27. In 1862 Mr. Kildow was commissioned postmaster and kept the office until 1867, when he left temporarily, and Fred Ties was made postmaster. He kept the office on section 33, until succeeded by Mrs. Harriet C. Coulter, in January, 1869, who is now (1884) the postmistress. The office is kept at her residence on section 22.

James R. Coulter was born in the town of Green, Richland Co., Ohio, April 1, 1820. His father, David Coulter, was a farmer. At the age of sixteen years James was apprenticed to the trade of bricklayer and general mason work, which trade he followed until twenty-eight years old, then finding his health was failing abandoned it, and became a farmer. He was married in Ohio, Oct. 12, 1846, to Harriet Chapel, who was also a native of the town of Richland, Green county, born Oct. 3, 1819. Two years later he commenced farming, which he followed in Ohio until 1852, when glowing accounts reached him concerning Spring Grove in Green Co., Wis., and he was induced to come here. He arrived May 28, 1852, and bought forty acres of land on section 22, and forty acres on section 28, and made his home on the former, where he has since lived. The land was all new and unimproved excepting four acres cleared. Mr. and Mrs. Coulter have not been blessed with children and have been peculiarly unfortunate with adopted children, for they Sept. 13, 1855, adopted Rossie, daughter of John A. Emminger, of Ohio; she was born May 8, 1849, and was married to Fred Ties, of this town and died in January, 1884. Simon A. Coulter, born Oct. 4, 1852, a son of Mr. Coulter's brother, F. C. Coulter, (who lived in this town from 1855 to 1857) was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Coulter, Feb. 10, 1863, and died Sept. 24, 1876. At the time of the adoption of Simon A., Lavina Jane was adopted, who was born Jan 16, 1861, and was married Nov. 4, 1878, to John N. Lambert, and she died Feb. 3, 1884. F. C. Coulter, the father of these last two children, enlisted in the Union army in an Iowa regiment, and died in the hospital at Keokuk late in 1862. Mrs. James R. Coulter is and has been many years postmistress of Pee Dee post office. The family are much esteemed through the township. Another brother, Thomas M., has made his home with them most of the time since 1855. Mr. Coulter has been justice of the peace two terms and elected the third time but would not serve. He was elected the first time in the spring 1865 and re-elected the spring of 1868, and served till the spring of 1870, and elected the third time, in 1884, but would not serve.

Oakley post office was established 1861. The present postmaster is Frank Miller.

SPRING GROVE CEMETERIES.

The first cemetery located in this town is on section 30. Mrs. Baxter, wife of Daniel Baxter—the pioneer of 1837—was the first buried there. She died in 1845. Electa, daughter of Daniel Baxter, was the next one buried there.

The Washington Cemetery Association was formed in January 1851, with Isaac Farmer, president; Isaac Martin, treasurer; J. G. Martin, secretary. Grounds were selected on section 23. The officers of the association in 1884 were: Daniel Brobst, president; James H. Chapel, secretary; and James R. Coulter, treasurer.

There is a cemetery near and belonging to the Lutheran Church society, on section 28. Louis Klass is buried there.

An old cemetery, used in the days of Clarence, is located on section 2. The place is in an open field and entirely neglected.

A private grave yard is located on the original purchase of B. D. Derrick. Mr. Derrick and his wife, Morris and Levi Derrick, and Mrs. Borland, a daughter of Dr. Springsted, are buried here.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

At Union on section 30, is a well kept ground. Samuel Myers was one among the first buried there.

Another private cemetery known as "Kline's ground," is located on section 29. A man named Tiffany, who used to run the Kline Carding mill, was the first buried there.

MILLS.

Isaac Kline and his son, John, erected the first saw mill in this town on section 20, on the banks of what was then known as Mill creek, but now called Spring creek. Work upon the mill was commenced in the fall of 1837, and the mill commenced operation in May, 1839. Only a limited power could be had here, but the mill did a successful business. It was in operation for twenty-nine years, when, in 1868, it was destroyed by fire.

The next enterprise in the milling line was also by the Kline's, in what is now Oakley. They erected, in 1843, the pioneer carding mill in Green county, and its benefit and utility to the new country can hardly be overestimated. The primitive carding mill has grown to be a woolen manufacturing mill, and is now (1884) owned and operated by John Kelly.

On section 15, on the banks of the same creek, William Bussey erected a saw mill in 1844. This mill was fairly successful and was operated until 1861, when the expense of keeping up the dam caused it to be abandoned.

The Alden Frisbee mill was erected on section 21 in 1846. This mill was in use up to 1860.

In 1876 William H. Freeman built a saw mill at Oakley, putting in a twenty-horse power steam engine. In 1880 he sold to the present owner, J. J. Davenport, who is doing a good business.

The old Kline carding mill was improved by Ebenezer Hilliard, who, after he became owner, added to the power and also to fulling, cloth dressing, etc. Later, George W. Bussey owned the property. He tore down the log building and erected the frame building as it now stands

Bussey sold to Isaac Trombley, who sold to the present proprietor, John Kelly, July 13, 1865. Mr. Kelly has added to the main building, which was 20x30 feet in size, twelve feet each side. He has also replaced nearly all the old machinery with new.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

The first cheese factory in this town was put in operation May 20, 1879, by J. W. Westlake, proprietor. It was run under the dividend plan three years, when he sold out to D. W. Austin. It had the milk of about 400 cows. Austin run the factory one year, buying the milk of the same patrons, when he sold the good-will of the establishment to the Brodhead Dairy Co., and closed up the factory.

A stock company was organized in June, 1883. The stockholders are: P. Atwood, James H. Chapel, P. L. Diedrick, F. H. Derrick, T. P. Stevens, Daniel Brobst, Harriet C. Coulter, Lewis Hooker, O. W. Martin, Robert Wilson, Mrs. R. M. Ten Eyck,, Benjamin Stabler. Mary E. Douglas, Albert Baxter, John Frank, Albert Shaff and Daniel Dunwiddie. The officers are:

P. Atwood, president; F. H. Derrick, treasurer; James H. Chapel, secretary; P. L. Diedrick, salesman; Charles Prentice, cheese maker. The factory is located on the northwest corner of section 11. It will use, this season, an average of 5,000 pounds of milk per day. The factory has been a success.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school house in the town of Spring Grove was erected in 1840 on section 29. During the following winter school was taught by John Herring, and his sister Mercy. John received $10 per month and his sister $8 for their services and they "boarded round."

There are now eight full and one joint school districts in the town of Spring Grove. Their condition is shown by the following statement taken from the records:

No. 1 has a stone school house (not in the best condition) on section 30, valued at $350; fifty-four pupils.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

No. 2 has a frame school house on section 36, valued at $665; forty-three pupils.

No. 3 has a new frame house on section 34, valued at $600; sixty-seven pupils.

No. 4 has a frame house on section 21, valued at $1,000; sixty four pupils.

No. 5 has a stone school house at Clarence on section 2, valued at $600; forty-three pupils.

No. 6 has a frame house on section 5, valued at $600; sixty pupils.

No. 7 has a frame house on section 14, valued at $450; thirty-nine pupils.

No. 9 has a new frame house on section 9, valued at $1,200; thirty-nine pupils.

Joint district No. 8 embraces territory in the towns of Jefferson and Spring Grove. The school house is located in Jefferson. Six pupils belonging to this district reside in Spring Grove.

RELIGIOUS.

The first church in the town was erected for the Methodists, in 1845, and was located on section 30. It was constructed of basswood hewn logs and was known all through this portion of the country as the "Basswood Church." Rev. James McClure was the first circuit rider who preached in this church. It was finally abandoned in 1862.

At this time the Union church was erected on section 30, at a cost of $1,400. Its size was 28x40 feet. The dedicatory services were held by Elder Rolfe. In 1884 the church was being used by the United Brethren and Lutherans on alternate Sabbaths.

The Emanuel Evangelical church is located on section 34, near the State line. This church was built in 1872. It is 64x32 feet in size, has a belfry but no bell, and cost, including furniture, $2,000. The trustees who superintended its erection were Henry Moyer, Frederich Arnsmier and G. W. Zimmerman. In 1884 the trustees were Henry Moyer, G. W. and Henry Zimmerman. The class leaders were G. W. Zimmerman and Henry Moyer. The services here are conducted in the German language.

In 1863 a Lutheran church was erected on section 28, which was commonly called the "Klaas Church," Louis Klaas having been mainly instrumental in its erection. The building is 22x28 feet in size and cost $1,000. In 1884 the pastor was the Rev. Mr. Schnure.

SPRING GROVE RESERVES.

The war veterans of Spring Grove met, pursuant to call, at the residence of J. B. O'Neal, in July, 1882, and resolved that, "Whereas, we, the old soldiers of the War for the Union, residents of the town of Spring Grove, in sacred memory of those years of war, and of our fallen heroes now buried in southern soil and in northern cemeteries, and in their honor; and that we, the survivors, may form a more perfect union,—Resolved, that we form ourselves into a company, by election of officers according to the rules and regulations of war. Resolved, that the company be called the 'Spring Grove Reserves,' that we elect officers annually. Resolved that the first annual meeting be held the first Saturday in June, 1883, at the residence of J. B. O'Neal. Resolved, that we heartily cooperate with the county union in agitating for and assisting in the building of a soldier's monument for the honored dead of Green county." An annual meeting was held June 3, 1883, and following officers were elected: Fred Ties, captain; James H. Chapel, 1st lieutenant; J. B. O'Neal, 2d lieutenant; S. C. Williams, orderly sergeant; J. P. Kildow, 1st sergeant; Jacob Haas, 2d sergeant; A. C. Chapel, 3d sergeant; David Colby, 4th sergeant. The following is the company roll: Allen, A. J.; Brant, Samuel; Coldren, William H.; Colwell, Samuel; Davis, G. W.; Edwards, William; Hall, William; Jackson, Thomas H.; Keller, Jacob; Kline, William; Smith, S. J.; Taylor, William; Young, Isaac W.; Zimmerman, Henry; Allen, E. R.; Allen, D. C.; Diedrick, Daniel; Derrick, T. J.; Davis, James H.; Farmer, Henderson; McKinley, Leroy; Harrington, William.

WAR TIMES.

Considerable excitement occurred over law suits growing out of the chopping down of a liberty pole—which was erected by the Union League in 1863. A few men had hated the sight of that mast ever since it was raised, and under the plea of safety of people attending the union church services, in front of which the pole was standing, caused it to be cut down. An intense excitement followed. The war feeling with its hot feeling for and against was revived. Suits were commenced. The offending parties were beaten in the suits.

OLD VILLAGE OF CLARENCE.

The village plat was located on land on section 2, which was first settled by William Sherry, in the spring of 1841. In the fall of that year he was joined by his wife, and her father, Dr. Peter Springsted, with his family, consisting of his wife and eight children; also James Sherry, a single man, brother of William. Two years later Dr. Springsted moved to section 4, and improved a farm, which is now occupied by Mrs. Mary Douglas. The doctor and his family moved from this town to Decatur several years later and died there. None of the family are in this town at this time. William Sherry built a house and a blacksmith shop. Both families lived in this house. Sherry in 1845 sold to A. D. Tenny and settled on the place where Aug. Giese now lives. He left the town in about 1855.

Soon after, A. D. Tenney who came from New Hampshire, bought out Sherry. He sold an interest in the property to B. J. Tenny, who came from Beloit (they were not of kin). some time after this A. D. Tenney platted a part of the land and sold lots. B. J. Tenny opened a small store. The place was known in those days as Tenneyville, and was later, in honor of Squire Derrick, called Clarence, the name of a town in which he had resided in state of New York. H. C. Green was the next to open business. He built a bedstead and chair factory, with steam power, and operated it until 1856. When he went to Monroe the business stopped.

Caleb Knowles and several sons came from Winnebago Co., Ill., in 1853. Mr. Knowles was father-in-law of A. D. Tenney by his second marriage. His first wife died soon after he came here. Two of the sons, Horatio and C. C. Knowles, went to Kansas in 1859. C. C. Knowles formerly owned the Austin farm. After the war the father and the rest of the family went to Kansas. A. D. Tenney and his family joined a spiritualist community at Harmony Springs, Ark., in 1859. He later died in Kansas.

John B. Sawyer came from Decatur in 1853 and bought produce. He now lives in Brodhead. Mr. Sawyer, A. D. Tenney and Horatio Knowles succeeded to the trade formerly carried on by B. J. Tenny, and owned the hotel, blacksmith shop and store. Morris Derrick, a brother of Squire Derrick, at one time kept a small stock of groceries and liquors. Myron Halstead in 1854 bought out Sawyer, Tenney & Knowles. He was the last merchant of Clarence. Upon the building of the railroad, he moved his stock to Brodhead. Dr. Towne, now of Brodhead, came to Clarence as his clerk. C. A. Warner bought the blacksmith shop in 1854, and worked there one year. He now lives on section 1. He sold to Storrs Smith, who now follows the same business in Albany. Mr. Gregory bought out Smith and closed the shop about 1859. In 1855 Thomas Martin opened a harness shop and worked two years. The old hotel building and barn have been destroyed by fire. The post-office was discontinued in 1857.

OAKLEY.

This little hamlet was formerly called Spring Grove. It is located on section 30. This place originated with the erection of a carding mill by Isaac Kline in 1843. The first business was opened by A. J. Hoffman, in 1847. Many changes have taken place among those who sold goods in the one store building in the place. But among those who have been in trade here are remembered, John and Daniel Hauver, Mott Harrington, George Aurand and his brother.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

In 1884 Frank Miller was the only merchant. Samuel Mattison, the oldest in years and in service of any blacksmith in Green county, is the blacksmith of the place. He commenced here before the war, and has worked for over fifty years in iron, and most of the time in this town.

SPRING GROVE IN THE WAR.

[BY THOMAS A. JACKSON.]

Out of a voting population of about 250, she sent 100 soldiers to the war from first to last. The following military organizations were represented by her soldiers: The 3d, 13th, 18th, 22d, 36th, 38th and 46th Infantry regiments; the 1st, 2d and 3d Cavalry regiments, and the 1st Heavy Artillery regiment.

3d regiment Infantry—Daniel Aughenbaugh, Joseph Boyer, Robert W. Patten and S. S. Jackson, regimental band.

13th regiment Infantry—Ransom Condon, Ira Cleveland, Reuben H. Chapel, Austin C. Chapel, E. S. Derrick, W. Keifer, John V. Martin, W. S. Meanor, John Penn, W. H. Pomeroy, Cyrus Robinson, William H. Shaff and Charles Vanburen.

18th regiment Infantry—James S. Alexander, William Barnhouse, Mahlon J. Bussey, Benjamin Butcher, Clinton Condon, James D. Davis, Benjamin S. Davis, George W. Davis, Theodore J. Derrick, John A. Farmer, Henderson Farmer, A. M. Kasson, Isaiah Kirby, Wilson Olds, Joseph L. Show, Frederick Teis, Chester W. Williams, Thomas A. Jackson, S. S. Jackson, Alexander Jackson and Isaac W. Young.

22d regiment Infantry—William S. Newman, Joseph Alexander, Andrew Boyer, Fred Baker, Josiah Clawson, Allen Davis, Zachariah F. Davis, Joseph J. Davis, James F. Elliott, Peter Feathers, Henry Feathers, Jeff. Feathers, William H. Harrington, Charles Mattison, A. J. Mitchell, James Stahlrucker and George Willis.

36th regiment Infantry—Avory S. Cole.

25th regiment Infantry—Nelson Rice.

38th regiment Infantry—Samuel Brandt, S. B. Caldwell, John Donyes, Oliver Gill, Isaac Kline, Philip Kilwine, Jacob Keller, George Newcomer, Joseph Newcomer, Francis Saur and William Taylor.

46th regiment Infantry—E. R. Allen, James H. Chapel, Henry Howard, Jacob Haas, Thomas Klumb, Thomas J. Meanor, W. A. Meanor, Isaac N. Martin, I. C. Martin, Samuel Smith, Isaac Trimble, R. B. Fowler and Henry Zimmerman.

1st regiment Cavalry—John B. O'Neal, John Meir, David Beaty, Warren Bates, William A. Garrison, William Gill, John Stabler and L. Shores.

2d regiment Cavalry—John Butcher.

3d regiment Cavalry—DeWitt C. Allen.

1st Heavy Artillery—Joshua P. Kildow, Lovel Matthews, Thomas J. Ostrander, James Ostrander and S. Clark Williams.

12th Battery—William Rice and Nathan Rice.

There were a number of Spring Grove soldiers in the war who were credited to other towns on account of local bounty and other causes at time of enlistment, whose names we cannot now get at, and there may be here and there a name enumerated in the above list as credited to Spring Grove that is claimed elsewhere; but from the town records and our own personal knowledge of enlistments, we believe the above account to be substantially correct so far as it goes. We are satisfied there are some names of Spring Grove soldiers we are unable to get at, as some enlisted in Illinois regiments and were credited to that State, whose names do not appear on our home records. Among the list of names given above, the names of Benjamin S. Davis of company B, 18th Wisconsin Infantry, and Zachariah P. Davis of company K, 22d regiment Infantry, was killed in battle—the former in a bayonet charge at Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863, and the latter in the same manner at Resaca, Ga., during Sherman's Atlanta campaign in the summer of 1864.

Of those who died of wounds and disease, were Ransom Condon and John Penn of the 13th Wisconsin, and William Barnhouse, John A. Farmer, Isaiah Kirby, Joseph L. Show and Chester W. Williams, of the 18th Wisconsin, company B; and George Newcomer of the 38th Wisconsin. There may be some others, but we have no knowledge who they were, if any.

Of those who were wounded in battle and recovered, and are still living in Spring Grove and vicinity, we give the names of George W. Davis, Mahlon I. Bussey, Frederick Teis, Henderson Farmer, J. W. Young and James D. Davis, all of company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and all wounded in the charge at Jackson, Miss., on the 14th day of May, 1863, except James D. Davis, who was wounded in Alabama with five others of company B from other parts of the county, including the names of George S. Loucks of Brodhead, who was shot through the body, the ball piercing the lungs; and J. R. Knapp, since dead; William H. Denson and George W. Webb, belonging to other towns. There are doubtless many other matters of interest pertaining to Spring Grove in the war deserving a historical record or mention, that for want of correct knowledge and information, I am not able to give. Of company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, which I had the honor to command until about the close of the war, I would mention the names of Hiram E. Bailey and William H. Spencer, killed at Shiloh; John C. Bryant, killed at Corinth; James M. Carpenter, at Vicksburg, all of Green county. Of those wounded in the different engagements through which they passed during the war, and of those who died of wounds and disease from other parts of the county, for lack of a correct record of the same, we will not try to give it. There were a good many of them. At the close of the war honorable promotions were conferred on several old veterans. Commissions of captain to Henderson Farmer, and that of lieutenants to Frederick Teis and Peter Vanorman, and non-commissioned appointments of sergeants to George W. Davis and one or two others.

RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY DAYS.

[BY J. W. KILDOW.]

To the Union Publishing Company, of Springfield, Ill.

SIRS:—In compliance of your request for me to give you a statement of my early recollections of, and the part that I have taken therein, of the early settlement of Green county, and especially of the town of Spring Grove, in said county. I make the following:

In October, 1836, John Chadwick and Thomas Woodle, of Fayette Co., Penn., (the county in which I was raised) influenced by an article that appeared in the "Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," contributed to that paper by Elder Brunson, (a Methodist preacher stationed at Prairie du Chien) and copied extensively in the eastern papers, giving such glowing accounts of the fertility of the soil, and other advantages of northwestern Illinois, and southwestern Wisconsin, concluded to take a tour of observations to this country, and if they found it as represented, they would make it their future home. They did so, and each of them entered a quarter section of land. Chadwick entered his on section 2, in what is now the town of Jefferson, and Woodle, on section 35, now town of Sylvester. Upon their return home, (like the spies of old, that were sent out to view the promised land) they declared that the "half had not been told." This caused an endemic western fever. Chadwick's son James, and myself falling victims thereto. So in January, 1837, James Chadwick and myself entered into an agreement of partnership, (verbally) to come [go] out here and follow the millwrighting business, (that being my profession) and if we could not find employment at that business, to follow that of carpentering. So we set about making arrangements for an early start in the spring. In the meantime the elder Chadwick made arrangements with us, that we should erect for him, on his land in this county, a cabin house, as he intended to move out here as soon as he could dispose of his property there. By this time three other young men of the neighborhood, to-wit: Daniel Goodwin, William Hurlbut and Joseph Reed, concluded to accompany us, (all of us just entering upon our majority). So about the middle of February the elder Mr. Chadwick went to Bridgeport, a thriving town on the Monongahela river, sixty miles, by water, above Pittsburg, to make arrangements with the officers of the steamer, Empire, then building at that place, for our transportation to St. Louis, (her point of destination). The officers enjoined Mr. Chadwick to have us on hand on the 23d of that month, as the boat would positively sail on that day. So on the 22d of February, 1837, in company with James Chadwick, Daniel Goodwin, William Hurlbut and Joseph Reed, I left my native home in Pennsylvania, arriving at Bridgeport that night. Upon our arrival we found that the boat was not completed, which detained us at that point several days. But we at last got off, and arrived at Pittsburg, where the steamer was to take on her furniture. But on arriving at that place, the boat's furniture was not ready, (the furniture was made at that place). After waiting a number of days, for the boat to start, we became restless under delays and demanded of the officers a return of our passage money, but after repeated promises of starting "to-morrow," and after as many failures to get off, the officers finally made arrangements with the steamer, Loyal Hannah, and we were transferred to that steamer. The next day after our transfer to the latter steamer, we got started. The boat ran down to Wheeling, Va., stopping there a number of days awaiting the arrival of the western members of Congress, (who, in those days, traveled from Washington to their western homes, by stage, to Wheeling, from thence by river steamers to points on said river, nearest their residences). But on the 10th of March, we got started from that place, having on board the great Daniel Webster, (who, that year, made his great western tour), and a number of other western notables, including the notorious G. W. Jones, delegate from this, then Territory, who acted as second for H. A. Wise, of Virginia, in the duel between Wise and Billey, which resulted in the killing of Billey. The boat having to stop, at all principal places to give the great Daniel an opportunity to address the people on the political topics of the day, but more especially the great principles of the whig party. At St. Louis, we took passage on the steamer, Astoria, for Galena, but when arriving at the mouth of Small Pox creek, the river at the head of the island was gorged with ice, so that the boat could not proceed, and not knowing when the gorge would break, we left the boat and proceeded on foot to Galena, at which place we arrived about noon the day after leaving the boat. At Galena we parted company with Goodwin, Hurlbut and Reed, they going to Mineral Point and Chadwick and myself, going (coming) to this (Green) county, leaving Galena about 2 P. M., stopping over the first night out at White Oak springs. The next morning Chadwick was quite unwell, attributing his sickness to the rancid butter that he had eaten for supper, which out-ranked any officer that was in the northwest at that time. We concluded not to take breakfast at that place. Thinking that a morning's walk of a few miles would improve Chadwick's appetite, we started, intending to take breakfast at Gratiot, which they told us was on our route, about five miles ahead, but not knowing, at that time, that two log cabins and a stable covered with straw, constituted a western village, we passed through it without stopping, wending our way across almost a trackless prairie without seeing a habitation, until we came to Wolf creek, a small tributary of the West Pecatonica, where we had to stop over night, as our next stopping would be ten miles ahead. At this place, we found two cabins and a diminutive grist mill. One of the cabins was occupied by the millers and his family, which consisted of a man by the name of Curtis and himself. The other was occupied by a man and his family, by the name of Hastings, who kept entertainment and bad whisky. After supper I went over to the mill (which was located on the opposite side of the stream from the tavern) to take a look at its working machinery, which I found to be of the most primitive order. In conversation with the miller, he told me he had bargained his mill to a man from the east whom he expected to take possession next June, and in case he sold, he intended to erect, in company with a man by the name of Gillet, a more pretentious one on Richland creek, a stream that heads in Green county, near Monroe, this mill site being at a point on said creek where Orangeville, in Stephenson Co., Ill., is now located. At the mill was a customer from Rock Grove, having a grist to grind, who said he was going to return home next day if the mill could get his grist ground out by morning, and we could accompany him as he had to go the same route, an invitation which we gladly accepted. At this place an incident occurred which for a short time affrighted us badly. On my return to the tavern from the mill I found an acquisition of some three or four to our company, who were drinking and playing cards, and I made up my mind that the place was a tough one. Chadwick being tired and unwell, had retired early. Among the guests was a man by the name of Armstrong, who resided near Wiota. Though somewhat set up, he was not taking part in their card playing. With him I soon got into conversation. He had come into the country prior to the Black Hawk War; had taken quite an active part in the war; was very communicative and inquisitive. In reply to his questions I told him where we were from; where we were going to; what our professions were; and that we had come to the country to build mills and houses, but, I continued, from the appearance of the country and the quality of the timber, (which up to this place we found to consist only of the veriest scrub burr and white oak varieties) we had a good show of starving in that line. He replied that he expected that we would have to rough it for a few years at least. As the conversation began to lag, I retired to bed, but not to sleep, for I must confess that if I ever had the blues it was at this time; but in time tired nature succumbed and I fell into a sound sleep, to be awakened by Chadwick punching me in the ribs with his elbow and whispering my attention to the fact that a person was removing the clapboards from the roof near where our bed stood. In a few moments I was completely awake. I silently raised myself on one elbow to watch the movements of the man, who, by this time, had got through into our room; and, after standing awhile and looking around, apparently in an amazed condition, he started a few steps in the direction of our bed, stopped, looked around, finally turned and walked to the other end of the room and threw himself down on some old clothes that lay in the corner of the room. By this time I was in a profuse sweat, having nothing in our possession with which to ward off an attack if the man had intended one, but I soon came to the conclusion that the man meant us no harm, as in a few minutes he was in a sound sleep and snoring loud enough to wake the seven sleepers. In the morning we told the landlord of the circumstance. He immediately went up stairs, waked the man up and brought him down. The man proved to be one of the parties of the night before, who, having filled up with bad whisky, had started for his shanty some three or four miles away; had got bewildered, and had wandered around the greater part of the night; had finally in his wanderings got back to the tavern, where (he said) he had thumped on the door to wake up the landlord, and not succeeding, concluded to gain an entrance in the manner above described. In the morning we started in company with our guide, traveling some fifteen miles or more to Brewster ferry, on the Pecatonica river, where was kept a small boat for the purpose of crossing. Here we found a small improvement on the south side of the river, while the dwelling stood on the north side. Here in crossing we had to (after drawing the wagon as near the water as possible) separate the oxen from the wagon, ferry the oxen over, then return for the wagon, which we had to run on the boat by hand; after crossing the wagon, hitching on the oxen and pulling the wagon up the river bank. On reaching the high prairie, east of where Oneco now stands, we separated from our guide, he pointing out to us the direction we should take to reach New Mexico, a place laid out the summer before by Jacob Andrick, intending it for the county seat of Green county, (as there was a movement on foot at that time to have a new county laid out), and containing at that time one house. At this house we inquired for a man by the name of William Woodle, (that being our point of destination), a son of the elder Thomas Woodle, who some years previous had moved to Illinois, but in 1836 had moved to this county, and had settled three miles east of where Monroe now stands. Mrs. Andrick could not tell us where he resided; had heard the name; thought he lived east of there; telling us to go about a mile northeast where we would find a store and they could inform us where he lived. After traveling the distance and direction indicated by Mrs. Andrick, we came to a log house in which was kept by a man by the name of Smith a small grocery store with a sprinkling of dry goods. Smith at the time of our arrival was shaking lustly with the ague, the first case of ague I had ever seen. At this place we learned that it was three miles to Woodle's, and being tired and hungry, having eaten nothing since early morn, we concluded to stop over night, which we did at Joseph Paine's, who, at that time, resided near the store, and kept entertainment, arriving at this place on the evening of March 30, 1837. After supper we walked over to the store, where we found several persons discussing the county seat question—some congratulating Mr. Paine and some Mr. Andrick, on having the county seat. I learned from their conversation that, in addition to Mr. Aridrick's town, which he named New Mexico, Mr. Paine had laid out a town, which he called Richland City, as a competitor to Mr. Andrick's, neither of them having their plats recorded, as required by law. At the first session of the first legislative assembly, which convened at Belmont, in December, 1836, in the bill defining the boundaries of the new county was a section declaring that New Mexico should be the county seat. Mr. Paine, finding that his point could not succeed, proposed to Mr. Andrick to purchase a half-interest in his (Andrick) sites but Mr. Andrick was obdurate, and refused to sell, so Mr. Paine slipped off to Mineral Point and had his town recorded New Mexico. Now, in those days the mail arrived at this point when the mail carrier came; provided, he did not let it wash away when crossing the streams of water on his route, and the carrier would arrive once a week when the water in the streams would let him; hence, at this particular time they had not had a mail for over a month, hence they had not heard anything definite about the county seat question since the passage of the bill. The next morning on our way to Woodle's we met young Thomas Woodle, a brother of William, who was at that time making his home with William. He said he was going to the store on an errand and proposed to us to accompany him, which we did. At the store there were several persons, and among them a big strapping Indian, who proposed to run a foot race with Woodle for the treats. Woodle accepted, the distance they were to run stepped off, the judges chosen, and the racers started. The judges decided that Woodle was the winner, but Mr. Indian refused to treat, claiming that he understood it that the one coming out ahead was to buy the whisky. Arriving at Woodle's we concluded to rest over Sunday, visiting with the Woodle's. The next Monday after our arrival, in company with the two Woodle's and Joseph Smith, (a former brother-in-law of the Woodle's,) we started to look up the Chadwick land, which was five miles east of Woodle's. After finding it (which we did by means of the section and quarter stakes which the prairie fires had not yet destroyed,) and selecting a location for a cabin, we returned to the store to procure an outfit for housekeeping, which (with us) consisted of two coffee pots, two tin pans or platters, a frying pan, two tin cups, one empty oyster can, two Indian blankets, (as they were named,) one pound of coffee, a few pounds of flour, and ten pounds of bacon, (the two latter articles we procured from Daniel S. Sutherland as they was not to be had at the store.) We returned to the land and commenced operations by first putting up a small shanty to live in while building a more pretentious one. The shanty we built out of logs, by splitting them; and for the want of better material we roofed it with brush. Having got the shanty completed the second day, we moved into it and began cutting logs for the cabin. The second night after moving into our shanty there came up a snow storm, snow falling to the depth of six inches. Our roofing not being close enough to turn the snow, in the morning we found ourselves under a covering of three or four inches of snow; the weather turning quite cold and having about enough logs cut for a cabin we concluded to abandon the shanty for the present and go back to Mr. Paine's and try and find some way of getting our traps from Galena, as we needed some of the tools, as at that time we did not know how to build cabins without tools. Upon our arrival at Mr. Paine's (or I should rather say at the store) we found a Mr. Palmer or Parmer, who said that himself and another man (I think Mr. Lutteral) was going to start in a few days to Galena with a load of lead mineral, and was to bring back a part of load of groceries for Mr. Smith, the merchant. Chadwick proposed to him to bring out our traps, which he consented to do, provided Chadwick would accompany them, saying he did not know what them d—n steamboat men had done with them tools, and was not going to spend time hunting them up; and as there was no other alternative Chadwick consented to go. In the mean time I agreed with Mr. Paine to work on his tavern house which he was about erecting on his town site to be used as tavern and court house, until Chadwick returned. But as Mr. Sutherland was to boss the job and lay out the work, and as Mr. Sutherland could not commence work until the following week, I had a few days of leisure which I improved by taking a stroll down Richland creek to look up any mill sites that I might find, and especially the one mentioned by Mr. Curtis in my conversation with him at Wolf creek. On my return to Paine's, the next Monday morning, I found Mr. Sutherland on hand, and I commenced work on Paine's tavern and court house, the first frame building I believe erected in Green county. In a few days after I commenced work on this building a man by the name of Burrett came to where we were working, and after a short conversation with Sutherland inquired of him if he knew of any millwrights in his (this) neighborhood, saying that himself and a Mr. Gray of Mineral Point had entered into partnership to build a saw mill on Whiteside branch, a small tributary of east Pecatonica stating that a Mr. Armstrong (my communicative friend at Wolf creek) had informed him that a couple of millwrights a few days previous had passed Wolf creek on their way to New Mexico. Mr. Sutherland pointing to me replied, "I presume that man is the one you are looking for." I accompanied Burrett home, took a level of his mill-site, and agreed with him to build his mill the coming summer. Barrett agreeing to let us know when he got ready to begin, as he had to build a cabin at the site to accommodate the hands employed, as his residence was at least a mile distant, and the hands would have to "bach" it. On my return to Paine's I again went to work on his house. On the return of Chadwick from Galena, (having been gone at least ten days,) we resumed work on the cabin. On the afternoon of the following Saturday we went to Paine's (which we usually did every Saturday to stay over Sunday except when we staid at the cabin and took a stroll over the prairie and through the timber adjacent thereto) where we found a young man from Ohio by the name of John Crawford, a cousin of Chadwick, who had heard of our coming through Chadwick's folks, and had come out to take a look at the promised land. Crawford agreed to stay and work with us during the summer, going with us the following Monday to work on the cabin. A few days. after Crawford's initiation to our manner of life and mode of living, occurred one of those laughable incidents which materially assists in driving away that lonesomeness which I believe is the common inheritance of all or nearly all early pioneers of western life, who having left the advantages, pleasure and busy scenes of civilized life, and having settled in those western wilds, miles, miles from any human habitation, save that of the wild Indians, to hew out for himself and family a home. The incident was this. On one of our frequent visits to New Mexico we visited the cabin of Hiram Rust and Jarvis Rattan, located near where Monroe now is. We saw them turning their pancakes which they were cooking in their frying pan. After the pancake was sufficiently baked on the first side they would take hold of the handle of the pan, would give it a few vigorous rotary motions sufficient to loosen and give the pancake a certain rotary impetus, would suddenly change the motion of the pan to a vertical one by which means they would flop the pancake bottom side up to complete its cooking. After seeing them do it,, we would for the purpose of amusement after the days work was done, practice this slight of hand performance. Chadwick in a short time became quite an adept at it. After Crawford's arrival, Chadwick would often perform it for the purpose of showing Crawford (as he said) what could be done. One morning while Chadwick was baking pancakes for breakfast, Crawford who was near-sighted got on the opposite side of the fire, squatted down on his haunches for the purpose (as he said) of seeing how Chadwick did it. Chadwick mistaking the degree of baking given the pancake, when he undertook to flop it over, the pancake instead of coming over doubled up and falling upon the rim of the pan, bounded into Crawford's face, but happily for him the pancake was not very hot, so that he was but little burnt; but it made Crawford terrible mad and he was for whipping Chadwick thinking that Chadwick had done it intentionally, but upon Chadwick's solemn protestation of innocence and myself keeping in between them for a few minutes, Crawford's good nature (and he had a good share of it) returning the thing passed off pleasantly, but it gave us a full half hour's good laughing. The cabin completed we gathered up our traps taking them to Woodle's. Next day went to Paine's where we worked on Paine's house two or three days, when Mr. Burrett came after us to commence work on his mill. Arriving at the cabin we found four hands employed in its completion, whom Burrett had engaged to work on the dam and mill pit. Here we had to "bach" it and although we, us millwrights, were exempt from any cooking, as Barrett in his contract had to furnish the cook, but often did I think of and endorse the sentiment of the miner when lying in his bunk and looking at his partner getting their breakfast, exclaimed: "Joe, there has an idea struck me." "The devil," replied Joe. "I would rather believe that lightning would strike you, but since you have been blest with a stroke pray tell us what it is." "Well," replied Jim, "while I have been lying here and looking at you trying to fork that meat out of the fire where you spilled it, by upsetting the frying pan in which it was cooking, while you was trying to get them potatoes out of the ashes where you put them to roast, what a great invention woman was." After we had been at work on the mill a short time we received word that the elder Mr. Chadwick had moved to the country and was settled in the cabin and requested us to pay them a visit, so on the following Saturday we started on foot a distance of twenty miles to visit them; the day being one of those cool, drizzling, rainy days in May, which frequently occurs in this country. When getting within a mile or a mile and a half of the Chadwick cabin we came to a cabin in which a man by the name of Joseph Woodle and his family was living, who had come from Pennsylvania, and who had built his cabin since we had left. We stopped to have a hand-shake, and it being near evening they insisted that we should take supper with them, which we did, as we had had nothing to eat since morning. By the time supper was over the sun was down. We started to find Chadwick's, but instead of going around the timber (both of the cabins being in the edge of the timber, the one occupied by Woodle on the north edge and the one by Chadwick on the south) as we had been in the habit of doing, we concluded that we could save time and distance by going through it, but in doing so we missed the cabin, and when we came to the prairie we became bewildered and did not know which way to go, as by that time it had got very dark, but like all lost persons each had his course marked out, and each one knew his course was right, so in turn each would lead awhile until we became satisfied that each one was lost, and coming to a precipice (over which Chadwick fell) we concluded to call a halt and put up for the night, but as our clothes were thoroughly wet and the night cold, and having no means of making a fire we could not stop traveling. So selecting a large white oak tree (we did not know at that time that it was white oak) on the top of the bluff we walked around it all night, and I thought it the longest night ever made. Before leaving it I took my knife and made a peculiar mark in the bark so that if I should see it again I would know it. When daylight came we concluded to travel west as we were satisfied that we were east of Richland timber, and if we could strike that timber we could find some settler, but as it was still very cloudy and as we were lost we could not tell which way west lay, but determined to strike out and try to find a section stake which would decide the course for us to take. After traveling a short distance in a southeast course we came to the section stake at the southeast corner of section 16, in what is now the town of Spring Grove. We then started west through the timber and on coming out on the prairie at the southwest corner of Spring Grove timber we came across John Kline, who had a few days previous moved to the country from Laporte Co., Ind., and who at the time was encamped in his wagons on section 29; his father having the fall previous entered land on that section. Kline at that time was going across to Richland timber to try to find an old neighbor of his by the name of Harcourt, who the previous year had moved to the country and settled somewhere near Richland creek. We told him how we were lost and had lain out all night, and inquired if he could direct us to a resident by the name of Chadwick who had just moved into the country. He said that he could, as his wife's uncle, a man by the name of Riley, had been out and had entered land at a grove a few miles north of us and that his (Riley's) land joined that of lands owned by that name (Chadwick). We went with Kline to the divide between the waters of Spring and Richland creeks where he pointed out to us the timber grove where his uncle Riley had made his entry. Kline finding out that we were millwrights said that his father and himself intended to build a saw mill the coming fall, and that his father intended to bring a millwright from Indiana, but if we would do the work he would induce his father to leave the millwright at his home. We arrived at the cabin that afternoon, and found Mr. Chadwick's folks much excited, as Woodle, the man we had taken supper with the night before, had come to Chadwick's that fore-noon to visit with us, and inquiring for us was told that we were at work on Burrett's mill, when he related the circumstances of our leaving his residence the night previous about sundown. Mrs. Chadwick insisted that her husband and Woodle should immediately start out to look us up as she believed that we had either perished or were scalped by the Indians, as a number of them had passed in sight of the cabin the previous day; the latter she insisted being the more reasonable conclusion, Mr. Chadwick and Woodle, taking their guns with them, went to the highlands southwest of the cabin and saw us ascending on our way to the cabin from the south, all parties arriving at the cabin nearly at the same time. We completed the Burrett & Gray saw mill the latter part of September, as the work was materially delayed for the want of the irons, as they had ordered them from St. Louis and from some unexplained cause they did not arrive for two months after being ordered. After the completion of the saw mill, we commenced work on the Kline saw mill, the first mill erected in the town of Spring Grove. After getting out the timber for the mill, cold weather setting in, we suspended work on the mill and went to Galena for the purpose of getting work in some of the shops, but failing in this we hired to a contractor to assist in getting out timber for some buildings to be erected in that place the next spring. We went upon an island in the Mississippi river, a few miles below that place to obtain the timber. After we had got out a quantity of timber, the sheriff, at the instance of the county commissioners, came to the island and attached it, the commissioners claiming that the timber belonged to the county, under an act of Congress giving to the different counties all the unsold overflowed lands lying within the county. Again being without employment, we concluded to take a stroll through Iowa, finally turning up in Burlington, where the second session of the first legislative assembly was in session (Wisconsin and Iowa being at that time under the same Territorial government). Upon our arrival at that place we called upon our representative (William Boyls) from this county, who informed us that he had introduced a resolution in the assembly that would settle our county seat question, and kindly invited us to call in the next day, which we did in the afternoon, when we found Mr. Boyls' resolution under consideration. The resolution, in brief, was one defining what was the intention of the former session in locating the county seat of Green county, declaring that the intention of the legislature was to locate the county seat at the point known as Andrick Town. Now, to a novice like myself, I did not think there would be any opposition to its passage, but I was mistaken, for it met with a most determined opposition from a number of members. Finally the measure was disposed of by a member moving an amendment to strike out the words "Andrick's Town" and insert "New Mexico," which prevailed, thus leaving the question as it was. From Burlington we went to St. Louis, and upon the opening of navigation in the spring we returned to Green county and again commenced work on Kline's mill. While at work on the mill, in one of our strolls through the timber, we came across the tree that we had tramped around the greater part of the night in May, 1837; it stood on the bluff, near the center of section 16. After the partial completion of the mill there arose a misunderstanding between the Kline's and a neighbor by the name of Judkins about the water flow of Judkins' land. Work on the mill was suspended. We then went to work on a small grist mill for Dr. Vanoaljah, on Cedar creek, in Illinois, and afterwards on a saw mill on Richland creek. In October, this year (1838), I was taken down with the typhoid fever at Mr. Chadwick's, where I lay a number of weeks, hovering between life and death, the doctors and everybody else, including myself, believing that I could not possibly live. But through a vigorous constitution, and the kind care and attention that I received from Mother Chadwick, I finally recovered; and here let me record, for the gratification and encouragement of her descendants, that if there ever was a mother, Mother Chadwick proved to be one to me at that time, and as long as memory holds its sway will I ever remember with gratitude with what care, sympathy and patience she administered to my wants on that occasion. But that is long years ago, and Mother Chadwick has long since passed to her final rest and reward, while I am left here to struggle on only a few years longer, at best. After my recovery we built a small house and barn for Levi Wilcox, some three or four miles south of where Cedarville now stands. in March, this year (1839), having learned of the death of my father, I concluded to visit my old home in Pennsylvania, but being detained so much in Galena and other points on the river between there and St. Louis, on account of low stage of water in the river and the sinking of the steamer on which I had taken passage, I concluded to return, having, previous to starting, agreed to build a barn for Mr. Chadwick the coming summer. I returned in May, and we finished and started the Kline saw mill that month, as, previous to that time, Kline and Judkins had settled their difficulty, and Judkins had deeded to Kline a right of flow. After starting the mill we went to work on Chadwick's barn. And here I must relate a circumstance that shows what manner of man Jacob Ly Brand was, who at that time kept a variety store in New Mexico. While working on the roof of the barn I broke my hatchet. The shingles for the roofing being made out of hard wood, and no pains being taken to joint the edges, it was impossible to lay even a fair roof without some means of straightening their edges. It's true, we might have fastened them in the bench vise and taken a plane or draw-shave to them, but this was a feat that I felt no disposition to undertake, so I went to New Mexico to buy one of Ly Brand, knowing that he kept them on hand. After looking them over and inquiring the price, (which I thought was enormous,) I asked Ly Brand if his price was not pretty steep. "Why," he replied, "do you think it too much?" I said I thought that it was, whereupon he laid the hatchet back on the shelf. I then went to where some carpenters were at work on a building near by, thinking to borrow one, but they having none they could spare, I went back to the store, intending to buy. Upon going in I said to Ly Brand that I guessed I would have to take that hatchet. He replied that I could not have it. "Why not?" I said. He replied, "Did you not say that the price was too much? And I don't intend any person shall buy any article of me that says the price is too much." I then related to him the circumstance of my breaking the hatchet, and the necessity of my having one. He said, "Oh, I will loan it to you," which he did. After I got through using it I returned it, proposing to pay him for the use of it, but he refused to take anything for the use of it. After completing the barn we went south of Cedar creek and built a house and small barn for Dr. Vanvalzah, on his farm, he having previously sold his mill property on Cedar creek to Mr. Neightic. The winter of 1839—40 we ran the Wilcox saw mill, on Richland creek. In the summer of 1840 we built a house near Cedarville for Reason Wilcox, and a barn at Walnut Grove for John Kleckner. In October, of this year, Chadwick took unto himself a life partner, marrying a daughter of Deacon David Davis; and I, feeling unwilling, if not unable, to fight the battle of life single-handed, concluded to take a partner, choosing for this purpose a sister of Chadwick's wife, and no time throughout our married life have I regretted the choice I—or rather, I should say she made, for in my opinion, in this matter of marrying the girls have it all their own way, for Shakespeare, or some other person who has had experience in these matters, truly says that—"When a woman will, she will,

And you may depend on it;
But when she won't, she won't,
And that's the end on it."

The result of this double marriage was the dissolution of partnership between Chadwick and myself—a partnership that had lasted nearly three years, and during all this time, so far as I know, there was no a harsh word or unkind feeling existed between us. Shortly after marrying, Chadwick settled on and opened up a farm on section 22, in now the town of Jefferson, this county, and myself on section 19, town of Spring Grove. In the spring of 1841 I built a house for Samuel Myers, at the then saw mill of Kline & Myers (formerly Kline's mill), on section 20, being the first frame built in the town. In the summer, fall and winter of this year, I did a number of jobs in the neighborhood, laying floors, (which formerly consisted of hewed puncheons,) making doors, putting in additional windows, etc., in houses, as the lumber for that purpose could be obtained at the saw mill. In the summer of 1842 I built a barn for John Kline on section 29, now owned by Hugh Alexander, the first frame barn erected in the town, and in the fall I assisted in the building of a store house for John Fisher, in Rock Grove. The winter of 1842—3 was an unprecedented hard one, snow falling to the depth of one foot or more, on the 12th of November, and by March had accumulated to fully three feet, and continued to lay on until in April. The month of March was terrible cold, the thermometer at Rock Grove ranging from one to six degrees below zero every morning throughout the month, except the last morning, when it commenced thawing, and a great number of cattle throughout the country died from exposure. In the spring of 1843 I built the carding mill on Spring creek for Kline & Myers. After completing the carding mill, I was employed by a Boston company to run a grist mill at Winslow; they having erected one there in 1841. I ran the mill until the following May. Returning to Spring Grove, I built the second saw mill on Spring creek, on section 15, for William Bussey. This summer (1844) was a terrible wet one, raining almost continuously from March to September. Work on the mill was much delayed on account of the rain and high water in the creek. We laid the foundation timbers for the mill three different times, and as often having them washed out. At one time some of them being washed two miles below. The wheat and oats crops were nearly ruined by the continuous wet weather. In the fall of this year I built myself a new residence, on section 30, being the second frame house built in the town. This winter (1844—45) the residents of Spring Grove and adjacent country petitioned the post office department for a post office to be named Spring Grove, and located at my residence and the appointment of myself postmaster. This request the department refused to grant, on the ground that the office asked for was not on any established mail route. The residents then entered into an arrangement whereby each one was in turn to carry the mail from Monroe and Rock Grove, the nearest post offices to this point, and through the kindly intercession of Mr. Walworth, then postmaster at Monroe, I was granted permission to handle the mail and account to Mr. Walworth (a kind of side office). In 1847 or 1848 Congress established a mail route from Rockford, by way of Monroe to Mineral Point, and the office was included in the lettings, and I was commissioned postmaster. This office I held until the summer of 1857, when I resigned, as I intended to change my residence to a more easterly part of the town, for the purpose of farming, as I had become tired of carpentering, having to be absent so much from my family, a profession that I have since followed, except at short intervals, when I would starve out at it, and was forced to resort to the tools to replenish my larder. Upon my resigning the post office the patrons of the office petitioned for the appointment of Matt Herrington as my successor. Herrington & Hauver at that time, were in trade at what is now called Oakley. The department referred the application to Alpheus Goddard, then postmaster at Monroe (that being the rule of the department at the time). Mr. Goddard being an uncompromising democrat and a firm believer in the Jacksonian policy, that to the victors belong the spoils, refused to endorse Mr. Herrington upon the ground that Mr. Herrington could not repeat the party shibboleth, and not finding a democrat to his liking in the neighborhood who would accept the office, the office was transferred into the town of Jefferson, two miles northwest of its then location, and Israel Lake appointed postmaster. After the removal of the office it became very inconvenient to those patrons living in the east part of the town, so they petitioned the department for a new office to be named Pee Dee, and located at the northeast corner of section 33, and with our recent experience in choosing an incumbent, we thought best to select a democrat for that position. This office was established in June or July, 1859, with G. W. Zimmerman postmaster. In a short time Zimmerman becoming tired of the office, as it interfered too much with his farm duties, he arranged with my wife to run the office as deputy, and the office was transferred to my house, on section 18. In the fall of 1862 we were having a very exciting congressional election, growing out of our diversity of views on the war measure. The State central committee (of which Mr. Rublee was chairman) sent to the office (directed to the postmaster,) a package of political documents, including the address of the central committee with a request that the postmaster distribute this package (as was the rule with all packages so directed), was given to the postmaster, who upon receiving it declared he would not distribute them, saying that if the committee wanted them distributed they could come and do it themselves. Upon hearing this I wrote the chairman that in the future in sending such documents to the office, to direct them to either E. R. Allen or myself, saying that the postmaster was an old line democrat having no sympathies with the republican party, not even suggesting a change, when in less than a month, I received a commission as postmaster, with a notice to the incumbent to turn the office over to me, which was the cause of two of the most surprised men ever in the town. This office I held until 1867, when I resigned (having sold my farm) for the purpose of changing my location, and Fred Teis was commissioned my successor, who ran the office a short time, resigned, and the present incumbent, Mrs. Coulter, was commissioned. In 1868 I moved with my family to Kansas, intending to make that State my future home, but becoming dissatisfied with the country, I returned in 1870, with broken health and $800 out of pocket, to Spring Grove, where I intend to reside until the Master calls, "Come Home." In politics, from boyhood I was a firm believer in those divine truths as promulgated from that immortal instrument, the Declaration of Independence and cornerstone of our American edifice, that all men are created equal, and from early manhood I have been a persistent advocate of those truths, and when in 1842, the first political antislavery society was organized in Green county, I was one of the immortal seven (as we were facetiously called) that assisted in its organization, and continued a member of that party until 1854, when the party was merged in the republican party, and have been a member of that party up to the present time; and I have voted at every election that has been held in the county since its organization, excepting the two years that I resided in Kansas. Upon the temperance question my neighbors say I am fanatical, and perhaps I am so, as I have not taken any alcoholic or fermented beverages for over fifty years, and I can see nothing but evil, and only evil, in its use. I am also a strenuous advocate of woman franchisement, as I cannot comprehend by what theory or law of creation men have rights that women are not entitled to; and I fully endorse the exclamation of the old deacon, who, when his elder was preaching, (his subject being man) said when he spoke of man he included woman as by creation they were the same as man, with a little variation," exclaimed, "Yes, bless God."

SPRING GROVE, MARCH, 1884,

PROMINENT CITIZENS.

The following biographical sketches of prominent citizens of the town of Spring Grove, will give an idea of the enterprise and thrift of this town:

Mrs. Mary Clemans, the widow of J. H. Clemans, lives on section 22, town of Spring Grove. She is a daughter of Isaac Kline, who settled in this town in May, 1837. Daniel Baxter (who came the same year) Kline were the first two permanent settlers in this town. Mrs. Clemans was born in April, 1822. In November, 1839, she was married to J. H. Clemans, and settled the next year on the place where Mrs. Clemans now lives. To them were born nine children—Catharine, now wife of Samuel J. Smith; Isaac, now living in Todd Co., Minn.; Jane, deceased, wife of Jacob Newcomer; Eliza Ann, now wife of Ira Mellen, of Yankton, Dak.; Elizabeth, who died when four years old; Thomas J., who lives with his mother; Charles A., now living at Yankton, Dak.; Lucinda, now wife of Francis Jenkins, of Todd Co., Minn., and Estella, wife of Henry Long. Mrs. Clemans was bereaved by the death of her husband in April, 1877. He was formerly from Kentucky, and came to Green county in 1838. Thomas J. Clemans, who lives with his mother on the old homestead, was married Nov. 29, 1874, to Polly, daughter of J. W. Kildow. They have two children—Orpha G., born Nov. 1, 1880, and James F., born Oct. 12, 1875.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Davis lives on section 30, occupying the same land settled upon by her husband, Archibald Davis and herself, July 7, 1838. Mrs. Davis was born in Pocahontas Co., Va., April 1, 1812. She is now (1884) vigorous, doing all the house work, and attending to care of stock, etc. She was married Sept. 19, 1834, to Archibald Davis. His father, Jeremiah Davis, moved from Maryland to Warren Co., Ind., in 1822, where he died Jan. 16, 1853. His wife, Mary Davis, died there Oct. 2, 1863. Mrs. Elizabeth A. Davis' father settled in Warren Co., Ind., in 1830, where he died. His wife died there also in 1832. Archibald Davis had two children by a former marriage, who made a part of the family when they came to this town. Their names were—Mary, who married James Kenyon, who died in 1863; Jeremiah, in Warren Co., Ind., in 1853. By the second marriage of Archibald and Elizabeth A. Davis. The children born are—James D., who served in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and now lives in Brodhead; Sarah C. M., wife of John Ostrander; Benjamin S. also served in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and was killed in a bayonet charge at the battle of Jackson, Miss.; George W., member of same company and regiment; Rachel J., wife of Samuel Brant; Nancy E. and Archibald A., both living in this county; Elizabeth A., wife of John Massy, of Benton Co., Ind. Maria V., wife of John Alexander, of Durand, Ill.; Nancy E., wife of Philip Kilwin, of Decatur. Mr. and Mrs. Davis came from Warren Co., Ind., to this town. Mr. Davis was a great hunter and fond of the chase. Many an early settler was indebted to his prowess for his fresh meat. Mr. Davis was a good specimen of a pioneer, active, full of life and energy, generous and true to his friends. He died Dec. 30, 1879, aged nearly seventy-four years.

George Davis, son of the early settlers, Archibald and Elizabeth A. Davis, is one of the first born of the town of Spring Grove, that event having occurred Jan. 24, 1842. He lived with his parents, working on the farm and attending school winters until he reached manhood, or nearly so, when he enlisted in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and one week from the day of leaving the State was in the battle of Pittsburg Landing, a rough beginning for a soldier boy. He participated in every engagement of the regiment until the battle of Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863, when he was wounded and taken prisoner, and carried east to Libby prison at Richmond, and later released on parole, and taken to Annapolis, Md., and then sent to the parole camp at St. Louis. In December, 1863, he was exchanged, and rejoined the regiment at Huntsville, Ala. He was in the campaign against Atlanta, and in the heroic battle at Allatoona Pass. Mr. Davis has a trophy captured in that battle, a Queen Anne musket full six feet in length, captured on the skirmish line. Veteranizing with a part of the regiment, he returned to Wisconsin on a furlough in December, 1864. Then returning to the command rejoined Sherman's grand army at Goldsboro, N. C., in April, 1865. He was in the battle of Kingston, N. C., and was in line at the grand review of the army at Washington in June, 1865, and was mustered out with the regiment at Milwaukee. Mr. Davis was married to Ann E. Brant, daughter of John A. Brant, Oct. 1, 1865, and commenced keeping house on seventy acres of land purchased from his father on section 30. He has since added eighty acres of adjoining land in the town of Jefferson. They have a very comfortable home enlivened by four children—Francis E., born Oct. 25, 1866; Mattie J., born July 8, 1869; Judd E., born Aug. 24, 1870; and George B., born June 10, 1873. From 1866 to 1883, with the exception of one year, Mr. Davis has served as justice of the peace. He is a member of the W. W. Patton, G. A. R. Post, No. 90.

Thomas Hamilton lives on section 34. He has a farm of 240 acres, with fine buildings. He was born in the State of Indiana Aug. 4, 1822. When quite young, his father, George Hamilton, moved to Edgar Co., Ill., where he died in 1842. When sixteen years of age, Thomas took his fortune in his own hands. Leaving home he went to Winnebago Co., Ill., worked at farm work until 1842, when he came to Green county. The first few years he worked summers in the villages of the county, and in the winter in the pineries, running in the season on rafts below; thus he was occupied until he was married in 1845. His wife was Levanche Randall. By this marriage six children were born, five of whom are living—George, residing in Brodhead; Thomas, of Winnebago Co., Ill.; Alexander, in the same county; Emma, wife of Myron Bliss, of Winnebago Co., Ill.; Eva, wife of F. Burke, resides at Virginia City, Nev.; Lenora, wife of Isaac Davis. She died at the residence of her father in February, 1875. In March, 1866, Mr. Hamilton was bereaved by the death of his wife. He was again united in marriage with Mrs. Jane Forbes, widow of Isaac Forbes. She was living at the time of marriage in Davids township, Stephenson Co., Ill. By her first marriage she had two children—Emma and William. Emma married Mr. Hamilton's son, George. William Forbes is married and lives in Brodhead. Thomas Hamilton has by his second wife five children—Walter E., born in 1868; Josephine E., born in 1870; Kate Maud, born in 1873; Scott, born in 1878; and Eleanor, born in 1881.

Daniel Dedrick was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., Feb. 22, 1836, and came to this town with his father's family in 1842. His father, Nicholas Dedrick, came from Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. Daniel lived with his father until 1847, in which year, March 3, he was married to Melissa A. Ward, who was born in Michigan. Her mother was the second wife of Daniel Vanderbilt. Mrs. Dedrick has one boy—Eddie Dedrick, living in Topeka, Kansas, and a daughter, Lovinna, also at Topeka, Kansas. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Dedrick moved to Durand, Wis., and later a short distance out in Bear creek valley, taking a homestead claim, and working at carpenter's trade, in which work he was engaged at the outbreak of the Civil War. He enlisted Aug. 9, 1862, in company G, 25th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served two years and two months, when he was discharged on account of disability. After this he moved to Pontiac, Mich. Remaining there only a few months, he went to the oil country in Venango Co., Penn., locating at Rouseville. He there engaged in livery and express business and kept a boarding house three years or more, but domestic trouble caused a separation from his wife. Then he gave up his town business and became a contractor for drilling oil wells, and followed that occupation until he lost his property. He returned to Spring Grove in 1877, and bought lot 6, on section 2, thirty-three acres, where he now (1884) resides in a house built by an old settler, B. J. Tenney, who about thirty-four years ago sold out and went to Salt Lake with the Mormons. Mr. Dedrick's present wife was Sarah Jane Gordan. He was married to her in June, 1870. She was born in Pennsylvania. Their first child, Charlie, died at the age of thirteen months. They have two daughters—Mabel F. M., born May 15, 1872, and Zada Bell, born Jan. 11, 1880.

Charles A. Warner was born in Madison Co., N. Y., June 20, 1820. He learned the blacksmith's trade when a boy, and at nineteen years of age was out from his apprenticeship. In May, 1842, he came west to Milwaukee, and in September of that year to this county, buying 160 acres of land on section 11, town of Sylvester, remaining only long enough to commence some improvements. He went to Southport, on Lake Michigan (now Kenosha) and worked at his trade the following winter, returning to improve his land the summer of 1843. In the fall he returned to Southport and remained there at work until the fall of 1844, when he went to McHenry Co., Ill. There he ran a shop which he owned four years, then in the fall of 1848 he returned to this county and located in the village of Decatur, then about to be platted. While in McHenry county, Mr. Warner was married to Elizabeth Ward, Dec. 7, 1847. She was born in Vernon, Oneida Co., N. Y. At Decatur Mr. Warner built a shop and worked there about eight years, when (1856) he moved his family to the village of Clarence, in order to be able to improve 192 acres of land which he had some years previously bought on section 1, town of Spring Grove. Mr. Warner worked at his trade a short time in Clarence, but in the spring of 1857 made his residence on his land on section 1, where he now (1884) lives. Mr. and Mrs. Warner have had four children born to them—Ella E., born Nov. 1, 1849, now wife of Willie D. Bigelow, of Sun Prairie, Wis.; Francis Ward, born Nov. 20, 1851, and died Sept 26, 1856; Charles M., born July 8, 1857, and now lives at home; Catharine C., born July 18, 1861, now living at home. Mr. Warner has led an active life, never idle in his younger days, if not hard at work, could generally be depended upon to bring in game or fish. He and Dr. Springsted were fast friends, and it was a bad day for all kinds of game, when they started out for a hunt. Mr. Warner speaks kindly of his old friend as a man, and of his skill as a physician.

Daniel Dunwiddie, one of the pioneers of Green county, is living on section 6. His fine farm comprises lots 3, 4 and 5, fractional additions to section 6, 127 acres, and fifteen acres of adjoining land. He also owns twenty acres of valuable timber near by in Decatur. He has occupied this place since 1847. Mr. Dunwiddie was born in Green Co., Ohio, Jan. 6, 1822, and is a son of John Dunwiddie, who reared a family of eleven children, ten boys and one girl, all of whom lived to be married, and rear families. Seven of the family were living in 1884. At the age of twenty-one, (1843) the subject of this sketch came to Green county, and lived with his uncle, Thomas Woodle, an early settler. In 1845 he bought the southwest quarter of section 34, in the town of Sylvester, and in December of that year was married to Rebecca Austin. She was born in Burlington Co., N. J., but at the time of her marriage was a resident of Kosciusko Co., Ind. Her parents were, for nine years, residents of Green Co., Ohio, and it was there that Mr. Dunwiddie formed her acquaintance. Mr. and Mrs. Dunwiddie first settled on his land in Sylvester and after living there one year, he sold, and purchased his present farm. They have had nine children born to them—Priscilla, wife of John Swan, born Feb. 5, 1846; Ezra, born Jan. 12, 1848; Celista, wife of Alonzo Barnes, born Nov. 2, 1849;

John M., born Dec. 1, 1851; Louisa, born June 29, 1854, and died April 23, 1856; Theresa, born Dec. 4, 1856, now the wife of W. F. Holcomb of Yankton, Dak; Idella, born Sept. 17, 1861, now the wife of Charles Cronk, of Dane county; Minnie, born Oct. 30, 1863, and died May 5, 1866; and Myrtle, born Dec. 15, 1865, and living at home with her parents. Mr. Dunwiddie is an active, public-spirited citizen, and has served as town supervisor fifteen or sixteen years, a part of the time as chairman.

Moses Kirby was born near Oldtown, Hampshire Co., Va., in 1812. While a child his parents, James and Prudence Kirby, emigrated to Pickaway Co., Ohio. His mother died there and in 1828 his father moved from there to Vermilion Co., Ill. His father died some years later near Vincennes, Ind. The subject of this sketch was married in 1833 to Rachel Corry, and ten years later removed to Stephenson Co., Ill., and in the fall of the same year settled in Spring Grove, buying 160 acres of land on section 26 where he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. Kirby have had six children—Julia Ann, wife of William Clements, residing in Champaign Co., Ill.; John, living in the same county; Isaiah went with company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and found a soldier's grave at Corinth, Tenn.; Elisha, living in Spring Grove; Lovina, wife of Polk Waller, of Winnebago Co., Ill., and Mary, married to Leroy J. McKinley. She and her husband live with Mr. Kirby on the old homestead. They were married July 30, 1869. They have had five children, three of whom are living—Olive, born Oct. 4, 1870; Myrtie, born Dec. 31, 1880; and Arthur, born May 16, 1883. The two deceased are—Jennie, born Dec. 21, 1874; died Sept. 5, 1876. Warren, born June 1, 1877; died April 12, 1880. Mr. McKinley's father is William McKinley, a merchant in Rockford, Ill. Leroy J. was born in Winnebago Co., Ill., April 20, 1849. When a few weeks of age his mother died, and he was reared by Mr. and Mrs. James Waller of Avon, Rock Co., Wis.

William H. Oneall was born in Warren Co., Ind., Feb. 15, 1829. His father, Robert E. Oneall, came to this town in its early days, going in 1843, from Warren Co., Ind., he rented a farm of the old settler, Samuel Myers, on section 19, where he lived one year; then on Mr. Judkins' farm two years. Mr. Oneall brought quite a large family here, consisting of a wife and seven children—Susan, now married to Philo Tracy, and living in Buchanan Co., Iowa; William H., the subject of this sketch; Rebecca, was married to Matthew Farmer, and died in Buchanan Co., Iowa; Martha Jane, who was married to P. Atwood, and died Nov. 22, 1882; Thomas K., who lives in Benton Co., Iowa; Mary Ann, who was married to William Kline, and died in 1864; Elizabeth R., who was married to Peter Albert, and now living in Buchanan Co., Iowa. There were born to the parents, six children, after their settlement in this town—Sarah E., who was married to Charles Morton, and lives in Parker, Dak.; John B., who lives in this town; Alexona, who is the wife of Joseph Keihle, and lives in Independence, Iowa; Edwin and Robert E., who died quite young; and Charlie, now living in Nebraska. Mr. Oneall bought on section 36, a claim, (now owned by Cyrus Putnam), and lived there several years, then moved to Richland Grove, and subsequently bought prairie land in the town of Jefferson. He shortly sold this land, and went to Iowa, leaving his family here. Engaging in business in Iowa, he made an occasional trip back to visit his family. While on one of these trips coming home, he was taken sick, and died not far from home, after a short illness, in May, 1854. His wife died Jan. 10, 1855. William H Oneall was married to Marcia Jones, Aug. 3, 1856. She was born in Ashtabula Co., Ohio, and was a daughter of James Jones, an early settler of Rock Co., Wis. They have six children—Teta Jane, born July 6, 1857, who was married to George Johnson, and now lives in San Francisco; Cynthia L., born Sept. 3, 1858, now wife of Oliver W. Martin; Florence A., who lives at home;

Wyatt E., born May 14, 1866, at home; Catharine V., born April 15, 1871, at home; and Ora E., born Oct. 27, 1874, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Oneall commenced their married life where they now live. It was formerly the home of their mother, and at that time contained eighty acres. It was an old farm, settled back in 1841 by Aaron Cooley. It is located on section 22. Mr. Oneall lives on section 15, and there owns 120 acres, and owns also 130 acres on section 16. He is one of the sterling men of the town, and has served the public on the board of supervisors.

John B. Oneall, son of the old settler, Robert E. Oneall, was born Dec. 21, 1844. After the death of his father and mother, which occurred when John was about ten years old, he was partially homeless, and consequently was early thrown upon his own resources. The first year after his parent's death, he went to Iowa and lived for a time with a married sister. Coming back, he lived until about nineteen years old, with his brother, William H. Oneall, then with a young, patriotic impulse, he enlisted in the army, in company B, 1st Wisconsin Cavalry, Aug. 23, 1863. He participated in twenty-four engagements, among them, were Dandridge, in east Tennessee, and one near Dalton, Ga., May 9, 1864, and last, but not least, the one at West Point, Ga. He was always on duty, and never, except to visit sick comrades, saw the interior of a hospital. He was honorably discharged with the regiment, July 19, 1865. Feb. 14, 1867, he was married to Mary A., daughter of Charles Woodling, who came here from Indiana, in 1846. He was born in Union Co., Penn., and went to Indiana in 1837. He was one of the sterling men of early days, in Spring Grove. The newly married couple settled on the Woodling estate, in the place his wife's father had lived, who died in November, 1852. His widow subsequently was married to William Farmer. She died July 4, 1871. The present home of the subject of this sketch was occupied by him in September, 1871.

It was the property of Mrs. Oneall's mother, at the time of her death. The farm is a very valuable one, with good improvements and fine buildings. They have two children—Carie J., born March 23, 1868; Haney A., born Oct. 13, 1870. Mr. Oneall is one of the trusted citizens of Spring Grove town, and is now (1884), town treasurer. He has served three terms on the town board of supervisors, and is a man of excellent reputation.

William H. Coldren has lived on section 5, town of Spring Grove, since November, 1873. His farm of 145 acres is known as the "Kline place" having been the home of an old settler named John Kline. Mr. Coldren was born in Warren Co., Ind. His father, William Coldren, in 1844 with his wife and seven children settled in the town of Jefferson. The children were—Margaret, Martha, Matilda, Reuben, Minerva, William, Orth, and one was born in Wisconsin, Evaline. Margaret and Matilda are not now living. The father and mother were both living in 1884. The subject of this sketch, William H., enlisted in the War for the Union in August, 1862, in company K, 22d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out after the close of the war. He was never in the hospital but always in the ranks, and was in every engagement in which the regiment participated, from the first at Spring Hill to the last at Averysboro, N. C. He was in the battles about Atlanta, and with Sherman on the memorable march to the sea and up through the Carolinas to the grand review at Washington in June, 1865. He was a faithful, valiant and valuable soldier. He was married Oct. 16, 1867, to Eslie Woodle, daughter of A. H. Woodle of Sylvester, and lived on rented land until 1873, when he bought his present home. They have had four children—an infant, born and died in 1868, Fred, born Aug. 2, 1869; Frank, born Dec. 2, 1870, now deceased; and Chauncy, born Sept. 30, 1878. Mr. Coldren is a trusted and valued citizen, and is now (1884) on the town board of supervisors.

Mrs. Sovina Vanderbilt, widow of John N. H. Vanderbilt, lives on section 7, town of Spring Grove. Mrs. Vanderbilt, is a daughter of the late Evan Young, of the town of Jefferson. She lives on the property of her late husband consisting originally of 200 acres, a part of the original purchase of Daniel Vanderbilt, made in 1845. They were married July 24, 1851, and lived two years after marriage at the home of Mrs. Vanderbilt's father; then lived in Spring Grove. Mr. Vanderbilt enlisted in the army Feb. 26, 1862, and died Dec. 4, 1864, in Andersonville prison. He was born July 30, 1828. Mrs. Vanderbilt was born Feb. 21, 1833. The homestead now contains seventy-five acres. There children are—Daniel W., born in November 1852, now living in California; Eorie M., born in November, 1854, and lives in Cass Co., Md.; Nina, now the wife of William A. Reed, of Chippewa Co., Minn., born in December, 1856; William S., at home, born May, 1859; Ettie M., born in February, 1862, now the wife of F. E. Cain, of Marathon Co., Wis., and Edith B., living with her mother, born July, 1864. Daniel Vanderbilt, father of John N. H., died May 17, 1878; the mother, Annie V., died in March, 1854.

Samuel Brant, son of John A. Brant, lives on and owns a farm on section 34, town of Spring Grove. He was born in Wabash Co., Ind., July 5, 1845. His father moved to this town in September of that same year. He was reared a farmer and lived at home until he enlisted in the army in company E, 38th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, in August, 1864. He served until his discharge, June 2, 1865. After his return, he lived with and worked for his father until Oct. 2, 1869, when he was married to Mrs. Rachel Ostrander, widow of Thomas L. Ostrander, and daughter of the old pioneer, Archibald Davis. She had one child by her former marriage—Nellie R., born in 1861, who is now the wife of Henry Arnsmeir.

Her first husband was a member of battery D, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and died at New Orleans in September, 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Brant have had five children—Albert, born Aug. 6, 1870, and died March 3, 1876; Virginia, born June 27, 1873; Katie, born Feb. 20, 1876; Glorania, born Dec. 24, 1878, and Scott, born April 7, 1880.

Isaac Brobst, Sr., was born April 2, 1808, in Berks Co., Penn. When a child, his father, John Brobst, moved to Union county, and there Isaac grew to manhood. His father died in 1846. His mother's death occurred in 1827. Of eleven children, only Isaac and a brother are now living. The brother lives near Akron, Ohio. The subject of this sketch, Isaac Brobst, was married Nov. 9, 1828, to Sarah Beaver, born in Union Co., Penn. Eleven children have been born to them—Daniel, born in 1829; Mary Ann, born 1831, deceased wife of A. Stayer; Amelia, born 1834, deceased wife of Jacob Hostetler; Elizabeth, born 1836, wife of Elijah Clark, Jo Daviess Co., Ill.; Martin, born 1838, resides at Stephenson Co., Ill.; Peter, born 1841 and died in 1859; Fanny, born 1843, and died 1860; John, born 1846, and died 1846; Harriet, born 1848, and died 1860; Isaac, Jr., born 1850, and William, born 1853. Isaac Brobst, Sr., reached the town of Rock Grove, Ill., June 20, 1845, and settled in Spring Grove, Nov. 4, 1846, on the land he still owns and resides upon on section 33. Mr. Brobst was one of the earliest and one of the best of the settlers of this town.

Daniel Brobst is one of the leading enterprising men of Spring Grove. He lives on section 21, where he owns a model farm and fine buildings. This farm he has occupied since 1859. He also owns the "Barker place," consisting of 240 acres on section 25. This he bought in 1881. Mr. Brobst was born in Union Co., Penn., July 27, 1829, and is a son of Isaac Brobst, Sr. He came west with his father's family in 1845, reaching Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., June 20; making the whole trip in emigrant wagons. There were seven children in the family. Daniel Brobst and Frederika Wagner were united in marriage Nov. 6, 1856. Mrs. Brobst is a daughter of Peter Wagner, of Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill. They commenced life where they now live. They have had born to them eight children—Frank, born Nov. 11, 1857, and died Aug. 8, 1877; Eda, born May 3, 1859; Adilia, born Jan. 10, 1861, and died Nov. 4, 1877; Alvin, born Jan. 19, 1863; Kate, born Oct. 5, 1864; Scott, born July 5, 1867; Peter, born Sept. 7, 1870, and Roe, born Sept. 29, 1879. Mr. Brobst is a prominent citizen of his town, having served as assessor and treasurer. Mr. Brobst met with a sad misfortune in 1870. While out on a chicken hunt, in taking a gun from the wagon with the muzzle toward him, it was accidentally discharged and the charge struck him near the wrist joint of his right arm. The wound made amputation of the arm between the elbow and the wrist necessary.

Isaac Brobst, Jr., was born in this town in 1850. He is a good specimen of the younger class of the citizens who are to be trusted with the fortunes of the town in the future. Mr. Brobst has already held several positions of trust and always creditably. He is now serving his third term as member of the side board of supervisors, and has served one term as town treasurer. He was married Oct. 22, 1871, to Sarah A. Woodling, a daughter of Charles Woodling, an early settler of this town. She was born Aug. 3, 1852. After marriage they settled on a farm which he bought of Daniel Westenhover. They resided here until 1876, when he sold and removed to his present home on section 15. He has a small creamery for his own use, fitted to be run by "dog power." Mr. and Mrs. Brobst have no children of their own, but have one adopted daughter, Sarah Ann, a child of Mrs. Brobst's brother, Oliver L. Woodling. Mrs. Woodling died June 16, 1877, which was one month after the birth of the daughter, who was then adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Brobst.

Isaac W. Young was born in Knox Co., Ohio, Sept. 14, 1840. His father, Evin G. Young, brought his family to Green county in the autumn of 1846, and settled in the town of Jefferson, about two miles south of the village of Juda. There was a family of fourteen children, five sons and nine daughters—William, Samuel, Isaac W., Zenas and Joseph L. were born in Knox Co., Ohio. William, born Feb. 27, 1835; Samuel, Aug. 19, 1838; Zenas, Feb. 2, 1845; and Joseph L., April 18, 1846. William and Zenas are now deceased. Nancy married Joseph Melick, Feb. 23, 1842; Elizabeth married Andrew Riley, Jan. 4, 1847; Savenia, married John Vanderbilt, July 24, 1851, now a widow, he having died a prisoner in Andersonville during the Rebellion; Martha, A., married William Riley, Feb. 16, 1862; Mary J., married Clarence Bryan, March 12, 1865; Alice J., married Henry G. Townsend, May 18, 1866; Catharine, Rowena, Levina A., and Martha A., are now deceased. Joseph L. enlisted in 1863, in company G., 1st Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, serving until the end of the war. He subsequently married Eunice Straw, a daughter of Malachi Straw, Nov. 29, 1869, and is now living near Greenwood, Cass Co., Neb. Isaac W., the subject of the sketch, lives in this town on section 15, which was a part of the Charles Woodling place. His father, Evin Young, died at Juda, in December, 1880. His mother's death occurred less than one month later. He enlisted Oct. 23, 1861, in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers. He was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps in 1864. After his discharge from the army he was married to Eliza Woodling, daughter of Charles Woodling, May 31, 1868. The year following he worked his father's farm in Jefferson, and then moved to his present location. They have four children—Willie W., born March 31, 1869; Orletta J., born March 29, 1871; Anna M., born Aug. 22, 1872; and Clyde E., born March 28, 1878.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Samuel Young married Miss M. T. Henderson, a daughter of William Henderson, Jan. 3, 1860, and enlisted Aug. 14, 1861, in company K, 22d regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war, then went into the railroad service at Monroe, Wis. After the lapse of five and a half years, he was appointed station agent for the Chicago & St. Paul Railroad Company, at Juda. His father, Evin G. Young, died at Juda, Dec. 12, 1880, at the age of eighty-one years. His mother, Barbara A., died Jan. 6, 1881, at the age of seventy-five years. Subsequently he bought the old farm in the town Jefferson and is the present owner, but still continues in the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company at Juda, as station agent. They have four children—Grace E., born June 18, 1862; Esther A., born June 3, 1866; William S., born June 2, 1870; and Frederick F., born May 21, 1878.

Reuben Babcock lives on section 25, where he has a comfortable home, and a farm of eighty acres. He was born in Cortland Co., N. Y., Oct. 4, 1802, and was brought up on a farm. He was married Dec. 2, 1824, to Louisa Palmer, who was born Nov. 29, 1807. Sixty years of married life finds them in quite vigorous health, able to do much work, and superintend the farm. Mrs. Babcock has a brother living in Oregon, Hiram Palmer. Mr. Babcock has a married sister living in Ripley Co., Ind., (Nancy, wife of Henry Rysinger). Mr. and Mrs. Babcock left New York with their family, and settled in Ripley Co., Ind. At that time they had five children—Lemuel, now living in Minnesota; Joseph, now a resident of Jefferson Co., Iowa; Elvira, now the wife of Jacob Green; Lavina, wife of G. Putnam, of Osage, Iowa, and George, now living in this county. Four children were born in Indiana—Harriet, deceased; Samuel, who lives in Oberlin, Kansas, and was a member of company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers; Hiram, deceased; and Nancy, who was married to Rev. H. W. Decker, a Seventh-day Adventist preacher. Mr. Babcock has been a farmer all his life. He came to this State in 1847. Since coming to Wisconsin, two more children have been born to them—Mattie, who was married to William Kerr, of Monroe; and Eunice, the youngest, died when two years old.

DeWitt C. Allen, son of E. R. Allen, was born near Terre Haute, Ind., Dec. 14, 1843. When he was quite young his father settled in this town. The latter has been a prominent citizen, many years a justice, has also served as sheriff and chairman of the county board of supervisors, and resides on section 26. DeWitt C. is the eldest of a family of eight children of whom, beside himself, six are now living—Percy Ann, wife of G. W. Morton, of Canton, Dak.; Alice M., wife of R. A. Slocum; Theodore F., Amy Jane, wife of John Stahlnecker; Abraham L. and Charles H. DeWitt C. enlisted in company D, 1st Wisconsin Cavalry in September, 1863, and served faithfully to the end of the war, always able and willing for duty. He has since the war been a resident of this town, and Sept. 21, 1873, was married to Catharine a daughter of William Kline, and granddaughter of the old pioneer, Isaac Kline. They have three children—William E. R., born Dec. 1, 1875; Eliza Ann, born Oct. 8, 1878; and Nora May, born Jan 20, 1880. Mr. Allen now (1884) lives on section 36, town of Spring Grove.

Theodore J. Derrick, son of Franklin H. Derrick, and grandson of the old pioneer, was born in the town of Spring Grove, Feb. 25, 1848. Mr. Derrick is one of the enterprising men among the younger class native to this county. Excepting an occasional absence of a few months, he has always been in this town at the home of his father, on a part of the original purchase of 1,200 acres made by his grandfather in 1836. He now operates the farm of his father on section 3, in company with his brother Levi, who was born July 25, 1855, and is not married. Theodore was married to Mrs. Ellen Purdy, June 5, 1873. Mrs. Derrick is a daughter of Henry Jones, of Brodhead, They have one child by this marriage—Jessie May, born May 4, 1874.

Capt. Henderson Farmer was born in Pulaski Co., Ind., Aug. 8, 1842. His father, Andrew Farmer, in 1846 brought the family west and settled in Laone, Winnebago Co., Ill., where he bought 160 acres of government land, and lived there three years, then sold out and came to this town, locating on section 26, and there lived until 1854, and then bought and removed to forty acres on section 22. That land is now occupied by his son and widow. Andrew Farmer was born in Franklin Co., Va., Dec. 15, 1807. His wife, Mary (Armstrong) Farmer, was born Nov. 26, 1808, in Franklin Co., Va. They were married July 17, 1830, and have had six children—Edna, born in 1831, who was married to John Martin and after his death to Frederick Page, now living in Washington Territory; Elizabeth, born in 1834, wife of William Hooker, now living in Shelby Co., Iowa; Sarah Jane, born in 1835, wife of Jefferson Palmer of Monroe; James T., born in September, 1837, and died in November, 1846; Franklin G., born in October, 1839, enlisted in company G, 42d Illinois Volunteers, and died at Keokuk hospital in August, 1862; and Henderson, born in 1842. Soon after marriage the parents moved to Crawford Co., Ohio, where they lived seven years, and in 1838 moved to Pulaski Co., Ind., and in 1846, to Winnebago Co., Ill. Andrew Farmer died Oct. 31, 1881. Capt. Henderson Farmer, the subject of this sketch, enlisted Feb. 14, 1862, in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers. He was in the battle front at Pittsburg Landing, in which the regiment was badly used, suffering from killed, wounded and prisoners taken, a fearful loss. Mr. Farmer was 2d sergeant when the company went to the front, a year later was orderly sergeant and returned as captain of the company, a sure and substantial testimonial of his worth and services as a soldier. He was married to his present wife, Nancy E. Norman, of Jefferson Co., Ill., May 25, 1879. His aged mother resides with him in the home, where his father died.

Peter L. Dedrick lives on the homestead purchased by his father, Nicholas Dedrick, in 1849. Nicholas Dedrick came from Ashford, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., with his wife and four children—Nicholas, Jr., John, Daniel and Peter L. An older son, George, preceded his parents in coming here. He came to this town in 1842. He died in 1850, leaving a wife and two children. His widow afterwards married Nicholas Dedrick, Jr., and they now live in Eau Claire Co., Wis. A married daughter, Nancy, and her husband, Hiram Frank, came to this county in 1848. Mrs. Frank died in Pepin county in 1881. Mr. Frank now lives in Spring Grove. The oldest son, James H., came here in 1850. He now lives in Taylor Co., Wis. John lives in Butler Co., Neb., and Daniel in Spring Grove. Nicholas Dedrick, Sr., died Feb. 10, 1865, aged seventy years. His wife, Nancy Dedrick, died May 5, 1881, aged seventy-eight years. Peter L. Dedrick was married Sept. 30, 1869, to Sarah L. Eldred, daughter of Stephen and Roxanna Eldred, who live in the town of Albany, in this county. Four children have been born to them—Leonard M., born Sept. 3, 1871; Leona L., born Dec. 12, 1873; Elmer P., born Aug. 23, 1877, and Frank H. born Sept., 9, 1882. Mr. Dedrick is one of the enterprising and public spirited citizens of Spring Grove, always ready to give a hearty support to any enterprise for the public good. He was born in the State of New York.

Clark Williams, son of Seth C. Williams was born June 1, 1845, at Freeport, Ill. His father was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., Jan. 26, 1806. His mother, Tharza (Lyon) Williams was born June 23, 1804. They were married Feb. 7, 1827. They came west and settled in Freeport, Ill., in 1840, farming there until 1849. They removed to this town and settled on section 29, buying 100 acres of land. They had born to them eight children—John N., living in Douglas Co., Neb.; Lysanus W., lives in Berkley, Cal., Marilla, died in 1851; Maypelyt M., wife of David Bradley, of Rock Grove, Ill.; Chester, enlisted in Co., B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and died in the service; Clark, who lives on the homestead; and Lusetta H., wife of Peter Mellis, Douglas Co., Neb. Milton died in 1851.

Seth C. Williams died July 20, 1883. Tharza, his wife, died Oct. 2, 1879. Clark Williams lived with his parents until his death, with the exception of the time he was in the army. He enlisted Oct. 2, 1863, in company D, 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery. The batteries was ordered to Louisiana in February, 1864, and he served in that department until the close of the war. He was mustered out at Alexandria, Va., Aug. 18, 1865. Returning to his home, he was married Nov. 14, 1867, to Abbie Blaisdell, daughter of John Blaisdell, of Wayne, Lafayette Co., Wis. Six children have been born to them—John W., born September, 1869, and died October, 1870; Laura M., born Nov. 1, 1870; Elmer J., born January, 1873; George W., born November, 1874; Artie, born February, 1878; and Julia L., born August, 1880. Mr. Williams is a member of W. W. Patton, G. A. R., post No. 90.

Thomas Shaff owns and occupies 120 acres of land on the northeast quarter of section 10, town of Spring Grove, also ninety-six acres on section 11. His residence stands on the line between the two sections, and he has a fine well improved farm. Mr. Shaff was born in Wayne county, town of Williamson, N. Y., March 13, 1818. When he was seven years old his parents moved to Oswego Co., N. Y., where Thomas lived until he came to this county in 1850. Mr. Shaff was married in January, 1842, to Eveline Lake. She died in August, 1846; leaving two children—William H., now living in Turner Co., Dak., and Lydia Ann, now the wife of Larson Olds, and living in Avon, Rock Co., Wis. Mr. Shaff was again married, Aug. 15, 1847, to Mrs. Mary J. Sidman, a native of Syracuse, N. Y. By this marriage two children have been born—Margaret A., born Aug. 30, 1850, wife of Leonard Beeman, of Turner Co., Dak., and Albertus L., born in January, 1859, who lives with his parents. Mr. Shaff is among the highly esteemed citizens of the town of Spring Grove.

Josiah Straw was born in Wyandotte Co., Ohio, Oct. 15, 1828. He was brought up on a farm. In 1849 he came with his father, Israel Straw, and the family to Wisconsin. Of the five children Josiah was the eldest. The father lived in Rock Co., Wis., one year, and then settled in Spring Grove, on section 36. This was in 1850, and the children besides the subject of this sketch, were—Eliza, now wife of Jehu Thorp, of Decatur Co., Kansas; Daniel, now a resident of Brodhead; Jessie, who lives in Spring Grove; Elmira, who was the wife of James Hooker, and died Jan. 10, 1861. Josephus Straw, a brother, came three years later, with a family, remained a few years, and removed to Chickasaw Co., Iowa. The father, Israel Straw, died on the homestead, Feb. 15, 1879. His wife died before him, Jan. 22, 1869. Josiah Straw lives on, and owns the old place. He was unmarried until Feb. 16, 1884, when he abandoned a life of single blessedness, and was married to Mrs. Sarah Clawson, widow of Isaac Clawson. Her former husband died July 17, 1882, leaving no children. The father of Mrs. Straw, David Springsted, died when she was quite young. Her mother lives with her sister Dolly, (Mrs. John Gardiner, of Decatur). The other sisters are—Bashie, wife of Charles Lucas, of Brodhead; Esther, wife of H. T. Johns, and Georgie, wife of S. C. Stiles, of Iroquois Co., Ill. The place owned by Mr. Straw was known to old settlers as the "William Farmer's" farm. Previous to his marriage Mr. Straw lived most of the time with his tenants. A nephew, son of his sister, Elmira, and James Hooker, was adopted by him, with whom Mr. Straw has lived a share of the time.

Powel Karney resides upon section 23, where he owns a farm of 186 acres and thirty acres of timber, with first-class improvements. Mr. Karney's permanent settlement here dates from 1852, but he has been a resident of the State of

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Wisconsin since 1844, coming in that year from Ohio to Milwaukee. He was born in Massachusetts and when very young removed with his parents to Ohio. In his youth he learned the trade of joiner, which occupation he followed for three years after coming to Milwaukee. In 1847 he went to Janesville, working there and in Johnstown, Geneva, Bradford and other points. In 1848 he bought eighty acres of unimproved land and several village lots in Avon, Rock county. In the fall of that year he came to Green county, and spent the winter in teaching school in district No. 1, of Spring Grove, in what was then called the Kline neighborhood. Three schools were then in progress in town. In the spring of 1849 he went to Walworth county and worked at his trade one year, employed most of the time upon a grist mill, near Allen's Grove. The next year he worked in Avon, and later, returned to this town. The following winter he taught school in the Clemans neighborhood. In the spring of 1851 he secured work at Wiota and afterwards at Darlington. The next winter he again taught the Clemans school. During the summer following he built a house for P. Atwood, and the same season purchased forty acres of land, a part of his present farm. He was married Nov. 11, 1852, to Abigail L. Martin, daughter of Isaac Martin, and eight children have been born to them—Marion L., born in November, 1853; Isaac M., born in May, 1856; Eva L., born in December, 1858; Willard M., born in May, 1863; Emma E., born in February, 1867; Melzar E., born in August, 1869; Jennie O., born in April, 1873; and Elmer J., born in April, 1876. The last named died Sept. 1, 1881, in Dakota, while there on a visit. Mr. Karney has always been prominent in the public affairs of this town, and has held the offices of supervisor, town clerk, assessor and treasurer.

Pervine Atwood is the largest land owner in the town of Spring Grove. He was born in the State of Indiana, Sept. 27, 1822. His father, Arillious Atwood, removed his family in 1828 to Edgar Co., Ill., settling in the squatter village of Paris, now the county seat of that county. Again, in 1843, he removed to White Co., Ill., where he died in 1849. His wife died later in Clay Co., Kansas. One son, brother of P. Atwood, now lives in Walla Walla, Washington Territory. The subject of this sketch in the spring of 1845 went to Oregon and remained until the spring of 1847. He then went to California and lived there until the fall of 1850; then he returned east, and settled in Spring Grove, buying 240 acres of land, 160 of it on section 14, where he improved a farm. In July, 1852, Mr. Atwood was married to Martha Jane Oneall, daughter of Robert Oneall. To them were born twelve children, of whom four daughters and three sons are now living—James P., Robert E., Freddie O., Mary Viola, Emma Rhoda, Sarah Rebecca and Jessie Belle. Mrs. Atwood died Nov. 22, 1882, aged fifty years. Mr. Atwood, during his first twelve years of residence here, bought at different times of different persons adjoining lands, until at one time he owned 1,300 acres. He has at this time (1884) a farm of 800 acres, all under fence. From 1866 to 1876 he rented his lands and lived in Brodhead. He is one of the public spirited citizens of the town, and second to no one in pushing enterprises advantageous to the public good.

Isaac E. Martin was born in the town of Green, Ashland Co., Ohio, Sept. 2, 1836. When he was fifteen years old his parents came to the town of Spring Grove, this county. His father was Hugh Martin, and he settled on section 26. After the death of his father Isaac E. lived at the home with his mother until his marriage with Delia Ann Woodling, a daughter of the early settler, John H. Woodling, Sept. 5, 1861. For some years following this marriage the young couple lived on rented lands, and until about one year before the close of the war, when Mr. Martin enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out. The following winter he removed to a place of his own on section 36. To Mr. and Mrs. Martin were born three children—Wealtha F., born Aug 5, 1862; Adelia M., born Feb. 25, 1865; Cyrus E., born Dec. 1, 1867, and died Nov. 18, 1870. The father, Isaac E. Martin, died Aug. 19, 1870. Mrs. Martin was again married, this time to George H. Slocum, June 18, 1874. Mr. Slocum had been a resident from an early age of Winnebago Co., Ill., his father being a pioneer of that county. His residence in this county dates from the time of his marriage. Three children have been born to them, of whom two are living—Emery E., born April 8, 1875; Irvin R., born Sept. 12, 1876, and died Feb. 27, 1883; Martie M., born Oct. 31, 1879. The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Slocum is on the State line, on section 36.

Lewis Hooker was born in Knox Co., Ohio, April 11, 1831. When he was a lad his father removed to Wyandotte county, of the same State, where he died in 1844. 'When Lewis was twenty years old, in 1851, with his mother and two younger brothers, George and James, he came to Spring Grove. Two sisters and a brother had come two years earlier. The sisters were: Mary, wife of John Farmer, and Elizabeth, wife of Malachi Straw. Mary died in 1864. Elizabeth and her husband live in Page Co., Iowa. William, who came with the two sisters, settled on section 36, and afterwards went to Brodhead, and now lives in Shelby Co., Iowa. George lives in Davison Co., Dak., and James lives in Durand, Ill. The mother bought the farm afterwards owned by John D. Horton, and now owned by Uriah Hartman. She died in this town. Lewis Hooker, the subject of this sketch, was married Dec. 18, 1858, to Sarah E. Horton. Catharine Horton, a sister of Mrs. Hooker, has her home with them. Mr. and Mrs. Hooker lived on the farm of John D. Horton for five years after their marriage, and later on a part of the Charles Woodling place, working one-half of the farm for three years. He had bought 100 acres on section 15, and after building a house upon the purchase, moved into the same, which has since been his residence, the date of removal being Dec. 20, 1866. They have had four children, all of whom have been spared to them, and are at this time (1884) living at home—Josephine, born Sept. 24, 1859; Joel A., born Feb. 23, 1861; Dexter E., born Nov. 6, 1866; Calista S., born June 9, 1876. Mr. Hooker has a good farm and comfortable buildings.

J. J. Newman is one of the largest farmers in Green county. He lives upon section 6, town of Spring Grove, where he owns 460 acres. He also owns seventy acres on section 7, 100 acres on section 12, and fifty-eight acres on section 1, in the town of Jefferson, also fractional additions to the northeast quarter of said section, south of the railroad, making altogether a farm of nearly 800 acres of contiguous lands, well adapted to general farming. His residence and farm buildings are substantial and commodious, and were erected at a cost of about $8,000. His barn is 70x100 feet, with twenty-four foot posts, making sufficient room for sheltering 120 head of cattle and 100 hogs, and above has storage for from 7,000 to 8,000 bushels of grain, and 800 tons of hay. Mr. Newman was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Nov. 2, 1827. In 1848 his father, William Newman, came with his family to Lancaster, Grant Co., Wis. The following year he (William Newman) removed to the "Rittenhouse farm," in the town of Jefferson, Green county, and lived there two years, then moved upon the "Wash. Alexander farm," in Spring Grove, until he could build a house upon land which he had purchased on section 6, where he settled in 1852. Mr. Newman was first married in Pennsylvania, and his wife died there in 1846. A short time before coming west, he was again married to Vashti Debolt, widow of Andrew Debolt. He had in his family at this time, seven children and a stepdaughter—Anna E. Debolt. Ephraim, the third son and fourth child, died at Nicholasville, Ky., while in the service during the late war. He was a lieutenant in company K, of the 22d Wisconsin regiment; Hannah was married to John Batty, and died Sept. 20, 1873; Samuel died at Mount Pleasant, March 17, 1876; Elizabeth is married to Jacob Roderick; Nancy lives in Decatur; William lives in Jefferson, and Anna Debolt is the wife of O. B. Post. After coming to Wisconsin, Mr. and Mrs. Newman had four children born—Isaac J., born in 1849, and died at the age of twenty-two months; Louisa, born in 1851, is now the wife of Scott Dorsy, of Nebraska; Josephine, born in 1853, also lives in Nebraska, and is the wife of Clinton Condon; Alice, born in 1856, is the wife of Daniel Dunwiddie. William Newman died in April, 1863, and his wife died Nov. 7, 1874. Jefferson J. Newman was married Jan. 27, 1853, to Lydia, daughter of Jehu Chadwick, of Jefferson. They first settled in Jefferson, where he bought 200 acres of land on sections 14 and 23, upon which they lived eleven years, then removed to their present residence. They have had eleven children born to them—James M., born in January, 1854; Mary, born in October, 1855; Gilbert, born in September, 1857; Ira, born in May, 1860; William, born in August, 1862; John, born in September, 1864, and died Oct. 17, 1865; Elizabeth, born in March, 1867; Frank, born in September, 1869; Parker, born in March, 1872; Thornton, born in January, 1876, and Ross, born in June, 1878. The last named died Feb. 9, 1879. All of the children living, except James M., who is at Cheyenne, Wy. Terr., are residing with their parents.

Austin C. Chapel lives on section 22. He settled here in 1854. He was born in Richland Co., Ohio, Sept. 15, 1830, and came to this town in October, 1853. One year later his brother, James H. Chapel, and his mother, came. Four brothers and two sisters also came at the same time with James H. Their names are—Ebenezer R., who died in Ohio, Oct 3, 1873; Ransom A., who died from a wound received at the battle of Shiloh, Sept. 30, 1862; Thomas R., died July 28, 1856; Reuben H., residing in Mount Auburn, Iowa. He served from Sept. 7, 1861, to Dec. 26, 1865, in the 13th Wisconsin Volunteers; Harriet, wife J. R. Coulter, came in 1852; Lucelia R., wife of Jacob Hass; Agatha, wife of Robert Pomeroy, living in Dixon Co., Neb. One sister came with her husband, John A. Emminger, in 1855. She died December 13, of the same year. Another sister, Martha, wife of Simon P. Armstrong, lives in Dickinson Co., Kansas. The father of this family, John Chapel, died in Ohio, Aug. 23, 1844. The mother, Martha Chapel, lives with her son, Austin C. She was born June 1, 1800, and is vigorous, healthy, of strong mind and apparently unclouded intellect. She reads without glasses, and walks as elastic as a maiden, and enjoys life with the rest of them. She was born at Montpelier, Vt. and came west to Ohio with her parents, when eighteen years of age. Austin C. Chapel, after coming in the fall of 1853, worked at farm work and wood chopping and any employment which offered in a new country. He commenced making a farm which he now resides upon late in 1854. He enlisted Sept. 7, 1861, in the 13th Wisconsin Volunteers and served three years and was discharged Nov. 19, 1864. After his discharge he came to Spring Grove, and June 22, 1867, was wedded to Madeline King, daughter of John and Rhoda King, of White Co., Ill. Mrs. Chapel was born March 25, 1849. They have had seven children—Della, born Dec. 28, 1867, died Nov. 3, 1881; Daisy, born Sept. 23, 1869; Dora, born Nov. 24, 1871; Cyrus, born May 11, 1873, died Sept. 3, 1873; Clark, born Feb. 3, 1875, died May 14, 1876; Eunice, born March 26, 1877; Azella, born June 21, 1880. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Chapel has been spent on his present farm.

George W. Zimmerman was born in Columbia, Penn., Feb. 25, 1828. He was reared a farmer, but after becoming of age learned the blacksmith's trade, serving two and one half years apprenticeship. He followed that trade until 1863 or ten years after he commenced.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

He first came west in 1853, locating in Stephenson Co., Ill., where he worked at his trade a year and a half. In 1855 he came to the town of Spring Grove and bought 100 acres of land on section 33, where he built a house and shop. This property he sold in 1862. The following winter he visited his old home in the east, returning in the spring of 1863, and the autumn of that year moved to his present residence on section 28. This farm he had purchased the year previous (1862). He has in the farm 155 acres on section 28, twenty acres on section 27, and sixty acres on section 20. He was married to Elizabeth Keller, in Pennsylvania, March 13, 1850. They have had eleven children born to them—William, born in January, 1852, and died in September, 1853; Isaac, born in August, 1853, who now lives in Oakley; Lloyd, born in February, 1856, and died in July, 1859; Sarah Ann, born in March, 1859, and died in July of the same year; Owen, born in May, 1860, who was married to Melinda Walter; Franklin, born in February, 1863; Clinton, born in August, 1865; Jacob, born in March, 1868; Ida, born in August, 1870, and died in March, 1877; Elmer, born in April, 1873, and Katie, born in April, 1879. Mr. Zimmerman is a son of Isaac and Elizabeth Zimmerman. When George W. Zimmerman returned from the east, father Keller and family returned with him. There were eight children—Lucy (deceased), Sarah, Franklin, Jacob, Phebe, Caroline, Rebecca and Fanny. Frank was killed in the army; Fanny was married to Charles Mitchell; Caroline was married to J. P. Kildow; Rebecca was married to Isaac Clemans; Phebe was married to A. Spaulding, and Sarah was married to John Reahezen. Mr. Keller died in 1878.

Mrs. Rebecca Klumb, wife of Jacob Klumb, lives on the northwest quarter of section 3, town of Spring Grove. She was born in Oswego Co., N. Y., in 1829, and is a daughter of Thomas Shaff. Her father moved with his family to Milwaukee in 1835. He was accidentally drowned the next year. Her mother in 1838 was married to John Douglass. They came to this county in 1853, settling in Decatur. Mr. Douglass now lives in Brodhead; his wife died in 1880. The subject of this sketch was married, March 31, 1846, to Jacob Klumb, and they came to Spring Grove moving on to the place now occupied by Mrs. Klumb. The following winter they moved on to a farm in Decatur, since occupied by Isaac Newman, which Mr. Klumb bought and three years later sold to Mr. Newman, then buying the place where his wife now lives, from Allen Woodle, consisting of 146 acres. Six children were born to them, all of whom are living—Almira, born in 1847, wife of Aug. Short; Thomas C., born in 1849; Jacob J. A., born in 1850; Alfred A., born in 1853; Elizabeth, born in 1857, and Ellen, born in 1858. Thomas C. was married to Ellen Hileman, daughter of Elijah Hileman, formerly of Decatur. They live in Hamilton Co., Neb., and have three children—Claude, Carl and Earl. Jacob J. married Ida Boslaw and is now in Hamilton Co., Neb. They have four sons—Franklin R., Harry, Guy and Jesse. Alfred married Henrietta Sawyer, daughter of John B. Sawyer, of Brodhead. They live in Aurora, county seat of Hamilton Co., Neb. Ellen also lives in that county, and is the wife of W. C. Bailey. They have one child—Adith Blanche, born July 8, 1882. Jacob Klumb went to California in May, 1858. After reaching there he kept up correspondence with regularity until 1872. He was during these years striving to win a fortune and when prospects were bright would fix a probable time for a return to his family, but fortune the "fleeting Goddess" while often in sight was never to be embraced. The latter year (1872) he wrote his wife that he was about to change his location, and was uncertain where he should go, and requested her not to write until she heard from him. Years rolled by, and no tidings were received. To be satisfied as to whether he was living or dead, Mrs. Klumb's son-in-law, R. J. Holcomb, in 1883 visited California and found Mr. Klumb still in pursuit of the "fickle goddess." Mrs. Klumb is again in communication with her husband and hopes for his eventual return. Randolph J. Holcomb is a New England man by birth, having been born in Green Co., Conn., in 1850. His father was Alfred Holcomb. At the age of nine years, Randolph was left motherless. His mother died in Hartford, Conn. His father afterwards came to Brodhead, and returning east, died in 1861, at Rockville, Conn. Another son lives in this State at Beloit. Randolph J. was married to Elizabeth Klumb, June 18, 1874. They have three children—Clara L., born June 3, 1877; Lura M., born Sept. 16, 1879, and Clayton, born June 23, 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Holcomb live on the old homestead with the mother of Mrs. Holcomb, on section 3.

Samuel L. Boyles was born in Kalamazoo Co., Mich., Sept. 27, 1834. His father, Samuel Boyles, was a farmer and to this avocation Samuel L., was reared, with the advantages of a common school education. His father and mother, Rebecca Boyles, are living in Richland, Kalamazoo Co., Mich., where they have resided since 1829. They were formerly from Chester Co., Penn. Samuel Boyles was called out twice in the militia during the excitement in Michigan attending the Black Hawk War. The subject of this sketch, Samuel L. Boyles, came to this county a single man, in January, 1854. He was married Feb. 25, 1855, to Nancy J. Benjamin, a daughter of Ira Benjamin. She was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., Oct. 30, 1837, and came to this State in 1842. There have been born to them six children—Samuel I., born in November, 1856; Lydia R., born in March, 1858, and died in infancy; Jennie J. born in March, 1859, wife of Franklin Brant; Duane D., born in July, 1862; Benjamin L., born in January, 1866, and Era A., born in March, 1873. Mr. Boyles was bereaved by the death of his wife, Aug. 15, 1881. Their married life was spent under a roof upon the same spot of ground where they commenced house-keeping four days after marriage. and where Mr. Boyles now lives on section 9. His farm contains 300 acres on sections 9 and 16. During the war when heavy taxes were levied, Mr. Boyles served two years as town treasurer. He has also served two terms as assessor, and has always been identified with the best men of his town in promoting the public good.

James H. Chapel was born in Richland Co., Ohio, Dec. 31, 1832, and was a son of John Chapel, a farmer. James H. was brought up on a farm, but at the age of eighteen years, apprenticed himself, for a term of three years, to the trade of wagon making, his wages consisting of his board and clothing. He served his time and then worked one year at the trade. In 1854 he came to this county, locating in the town of Spring Grove and working for P. Atwood for two years on a farm, meanwhile buying seventy acres of land known as the Kramer place. He was married Dec. 28, 1856, to Mary E. Martin, daughter of Isaac and Nancy Martin, who, with three daughters—Margaret, Lavina and Mary, and a married son, Isaac N., and his wife with three children, settled in Spring Grove in 1850. They came from the town of Greene, Ashland Co., Ohio. Mr. Martin bought 160 acres of land on section 23. Two married daughters were left in Ohio—Nancy, wife of John Menoe, now living in Avon, Rock Co., Wis., and Martha, wife of James M. Cobert, now living in Brodhead; and one son, Thomas, who lives in Hayesville, Ohio. Of the three unmarried daughters Margaret married John Q. Fitzgerald, and they live in Canton, Dak.; Lavina married Powel Karney, and they live on the old homestead of the father; Mary married James H. Chapel, of this town, as before stated. Mr. Martin was connected with the Presbyterian Church about forty years of his life, and was an elder for thirty years. The first Sunday after reaching this town he organized a Sabbath school, and from that time to the end of his life, was a superintendent of a Sabbath school in this town. He was man of many sterling qualities, of strict integrity and honor. He died Feb. 4, 1862. His wife died Nov. 28, 1864. In 1857, the year following his marriage, the subject of this sketch, James H. Chapel, commenced life on his own farm. After living there one year, with his wife and his brother, R. H. Chapel, he left for the west to seek a fortune. They started with a team and covered wagon, traveling west until late in August. They reached the Missouri river at Booneville, Mo., where they remained until the following spring, cutting and barking wood on a contract. April 4, 1859, one year to a day from the time of leaving his Wisconsin home, having exchanged his horses for oxen, they left the Missouri river, and "Westward Ho! bound for Pike's Peak," was the cry. With varied adventure they reached the present site of the city of Denver, during the last days of June. While there, a few days later, Mr. Chapel assisted in raising the first house of any kind ever built in that city. It was constructed of cottonwood logs. July 4, Mr. Chapel and his brother joined fortunes with seven others, and started prospecting for gold in the mountains. They made a claim about forty-five miles from Denver. The day they reached the mountains it snowed furiously, and the party suffered severely with the cold. Not many days afterward Mr. Chapel returned to Denver for provisions. He made these trips several times, and at one time upon his return loaded with fifty pounds of flour, and climbing the mountain path just wide enough for an Indian pony to walk, he met a large party of Arapahoe's, who were returning from the war path with scalps of their enemies, the Ute's, war paint and war trappings, which gave them a wicked appearance, and Mr. Chapel was in doubt as to whether they might not be yet one scalp short. But they dashed by, every brave giving the short "how." Mrs. Chapel spent some weeks at the foot of the mountains grazing the oxen and one cow, in company with another woman, the wife of one of the party, twenty miles from the camp at the working claim. The mountain fever getting hold of Mr. Chapel, he was cured of the "gold fever," and a longing for the refreshing shades and quiet dells of Wisconsin came over him, and then it was that "Homeward Ho," was the cry. A long, tedious journey was before them. In September they set their faces eastward, and Dec. 2, 1859, found them again in Spring Grove. Both Mr. and Mrs. Chapel found themselves not only broken in expense, but also in health, from exposure necessarily incident to the kind of life they had been leading. They were obliged to rent lands until 1863, when he bought land where he now lives on section 23. On that section, and on section 22, he now owns 213 acres of good land, all under improvement. They have had nine children—Lazarus, born Oct. 7, 1857, and died in infancy; Viella N., born Feb. 12, 1860, wife of Adam Bener; Hattie V., born Aug. 19, 1863, wife of Uriah H. Hartman; J. Ralph, born Sept. 22, 1866; John A., born Nov. 25, 1868, and died July 15, 1876; Maud A., born Nov. 9, 1870; Martha E., born Oct. 6, 1875; Columbus C., born Oct. 14, 1877, and Jessie M., born June 21, 1880. Mr. Chapel enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out of service. He was elected town treasurer in 1867, and held that office for eight years, during which time he made the town assessment three or four times. He is now the town assessor. He is a public spirited man, and a good citizen. He is a member of the G. A. R. Post No. 90.

James P. Atwood, one of the young men born in the town of Spring Grove, is a son of P. and M. J. Atwood, and was born Jan. 10, 1855. He was brought up on a farm, and lived with his father until his marriage with Susan A. Baxter, Oct. 24, 1874. His wife is a daughter of Thomas J. Baxter, and a granddaughter of the old pioneer, Daniel Baxter, who settled in this town in 1837. She was born June 17, 1856. Two boys have been born to them—

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

John P., born July 18, 1876, and Robert Lincoln, born April 12, 1878. Mr. Atwood owns and occupies eighty acres of land on section 14, also owns eighty-four acres of unimproved land in the town of Kensett, near Northwood, Worth Co., Iowa. He is one of the promising young men of the town.

Saul Mattison was born in Genesee Co., N.Y., May 29, 1812, where he grew to manhood, learning the trade of blacksmith. In 1836 he was married to Nancy Gilbert. To them one son was born—Ransom, who is now living in Minnesota. He was captain in the late Civil War in a Minnesota regiment. Saul Mattison lost his wife in 1837, after a little over one year of married life. He was married April 29, 1841, to Charlotte Gray. By this union there were six children—Charles E., Oscar, (deceased) aged one year; Marion, wife of James Davis; Charlotte, who died at age of five years; Ida M., living at home; Florence, single. Mrs. Mattison was born in Chenango Co., N. Y., June 19, 1820. Mr. Mattison moved his family west and settled in this town in 1855. He was one of the first mechanics in the town in his line. He is now (1884) working at his trade at Oakley, where he has lived since 1859.

August Short was born at Coblenz, on the Rhine, Prussia, in the year 1834. His father, Nicholas Short (the name has been Americanized) came to America with his family, landing at New York, July 6, 1852. He came directly to Milwaukee where he now lives. Of his eight children, four died the first summer with cholera in that city, and his wife died in 1858. The other children—Joseph, August, Elizabeth and Nicholas are living. The subject of this sketch left the family, the next day after reaching Milwaukee, and obtained employment at a brickyard, where he received $7 per month. He borrowed $10 and went to Bloomington, Ill., and worked upon a farm there until the next spring. He then returned to Milwaukee with his earnings, $55 dollars in gold, which he gave to his father and again went to work in a brick-yard, for $16 per month. He afterward went to Henry Co., Ill., where he worked until the spring of 1854. He then went to work on the Racine & Beloit Railroad for a short time, after which he engaged to work on a farm with John Robinson, in whose employ he came to Spring Grove in 1855. Mr. Robinson moved into a house which stood on the site of Mr. Short's present residence. The property was then owned by Mr. Derrick. In 1856 Mr. Short rented a farm of Nelson Thompson and worked it one year. He continued to work rented lands until 1866, in which year he bought the Derrick farm, upon which he now lives. It comprises lots 2 and 7, and the west half of lots 1 and 8, fractional additions to the northeast quarter of section 4, 138 acres. He also owns forty acres on section 8, and ten acres on section 9, making altogether a valuable farm. He is an example of what may be accomplished by industry, honesty and perseverance. Mr. Short was married March 1, 1863, to Almira Klumb, daughter of an old settler, Jacob Klumb. They have one daughter—Rella, born Oct. 22, 1864.

Melville Karney, son of Powel and Abigail Karney, was born in this town May 11, 1856. He was reared a farmer, and lived with his parents until his marriage, which occurred Dec. 7, 1882. His wife was Abbie Hamblett, daughter of Horace and Lana Hamblett. Her father enlisted in the 13th Wisconsin regiment in 1863, and died while on his way home on board a ship off New York harbor. Her mother subsequently married Gilbert Ross, and now lives in Brodhead. Melville Karney is a son of one of Spring Grove's best citizens, and, as such, promises to fill the expectations of his family and friends. He is at present living on a portion of his father's farm on section 23.

Oliver W. Martin, son of W. N. and Elizabeth Martin, was born in the town of Spring Grove, Dec. 10, 1856. His parents came from Ashland Co., Ohio, and settled in this town in 1854. His father is among the respected citizens of the town. Oliver is one of a family of five children. The other four are—William A., who died Nov. 10, 1883; Flora B., Minnie M. and Nellie. Oliver W. lived with his parents until his marriage Oct. 31, 1882, with Ella Oneall daughter of William H. and Marcia Oneall. She was born Sept. 3, 1858. Their only child, Inez May, was born Aug. 18, 1883. Mr. Martin is one of the best among the younger class of men in the town. He has made the most of his opportunities, fitting himself for school teaching, and has taught eight terms, with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. He is now serving his third term as town clerk.

D. W. Austin is one of the large farmers of Spring Grove. He owns 475 acres of valuable land on sections 11 and 12. He keeps about 100 head of cattle; milking in the season about fifty cows; keeping also about 200 sheep, and other stock. He has shelter for all and storage for feed. Mr. Austin was born in Scotland, Albany Co., N. Y., July 16, 1821. When twenty-one years of age he came to Wisconsin, spending the first year in Racine county. His father, John Austin, came later and settled. With him his son made a home a large share of the time until his marriage with Jane E. Hugunin, which occurred at Johnstown Center, Rock county, March 2, 1847. He lived with his father until 1852, when he bought a farm at Johnstown Center, and lived on the same until 1856, when he sold his farm and came to Brodhead and engaged in the livery business, which he followed seven years; in the meantime buying at different times of different parties 440 acres of his present farm. Closing out his business in Brodhead, he has made his farm his residence since. Mr. Austin's mother died in 1854, and his father in 1872. Thomas Austin, a brother, lives at Johnstown, Rock county, and owns 2,300 acres of land in that county. The subject of this sketch, D. W. Austin, was one of the first men in this part of the county to engage in breeding the Holstein family of cattle. He is a practical farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Austin have four children—Mary Ann, born in 1848, wife of Dr. E. H. Dudley, of Shell Rock, Iowa; Carson A., born in 1853; Cora H., born in 1861; and David E., born in 1863.

Samuel Colby was born Jan. 13, 1805, in Ogden, Monroe Co., N. Y. His father died in September, 1809, and his mother in 1818. Samuel is the last of a family of seven children, three sons and four daughters. He settled in Oakland Co., Mich., near Pontiac, April 20, 1826. He was married May 25, 1829, to Eliza Douglass, a native of Oneida Co., N. Y., who came to Oakland county when six years old. In March, 1841, Mr. and Mrs. Colby came to Rock Co., Wis., bought land in Plymouth, made a farm and lived there thirteen years, then, selling out, purchased land in this town (now owned by Cyrus I. Putnam), and lived on the same until 1866, then, after renting the place one year, sold out to Mr. Putnam. Two years later they spent one season in Fayette Co., Iowa, then living one year in Brodhead, went to Rock county, buying a farm in Spring Valley, and lived there until 1882, then came to this town to live with his son, David Colby. Mrs. Colby died in Brodhead Dec. 19, 1868. Mr. Colby has six children living—William, born Oct. 14, 1830, now living in Fayette Co., Iowa; George, born Oct. 17, 1832, a resident of Decatur Co., Kansas; James H., born April 20, 1834, living in West Union, Iowa; Melissa, born Oct. 19, 1846, wife of S. J. Babcock, of Decatur Co., Kansas; Samuel F., born Aug. 18, 1843. The last was born in Rock county, the others in Michigan. His son, David, with whom Mr. Colby lives, was born Nov. 28, 1835. He owns a farm on section 35, where he lives. David served in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, until the regiment was mustered out. He was married Feb. 26, 1863, to Julia A. Martin, daughter of one of the early settlers, Joseph W. Martin. Mr. Martin enlisted in the 13th regiment, Wisconsin Volunteers, and died at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. Martin's wife died at West Union, Iowa, in 1881. David Colby, after his return from the army, settled upon his present farm, and has since lived there. While in the service his wife lived with her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Colby have had ten children—Adill, born Dec. 31, 1864, wife of Abraham Barker; Elva and Alva B., twins, born Jan. 22, 1867; the latter died April 8, 1880; Ada F., born Feb. 16, 1869; Samuel W., born May 30, 1871; Frank F., born Sept. 15, 1873, and died April 6, 1880; Walter G., born March 21, 1876; Bertha, born Aug. 14, 1877, and died April 8, 1880; Roy R., born March 23, 1880; Earl, born April 19, 1882.

Orland B. Post owns and occupies a farm comprising lots number 5 and 6, fractional additions to the northwest quarter of section 4, and lots number 1 and 8, fractional additions to the northeast quarter of section 5. His residence is on lot 1. The land on section 5, was known in early days as the "Condon place," and the land on section 4 as the "Morris Derrick farm." Mr. Post bought the Derrick farm in 1867, and lived there until 1875, when he purchased the Condon place, adjoining, to which he removed. He was born in Chatauqua Co., N. Y., in 1836. He was reared a farmer, and at the age of twenty-one years, came west, reaching Jordan Prairie, in this county, April 1, 1857. He engaged in farming here three years, then, in 1860, went to Goodhue Co., Minn., and remained one year, teaching the first school in the town of Holden, during the winter. The school house was a miserable, half built log cabin, heated by an old cooking stove. The fuel was delivered at the school house door, sled length, to be prepared by the teacher, for the stove. He received the enormous compensation of $15 per month and "boarded round." Miss Debolt, to whom he was afterwards married, taught the same winter in Oak Hill district, in Decatur, in this county; receiving $10 per month and boarding round. Mr. Post contemplated remaining in Minnesota, and purchased eighty-seven acres of land on which he made some improvement. He changed his mind and returned to Spring Grove, where Oct. 10, 1861, he was married to Anna E. Debolt, daughter of Andrew Debolt and stepdaughter of William Newman. She is a native of Pennsylvania. They are the parents of five children—Arthur, born in November, 1862; Mary, born in November, 1864; Walter, born in March, 1868; Charlie, born in January, 1870, and Harry, born in June, 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Post resided in Sylvester several years before coming to Spring Grove. He is one of the valuable citizens of his town, and highly respected by his neighbors.

Cyrus A. Horton is a son of John D. Horton, who came from Rensselaer Co., N.Y., in 1857, and settled on section 35, town of Spring Grove, Green Co., Wis., with his wife and three children—Sarah, wife of Lewis Hooker; Catharine now living with Mr. and Mrs. Hooker, and Cyrus A. John D. Horton died at the home he made in Spring Grove, March 10, 1882, in his seventy-sixth year. His wife, Curlista, died Dec. 12, 1881, in her sixty-fifth year. The old homestead of 100 acres was bought by Cyrus A. Horton, and by him sold to Thomas Hartman. The subject of this sketch was married to Mary Jane Woodling, daughter of John H. Woodling, of Spring Grove, June 25, 1863. They commenced married life on the farm of Mr. Horton's father, and lived there many years; but in 1874, Cyrus bought thirty acres in Laona, over the State line in Illinois, and subsequently added forty acres of land adjoining it, and in 1876 moved on to his farm, and has since been a citizen of Illinois. He has made his farm valuable by improvements in building, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Horton have had five children—Harriet A., born April 3, 1864, and died Oct. 17, 1865; Eunice M., born April 3, 1867; Kate Ann, born March 22, 1868; Cyrus Burton, born Feb. 13, 1873, and Nancy C., born Feb. 19, 1877. Mr. Horton was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y.,

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Aug. 5, 1839. Mrs. Horton was born in Vigo Co., Ind., June 5, 1844.

John Kelley, proprietor of the Oakley woolen mill, was born in Milton, Northumberland Co., Penn., Nov. 25, 1823, and there grew to manhood, learning the trade of woolen manufacturer. His parents died in his native county; the father in 1838 and the mother in 1834. John was married Dec. 3, 1845, to Eliza Van Dyke, who was born in said county, March 27, 1826. They came west in the fall of 1857, (Mr. Kelley having spent a part of the previous year at Beloit and other points.) They lived a few months at Brodhead, then moved to Peoria, Ill., Mr. Kelley having engaged in buying wool and selling goods for an eastern establishment. The next spring they returned to Brodhead. In the fall of 1858 he made a contract with George Bussy, the owner of the Oakley woolen mill, to operate the same on shares. In the spring of 1861 he went to Cedarville and entered into partnership with Joseph Jackson in the woolen factory at that place. There he remained some time, operating in that partnership, and renting a part of the time until 1864, when he returned to the Oakley mill which he rented of Isaac Trembly, and in July, 1865, he purchased the property. He has since enlarged and refitted the mill with new machinery, which he still owns and operates. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley have five children—Emma Jane, born Sept. 18, 1846; Elissa Ann, born July 23, 1848; James A., born June 22, 1850; Oscar W., born Jan. 1, 1861; and Jennie A., born Oct. 28, 1862. Mr. Kelley has held the office of justice of the peace, and has been a prominent man in promoting the welfare of the public in his township.

Mrs. Emma J. Myers resides on section 19. She was born in Union Co., Penn., Sept. 18, 1846. She is a daughter of John Kelley, who is now a resident of Spring Grove. She was married to George Myers, Jan. 9, 1866, and had four children—Edgar W., born May 11, 1867; Walter L., born Jan. 12, 1869, and died March 12, 1870;

Oliver B., born Feb. 18, 1871; and Nellie May, born March 29, 1876, and died March 4, 1877. Samuel Myers, the father of George Myers, came to this town, accompanied by his father-in-law, Isaac Kline, in March, 1837, and settled on section 19. George Myers died Dec. 27, 1881, aged forty-five years, ten months and eleven days. Mrs. Myers lives on the homestead, which contains eighty acres. There is also 114 acres of land adjoining in the town of Jefferson.

Samuel J. Smith was born near Alton, Ill., Aug. 27, 1838. His father, Samuel Smith, came from Kentucky to Illinois, and three weeks before the birth of Samuel went to Texas for the purpose of selecting a home for himself and family, and was never afterwards heard from. His mother became satisfied that he was dead, and in 1841 was married to Daniel Freeman. By this marriage five children were born—James W., who lives in Shullsburg, Wis.; William H., who lives in Oakland, Iowa; Daniel B., also living in Oakland; Levi E., living in this town; and Benjamin F., of Oakland Iowa. The father also lives in Oakland. In 1843 the family removed to Rockford, Ill., and in 1846 to the town of Avon, Rock Co., Wis., living there until 1850. Mrs. Freeman died in 1850, and the family was broken up. Mr. Freeman went to Missouri, and returning lived in Wiotia until 1876 when he went to Iowa. The subject of this sketch went to live with Jackson Waller, of Laona, Ill., and remained with him four years, then being sixteen years old started to make his way alone visiting his half brothers in Iowa, and returning worked as a farm laborer until his marriage with Catharine, daughter of J. H. and Mary Clemans, Oct. 17, 1857. In 1864 he purchased land on sections 26 and 27. His home is on section 26. In 1865, he enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out. They have five children—John H., born in 1858; Mary E., born in 1860; Harvey J., born in 1862; Burt E., born in 1870; and Stanley R., born in 1878.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Fred J. Ties was born in Westphalia, Prussia, Jan. 4, 1841. He is the son of Henry and Sophia Ties. In 1858 his father came to the "land of the free," reaching New York, July 1, and came directly west, arriving in Chicago, July 4, and reaching Spring Grove July 7, and stopped with his son-in-law, Frederick Arnsmeir, where he lived for two years; then bought twenty acres of land on section 27, and lived there until 1866, when he sold and bought forty acres in the same section, where he lived until his death which occurred May 26, 1878. His wife survives him and now lives with her son, Henry, in Avon, Rock Co., Wis. Five children came over the sea with the parents—Sophia, deceased wife of John Leuts; Wilhelminie, now wife of Frederick Tilka; Fred J., the subject of this sketch; Amelia, wife of Henry Beckmeier; and Henry. Two children had preceded the parents—Louisa, wife of F. Cernsmeier, and Elizabeth, wife of Philip Heitkam. Frederick J. enlisted in company B, under Capt. Charles Jackson, and was a faithful, capable and intelligent soldier, and is a member of the G. A. R., W. W. Patten Post, No. 90. The same year he came home from the war he was married Dec. 13, 1865, to Rossie Aurine Emminger, daughter of John Emminger. She was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, and was an adopted daughter of James R. Coulter. Seven children have been born to them—Abbie S., born Sept. 29, 1866; Harriet F., born Oct. 16, 1868, and died March 18, 1881; Nellie J., born Sept. 23, 1870; Mary C., born Feb. 2, 1873; Allethe J., born March 24, 1875; James R., born Sept. 13, 1877; Fred M., born April 18, 1880. Mr. Ties met with an irreparable loss in the death of his wife, which occurred Jan. 16, 1884. The first two years of Fred Ties residence in this county he worked for J. W. Kildow, and the next year for John H. Woodling, and at the time of his enlistment was working for his brother-in-law, Mr. Arnsmeir. All his relatives opposed his going to the war, claiming that as a young German settler he could have no interest in the issue. Fred could not sleep nights on account of his anxiety to strike a blow for his adopted country, and so he would and did. Mr. Ties has served on the town board, and one term as assessor. He is one of the active public spirited men of his town. He owns a farm of 200 acres.

William Johnson is one of the substantial farmers of Spring Grove; his fine improvements on section 29, shows him to be a practical and successful farmer. He owns on this section 210 acres, and on section 19, 120 acres; also, on section 30, fifty acres. This land on section 30, is the oldest improvement in the town, it being a part of the Darius Daniels land, bought in 1836, and ten acres of the part now owned by Mr. Johnson was broken that year, the first sod turned in the township. Mr. Johnson was born in Northampton Co., Penn., May 7, 1825. He was reared a farmer, but after twenty-two years of age learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked some seven or eight years, and some later, doing his own work. He was married Oct. 7, 1854, to Catharine Long, of Northampton Co., Penn., and in March of the following year (1855), moved to Freeport, Ill., and in 1858 made his present location his home. They have four children—Elizabeth, born Oct. 13, 1857, wife of John Straley, of this county; Hebron, born in August, 1860, who lives on his father's farm, and who was married to Emma Robinson, Nov. 20, 1881, and has one child—George R., born Dec. 11, 1882; Mary J., born Feb. 7, 1866; and Ellen Maria, born June 25, 1868.

Charles F. Gardner was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., April 2, 1853. His father, George W. Gardner, when Charles was three years old, came to this county and lived in the town of Decatur until the winter of 1859, when he went to Texas, and with the exception of a few letters received shortly after he reached there, has never been heard from. His wife, later, bought a place in the town of Decatur, where she died in February, 1877. Charles F. has two brothers, Burton J., now living in Brodhead, and John, living in the town of Decatur. Charles F., the subject of this sketch, was married Feb. 15, 1876, to Mary L., daughter of James M. Davis, now a resident of the town of Clarno. They lived, after marriage, with his mother. After her death they lived upon a farm owned by his father-in-law, in the town of Decatur, five years, then he bought his present residence and farm, on section 5, of Spring Grove. The place contains sixty-nine acres of choice land. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner had a child born June 15, 1881—James G. He died at the age of one year. Maud was born July 24, 1883. Mrs. Gardner is a granddaughter of David Davis, the pioneer settler of 1888.

Jacob Haas was born in Juniata Co., Penn., Nov. 29, 1837, and came with his father and the rest of the family, to Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill., in May, 1850. The family consisted of the parents, David and Barbara Haas, and six children—Valentine, John, who died in 1881, in Stephenson county; Sarah, who married Levi Bolender; Jacob, Edward, who died in 1859; and Catharine, who was married to Hugh Alexander, now living near Lena, Ill. David Haas, in 1856, located in Spring Grove, on section 33, living there until 1868, when he bought land on section 27, and moved there and lived until his death, which occurred in November, 1881. His wife he had lost by death in 1859, three years after coming to this town, and in 1864, he was married to Mrs. Mary Ann Snyder, widow of Samuel Snyder. She survives him and lives at the homestead. The subject of this sketch, Jacob Haas, was married Oct. 4, 1859, to Lucelia R. Chapel, daughter of John and Martha Chapel, and March 18, 1860, moved on eighty acres of land on section 33, bought of his father. He also owns forty acres on section 21. His residence, made in 1860, he has continually occupied, with the exception of five years, (1874 to 1879), to the present time. Those five years he lived on a farm, purchased on section 21. Mr. and Mrs. Haas have been blessed with a goodly number of children—Barbara L., wife of E. H. Marsh; Rosamond, wife of Fred Arnsmeir; Nellie F., Nettle May, John J., Harriet L., Adelia, Emerson B. and Fairy M., live with their parents. An infant child died in 1861. Agatha F., died in 1864. Marion died in 1875. Mr. Haas is an industrious, respected citizen of Spring Grove.

William Hall, Jr., was born in Theresa, Jefferson Co., N. Y., March 16, 1836. He is the oldest of five children. The others are—Nathaniel H., living in San Francisco Co., Cal.; Mary A., wife of James L. Eldridge, living at Cloverdale, Cal.; Emma, wife of Chester Gifford; and Lewis, living at Peoria, Ill. In 1843 his father came to Janesville, Wis., and settled. He lived in Rock county sixteen years, was engaged at different points in the agricultural machine trade. He owned and operated at different times several farms. In 1859 he moved to this county and bought of Thomas Hall a very fine farm in the town of Jefferson. It is now known as the Holmes farm, and contains 240 acres of land. He resided there about five years and then sold it to Mr. Holmes and entered into partnership with Axtel & Shafer in the grain trade at Juda. He was in that trade several years, then opened a general merchandise store at Attica, and later returned to Juda, and from there to Doylestown, Columbia Co., Wis., where he engaged in the grain trade. While there he bought two farms in Rock county. He moved there and managed the property, but in March, 1883, sold the farms and moved to Warren, Ill., where he now (1884) lives. In 1866 his wife died. William Hall, Jr., lived with his father until he was married, Jan. 16, 1865, to Adeline Thompson, daughter of Wilson Thompson, of this town. Her father died in April, 1871. Her mother lives with her son, Myron Thompson, at Waverly, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Hall commenced housekeeping on the Holmes place in the town of Jefferson, and later lived at Twin Grove. He then removed to their residence in this town. Mrs. Hall's father, Wilson Thompson, settled in this State in Milwaukee county, in 1837, and in Green county in 1854, on section 10, this town. He was a ship carpenter. Mrs. Hall has six brothers living—Lafayette, in this town; Washington, in the town of Jefferson; Charles, Frank and Myron, who lives near Waverly Iowa; and Grant, in Shell Rock, Iowa. All but Myron and Grant are married. She has one sister, Louisa, wife of Edward McNair. Mr. Hall's brothers are—Nathaniel, George, Eugene and Rush. They all live in San Francisco, Cal. Two sisters, Hattie, wife of Fred Cronett, resides in San Francisco; and Ida B., wife of Andrew Goble, resides in Peoria, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have had two children—Eugene, born Sept. 27, 1865; Minnie May, born June 4, 1867, and died Sept. 12, 1868. Mr. Hall lives on section 8. Mr. Hall enlisted in December, 1861, in the 3d battalion, 2d Wisconsin Cavalry. He was discharged in 1863 for disability.

Thomas A. Jackson was born on the 2d day of March, 1829, in what is now Stewart township, Fayette Co., Penn; received less than one year's schooling, all told, in the common schools of that day. His parents were born in the State of Maryland. His father, Elijah Jackson, was by trade a stone and brick mason. Thomas, the oldest of eleven children, was hired out among the farmers from the age of twelve years most of his time until of age; and in this way may have been said to have been reared a farmer, in which business he has continued most of his time since. When a young man he taught school five winter terms, three of them in the same district. In 1854 he was married to Mary Morris, a farmer's daughter, of the same township. Nine children have been born to them, four sons and five daughters, all living but one. Their names and ages are—Laura, twenty-nine; Marshall, twenty-seven; Charles Willard, twenty-five; Emma Luella died in 1862, nearly two years old; Walter; twenty; Fred, seventeen; Minnie, fourteen, Clara, twelve; and Jessie Belle, youngest, five years of age. In the spring of 1854

he was elected captain of the Falls City Guards, a uniformed military company raised in Fayette county, in which capacity he served two years, when he resigned and removed to Wisconsin in the spring of 1856, settling at Beloit, Rock county, near which place he remained nearly two years, coming to Green county in the spring of 1858, settling near his present residence, remaining one year, then removing to what is known as the Scotch settlement, ten miles northeast of Rockford, Winnebago Co., Ill., where he resided during the years 1859, 1860 and most of 1861, engaged mostly in farming. About the time the war broke out he was elected captain of the Independent Scotch Infantry, a military company raised by the young men of the Scotch settlement. The company not entering the service as an organization, he, with his brother, Charles H. Jackson, who had just been discharged from the three months' service in the 10th Illinois Infantry, came to Green with a few men from the Scotch settlement and commenced to recruit a company for the 13th Wisconsin Infantry. That regiment being full before the company was full, it was assigned to the 18th Wisconsin Infantry. Thomas was elected 1st lieutenant of the company, the captaincy being conceded to Charles H. Jackson, by reason of his three months' active service in the field. The company went into camp at Milwaukee in December, 1861, with the other companies composing the 18th, and, upon the organization of the regiment, was assigned and lettered company B, the second post of honor.

The 18th remained in camp at Milwaukee until the 30th day of March, 1862, just one week to a day prior to the first day's battle of Pittsburg Landing, when it broke camp and was started by rail for the front, passing through Chicago, St. Louis, Cairo, Paducah, Ky., and up the Tennessee river to Pittsburg Landing, where it arrived on Saturday afternoon, April 5, a few hours before the battle, and was pushed out to the extreme front, three and one-half miles, that same evening; assigned to Gen. B. M. Prentiss' division. Lieut. Jackson was in command of his company, and in the front line of attack on the morning of the 6th of April, and was on the evening of that day taken prisoner, with about 175 men and officers of the 18th, with what was left of Gen. Prentiss' division—some 2,200 men and officers; spending nearly seven months in rebel prisons, being confined in Montgomery, Ala., Macon and Madison, Ga., and lastly, in old Libby prison, Richmond, Va., where with his fellow officers he was paroled in October, 1862, and passed into the Union lines. About two months later he was exchanged and commissioned captain of his company, rejoining his regiment at Lake Providence, La., in February, 1863; afterwards participating in the battles of Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863; and Champion Hills, Miss., May 16, 1863; and the siege of Vicksburg; the battle of Missionary Ridge, in November, 1863; Allatoona, Ga., Oct. 5, 1864, and the battle of Wise's Fork, N. C., in March, 1865. He was mustered out of service in April, 1865, at Goldsboro, N. C., and arrived at home in May, 1865, after three and one-half year's service. In the spring of 1866 he was elected town clerk of his town, and held the position for seven consecutive terms. He was elected to the legislature from his district in the fall of 1868, and re-elected to the same position in the fall of 1869, serving two full terms; was during his last term, appointed by Gov. Fairchild a member of the State visiting committee from the 3d congressional district. Since that time he has been mostly employed on his farm. Within the last four years he has spent the greater part of his time as an underwriter for a fire insurance company in Iowa. His parents, Elijah and Mary A. Jackson, lived in Green county on the farm now owned by Thomas A. Jackson, for over twenty years; removing to Hamilton county in 1876, where his father died in 1880, aged seventy-five years; and where his mother still lives, aged seventy-seven years. Of his four brothers, three are living. Col. Charles H. Jackson, the next oldest, resides in Missouri. He has been engaged as a real estate dealer, handling farming and mineral lands. William C. Jackson lives in Gage Co., Neb., and is a farmer. The next one, Sylvester S. Jackson, resides in the State of Georgia, and is a professional musician and teacher. The youngest brother, Alexander Jackson, died in Hamilton county in 1879, and was a farmer. Four of the five brothers served through the late war as commissioned officers in the Union army; all but one of them for over three years. Of his six sisters, two died many years ago in Wisconsin. The other four are all married, and living in Hamilton Co., Neb.

Andrew J. Kryder lives on section 30. His farm of 160 acres is a part of the land entered by Daniel Baxter in 1836. His brother, John J. Kryder, who lived on the same section, also has a farm of 160 acres, a part of the land bought by Baxter at the same time. Andrew J. Kryder also owns another farm of eighty acres on section 31, adjoining the homestead. Mr. Kryder settled here in 1862, coming from Stephenson Co., Ill. He was born in Clinton Co., Penn., May 16, 1831. His father, John Kryder, brought the family to Stephenson Co., Ill., in 1847, where he now lives, in the town of Lancaster. The mother died there in 1866. Andrew J., the subject of this sketch, was married in Buckeye township, Stephenson county, Dec. 28, 1857, to Lavinia Zimmerman. She was born in Lycoming Co., Penn., Sept. 16, 1831, and came west with her father's family settling in Buckeye in 1846. Her father, Mathias Zimmerman, died March 2, 1875. Her mother, Catherine Zimmerman, died in May, 1862. Mr. and Mrs. Kryder lived on his father's farm until they made their removal, in 1862, to their present residence. They have had three children—Catharine Ann, born Oct. 30, 1858, and died in infancy; Charles Wesley, born Oct. 25, 1860; Clara Alice, born Oct. 23, 1863. Both are living with their parents. Mr.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Mrs. Martha Miles, widow of James Miles, lives upon section 7, in the town of Spring Grove. She is a daughter of George Hodgson, one of the pioneer settlers of northern Illinois. Mr. Hodgson came from Cayuga Co., N. Y., nearly half a century ago, and settled, with his family, consisting of a wife and seven children, in Stephenson Co., Ill. Mrs. Miles, subject of this sketch, was the youngest of the family. Her husband, James Miles, was born Jan. 31, 1831, in Clinton Co., Penn., and in 1850, came with his father's family, to Stephenson county, where he was married Dec. 27, 1855. They resided in that county about eight years, then came to Spring Grove and settled on section 27, where they lived until 1869. In that year they removed to section 7, Mrs. Miles' present residence. Mr. Miles died April 24, 1874. They had four children—Ashley, born in December, 1856, and died in November, 1858; Lucy, born in April, 1858; Mary, born in November, 1861, and Maud, born in August, 1871.

Isaac Zimmerman came to Spring Grove in April, 1869, and bought ninety acres of improved land, known as James Farmer's place, on section 36, where he now lives. He was born in Pennsylvania, and was reared in Northumberland county. He was inclined to come west on account of his children having preceded him. His son, George, came west in 1853, and has been a resident of this town since 1855. His son, Henry, came west in 1853, and now lives on section 27. Benjamin came with his father, and now lives on section 34. Mr. Zimmerman had two unmarried daughters—Catharine and Lavina, and Elizabeth, a grandchild. Catharine, June 30, 1872, was married to Thomas O. Cavanaugh, a son of John O. Cavanaugh. His mother died when he was five years old, and he was brought up by Reuben Babcock. They have two children—Addie, born May 24, 1873, and Rowena, born Feb. 21, 1876.

Lavina was married to Andrew Lauby, and the grandchild, Elizabeth, was married to John Moyer. Another daughter, Hettie, came west. She was married to Fredrick Gable. They settled in Winnebago Co., Ill., where she died. A child she left was adopted by John Reader. Mr. Reader lives in Winnebago county. They have two children and two adopted children. Mr. Zimmerman lost his wife by death Sept. 15, 1875, at the age of sixty-seven years.

Benjamin Zimmerman, a son of Isaac Zimmerman, was born in Columbia Co., Penn., Oct. 19, 1830. His father was a farmer, and Benjamin was reared on a farm. He was married to Amanda Savage, who was born in Northumberland, Penn., in 1836, and came to this county in 1869, locating in Spring Grove, and living the first eighteen months in a house on John H. Woodling's farm. He bought eighty acres on section 34 and built a house, into which he moved during the fall of 1870. He has since resided there and owns also thirty acres on section 26. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman have had the good fortune to be blessed with eleven children, all of whom are now living—William, born in June, 1855; Galen, born in August, 1856; Lavina, born in September, 1859; John S., born in December, 1861; George T., born in February, 1864; Isaac A., born in October, 1866; Sarah E., born in October, 1868; Catharine, born in May, 1871; Riley, born in June, 1873; Maggie, born in October, 1874; and Annie, born in June, 1877.

John S. Zimmerman, son of Benjamin and Amanda Zimmerman, was born in Pennsylvania, Dec. 22, 1861. When he was in his eighth year, his father removed with his family to this town. At the same time came his grandfather, Isaac Zimmerman. John has grown to manhood in this town. "Ben," as he is familiarly called, is well and favorably known as a young man of correct life, good habits, honest, industrious and of a genial disposition. He will soon leave the old home to carve out his fortunes, and if the future can he judged by the past, he will successfully accomplish whatever he undertakes.

John A. Brant was born in Somerset Co., Penn., July 20, 1816. His mother died when he was quite young, and he, when ten years of age, went to live with his grandfather. John Lambert, who lived in the same county, lived with him until sixteen years of age, and was then apprenticed to David Ross, to learn the trade of carpenter and joiner. After four years with Mr. Ross, in 1836, he went to Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. He worked at his trade there seven years, and from there went to Wabash Co., Ind., bought land there, but followed his trade. In 1842 he married Eliza J. Kent, and from there moved to this county in 1845, lived a few months with Isaac Kline, and the following year rented the Brant saw mill. He run this mill until he moved to his present residence on section 34, where he has ever since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Brant have had ten children—Ann Eliza, wife of George W. Davis; Samuel, living on same section; Jefferson died in infancy; Mary, deceased wife of Samuel Boyles; Frank, living in Jefferson; Tillman H., Olive, Maggie, John and Myrtie. A grandchild, the daughter of Mrs. Mary Boyles, has been taken into the family. Mr. Brant has always voted the republican ticket.

John H. Woodling, a farmer of the town of Spring Grove, is one of the respected old pioneers of that part of the county, and now lives on section 26, where he settled in 1845. He was born in Montgomery Co., Penn., May 27, 1809, near Germantown. His father, Jacob Woodling, was also a native of that county, and was four weeks old at the time of the battle of Brandywine, and died Oct. 13, 1844, in Vigo Co., Ind. His wife, the mother of John H., died Aug. 11, 1859, at the residence of her son. There was a family of ten children, seven of whom settled in Vigo Co., Ind., in 1837. The names of the children were—Jacob deceased; John H., Francis, now in Brodhead; Charles, died in this town; Eliza, wife of E. R. Allen, Esq.; Maria, Ann, deceased; Polly, now living in Pennsylvania; Jacob, deceased; and Catharine, deceased. John H. Woodling, the subject of this sketch, was married in Vigo Co. Ind., Jan., 28, 1841 to Nancy B. Roland, and came here bringing his mother with him, arriving in this county, as before stated, in 1845, when he bought 200 acres of land. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Woodling gave them eight children—Delia Ann, born Dec. 28, 1841, wife of George H. Slocum; Mary Jane, born June 5, 1844, wife of Cyrus A. Horton; Almira, born Oct. 15, 1849, died Aug. 26, 1850; Chauncy S., born Aug. 24, 1851, died Oct. 29, 1852; John Lyman, born Sept. 8, 1853, died Jan. 14, 1855; Eunice L., born Jan. 4, 1857, wife of Levi E. Freeman; Emery R., born Sept. 16, 1859, lives at home; Harriet E., born Dec. 6, 1862, died Feb. 27, 1864. Mrs. Woodling departed this life March 1, 1881. Mr. Woodling has always been an active, public spirited citizen, and has served his town on the board of supervisors, for a number of terms. Emery R., his son, was married to Kate, daughter of Daniel Brobst. They have one child—John H., who was born July 25, 1883. Mr. Woodling has always been politically a republican, since the organization of that party. He and his wife were members of the United Brethren Church, until that organization here became defunct. Mr. Woodling is not now a member of any Church, but is a Christian gentleman.

Cyrus I. Putnam. lives on section 36, town of Spring Grove. His good improvements, fine buildings, and highly cultivated farm of 180 acres, indicate a farmer of thrift and enterprise. He was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., Feb. 23, 1835. His parents moved to Canada, when he was quite young, and subsequently to Ogle Co., Ill. His father, John Putnam, died in Winnebago Co., Ill., in 1852. His mother died in 1867. Mr. Putnam has a sister, Mrs. Maria Keyser, living in Ogle Co., Ill., a brother, G. Putnam, in Mitchell Co., Iowa, a sister, Mrs.

Jane Amen, in West Union, Iowa, a brother, Henry, at Fort Worth, Texas, and a brother William, at Deer Lodge, Montana. Cyrus I. Putnam, was married Aug. 15, 1856, to Harriet Sanderson, who was born in Old Cambridge, Mass., in 1836. Her parents came to Winnebago Co., Ill., in 1839. Her father, John Sanderson, died in Laona, that county, in 1851. Her mother now lives with her. Mrs. A. Ludlow and Mrs. J. V. Richardson are half sisters to Mrs. Putnam. Mr. and Mrs. Putnam have had born to them four children—Ida, born Oct. 12, 1860; she was married to Theodore Allen. Mettie, born June 9, 1867, lives at home; George A., born April 20, 1872, and one child died in infancy.

Hiram Dunwiddie, son of John Dunwiddie, was born in Green Co., Ohio, in 1843. He came to Green Co., Wis., in company with his brothers, Daniel, David and Brooks, all of whom are living in this county. Hiram was married to Mary Woodel, and ten children were born to them—Joel, deceased; Ruth, wife of George Osborn, living in Furness Co., Neb.; Susan, wife of Charles Scudder, of Bates Co., Mo.; Adelaide, deceased; Newton, Alice, wife of Frank Osborn, of Furness Co., Neb.; George, living in Idaho; Eldora, deceased; Libbie, wife of Charles Swan. Hiram Dunwiddie settled in the town of Jefferson, one and a half miles south of Juda, where he owned 220 acres of land. He resided here until his death, which occurred June 17, 1869. His widow now lives in the village of Juda.

P. T. Dunwiddie, son of Hiram and Mary Dunwiddie, was born in the town of Jefferson. He resided upon the homestead farm until his marriage with Alice, daughter of William Newman, Aug. 29, 1875. Four children have been born to them, all of whom are living—Eldora V., born Aug. 18, 1876; Daniel R., born Jan. 4, 1879; George J. born Dec. 13, 1880; and Hiram J., born March 2, 1883. Mr. Dunwiddie lives on a part of the farm owned by P. Atwood, on section 14, Levi O. Knudsen, one of the large farmers of Spring Grove, lives on section 12, where he has very fine farm buildings, including a creamery, for manufacturing the product of his own cows, keeping about forty. The farm contains 406 acres. His brother, Abram, lives adjoining, and together they have all of section 12, except eighty acres, besides land in other places. The brothers were born in Norway; Levi in 1842. Their father, Ole Knudsen, came to America bringing the family with him, and first located near Oxford, Rock county, but the next spring bought eighty acres in the town of Spring Grove. The buildings owned by his son, Levi, are located on this purchase. Seven children came with the parents—Lucy, wife of Truls Knutson; Knute, deceased; Christian, deceased; Isabella, wife of O. Onnesgard, of Rock county; Levi, the subject of this sketch; Ole, who lives in Rock county; Cary and Abram, who still live in Norway. The father died in March, 1873; the mother now (1884) lives with Levi. Oct. 31, 1868, Levi O. Knudsen and Sarah Peterson were married. Her father, Alex. Peterson, came from Norway to Rock county this State, when Sarah was five years old. He died in 1874. Her mother survives and lives with her son, Orloff Peterson, in Rock county. Mr. and Mrs. Levi Knudsen have eight children—Olis, born June 1, 1869; Albert, born in February, 1871; Betsey, born in February, 1873; Alvah, born in October, 1874; Sophia, born in November, 1876; Carl, born in April, 1879; Clare, born in April, 1881; and Leonard, born in November, 1883.

Benjamin Stabler, in 1873, bought of F. Mundhanke, his residence and farm on section 4, one of the finest locations and residences in this part of the town. The farm was known to the early settlers as the Woodel farm, Allen Woodel making the original entry and the first improvements, away back in the pioneer days. Mr. Stabler was born in Juniata Co., Penn., Dec. 23, 1839. His father, George Stabler, removed with his family of five children, two boys and three girls, to Stephenson Co., Ill., in June, 1850. He died the next month; his wife died in Nebraska, in September, 1880. The rest of the family, excepting Benjamin and one sister, Jane, are all in Nebraska. Jane is the wife of Jacob Minzer, of Rock Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill. Benjamin Stabler was married on May 15, 1860, to Amelia Stahlenecker. They have had ten children born to them—George E., born Nov. 23, 1861; John L., born June 18, 1863; Mary E., born March 2, 1865; Emma M, born Jan. 2, 1867; Franklin W., born June 18, 1868; James L., born April 9, 1870; Abbie A., born Feb. 20, 1872; Frederick B., born April 6, 1873; Oscar W., born May 31, 1874; Robert E., born Feb. 20, 1877, and died March 18, 1877. After marriage, Mr. Stabler lived on the farm belonging to his father's estate, six years, paying rent to the estate for the same; and then bought the farm, and lived there until he sold out in 1873, and came to Spring Grove.

CHAPTER XLII.

TOWN OF SYLVESTER.

The town of Sylvester embraces the territory of congressional township 2 north, range 8 east, of the fourth principal meridian, containing 22,945.56 acres. It is bounded on the north by the town of Mount Pleasant; on the east by Decatur; on the south by Jefferson, and on the west by Monroe. This is one of the best towns in the county, containing 22,921 acres of farming land, valued (assessed) at $18.60 per acre. The total value of real estate is $426,510, and of real and personal property, $567,887. The population of the town in 1880, was 928. The farm products of the town of Sylvester, grown during the year 1882, were as follows: Two thousand nine hundred and ninety-two bushels of wheat; 107,605 bushels of corn; 90,539 bushels of oats; 274 bushels of barley; 3,190 bushels of rye; 5,992 bushels of potatoes; 6,090 bushels of apples; 361 bushels of clover seed; 251 bushels of timothy seed, and 3,527 tons of hay. This town is one of the most extensive stock raising districts in the county, as the following statistics will prove: There are 656 horses in the town, average value $60.05, total value $39,395; 2,390 cattle, average value $17.89, total value $42,763; 3 mules, average value $51.66; total value $155; 3,824 sheep, average value $1.64, total value $6,280; 3,006 swine, average value, $5.27, total $15,869. Number pounds of butter made in 1883, 44,160.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Sylvester was made by William Woodle. Thomas Woodle, father of William, visited Green county in 1836, with his son, Joseph, and bought land on sections 34 and 35. They came with one horse and buggy from Fayette Co., Penn., and returned to Pennsylvania that fall. In the spring of 1837 Joseph returned with his family, coming down the Ohio river, to Cairo, up the Mississippi river to Galena, and from there by wagon to their destination in the town of Sylvester. At the same time came Jesse Mitchell and family, who settled on section 35; and Thomas Woodle, a single brother of Joseph. Joshua Davis, a single man, came at the same time. He died in the winter of 1837—8. During the summer following their arrival, Mitchell and Woodle built cabins. Allen Woodle, a brother of Joseph, came shortly afterward. William had come before this and located on section 31. Allen was a single man. He owned land and afterward settled in Spring Grove. He is now farming near Leroy, Minn.

Joseph McCracken and family came here in 1836, from Edgar Co., Ill. The old gentleman settled on section 30, where he built a cabin, broke ten acres, and lived for many years, then removed to Monroe, where he died May 6, 1867. His wife died on the place. One of his sons was in business at Monroe for several years.

Amos R. Sylvester, for whom the town is named, was one of the earliest settlers and a prominent man. He was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., March 8, 1810. His father, Richard Sylvester, was born in Scituate, R. I., in 1782, and was married to Rachel Sutherland, March 19, 1809. She was born in Rutland, Vt., in January, 1791, and died in Sylvester, March 17

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

1876. Richard Sylvester died at Darian, Gene-see Co., N. Y., July 22, 1826. They reared a family of five children—Amos R., John, Harlow, Charles and Mary. The sons removed to Edgar Co., Ill., where they lived until they came to Green county. In the spring of 1836, Amos came here and entered land for his brothers and others, and returned to Illinois. In the fall of that year, the Sylvester brothers, Amos, John, Harlow and Charles, and their families, came here to reside permanently. Amos settled on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 15, where he erected a log house with a puncheon floor and roof of shakes. John settled on the southwest quarter of section 21, where he lived a short time, then removed to the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 12. He afterwards moved to Belleville, Dane county, and afterwards went to Kentucky, where he died, at Athens, May 16, 1860. He was born Nov. 27, 1812. He was twice married. His first wife was Phiania Hills, who was born in 1820, and died Dec. 29, 1851, leaving four children. He was again married in 1854, to Lucinda H. Smith, who was born in East Avon, N.Y., in 1820. She died Sept. 22, 1859, leaving three children—Frank A., who was drowned in Polk Co., Wis; Phiania E. and Ellen A. Harlow Sylvester settled on the southeast quarter of section 3, where he remained until about 1869, then sold out and moved to Madison, where he still resides. Charles Sylvester settled on the west half of the northeast quarter of section 10, remained there a short time, then sold and went to Belleville, where, in company with John Sylvester, he engaged in mercantile business. He now lives in Polk Co., Wis. Amos R. Sylvester received a common school education, and at the age of seventeen years, left home. He started in the world with fifty cents, which his mother had given him, being all the money she had. He served an apprenticeship to learn the blacksmith trade, and afterwards was foreman in a shop at Camillas, N.Y., where he was married Feb. 14, 1831. His wife died in Sylvester, Aug. 80, 1847, leaving five children—Richard, deceased; Abram W., Henry W., Mary, deceased; and Moses. He was again married Aug. 7, 1848, to Mrs. Loraine Rust, widow of Henry Ford. Mr. Sylvester was prominent in both town and county affairs. He held the office of assessor seven years. He was one of the originators of the Insurance Company of Sylvester. He was killed by his team running away, Sept. 14, 1882. He was a much esteemed citizen. His widow still resides at the homestead. Charles Sylvester, who came at the same time as did Amos, married and went to Kansas; but later returned and now lives in Polk Co., Wis.

On the 2d of May, 1837, Davis Bowen, a native of Virginia, came and entered land on section 27, where he broke some land and erected a cabin. The following fall he returned to Virginia, and brought his family back with him in the spring of 1838. He died in this town May 6, 1867.

James E. Bowen, a son of Davis Bowen, an old settler and prominent citizen, was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Sept. 25, 1825. He went with his father's family to Preston Co., Va., where they had many relatives, and resided until the spring of 1838. They then started, traveling with teams to the Ohio river, then by water, to Galena, Ill., thence to Green county, arriving in the town of Sylvester, April 21. James E. being quite young at that time, spent considerable time in hunting and fishing, with the young men of his age, sons of the earliest settlers of the county, who resided in that vicinity. He went back to Virginia in the fall of 1848, and on his return to Green county, found when he arrived in St. Louis, that the Mississippi river was frozen, so took a steamer on the Illinois river and came as far as Urbana, where, on account of the ice, he left the boat and took passage by stage to Freeport, which was within twenty-five miles of his home, paying his fare to that point On account of bad traveling he was obliged to walk a good share of the time. Finally, becoming disgusted with that mode of travel, he abandoned the stage, and struck out on foot for home, and walked a distance of sixty miles. He received a limited education in the common schools. In 1851 he went to Oregon and California, crossing the plains, having in charge six yoke of oxen, and arrived at the first settlement in Oregon on September 17. He engaged in mining in California until the spring of 1853, when he returned to Green county by way of the Isthmus of Panama, New Orleans, and the Mississippi river. Since that time he has visited Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri and Kansas. He was married March 17, 1859, to Martha A. Clark, who was born in Perry, Penn., Feb. 14, 1829. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania, and settled in Miami Co., Ohio, in an early day. They came to Green county in 1848 and settled in the town of Decatur, where Mrs. Bowen lived until the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Bowen have two children Davis and Susan H. Mr. Bowen is politically a democrat. He owns a fine farm of 440 acres, valued at $60 per acre.

In the spring of 1838 Reese Rush came with his family and settled on section 35.

Benjamin Mitchell, a brother of Jesse, came at about the same time. He was back and forth between this place and Pennsylvania, but finally settled here and is still a resident.

Benjamin Mitchell is a native of Fayette Co., Penn., born in 1814. He grew to manhood and obtained his education in his native State. His parents were natives of the same State and emigrated to Green county in 1846. They reared a family of ten children, of whom Benjamin was the second. Mrs. Mitchell died in this county, in 1862, and Mr. Mitchell, in 1884. The subject of this sketch came to Green county in the spring of 1838. He lived two years with his brother Jesse, then bought land and settled in the town of Spring Grove. He was married, in to Elizabeth Conn, a native of Kentucky, born in 1833. He continued to live in Spring Grove until the spring of 1860, when he bought his present home and removed to it. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have three children—Amanda, Sophia and Carrie. Mrs. Mitchell and her two daughters are members of the Baptist Church at Juda. Mr. Mitchell paid $20 per acre for his farm in 1860, which contains eighty acres, now valued at $60 per acre.

In the spring of 1839, there came a party from Fayette Co., Penn., consisting of Dr. Griffith, Isaac Betts and family and Jacob Stull.

At about this time the little settlement was visited by Abner Mitchell, the father of Jesse and Frank. The old gentleman shortly afterward became a resident of the county. Abner was a preacher of the Baptist faith, and frequently held services in the neighborhood.

T. W. Thompson, a native of New York city, came to Green county, at a very early day, and settled in the town of Cadiz. In the fall of 1838, he came to the town of Sylvester, and settled on section 11, where he lived until the time of his death. The family remained upon the place for several years, then the widow lived with her children in various places.

In May, 1839, Justus Sutherland and family came from Coles Co., Ill., having originally come from Madison Co., N. Y. Justus Sutherland located on sections 10 and 11, where he lived until the time of his death in December, 1873. The little old log cabin, which was erected in 1839, still stands in a fair state of preservation, while near by stands the dwelling which was afterward erected, furnishing a marked contrast. Mr. Sutherland was seventy-six years of age when he died. He was born in the State of Vermont in 1797, emigrated to the State of New York, from there to Illinois, and from thence to Green county. He left at the time of his death, a wife and ten children. The widow died in April, 1875. The children were—John and Andrew, who now live in Monroe; J. A., who lives in Sylvester; George, who is in business in Monroe; Samuel, who is now in Dakota; Arick, who still occupies the old homestead; Jerusha, the oldest girl, married Abner Long, and now lives in Dakota; Hannah married Mr. Yant, and now lives in Iowa; Kate married J. W. F. Randall, and now lives in Monroe; and Mary, unmarried, now lives on the homestead.

With this party, when they came to the town of Sylvester, came two of Mr. Sutherland's sisters: Mrs. Rachel Sylvester, mother of A. R.; and Mrs. Jerusha Colton. Mrs. Sylvester settled on land on section 21, where she lived with her son, Charles, for a few years; then broke up housekeeping, and lived with A. R., her son, until her death. She had four sons—John took land adjoining his mother, where he lived a few years, then went to Belleville, Dane county, where he went into business. He died a number of years ago, in Kentucky. Harlow Sylvester came here several years after the arrival of his mother, and settled on section 3. He lived there a number of years, then removed to Madison, to school his children at the university and still lives upon a farm near that city. The youngest son married Miranda Hills and, settled on a farm on sections 1 and 12. He lived there a while, then bought and entered land on section 10, where he lived a few years, then left and now lives in Polk Co., Wis.

Mrs. Jerusha Colton entered land and settled on section 9, where she lived until the time of her death. Her youngest son, Melzar, still lives upon the old homestead; John, the oldest son, took land adjoining his mother's, married Elizabeth Hilborn, and lived there until the time of his death. His widow is now in Dakota. Mrs. Colton had one daughter, who married Nelson Hills and settled on section 3. She died in 1883, in Polk county, where they had moved after a number of years residence in Sylvester.

Sylvester Hills also came in the fall of 1838, from the State of New York. He located on section 21, where he lived eight or ten years, then went to a farm on sections 4 and 9. He remained there for a number of years, then removed to Albany. He died in 1880, while visiting one of his daughters in this town. His widow died in 1883.

A. G. Houghton, a native of Kentucky, came here in 1838 and entered four "eighties" and one "forty" on sections 35 and 36. His parents had settled at Springfield, Ill., and he struck out for the lead mines at Galena and Mineral Point, before the Black Hawk War. A few years later he came to Monroe, where for a time he was postmaster, and finally to the town of Sylvester. He was a single man. Bringing a team and plow with him, he broke a few acres for himself and some for Davis Bowen and Henry Miner. About 1853 he was married to Priscilla Summerill, a school teacher. They lived in the town for ten or twelve years after that time, when he sold out and went to Andrew Co., Mo., where he died.

Others who should be mentioned as early settlers in this town are : Daniel Wessel, John Chryst, Mr. Roderick, Jacob Stauffacher and Samuel Vance.

Jacob A. Stauffacher was born in Switzerland, in December, 1835. He came with his parents, Anton and Anna Stauffacher, to Green county in 1845. After living in New Glarus six weeks, the family came to Sylvester, and the father worked out for three years at fifty cents per day, boarding himself. In 1848 he bought a farm in Mount Pleasant, where he lived until his death, with the exception of six months he lived with his son, Isaiah, in the town of Sylvester, where he died Nov. 5, 1883. The mother died July 4, 1879. There was a family of nine children, six boys and three girls—Jacob, Mathias, Anton, Isaiah, John, Edward, Anna, Barbara and Mary. Jacob, the subject of this sketch, received a common school education, and was married Dec. 7, 1871, to Catharine Luchsinger, who was born in Switzerland, in June, 1832. They have five children—Anton, Lucinda, Gilbert Edwin and Emma. The farm contains 225 acres, which makes a desirable home.

Samuel Vance, one of the pioneers of the town of Sylvester, first located on section 6, of the town of Jefferson, in 1845, but the following year, sold out, and entered forty acres in Sylvester, on which he still resides, also purchased the northwest quarter of section 33, of Whitney and Ripley, for which he paid $200. He has been a large land holder, owning a one time, 468 acres. He paid $29 per acre for the last land that he purchased. He was married in Pennsylvania, Feb. 16, 1841, to Lavina Johns, a native of Fayette county of that State. They had seven children—James P., George P., John B., Hugh J., Ezekiel T., Daniel W. and Rebecca R. His wife died April 4, 1883. She was, with her husband, a member in good standing, of the Baptist Church in Juda. Samuel Vance was born in George township, Fayette Co., Penn., Feb. 21, 1816. His father was a native of Ireland, and his mother of Switzerland. She came with her parents to America when three years old. Samuel obtained a common school education in his native county where his younger days were spent, and was engaged in farming previous to coming to this county.

REMINISCENCE.

[BY T. B. SUTHERLAND]

We are asked to sketch from memory a few items of the early history of Green county. While any person's life is a history that would interest most readers if written up with the vivid delineation that flows from the pen of Hugo; yet while to live, history is a natural sequence of life, to write it is another thing. Having written this much of preliminary, I will try and render the little assistance I can in helping to preserve the memory of the times in which I have lived. Hoping that all who read may not read to criticize, but with charity for the failings I am but too conscious of. My earliest recollections of my own life is when my father and family lived near the residence of D. W. Sutherland, where they first settled after their removal here from Darien, Genesee Co., N.Y. I was born in Darien, N.Y., on the 29th of September, 1834. I will recite a few of the incidents of my life which although they may seem very common place and uninteresting to most readers, made a lasting impression upon my mind during the period of early childhood. I have a faint recollection of chills and fever, which though almost universal, and oft recurring in many cases, left me after three weeks never to return. William C. Green was my first teacher. Being a great friend of my father's he often trundled me on his knee, and used to tell me if I would learn fast and grow up a good man, I should have a certain daughter of his of my own age, for a wife, and amuse himself hearing me spell whig—hwig. I remember Gov. Henry Dodge visited the family as he did many families in the then Territory, he being engaged in a controversy with the wild cat banks of the time, discussed the questions of the day, the bank question among the rest, my father he being opposed to such unstable institutions. And, that after insisting on paying for his entertainment and lodging, and the refusal of the older members to take pay, he gave me one of the dollars of our daddies because my name was Thomas Benton, as he said a sound money man.

When our family removed to section 15, township 2 north, range 8 east, since named Sylvester, a distance of seven miles, we passed only three houses, and there were only eighty rods between the two farthest. Our house 18x20 feet inside was surrounded by grass five to seven feet high, and a spring of thirty feet in circumference and three feet deep was searched in vain for by the three younger members of the family, a reward being offered if we found it that night, which we failed to do. A huge fire place supplied heat and a place to cook our food.

There were at this time five boys—Martin, John, Solomon, James and myself, (Thomas) and two girls—Esther Jane and Frank C., making; with our parents, nine persons. In June, 1843, a heavy fall of rain for three days, with intervals between showers, so swelled the little rivulets near the house, that it became a rushing torrent of forty rods in width, submerging every foot of ground about the house. The little chicks first sought safety on one point, and then on another, on the mound of chips near the house, and then the house. Soon the floor, (which was of loose or un-nailed boards), began to float, and the chickens and children sought the loft for safety. It was from the efforts on the part of my father to secure and save his floating property, that he, by over exertion and exposure, became the victim of miasmatic influences in the form known as chills and fever. The news of his illness brought to his bedside many friends, one of whom influenced him to send for a so-called doctor, who by the wickedest of lies, cheated him into taking calomel, and thereby becoming salivated, and dying from the terrible poisoning, after weeks of untold suffering; being unable to take nourishment, as one of his nurses has since told me, for three weeks. The loss of my father, I have always considered the greatest calamity of my life. Thus left an orphan at the early age of six years, the youngest of the second family, having one own sister, my mother and three half brothers. I grew, up with the country, vegetating through years of monotonous misery, seeing little outside of a few adjoining farms, attending school a few weeks in each succeeding winter, when too often the pedagogues simply taught because they were good for nothing else. One of the first I remember about, being incapable of interesting his class in the rules of orthography, etc., as taught in the first pages of the old elementary spelling book, undertook to frighten, and even succeeded in so frightening his class that they did actually improve in recitations; by making them believe he would be obliged to hang them if they failed again. He covered his face with his hands, and emitted groans and shed tears until he drew tears from the eyes of his class. The school room was a log house, situated on the northwest quarter of section 15, of what is now the town of Sylvester. It was erected by the united efforts of the citizens. The house was heated by a fireplace; the wood being cut at noon by the big boys. Fuel was donated and hauled to the school by its patrons. This school house has an interesting history of its own. But to continue about schools—another teacher was called “too baby,” because he was so effeminate. It was fine sport for the boys to hunt rabbits at noon; and they never could hear the rap of the rule on the window, which was the teacher’s only call, until the last boy was tired of the sport. Thus it was that on a certain occasion, when two of the county school commissioners, (there were three for the county; whose duties were somewhat similar to that of the county superintendent at the present time), came to visit our school, were surprised about half past 2 o’clock, by the appearance of a company of fifteen boys, ranging from seven to twenty years of age, who appeared at the school room door, under the leadership of Capt. C. F. Thompson, with all the pomp and pride of conquering warriors. In fact the surprise seemed to paralyze both parties for an instant. The commissioners, however, S. P. Condee and E. T. Gardiner, when they understood the importance of our mission, and that we were regularly mustered into the service, and out on duty, with some effort suppressed their smiles, and gravely admonished us to use a degree of moderation in the exercise of our duties; when our captain blandly explained that we did not take as extensive exercise, except on very fine days, like the present one, which was very bright and sunny, as our wet garments from wading in the snow, knee deep, gave testimony.

Another teacher was that poor, unfortunate J. L. Brows, once captain of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria’s body guard, and who claimed a collegiate education and the mastery of seven different languages, with many other distinguished accomplishments. He did not believe in a republican government, and desired to make it ludicrous in the eyes of his pupils. Thus, if they were boisterous and noisy, he would laugh and say: "Such is the result of American free institutions; there is no government about the American system." If any one suggested that he should keep better order, he would reply: "Hit's a free country, let them 'ave their freedom." If any quarrels were going on, and he was appealed to, he would reply: "Oh, hit's a free country, let them fight hit out." When he thought us tired of sitting, or uncomfortably cold, he would call us out on the floor, and forming the old fashioned figure four, would whistle for us to dance. Our studies were limited to the three R's, in the parlance of the olden time, with spelling. School sometimes commenced by reading a chapter or two from the Bible; then the class, often consisting of twenty pupils, in the old English reader, would read from one book, passing it from one to the other; then a class of new beginners read short sentences from the old elementary spelling book.

My earliest recollections of religious services are those that were held in this old school house by Rev. James Sherrad, of the Christian denomination, and then a man by the name of Lowe, of the same Church, held services off and on for about two years; the former being a man of culture from the State of New York, and the latter an uncultured Hoosier, one of those ne'er do well, happy and easy sort, who claimed to have been called to preach, but who called very few to hear. This man usually stopped at our house for dinner, and after his noon day pipe would saunter out into the adjoining woods, and within an hour or two would come back, expressing his admiration of nature, the soothing effect of the balmy air of the shady grove. The fact soon developed that he was hiving the bees that congregated near the door, and that he was a very good bee-hiver. But the path of duty is often rewarded by a crown of thorns; and so it came about that after the third success in his after sermon bee-hiving, some half dozen of the mischievous young Americans of the neighborhood congregated one Sabbath afternoon and turned this field of afternoon sermon meditation into one of boisterous hilarity. The prize of the zealous Christian was appropriated by the unruly Sabbath-breakers. The sound of the ax was heard; the voice of the thunders announced the fall of the mighty oak, and the bees were overpowered with fire and smoke; then the pillage and its result; colic to the victors, who left the field one by one, expressing sweet satisfaction in their share of the spoils. They would saunter off toward the house, quickening their pace to a run as soon as out of sight of the unsatisfied, and when they reached the house, presented faces contorted with pain and cried out for sweet milk as an antidote.

At the age of thirteen, I attended school in the same district where I first commenced my education. The teacher, Ozara Stearns, was very energetic and forcible in his work. (He has since been United States senator to fill vacancy from Minnesota.) During my fourteenth year I attended school in the old log house, which, by the way, was our first home in the town of Sylvester. The teacher was George McIntyre, of the State of New York. The next summer a new school house was built on the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 10. Being painted red, it was called the Red school house. Here I attended school a few weeks, but the measles being prevalent, and myself one of the victims, I received but little benefit from the school.

At the age of sixteen, (my brother, Martin, having died, and some changes being necessary), I went from home to work for my brother, A. I. I then went home for a month; thence to A. R. Sylvester, where, on the 3d of July, after working hard, and it being a very hot day, I went in bathing, and so injured my health that I became an invalid; and for several years during this time, I must acknowledge the extreme kindness of my brother's family. The natural kindness and solicitude of an affectionate mother, and the forbearance and liberality of my brother, Solomon, which was fully equaled by the kindness and generous helping hands of my sister-in-law, Mrs. Ellen Sutherland.

In the spring of 1858, I started with my cousin, W. W. Sutherland, to look for government land, walking from the town of Sylvester to Chippewa Falls, with the exception of a ride on the cars of sixty miles, and two miles in a wagon. We walked over fifty miles one day, and for several days made from forty to forty-five miles. In the fall of 1860, I cast my first vote for President, voting for Stephen A. Douglas. Having gone through that exciting campaign, supporting him and his policy of government, actively and enthusiastically, feeling that a failure to elect would bring war and all its accompanying disasters. I had on election day left my mother quite unwell; she having been an invalid for fifteen years and often seriously ill. Supposing there was no immediate danger, and my sister, F. C., being with her, I only returned to find her on her death-bed. The last long sleep of life had fallen upon her. Thus she passed from earth as she had lived, in peace and quietness, with none to blame, but many to bless. If fault she had, as is but human nature, the greatest was in generosity and self-sacrifice. Being my father's second wife and sister of the first, she had been a mother to his children years before her sister's death, her sister being in poor health. After her sister's death, she took full charge of the family, the youngest being a mere babe. After the older boys were grown to manhood, it was necessary to come into the far west away from all the old friends and early surroundings that there could be a home secured for all. This she cheerfully consented to do, knowing and feeling that her own children must be deprived of the benefits of her already hard earned right to the enjoyment of all the privileges of the society that had become established and organized by the kindred spirits of her old New England home, with schools and Churches. A country abundantly supplied with fruit, and endowed by all the privileges that tended to make life pleasant and secured home comforts. On the death of my father, his only will was to charge my older brothers to be kind to her, always furnish her a good home, with its necessary comforts; to give his children a home and an education. It was then that her great life trials commenced, and well did she fill her part, laboring with head and heart and hands from long before dawn, often into the small hours of the beginning of the coming day dawn, cheerfully, hopefully without the asking of others, working because work accumulated, as work one must with a family of from six to nine, where, as in the olden time, hand carding, spinning, weaving, hand-made clothing, and the everlasting knitting must be done. Still her heart was borne up with her truly Christian spirit, and the patient, pleasant smile. The oft quoted Bible maxim, the wisdom of poor Richards sayings and maxims; the wit and wisdom of Franklin; bits of poetry from Burns, Dryden, Pope, Campbell and Shakespeare, Moore, Scott, and others. Now and then snatches of hymns, full of plans for others, always oblivious of self. She carried her part and did the work more than her strength was sufficient for, until finally her constitution gave way; lung fever, followed by permanent weakness of the lungs, and then consumption, slow, but carrying its seal of death always in view, no one knowing the day or the hour. If it be possible to earn in this life a reward in the life to come, her reward must be great indeed.

Then came the anxiety of National affairs; the old slow way of getting in the returns had to be endured. Finally the defeat of Douglas came; and though young in political experience, it seemed as if the future was opened to me. The night after the news came, not a minute did I close my eyes. War, with all its concomitant horrors, seemed a certainty to me. Then came the discussion, public debates and constant agitation of the questions of compromise or war, in which I took an active part as a conservative, upholding J. J. Crittenden's compromise resolutions; feeling sure the predictions of A. H. Stephens would be realized if the south rushed headlong into secession. She would lose her cherished curse of slavery, and be whipped back into the Union, deprived of her rights of free government, because the rule of force would have to be resorted to. Thus time passed, and the war came, with a feeling that there was much wrong on both sides. But having been taught from childhood, as all democrats of the time were taught, the Union must be preserved at all hazards, "or liberty dies;" and having worn the talismanic banner on my "little Giant hat" during the Douglas campaign, though scoffed at by those who now cried out that all were disunion unless they supported and sanctioned all that was done by the republican administration and Congress. I still clung to the Union as the only salvation of the Nation, occupying the position of peace-maker.

The memory of the war times seems like a terrible night-mare. Prominent republicans jumping up and down and swearing that even Abraham Lincoln ought to be shot or hung for countermanding Gen. Fremont's order in regard to slavery. At the same time listening and applauding some soft-brained orator, made wild by the sudden acquisition of power by the republican party, advocating the hanging of some garrulous southern sympathizing, though good-hearted and harmless old lady of the neighborhood. The riding on rails of good Union men, and even republicans, because they would not subscribe to Gen. Pope's orders, issued on a rebel community, in a secession State, in our county seat.

A mob having been organized by some of the citizens of Monroe, based on the story of some ignorant superstitious person, that a company of secessionists were being organized, or likely to be, undertook to enforce this order of Gen. Pope's, requiring all persons to subscribe an oath to support the constitution of the United States.

A citizen of the town of Sylvester was asked and refused to sign, saying, he being a justice of the peace, he had already taken such an oath, in accordance with law, and should not comply with the demands of a mob, nor otherwise encourage them. He was first egged, then rode on a rail. Still refusing, he was given twenty-four hours to leave the county, or be hung. A large number of the citizens of the county took the matter in hand, knowing the old man to be in no way a dangerous person, and although not particularly conciliatory in speech and manner, and a man of stubborn will; one who had never forfeited his rights to protection from violence, and a man feeble in health and strength, called a meeting to be held at the house of J. Chryst, in the town of Jefferson, he being at the head of the movement. About 200 assembled there, and resolved to protect all law abiding citizens from mob violence from whatever source; myself being on the committee of resolutions. The meeting then appointed a committee to go to Madison with the person threatened—Sheldon Rust—and present his case to Gov. Harvey. I, Chryst, William Rittenhouse and S. Roub were of the committee. They started the next day, and on presenting the case to the governor, were told that they need fear no further threats, that he would inform the gentlemen at Monroe that he was chief executive of the State of Wisconsin, and to disband all unlawful organizations or he would have them arrested. Thus ended a most shameful attempt on the part of a few individuals to over-ride all law, and popularize themselves through violent demonstrations, in putting down rebellion where none existed.

On the 5th of October, 1864, a draft was issued against the town of Sylvester for thirteen men to report at Prairie du Chien on the 20th of that month. B. Fitch, A. W. Sutherland,

S. Cotherman, J. Stephenson, Webster Lindley, Reuben Coldren and B. Sutherland were among the number that reported. I think the number wanted was five. Two took French leave; the rest reported, and were given time to fill the quota with volunteers, which they found no trouble in doing, though they had to pay well for them. Your humble servant being the last on the list, the quota was full long before reaching his name, and he was therefore exempted for one year. After giving about $50 to help out the ones enrolled, he returned home to reflect upon the sincerity of certain persons who had always opposed raising bounty by town tax, declaring that a draft was the only fair way of filling the quota of towns, but when drafted, whined and cried over their hard fate. This was the last and only draft levied on our town. In spite of a strong opposition on the part of a few; a liberal bounty was voted and the quota of the town promptly filled.

I remained a conservative, supporting the war as a necessity of the times and the Union, at all hazards, except the curtailment of liberty; voting bounties with the majority of our citizens, to soldiers; support to soldiers' families soldiers' relief fund, to alleviate suffering from the vicissitudes of war, and supply the wants of the suffering in camp, fields or hospital.

The report of battles brought more pain than joy, though the victory for the Union had its mead of satisfaction. The wavering and fluctuating of the public mind had little influence; it was too often upon a pinnacle of glory and triumph, and then down deep in the slough of despair. My faith in the ultimate result of victory for the Union never left me, though the time dragged heavily, and terribly lengthened, until hopes seemed almost against fate. The time came, that memorable day in 1865, reaching our isolated town without telegraph, steam propeller or railroads, as the winds of Heaven sweep o'er the face of the earth, bringing life and joy on its wings. Thus came the news from one voice, to be re-echoed by another, and then another, until joy filled the breasts of all—even the few whose whole sympathy seemed with the south. The glorious old flag was honored always and at all times by our patriotic citizens, and the glory of its victory crowned with peace and heralded by fraternal solicitude.

I have written this much of the history of the war time to insure the proud record of the fraternity, and the strong ties of neighborly friendship that bound our citizens together and prevented the alienation and estrangement of friends and neighbors during the terribly exciting period of war. Though many were of southern birth and education, with strong sympathy and filially bound to our combatants south; as one who stood between the two extremes of Garrisonians and the followers of Breckinridge, I give testimony that all joined in the work of carrying on the War for the Union, and in the course of events developed patriotism and loyalty in every citizen of our town, even to protecting our citizens from mob-violence without resorting to violent means, and without distinction of party or place of birth, or difference of opinion.

Now, that the passions of individuals are buried by the charity we must have for all, let passionate words be buried in the oblivion of time. Their acts alone can tell the true impulse of their natures.

Truly may we believe the free institutions of our fathers must and always will be preserved, where such men as were leaders actively engaged in moulding public opinion in the town of Sylvester in those times that tried men's souls.

MATTERS OF INTEREST.

The first celebration of the 4th of July, was held at Justus Sutherland's in 1847. Reuben Stevens beat the drum with Daniel Wessel and N. Heinstret. In raising the liberty pole which was spliced and put up through a tree, it broke, and was cut off and spliced, and the flag then unfurled from it. An oration was delivered by a man from near Monticello.

The first murder committed in the town was that of F. Ohm, who was killed by his son, Fred, in June, 1878. The murderer had two trials and was finally sentenced to States prison for life.

The first death in the town was that of Joshua Davis, an estimable young man who came from Fayette Co., Penn., with Joseph Woodle. He was taken sick with fever and died in the winter of 1837—8. His remains were buried on the southwest quarter of section 35, near what was then known as Rock Spring, but were subsequently disinterred and now rest in the Mount Vernon cemetery.

The first blacksmith shop in the town was opened on section 35, in 1837, by Joseph Woodle.

An early school in the town was taught in the winter of 1840—41, in a small house on section 35, which had been erected by Joseph Woodle for a blacksmith shop. It was taught by Isaac Woodle, a graduate of Washington University, Pennsylvania. He afterward studied law with Judge Whiting, of Janesville, and began practice. When the war broke out he enlisted, served as quartermaster of Gov. Barstow's regiment, and died in the service.

The first school in the northern part of the town was taught by Paul Chandler, who afterward died of hydrophobia in 1855. Levi Leonard, step-father of Burr W. Jones, the present congressman from this district, was also an early teacher. It was in a building that had been erected by the settlers on section 15, in December, 1840. The term was commenced in the house of Justus Sutherland in order to secure the apportionment of the school funds, and was finished in the building that was erected. Among the scholars were Solomon Sutherland, Melzar Colton, T. B. Sutherland, Chloe Sutherland, James, John T. and John Sutherland.

One of the first marriages in the town—if not the first—was that of William Baird to Elizabeth Woodle, daughter of Joseph Woodle. The ceremony was performed on the 4th of July, 1839, by Rev. Daniel Harcourt. It was after the 4th of July celebration at New Mexico had been participated in by the parties, and all partook of a good dinner, although there was no display.

Among the early settlers was Jacob Stauffacher, who located on section 6, in 1845. Like many others he was very short of money. During the first three years of his residence here, the only money which he became possessor of, was ten cents, and that he borrowed from Sylvester Hills, by whom he was at that time employed. This money was borrowed to pay one of the pioneers who had the instruments and was an expert tooth puller, for pulling one of Mr. Stauffacher's teeth, which had been aching for several days. On arriving at the "dentist's" he was told that the charges would be twelve cents, and he would not pull the tooth without the additional two cents. Mr. Stauffacher plead, but in vain, and almost distracted with pain, he went and borrowed the other two cents and paid the dentist, and had his tooth drawn. Our informant refused to give the name of the dentist. The tools (turnkey) with which this job was performed are now in the possession of Arick Sutherland.

Ball's mill is located on Reeder's branch on section 22. On this site a saw mill was erected by Amos R. Sylvester, in 1843, a frame building having been put up, 45x18 feet in size. Later a turning lathe was added and also a blacksmith shop. A sash saw was put in and afterward a mulley saw. A good water power was furnished here and a large business was done. Mr. Sylvester ran the mill until 1865, when S. D. Ball, the present proprietor, purchased it.

Samuel D. Ball was born in Erie Co., Penn., Nov. 6, 1818. He is a son of Gary and Polly (Davis) Ball, natives of Pennsylvania. Samuel was the second of eleven children. In 1842 he came to Green county and located on section 25, town of Sylvester. He lived there until 1860, when he erected the Marion House at Juda. He also erected a flouring mill at Juda. In 1865 he purchased the mill and place where he still resides. His farm contains 176 acres. He is a republican, politically. On the 1st of June, 1840, he was united in marriage with Lydia Montgomery. She was born in Ashtabula Co., Ohio, May 6, 1822. Seven children is the result of this union—Martha J., Theresa P., George G., Charlotte M., Lettie M., Frederick G. and Franklin R. Mr. Ball is the originator and builder of the political car in 1860, of which mention is made elsewhere.

The McCracken mill was built by Joseph McCracken. He put up a frame building about 36x50 feet in size, equipped it with an old-fashioned sash saw and for propelling motor used a fifteen horse power. Mr. McCracken sold to Mr. Mosher. Then it was owned successively by Messrs. Scoville, Henry Bowell, Samuel Dennis, and in the fall of 1883, E. R. Albright purchased the property and is the present proprietor.

In the spring of 1873 a company was formed consisting of Jacob Stauffacher, Jacob Luchsinger and Henry Babler, for the purpose of erecting and operating a cheese factory. The same spring a building was erected on section 6, on Jacob Stauffacher's farm. It was a neat frame building 14x16 feet in size, one story high. In this the cheese was made, milk being purchased from the neighboring farmers and worked into cheese here. It was run as a cheese factory until it was burned in June, 1878. At that time a new building was erected, 18x20 feet in size, one story high, on the site of the old building, in which the business is still carried on. The present proprietors are Peter Stauffacher & Bros.

The Nevada Cheese Factory was established in the spring of 1877. A building 18x50 feet in size, two stories high, was erected by S. D. Ball. Chris Carlan carried on the business until 1880, when Mr. Ball put in a set of machinery and ran it until the fall of 1882 when he sold the machinery and closed out the business.

James Harker carried on a blacksmithing business from 1870 for a number of years.

In the summer of 1883 W. W. Kellogg scraped out around a spring on his farm on section 20, and made a carp pond, in which he placed fifty carp procured of the fish commissioner at Washington. It is now owned by Charles W. Read.

OFFICIAL.

The first election in the town of Sylvester was held at the house of Amos R. Sylvester, on section 22, on the 3d of April, 1849. The following town officers were elected: Supervisors, T. W. Thompson, chairman, Reuben D. Stephens and Joseph Reeder; clerk, Martin C. Sutherland; assessor, Cyrus Benson; treasurer, A. R. Sylvester; superintendent of schools, S. P. Campbell; justices of the peace, A. R. Sylvester, Joseph McCracken, Justus Sutherland, and Henry Burkey; constables, James Brood, A. W. Sutherland and Edgar Bowen. The judges of this election were Joseph McCracken, Davis Bowen and Samuel Vance; the clerks were Daniel Murdock and Jacob Leonard.

On the 23d of August, 1864, a special town meeting was held by the voters of the town at the house of A. R. Sylvester, which resulted in raising a tax for the purpose of paying town bounties to volunteers to the amount of $1,800, which sum was placed upon the tax rolls of that year.

On the 27th of December, 1864, an election was called for the purpose of voting a special tax to raise $200 for each man who should volunteer into the service of the United States, and be accredited to the quota of the town. This was in answer to the President's call for 300,000 men, issued in December, 1864, and to fill all former deficiencies. The election resulted in a majority for the tax.

In 1884 the town officers were as follows: Supervisors, E. J. Dodge, chairman, William F. Moore and Henry Roderick; clerk, G. H. Pengra; assessor, Charles J. Stephenson; treasurer, R. C. Murdock; justices of the peace, M. H. Pengra, Melzar Colton and T. B. Sutherland; constable, William Beckett.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

SYLVESTER MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

The Mutual Insurance Company of the town of Sylvester, Green county, was organized under chapter 103, laws of 1872, with twenty-nine stockholders, who had subscribed $53,600 in stock. They met Jan. 7, 1873, and elected the following directors: Benjamin Harlan, M. H. Pengra, William Duboise, John Brown and W. H. Covell. The officers were: B. L. Hoyland, president; M. H. Pengra, secretary; and John Brown, treasurer.

The object of the organization was to insure against loss by fire or lightning, farm buildings and their contents, such as stock, farm produce, etc. The company collects no funds except a fee of two mills on each dollar of insurance. Eleven years have passed since its organization, during which time only two assessments have been made, one of four, and one of two mills on each dollar of insurance. The amount of assessments during the eleven years have thus been only six mills on the dollar.

From the original amount of $53,600, the stock subscribed has increased until in January, 1884, it amounted to $213,480, while there was a surplus fund in the treasury of $237.33. In 1884 the directors and officers of the company were: Henry Roderick, president; M. H. Pengra, secretary; J. A. Sutherland, treasurer; William C. Gorham and Jacob Stauffacher. Annual meetings are held in January.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first building in the town erected for school purposes was located on the northeast corner of section 26, on land owned by George West. It was erected in 1845 by the voluntary contribution of the settlers. It was a log house, 16x18 feet in size, covered with shakes, with rough boards for the floor.

The first school here was a summer term taught by Polly Phillips. A term of school was also taught the following winter by a Mr. Ross. This building was afterward rebuilt, made higher, and used by Mr. West as a tenement house.

The first school in the town was taught by William C. Green in the winter of 1839—40, in a log building located on section 30. Mr. Green was afterward superintendent of schools and was a prominent man in educational affairs. He died in this county.

There was no regularly organized school district here until after the organization of the town, in the spring of 1849. At this time the town was divided into three districts, comprising territory as follows: District No. 1 embraced sections 1, 2, 11 and 12; district No. 2 embraced sections 3, 4, 9 and 10; district No. 3 embraced sections 13, 14, 23 and 24, and the southeast quarter of section 15, and the northeast quarter of section 22. In 1850 school buildings were erected in all of these districts; those in Nos. 1 and 2, being frame, and the one in No. 3, being stone.

The building in No. 1 was rebuilt, and in 1884 was still used. This building is located on the southeast corner of section 2. In 1884 it had an attendance of thirty-seven.

The building in district No. 2 was located on section 10. This building was afterward sold, and is now used as a residence. A new school house was erected on the southeast corner of section 4, which is still used for school purposes. The attendance is fifty-one.

The school house in district No. 3 was located on section 24. The building was used for school purposes until the summer of 1883, when it was torn down and the material used in the construction of a new house, which was erected on section 23. The first teacher was Abigail Decker, who had an attendance of about twenty. Her school was commenced in a room in the house of P. Hopkins, on section 23, and continued there until the new house was completed. In 1884 the attendance was twenty-three.

District No. 4 includes sections 5, 6, 7 and 8. A stone building was erected in 1850, on section 5, which is still in use. There is an attendance here of fifty pupils.

District No. 5 embraces the southeast of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 20; the south half of sections 21 and 22; sections 27 and 28; and the east half and the northwest quarter of section 29. A frame house was erected on section 28, which was used until the summer of 1881, when it was replaced by a new frame building, erected on the old site. In 1884 there were twenty-five children of school age in the district.

District No. 6 embraces all of section 15, except the southeast quarter, sections 16, 17 and 18, the north half of sections 19, 20 and 21, and the northwest quarter of section 22. The school house is frame and is located on section 21. This district was organized in 1857.

Joint district No. 7 includes the territory in this town, and in Monroe. The school house is located on the northwest corner of section 31. There are fifteen children of school age belonging to this district, who live in this town.

District No. 8 embraces sections 25, 26, 36, and nearly all of section 35. The first building was a frame structure, located on the northwest quarter of section 36. This building was used until 1855, when it was burned. A brick building was erected on the old site, but owing to the settling of the foundation, it became dangerous, and a frame building was erected nearby, which is still in use. In 1884 there were eighty scholars of school age in the town.

The balance of the territory in this town belongs to joint districts with Jefferson.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

The first religious services within the limits now comprising the town of Sylvester, were held at the house of Joseph Woodle on section 34, in the summer of 1837, by Rev. Mr. Shunk, a Methodist preacher from Pennsylvania. This preacher had heard that Woodle was from Pennsylvania, and was acquainted with relations of his, so he called and held services at Woodle's house, before the cabin was finished. Services were held here for two years, when Mr. Woodle sold out and removed to section 32, where they continued to hold services two years. After this, meetings were held at the McCracken school house on section 31, until the class, which had in the meantime been organized here, was merged with the Monroe society. Among the early members of the M. E. class in Sylvester were—Mr. Baird's family, Joseph McCracken, Charles Southern and family, Jackson Southern and family, Asa Brown and family and William E. Satterlee and wife.

The German Zion Church of the Evangelical Association of North America, was organized Aug. 24, 1860, at a meeting held at the old log school house. Rev. Andrew Tarnutzer was elected chairman; J. U. Elmer, secretary; J. U. Elmer, Anton Stauffacher and Henry Bable, trustees. Jacob Stauffacher was the first class leader and Anton Stauffacher, admonisher. During the same year (1860) they erected a neat frame church. The following named have preached to this class since its organization:

Revs. Andrew Tarnutzer, Jacob Sill, William Strasburg, Leonard Vanwald, Peter Massanger, John M. Hammitzer, Nicholas Shook, Charles Finger, Leonard Buehler, Christian Brandell, Henry Upphove, Frederick Moser, Conrad Green and Peter Held. Rev. John U. Elmer is the present pastor. There are from thirty to forty families who are members of this class. A Sabbath school was organized by Father Howard a number of years ago. I. Robinson was the first superintendent. Henry Stauffacher is the present.

A great many of the early settlers were Baptists. The first services of this denomination were held at the house of Jacob Stull in 1839. This house was the one formerly occupied by Mr. Woodle, which was located on section 35. Rev. William Stillwell, from Winnebago county, was the first pastor. An organization was effected and meetings were held monthly. From this grew the Church at Juda over which Elder G. R. Patten now presides.

CEMETERIES.

The first burials of deceased residents of this town were made in Richland cemetery.

A burial ground was started at an early day on the farm of Justus Sutherland. The remains of James Sutherland was about the first interment made here. This was used as a cemetery until 1856 or 1857, when a new cemetery was laid out on section 2, and several bodies were removed to it from the Sutherland ground. When the Gap Church cemetery was laid out, another removal was made, leaving but few graves in the former grounds.

The cemetery of the Mount Vernon Baptist Association is located on the southwest corner of section 36.

The Evangelical Cemetery Association was formed in 1860. They bought one-half acre of land of Jacob Stauffacher on section 5. In 1872 it was platted into lots. It contains twenty-eight lots, 18x34 feet in size. It was laid out by Jacob Norder, Henry Baebler, Dietrich Stauffacher and Jacob Stauffacher. Among the first burials here were those of the remains of John Rhiner and Michael North. The present directors are Dietrich Stauffacher and Henry Stauffacher. The treasurer is John Elmer.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

In the following pages are to be found biographical sketches of some of the most worthy and enterprising citizens of the town of Sylvester, among which are some of the oldest settlers of the county.

William Baird, one of the earliest settlers of the county, was born March 21, 1817, in Beaver Co., Penn. When he was quite young his parents removed to Ross Co., Ohio, where they died when he was about twelve years old, leaving seven children of whom he was the fifth. In 1831 he went to Tippecanoe Co., Ind., and remained until Aug. 15, 1835. He then started with an ox team, for the (then) northwest territory, and arrived at his destination August 29, being fourteen days on the road. He settled on section 15, in the town of Clarno, where he purchased forty acres of land and remained until January, 1843, when he sold out, and bought a farm on section 32, town of Sylvester, which has since been his residence. He owns a fine farm of 200 acres, valued at $50 an acre. In politics, he was formerly a whig, but has been a member of the republican party since the organization of that body. He has held the office of justice of the peace twelve years, and also has been a member of the town board for some time and has held other local offices. Mr. Baird was married July 4, 1839, to Elizabeth Woodle, who was born May 30, 1822, in Fayette Co., Penn. They were one of the first couples married in the county. They are the parents of ten children—Hannah, Harriet, Sarah J., John, Rachel, George W., Almira, William W. Mary E. and Edna R. Mr. and Mrs. Baird are members of the M. E. Church. The former has been connected with that organization since Aug. 28, 1832.

Melzar Colton was born in New York, Dec. 7, 1830. He is a son of Melzar and Jerusha (Sutherland) Colton. His father was born in New York, where he died, June 10, 1835. In the summer of 1836 his mother removed with her family, her brother, Justus Sutherland, and family; her sister, Rachael Sylvester, and family; and her sister's son, Amos R. Sylvester, and family, to Coles Co., Ill., remaining there until the spring of 1839, when she came to Green county in company with her brother, Justus Sutherland, and settled soon after on the east half of the northeast quarter of section 9, where Mrs. Colton died Feb. 5, 1863, in the seventy-first year of her age. Mr. and Mrs. Colton had three children—John, deceased; Mary, deceased, and Melzar, the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Colton was converted when quite young, and united with the Baptist Church, with which she was connected for about thirty years. She then withdrew from that Church and joined the Methodist Church, of which she was a consistent member at the time of her death. Melzar Colton, of this sketch, was educated in the district schools, and taught school six terms. He has since engaged in farming. He was married Nov. 1, 1855, to Malvina A. Wheeler, a native of Mount Holly, Vt., born Jan. 1, 1827. She came to this State in 1850, and taught school one term in Rock county, then came to Green county. She taught twenty-one terms of school in all. In her youth she became a member of the Baptist Church, with which she was connected until the time of her death, Sept. 18, 1881. By this union there were six children—John E., William O., Freddy M., deceased; Mary E., Malvina J. and Hattie L. Mr. Colton was again married Sept. 12, 1882, to Hannah M. Hulbert, who was born in North Manlius, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Aug. 14, 1839. She came with her parents to this county in 1859. Politically, Mr. Colton is a republican, and has held the office of town school superintendent, also the office of township clerk and other local offices. He is at present justice of the peace. Mrs. Colton is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Colton's farm contains 120 acres of land valued at over $50 per acre. Mr. Colton worked as a farm hand for his uncle, Justus Sutherland, in the summer of 1848, at $10 per month, thereby putting in $60 of the first purchase money which he now lives to enjoy. His family now at home consists of himself, wife and hired man. His two sons are married and located on farms near Sioux Falls, Minnehaha Co., Dak. Ty. The older one is school superintendent of the same county. His three daughters are at Beloit, Wis., taking a graduating course at the Beloit High School.

Solomon Sutherland, a son of James Sutherland, who was an old settler of this county, was born in Darien, N. Y., March 3, 1823. When he was fifteen years old he came with his parents to this county, where he attended school and worked on a farm. He was married Dec. 24, 1856, to Mrs. Ellen M. (Thompson) Sutherland, who was born in Susquehanna Co., Penn., in 1827. Her parents moved to New York city and in 1838 came to this county by wagon, and lived the first year in the town of Clarno, then they moved to section 11, of the town of Sylvester, where she was first married to M. C. Sutherland. He died in 1853. She re-married afterwards, as before stated, and died in June, 1879. She had two children by her first marriage—Emma L. and Henry T. Mr. Sutherland, in politics, adheres to the republican party, and has held local offices. He lives on the old homestead. The farm contains 160 acres, and is valued at about $50 per acre.

Thomas Washington Thompson came from England when fourteen years of age. His father settled in Susquehanna Co., Penn. Here he was married to Meroe Campbell. The children born to them here were—Ellen, Maria, Charles Frederick and Henry Thomas. He removed to New York city in the year 1836. From there he removed to Wisconsin in the spring of 1838, with a span of horses and a covered wagon. Nothing unusual occurred on the journey, the incidents being the ones common to such trips. They traveled in the day time stopping at hotels and farm houses at night. They arrived in Green county on the 5th day of June, 1838. They stayed for about three weeks at what was then known as Dennison's grist mill. Then moved to what was then known as Irons & Dennison's saw mill, and stayed there until the next March; thence to his farm in what is now known as the town of Sylvester. Mr. Thompson held the office of county commissioner at one time. James Alfred Thompson, the youngest child, was born in Sylvester in 1841. Ellen married for her first husband Martin Sutherland, for her second one Solomon Sutherland. She lived and died in Sylvester. Charles F. married Kate Chandler; Henry T. married Caroline Chamberlain, lived a few years in Sylvester, afterwards in Monroe and Milwaukee, and at present lives in Chicago; James A. was unmarried. He served three years in the army during the War of the Rebellion and died soon after his discharge, of disease contracted in the army. After locating on his farm T. W. Thompson bought a number of cows, making butter and cheese in addition to the usual farm labors. In 1846 he opened a general store on his farm in Sylvester. After his death, in 1849, his sons, Charles and Henry carried it on until 1852.

Sylvester R. Stephens is a son of Reuben and Sally (Milk) Stephens. His father was born in Herkimer Co., N. Y., and his mother was a native of the same State, who were married in Ithaca; and lived in Erie Co., Penn., until 1841, when they emigrated to this county and settled on section 36, town of Sylvester, where the father died in 1858, aged fifty-seven years. The mother is still living, and at this time (1884) is eighty-one years old. They brought up a family of eight children, of whom Sylvester, the subject of this sketch, is the eldest. He was born Sept. 20, 1822, in Tompkins Co., N.Y. He went with the family to Pennsylvania, and from there to Green county, where he still lives. He was married Oct. 16, 1844, to Wealthy Ball, who was born in Pennsylvania May 18, 1828. Her parents moved to Will Co., Ill., in 1838, where the father died; after which she made her home for two years in Walworth Co., Wis., and thence came to Green county. They have eight children—Alfred R., Susan E., Wilder M., Amanda M., Alba H., Ed. W., James S. and Theo. R. Mr. Stephens enlisted in August, 1862, in company K, 22d regiment., Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until June, 1863, when, by reason of disability, he received his discharge and returned to his home. His farm contains 234 acres, and is valued at $40 per acre. Mr. and Mrs. Stephens are members of the M. E. Church at Juda. Politically he is a republican, as was his father before him.

Pitt Lindley, deceased, was a native of Indiana, born Jan. 13, 1822. When he was nine years old, his parents removed to Illinois, where his father died when he (Pitt,) was about twenty-one years old. He then came with his mother and her family to Green county, and settled near Ball's mill, in the town of Sylvester. He was married July 23, 1846, to Betsey Hills, who was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., March 26, 1827. Her parents came to this county in 1839, and settled in the town of Sylvester, on the place where Mr. Connelly now lives. Her father was a native of Connecticut. Her mother, a native of New York, died when she was six years old, and her father was again married. They reared fourteen children, of whom she was the ninth. Mr. Lindley, subject of this sketch, died April 30, 1867. Mrs. Lindley is still living and is a member of the Baptist Church. They had seven children—Luella, C., now Mrs. James Burt, born Oct. 22, 1848; Alfonso E., born Aug. 9, 1852, and died Oct. 11, 1863; Delpha L., born Dec. 10, 1856; Newton, born Feb. 1, 1859; Mary E., born Dec. 8, 1860; Ida M., born Dec. 5, 1862, now married to Julius Carver, and Arthur, born Oct. 25, 1864. Mr. Lindley was a republican, and at the time of his death owned 240 acres of land. He was brought up in the Society of Friends.

Samuel West, a son of George West, an old settler of the town of Sylvester, was born in Sylvester, March 11, 1843. He has lived upon the homestead, where he was born, all his life, except three years spent in the army. He enlisted in company K., of the 22d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and participated in numerous engagements. He was taken prisoner near Franklin, Tenn., March 25, 1863, and sent to Richmond, where he spent one day and night in Libby prison. March 28, 1863, he was paroled and sent to parole camp at St. Louis Mo., where he was exchanged and returned to his company, at Nashville, Tenn. He was with Sherman on his march to the sea, and was present at the grand review at Washington. He was mustered out of the service near Washington, June 12, 1865, after which he returned to Sylvester. He was married March 23, 1867, to Katie M. Read, who was born in Cortland Co., N. Y., June 2, 1849, and came with her parents to Juda, in December, 1864. Mr. and Mrs. West have five children—George, Mattie E., Susan I., Nettie M. and Bertha. Mr. West owns 450 acres of land and also works his father's farm of 270 acres. He is largely engaged in stock raising, especially in breeding blooded horses. His first purchase of that character being "King Swigert," in March, 1882, for which he paid $1,500, the next, "Harlequin," a shire bred stallion, for which he paid $2,450. This is a horse of many fine points. The next addition to his stable was "Athlete," a fine Kentucky bred stallion, purchased when two years old, for $3,000, by Dr. Strong, in 1876. This horse, in the fall of 1883, was purchased by Shaddock & West, of Dr. Strong's estate, and is kept at the West farm. In addition to the foregoing, he has valuable horses of the Norman breed. One, "Froissart," is a dapple gray, foaled in 1877, imported from France in 1881; recorded in Percheron, Norman stud book, Vol. II, No. 1,314; a high-headed horse, finely cut in the throttle, broad and high on withers, strong bone, good feet, stands straight, on splendid legs, possessing all the qualities required for a first class draft horse. One called "Black Diamond," is a result of his own careful breeding, and compares favorably with the best horses in the country. Unless sold, this horse will doubtless be the means of much improving the stock of this section.

William C. Gorham is a native of Auburn, Geauga Co., Ohio, born Aug. 31, 1825, where he was reared upon his father's farm. His education was obtained in the common schools of his native town. In 1844, he, with his parents, came to Green county and settled in what is now the town of York, where his father, Elisha Gorham, resided until his death, which occurred Dec. 14, 1873. He was a native of New Haven, Conn., born Oct. 1, 1784. His parents were from England. He was twice married, first to Hannah Bradley, in 1805, who died in New Berry, Ohio, Aug. 25, 1823, leaving seven children. Again married April 8, 1824, to Mrs. Clarissa (Rice)

Crafts, who survived him until April 16, 1882. She was born in the town of Gorham, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1800, where she was first married. By that union there were two children. By the last union there were two children—William C., of this sketch, and Henry O., who died in Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 22, 1865, in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers. Elisha Gorham was a believer in religion and a member of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Clarissa Gorham was a member of the Freewill Baptist Church for many years. William C. returned to Ohio, in 1851, where he was married Jan. 3, 1853, to Elvira M. Chaffee, of Troy, Geauga Co., Ohio, born in Kirby, Vt., March 22, 1833. He came back to the town of York and began farming with a yoke of oxen and living in a log hut called a house. He enlisted Feb. 3, 1865, in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until discharged, Sept. 15, 1865. In 1867, he removed to the town of Sylvester, where he now resides. He now owns 465 acres of land and a residence in the city of Monroe. He is engaged in farming and raising stock, among which he has some fine blooded horses. He is politically a republican. They have two children—Rice D., born April 11, 1854, who is married and owns a farm in the town of Monroe; and Ernest W., born Dec. 8, 1860, residing with his parents on the farm, a member of the I. O. G. T., and also one among the first members of the Monroe City Guards.

William Bulfinch removed with his family, to this county, in the fall of 1844. The first winter they lived in town of Sylvester, when, owing to the loss of their household goods by shipwreck on Lake Michigan, they went to Winnebago Co., Ill., and remained until the fall of 1849. They then returned to this county and settled upon section 22, of the town of Sylvester. He went to California in 1853 and remained two years, then came back to his home in Wisconsin, where he died, Nov. 28, 1865. He was a native of Massachusetts, born Dec. 22, 1796, and was married Feb. 19, 1821, to Mary Sherman, who was born in Massachusetts, March 26, 1796. and died April 19, 1852, in Green county. They had nine children, two of whom are now living—Marshall L., now living in Grant Co., Mo.; and George W. Mr. Bulfinch was by trade a shoemaker and tanner, and resided in New York and Pennsylvania, previous to coming to Wisconsin. He belonged to the Masonic order.

George W. Bulfinch was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., June 11, 1830. He came with his parents, to Green county, where he received a common school education. In 1853 he went overland to California and worked in the mines until the fall of 1856, then returned to Green county. He was married May 14, 1861, to Alice Fletcher, who was born Aug. 16, 1840, at Green Dykes, England. They have three children—Erwin Marshall, Mary Alice, and Arthur Fletcher. Mr. Bulfinch is a republican and has held local office; also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Henry Stauffacher, a native of Switzerland, was born in January 1845, the same year his parents emigrated to the United States. They settled upon section 5, in the town of Sylvester, where his mother died Nov. 17, 1874. His father died at Monroe March 29, 1877. They were the parents of sixteen children of whom Henry was the fifth. He grew to manhood upon the farm and received a common school education. Feb. 7, 1865, he enlisted in company F, of the 46th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until September 27, of the same year, when he was discharged by reason of the close of the war. He then returned to Sylvester and engaged in farming, which occupation he still follows. He is a republican in politics. He was married April 9, 1871, to Louisa Ebert, a native of Germany, born Oct. 6, 1852. When she was three years old, her parents came to the United States and settled at New London, Wis., where they lived one year then moved to Pella, Shawano county, of the same State. They now reside in the village of Shawano, in that county. They had six children, of whom Mrs. Stauffacher is the fourth. Mr. and Mrs. Stauffacher are living upon the homestead farm, formerly owned by his father. It contains 191 acres, valued at $45 per acre. They are members of the Evangelical Society, and the parents of six children—Benjamin F., Edward H., George L., John W., Ameal W. and Ida V.

Nathaniel Stephenson was born in Ireland, Oct. 25, 1826. He is a son of John and Jane (Smith) Stephenson, who emigrated to the United States and settled in Trumbull Co., Ohio, where they engaged in farming until 1845, when they came to Green Co., Wis., and located in the town of Mount Pleasant, where they lived until the death of the father, John Stephenson, Nov. 3, 1876, aged seventy-seven years. His wife died Aug. 23, 1864. They had six children, of whom, Nathaniel, subject of this sketch, was the third. He was married Nov. 30, 1851, to Nancy Ann Harris, who was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, May 12, 1834. She came with her parents to Green county in 1845, who settled on section 2, town of Sylvester. The parents lived here until their death. The father died Sept. 22, 1847, aged forty-two years. The mother died Oct. 27, 1849, aged forty-two. There was a family of six children, of whom Mrs. Stephenson was the third child. Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson have four children—Ozias E., Mary J., Emma A. and Byron E. The farm contains ninety acres. When Mr. Stephenson came to Green county he had but little money, but by industry and energy he has been successful in accumulating a considerable property.

John Stephenson is a son of John and Jane (Smith) Stephenson, natives of Ireland. His parents emigrated to America and settled in Trumbull Co., Ohio, where they remained until 1845; then came to Green county and first settled in the town of Mount Pleasant, and lived there two years. In 1847 they removed to the town of Sylvester, and located on section 2, where Mrs. Stephenson died Aug. 23, 1863, aged sixty-eight years. Mr. Stephenson died Nov. 3, 1876, aged seventy-six years. They reared a family of six children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the fourth. He was born April 1, 1832. He received a common school education, and has always been engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Mary A. Lowry, April 3, 1855. She was born March 1, 1829. This union has been blessed with three children—Cordelia M., Matilda J. and Almira E. Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson are members of the Baptist Church. He owns 158 acres of land in the town of Sylvester, where he resides, valued at $60 per acre.

Matthew West, one of the prosperous farmers of the county, was born in Erie Co., N. Y., May 30, 1824. He is a son of John S. and Avis (Bowen) West. The former was born near Rochester, N. Y., and died in Erie county in February, 1875, aged eighty years. The latter, a native of Vermont, is still living, in her eighty-sixth year. They reared a family of ten children, of whom Matthew was the fourth. He was reared upon his father's farm, and educated in the common schools. He remained at home until the fall of 1846, then came by way of the lakes and Milwaukee, to Green county, and pre-empted eighty acres of land on section 26, of the town of Sylvester. He was married Sept. 14, 1847, to Sarah J. Decker, a native of Boston, Erie Co., N. Y., born Aug. 8, 1830. After marriage he built a log house, into which they moved the following spring, and in which they lived for fifteen years. He then erected the substantial frame house in which they now reside. At the time of marriage, Mr. West had but $17, and his wife $16, but by perseverance and industry they succeeded in accumulating a nice property. His farm contains 350 acres, valued at $60 per acre. Mr. and Mrs. West are the parents of three children—George A., Dennis W. and Susan E.

John C. Murdock is a son, of Daniel and Rhoda (Clawson) Murdock, who were settlers of 1846. His father is a native of Green Co., Penn., born Nov. 27, 1818, where he received a common school education, and taught three winter terms, but as a business he has always followed farming. He was married July 6, 1843, to Rhoda Clawson, a native of Green county, born Sept. 21, 1823. In the fall of 1845 Daniel Murdock visited Green Co., Wis., and looked the country over with a view to settlement. On account of its general healthfulness he here selected a spot for his future home and returned east. The following spring he came with his family by water, landing at Galena, Ill., on the 4th of April, where they remained for some days snow-bound. Having arrived in this county he first rented a farm near Monroe, and in September bought land near Juda and remained two years, then sold out and bought another farm, where he has since resided. His nearest market was Milwaukee a distance of ninety-two miles, or Shullsburg in Lafayette county, at which places a mill could be found. With a load of wheat it took from five to nine days to make the trip. His first experience in marketing his surplus wheat was not encouraging. He received thirty-eight cents per bushels and when he returned from market with empty wagon, having sold the wheat for thirty-eight cents per bushel, he found himself $4 out of pocket by the transaction. The next season he raised a good crop and it brought a good price. He paid $100 for the forty acre tract on which he lives, and pre-empted forty acres adjoining at the government price of $1.25 per acre. He now owns 163 acres valued at $50 per acre, and has given his oldest son a farm. Mr. and Mrs. Murdock have three children—Emma J., now widow of Cyrus Fisher; John C. and Ross C. They are members of the Baptist Church. Politically, Mr. Murdock adheres to the republican party, and has held local offices of trust and honor. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a prominent prohibitionist. John C., the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Sylvester Dec. 22, 1855, where he grew to manhood and received a common school education.

He was married Jan. 13, 1878, to Hattie Fleek, of the town of Decatur. They now live on section 23, and have a good farm of 365 acres. They have one child living—Harry D. Mr. Murdock is a republican and a much respected and worthy citizen.

CHAPTER XLIII.

TOWN OF WASHINGTON.

The town of Washington comprises the territory designated on the government survey as congressional township 3 north, range 7 east. It is bounded on the north by the town of New Glarus, on the east by Mount Pleasant, on the south by Monroe, and on the west by Adams. This town embraces 22,870.80 acres of land which it is stated 22,858 acres are farming lands. The value of farming lands is assessed at $12.58 and the total value assessed is $287,630. This total represents the assessed value of real estate in the town, while this together with the personal property amounts to $411,620. The population of the town in 1875 was 870; in 1880, 882. The principal farm products of this town grown during the year 1882 were as follows: 2,684 bushels of wheat; 78,510 bushels corn; 70,003 bushels oats; 852 bushels barley; 671 bushels rye; 4,812 bushels potatoes; 590 bushels root crops; 2,898 bushels apples; 22 bushels clover seed; 37 bushels timothy seed. There were 25,465 pounds of butter; 267,550 pounds of cheese, and 3,787 tons of hay made. The acreage of the principal farm products grown in 1883 was as follows: 260 acres wheat; 3,130 corn; 2,321 of oats; 70 of barley; 72 ½ of rye; 76 of potatoes; 100 ½ of apple orchard; 2,556 bearing apple trees; 4,150 acres grasses; 4,130 acres growing timber. In 1883 there were 1,727 milch cows in the town, valued at $41,120; 2,955 head of cattle; assessed value, $19.70, total value, $58,221; 458 head of horses; assessed value, $52.29, total value, $23,945; 4 mules, assessed value, $70, total value, $280; 863 sheep, assessed value $2, total value, $1,726; 1,977 swine, assessed value $5.75, total value, $11,369.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Washington was first settled in 1837. The honor of being the pioneer belongs to Josiah Pierce, who was originally from Massachusetts, but came direct from the State of New York to Madison, Wis., in the spring of 1837. The State capitol had just been commenced and Mr. Pierce had been engaged to board the workmen. Wisconsin had only been a Territory for a little over a year and Madison was a mere hamlet. In the following November, Mr. Pierce removed to a cabin which he had built during the summer on section 13, in what is now the town of Washington. Here he remained until the time of his death.

The next settler in the town was Noah Phelps, a native of the State of New York. Prior to the Black Hawk War he had helped to survey Green county, and after finishing his work he returned to his eastern home expecting to bring his family to Wisconsin in 1837. Mr. Phelps states that he was almost ready to start in May, when specie payment was suspended by the banks. Government land could only be bought with coin and as all his money was in bank notes, he was obliged to wait. When specie payment was resumed in May, he was still ready, and started, and in June, 1838, he made the second settlement within the limits now comprising the town of Washington. He settled with his family on section 24, and remained for a few years, then moved to Monroe, and still lives near that city.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Asel Smith came here from Michigan in 1842, and made a claim on section 7. He remained but a few years, then sold out and returned to his former home.

Hiram Bane came from Ohio in 1844, and claimed the southwest quarter of section 1. In 1848 he sold his claim to Fred Streiff, and bought forty acres on the northwest quarter of the same section. In 1850 he sold out and went to California, where he froze to death in the winter of 1852—3.

Samuel Holloway, a native of Maryland, came in 1844, and made a claim on section 22. He was a blacksmith by trade, the first in the town. He remained here two years, when he sold his claim and removed to Monroe. Later he went to Richland county, where he died in 1855.

Jarvis Rattan, a native of Illinois, came to Green county as early as 1836, and entered land now included within the limits of the city of Monroe. He was a single man when he came, and he kept "bach" for two years in a little log house that stood between Bridge's block and the spring. In 1838 he was married to a daughter of Josiah Pierce. He sold out at about this time, and settled in the southeastern corner of the town of Monroe and lived there until 1844, when he removed to the town of Washington, locating on the southeast quarter of section 24. In 1854 he sold out and moved to Charles City, Iowa, where he built a saw mill and engaged at farming. Three years later he returned to Green county, settling on section 21, in the town of Mount Pleasant. A few years later he sold his farm to the county, and soon afterward removed to San Joaquin Co., Cal., where he still lives.

Jared Fessenden, a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y., and a brick-maker by trade, came to Green county in 1837, and located in Monroe. He spent the summer making brick, and the winter in the pineries. In 1844 he was married to a daughter of Josiah Pierce, and settled in the town of Washington, on section 25. He improved a farm and lived there until his death in 1880. His family now live in Cloud Co., Kansas.

James Crouch came in 1844. He lived near Monroe until 1847, then located in this town on section 22. He has since died Two of his sons now reside on section 22. James Crouch was born in Virginia, June 13, 1801. He moved to Ohio when a young man, and settled in Ross county, where he was married to Nancy Thomas, also a native of Virginia. They remained in Ohio twelve years, then removed to Lafayette, Ind., where he engaged in running a ferry boat across the Wabash river, which he continued two years. He then moved to Warren county and bought land near Independence, where he improved a farm and remained until 1844. In that year he started, in company with three other families, for the Territory of Wisconsin. They traveled with teams, bringing their household goods with them, and camped on the way. He first settled three miles south of Monroe, where he bought eighty acres of land, and lived three years. He then traded for land on section 22, of the town of Washington, to which he removed in the fall of 1847. He built a log house which was his home for several years, when he built a frame house, in which he lived until the time of his death, March 10, 1873. Mrs. Crouch died April 10, 1881. Five children were born to them, four of whom are now living—William R., Martha, now the wife of James Waite, of Iowa; Samuel T. and Elizabeth, wife of John Gange, living in Dakota. It was mainly due to Mr. Crouch's efforts that the M. E. Church was established in the town of Washington. He also took an interest in the cause of education, and was influential in establishing a good school in the town.

Samuel T. Crouch, .son of James Crouch, was born in Lafayette, Ind., Dec. 6, 1884, and was in his tenth year when he came to Green county with his parents, where he attended the pioneer school and assisted his father in clearing a farm. He was married in 1859 to Amelia Marshall, a native of New York. At the time of his marriage he settled upon land which he had previously purchased, and began housekeeping in a log house. In 1861 he sold his farm to take charge of his father's place, and has since resided on the old homestead. Mr. and Mrs. Crouch have five children—Albert, Alma E., Libbie, Arthur and Josiah.

William R. Crouch, eldest son of James and Nancy (Thomas) Crouch, was born in Fayette Co., Ohio, Oct. 14, 1824, and was ten years old when his parents moved to Indiana. He remained with them there and in Green county until 1851, when he was married March 5, to Mary Virtue, a native of Richland Co., Ohio, born Jan. 14, 1834. He then settled on his present farm on section 22, of the town of Washington. He had purchased the land two and a half years before, and erected a small frame house, to which he has since built an addition. They have ten children—Emanuel F., Louisa, James, Argalas, Elizabeth, John Wesley, Ella F., Thomas, Charlie and Mary Etta.

Alexander Sires, a native of Ohio, arrived here in 1844, and settled on the northeast quarter of section 28. In 1853 he sold out and removed to Richland county, locating in the town of Henrietta. He there platted a village called Siresville, but it did not flourish. He is now dead.

In 1845 John L. Perrine came and settled on section 25. His son now occupies the farm, while he lives in Monroe.

William C. Perrine, son of John L. and Eliza (Gordon) Perrine, was born in Jefferson Co., N.Y., July 11, 1836, and was ten years old when he came to Green county with his parents, who first settled in Monroe, where they remained three years, then removed to the town of Washington. Here William spent his youth in attending the district school and assisting his father on the farm. He was married in 1861 to Clarissa Gist, and settled on the old homestead.

His wife died in March, 1868, leaving one child—Addie. He was again married in February, 1870, to Helen, daughter of Joseph and Permelia (Spencer) Brayton, early settlers of the town of Exeter. Mr. and Mrs. Perrine have two children—Charlie and Laura.

Charlton J. Simmons, one of the pioneers of Green county, is a native of North Carolina, born in Green county, June 1, 1819. When he was thirteen years old, his parents emigrated to Illinois, and stopped for a short time in Lawrence county, then went to Crawford county where they were early settlers. His father bought land and commenced to improve a farm, and make a home for his family, but he died in April, 1834. The following February, Mrs. Simmons also died, leaving seven children, the subject of this sketch being the eldest, and upon him devolved the care of the family. Soon after his mother's death, the farm and stock were disposed of in such a manner that the children realized but $10 each, from the proceeds. Charlton J. went to work for a Methodist minister in Lawrence county, with whom he continued one year. The first ten months he received $5 per month, and the last two, $10 per month. He saved the money and loaned it to a man who ran away and never paid it. He continued to work at farming in the neighborhood until 1840. He was married March 12 of that year, to Mary Allison, who was born in May, 1823, in Lawrence county. After marriage he rented a farm on Allison Prairie, in Russellville, Lawrence county. In 1842 he took the produce which he had raised the previous year; loaded it on to a flat boat, and went down the river to New Orleans where he disposed of it. In 1844 he again went down the river with his produce, this time disposing of it at the mouth of the Arkansas river. In April, 1845, he came to Wisconsin and settled in Green county. He rented land that is now included in the village of Monroe, and bought twenty acres of winter wheat of Robert Kirkendall, which yielded thirty bushels per acre. In 1845 he pre-empted the northeast quarter of section 35, township 3 north, of range 1 east, now known as the town of Washington. He built a frame house upon this land and settled there in the fall of that year. The following spring he wished to enter forty acres on section 26, and in order to obtain the money to pay for it, he drew oats, with a team, to Janesville, where he sold them for six and a fourth cents per bushel, and the amount received lacked $2 of the sum required to pay for the land. He then sold three large yearling calves at $3 a piece, making enough money to pay his expenses to Mineral Point and enter his land. In 1847 he went to the pineries on the Wisconsin, and engaged in the lumber business, buying manufactured lumber, which he rafted down the river and sold at different points. The first wheat that he raised upon his farm, he drew to Milwaukee and sold for thirty-seven and a half cents per bushel. He bought groceries and provisions, which he drew to the pineries, a distance of 200 miles, and there disposed of them to the lumbermen. He was engaged in the lumber trade seven years, after which he devoted his time to the improvement of his farm, which at one time contained 1,100 acres. He engaged in the cattle business, and during the war dealt in horses, many of which he shipped to Chicago and sold to the government. He also engaged in breeding fine cattle and horses. He bought one horse in Kentucky which he sold for $1,800. In 1882 he met with an irreparable loss in the death of his wife, which occurred on the 28th of March, that year. He has fourteen children living—William, Caroline, Charles, Mary, George, Lida, Lucinda, Charlton J., Edward and Edgar, twins; Flora, Eva, Ida and Albert.

Samuel Allison, a native born Kentuckian, arrived in the county in 1844. In 1846 he came to the town of Washington and located on section 36. In 1856 he disposed of his farm and removed to Charles City, Iowa, where he soon died.

James Lang came here in about 1845 and settled on the northeast quarter of section 9. He lived there for several year, then sold out and left. He was a Mormon.

John Hendrickson, a native of Indiana, also came in 1846. He settled on the northeast quarter of section 27, and built a log cabin near the spring. He lived there for a few years, then sold out and returned to Indiana.

Gabriel Lang, a native of Indiana, came in 1846 and located on the northwest quarter of section 21. He remained but a few years.

Barney Becker, a native of the State of New York, came in 1845, and spent one year in Monroe. In 1846 he settled on the southwest quarter of section 25. He improved a farm and lived there several years, when he sold out and moved to Monroe, where he died a short time later.

In 1846, Elijah Roby, a native of Virginia, came from Ohio and entered the northeast quarter of section 2. He had been a stone mason, but devoted his time to farming. He took a great interest in town affairs, and was the first chairman of the board, hold that office for several years, as well as other offices of trust. In 1881 he sold out and moved to Evansville, where he now resides.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, a blacksmith, came in 1846 and settled on the northwest quarter of section 21. He sold, in 1849, to P. J. Miller, and went to Iowa.

Elias Wright, of Indiana, arrived here in 1846, and settled on the northwest quarter of section 22. A few years afterward he sold out and removed to Iowa.

Oswald Blum, a native of Switzerland, came here in 1847 and bought twenty acres on the southwest quarter of section 2. He made his home there until the time of his death.

Caspar Baker, another Swiss, came the same year and entered land on the northeast quarter of section 10, where he now lives.

William Tucker, an Englishman, came in 1847, and located on section 22. In 1853 he sold to Argalus Loveland and removed to Chickasaw Co., Iowa, where he now lives

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Emanuel Wissemiller, a native of Switzerland, came from Ohio, in 1848, and settled on section 17, where he entered 160 acres of land. Here he erected a log cabin and lived until the time of his death. His son, Jacob, now occupies the old homestead.

Fred Swickey, a native of Switzerland, came in 1847 and bought land on the northwest quarter of section 12. He improved a farm and lived until his death, in 1883.

Adam Blumer, a Swiss, came in 1849 and entered 240 acres of land on sections 8, 9 and 10. He improved a large farm and lived there until the time of his death. He was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Nov. 6, 1798. He was reared on a dairy farm where he learned the art of cheese making. He was married in October, 1829, to Margaret Blum, who was born in the canton of Glarus, in November, 1805. In 1849, they left their native land for America, taking passage in a sailing vessel to New York, where they arrived after a voyage of twenty-four days. They proceeded up the Hudson river to Albany, thence, by way of the Erie canal to Buffalo, where they took passage on the lakes to Milwaukee. There he hired teams to bring them to Monroe. He entered 240 acres of land on sections 8, 9 and 16, of the town of Washington, and built a log house on the southwest quarter of section 9. He purchased two pairs of oxen and immediately commenced improving the land. The first spring he bought five cows, from which they made butter and cheese. He engaged in grain and stock raising and resided here until the time of his death, which occurred in January, 1855. He left a widow and five children—Jacob, Magdalena, Elsbeth, Catharine and Adam. Jacob lives at Sioux City, where he works at his trade, as carpenter and joiner; Magdalena is the wife of John Baltzly, and lives in Illinois; Elsbeth died in 1866; Catharine is the wife of Jacob Hefty, of Monroe. Adam was born April 1, 1844, and was five years old when he came to Green county. He was reared and educated in the town of Washington. March 23, 1865, he was married to Margaret Hefty, who was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, July 7, 1844. They settled at the time of their marriage, on the old homestead, which they now occupy. He has purchased more land, and now owns 476 acres. He has two large barns and a good frame house. In 1868 he commenced making cheese, keeping at that time, twenty cows. He now keeps seventy-five cows and continues to manufacture cheese. Mr. and Mrs. Blumer have seven children—Rosana, Mary, Catharine, Adam, Emma, Fredolin and Jacob.

Daniel and James Hilton, natives of Maine, came in 1850. Daniel entered land on sections 5 and 6, where he improved a farm and lived a few years, then lived in Brooklyn several years, after which he moved to Missouri. He now lives in Pocahontas Co., Iowa. James entered land on section 7, where he lived five or six years, when he sold out and removed to the town of York, where he still lives.

Andrew Harper, a settler of 1851, was born on the North Shetland Island, Nov. 28, 1828. When he was thirteen years old he emigrated to America and settled in Leroy, Genesee Co., N. Y., where he lived until 1846, then came to the Territory of Wisconsin and stopped temporarily five miles east of Janesville and in January 1847 removed to Spring Valley, Rock county, in which town his father entered land and improved a farm, and is now living at the age of seventy-nine years. The subject of this sketch made his home there with his parents until 1853. On the 22d of February of that year he was married to Agnes Halcrow who was born on North Shetland Island. In January, 1852, he came to Green county and entered land on section 27, town of Washington, locating the same with a land warrant for which he had traded in Rock county, paying for the same a pair of oxen and a wagon, with $60 in money. He then had left, one pair of oxen and $20 in money, which constituted his entire earthly possessions. The following March after marriage he came to the town of Washington, but not having means with which to improve his land, he rented land on section 21 for three years. He had good crops and there made some money with which to start improvements on his own land. In 1855 he built a frame house 14x22, and moved during the fall of that year and immediately commenced work on the land and was in a few years able to buy more land. He now owns 360 acres, the greater portion of which is improved and under fence. Mrs. Harper died May 5, 1874. Twelve children were born to them, eleven of whom are now living—Robert, Libbie, Malcolm J., Susan, Agnes, Andrew, Tena, Thomas, Jane, Hine J. and William. Mr. Harper joined the Presbyterian Church in York State, but since coming to Wisconsin has worshiped with the Methodist Episcopal organization, of which Church his wife and nine of her children were members.

Joseph and Gustavus Hilton, natives of Maine, came in 1851. Joseph had a land warrant which he located on sections 5 and 8. He improved a farm and lived here until the spring of 1884, when he sold out and settled in Lyon Co., Iowa. Gustavus entered 100 acres of land on sections 6 and 7. He now lives on section 6.

Gustavus Hilton, fifth son of John and Lucinda (Williams) Hilton. was born in the town of Embden, Somerset Co., Maine, Jan. 17, 1828. His younger days were spent upon a farm in his native town, and he obtained his education in the public schools. He remained with his parents until twenty-one years old. He then engaged in farming in the neighborhood during the summer seasons, and in lumbering during the winters, and running logs down the Kennebec river in the spring. In 1851 he came to Wisconsin, traveling by rail to Buffalo, thence on the lakes to Detroit, crossed Michigan by rail, crossing Lake Michigan to Milwaukee, where he employed a farmer by the name of Webb, (who resided near Decatur, Green county but who happened to be in Milwaukee at the time) to bring him to Monroe. He entered land on sections 6 and 7, of the town of Washington, but made his home with his brother, Joseph, until 1857. He was married in February of the following year to Sarah Maria Presher, a native of Tioga Co., N. Y. He erected a frame house on the southwest quarter of section 6. He has cleared and improved seventy-five acres of land, and now owns 180 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Hilton have seven children—Emma A., Elroy B., Marcellus E., Herbert W., Millie L., Lorrin L. and Daisy B. In 1854 Mr. Hilton's parents came to Washington and bought land on section 8, on which they lived two years, then sold and returned to Maine, where Mr. Hilton died in 1874. He was born in Wiscasset, Maine, in March, 1786. At the age of twenty years he went to sea, and sailed before the mast seven years. He then abandoned the sea and was married to Lucinda Williams, also a native of Wiscasset, born April 17, 1789. They settled at Stark, Franklin Co., Maine. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. He afterwards bought land in Embden, Somerset county, where they resided until 1854, when, as before stated, they came to Green county. On his return to Maine he lived in the town of Embden with his daughter, until the time of his death. His widow now lives with her son, James, in the town of York, and although ninety-five years old, is still in the enjoyment of good health. Eleven children were born to them, nine of whom reached maturity.

James Gaines, a native of "Bonnie Scotland" and a veteran of the Mexican War, came from the town of Exeter in 1853, and bought land on the northeast quarter of section 23. About 1877 he sold out and moved to Nebraska, where he still lives.

The records of the first town meeting were destroyed, but we learn that the following officers were elected at a town meeting held in James Long's house in April, 1849: Elijah

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Roby, chairman ;Peter Wilson and James Crouch side board; William Tucker, town clerk; A. H. Pierce, assessor; and Frank Pierce, superintendent of schools.

At the, election held in the Bloomer school house, district No. 6, on April 1, 1884, the following officers were elected: Andrew Harper, chairman; S. T. Clayton and Thomas Hefty, side board; Thomas Lemon, clerk; John Baumgartner, assessor; he refused to serve, and Henry Hefty was appointed by the board to fill vacancy; A. Loveland, treasurer and justice of the peace.

EDUCATIONAL.

The first school house in district No. 3 was erected in 1854. It was a stone building, located on the northwest quarter of section 9. Mary Hutchison was the first teacher. In 1882 a frame house was erected on the old site, in which Kate Wescott taught the first school.

The first school in district No. 1 was taught by John Brown in a log house in the winter of 1848—9. The house was situated on the north line of the southwest quarter of section 22. During the following fall the first school house in the town was built on the southwest quarter of section 22. B. T. Hancock was the first teacher in this house. The house was built of logs furnished by the citizens, who also erected the same. The present building was erected in 1868, and is a neat frame structure, situated on the site of the old one. Lorain Marshall was the first teacher in this house.

The first school taught in district No. 2 was in Jarvis Rattan's house, in 1851. Mary A. Sutherland, of the town of Sylvester, was the teacher. She received $2 per week for her services, but was taken sick and died before her term had expired. School was afterward taught in Frank Pierce's house. In 1854 a school house was erected on the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25. Louisa A. Tilson taught the first term of school in this house. The present building was erected in 1871. It is situated on the northwest quarter of section 36. Lydia Shake, now the wife of William Bailey, was the first teacher in that house.

The first school house in district No. 4 was erected in 1850. The people of the neighborhood turned out and drew the logs together, some furnishing one and others three and four logs. Then a "bee" was held and the house was put up. Edwin Noble was the first teacher. This house was located on section 2, and was used until the present one was erected.

The first school in district No. 6 was taught by Mrs. James Lang, in her husband's house on the northeast quarter of section 9. This was in 1851. The following year a log school house was erected on the south line of section 9, in which Emily Lamars taught the first school. The log school house was used until 1870 when a frame building was erected near the center of section 9.

The first school in district No. 8 was taught by Mrs. William Fleury, in her husband's house in 1856. During the same year a log house was built on the northeast quarter of section 19. Phoenix Bennett taught the first school in this house. In 1874 a small frame building was erected on the old site, in which Annie McCurry taught the first term school.

RELIGIOUS.

In an early day the people met for worship in the school house on section 9. the pulpit was supplied by preachers from Monroe among whom were Revs. Snell, Smead, Hagerman, Angelberger and Fotsch. Rev. Hirz is the present pastor. In 1876 a neat frame church building was erected on the northwest quarter of section 21. Rev. Fotsch was the first to preach in this church. The first trustee was Christian Isley. There is a flourishing Sabbath school in connection with this Church, of which Christian Isley is superintendent.

The first Methodist Episcopal meetings were held at the house of Alexander Sires, in the winter of 1847—8, by Rev. Allen. A class was organized with the following members: James

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Crouch and wife; Alexander Sires and wife; Elias Wright and wife; David Sires and wife, and Jacob Ashley and wife James Crouch was appointed class leader. For a short time the class met at the school house, and later, at the house of James Crouch, for some years, when they again met in the school house. In 1874 they erected a church on the southwest quarter of section 26. It is a neat frame structure, painted white. The following are the pastors who have had charge of the Church:

Revs. Dudgeon, Hurd, Fancher, Lake, Walker, Rupel, Allen, Lewis, Semple, Knox, Briggs, Burnip and Haight. The latter being the pastor at the present time. Elder Crouch preached the dedicatory sermon. A Sabbath school is connected with the Church. Thomas Lemon is superintendent.

The first services in this town, of the Immanuel Church of the Evangelical Association of North America, were held by Rev. Leonard Buhler, of the town of Sylvester, in 1869, on the occasion of the funeral of Jacob Zum Brunnen. Rev. Buhler organized a class, and meetings were held in the school house until the church was built. The church is a neat frame structure, situated on the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 21.

FIRST MARRIAGE.

The first marriage in the town was Hiram Rust and Maria Pierce, at the residence of the bride's parents, in 1838, by Joseph Kelly, justice of the peace. Mr. Rust is now dead. His widow lives in Kansas.

PROMINENT CITIZENS.

Among the prominent citizens of the town of Washington, are the following, of whom we give biographical sketches:

Thomas Lemon an early settler of Green county, was a native of Centre Co., Penn., born in 1802. He was there married to Sarah Gunsallus, who was born in the same county, in 1815. He was a weaver by trade, which occupation he followed in Centre county, until 1843. He then came to Wisconsin and spent one year in Lafayette county, then came to Green county. He rented a farm, one year, in the town of Sylvester, then went to New Glarus and bought government land on section 35, where he built a log cabin and cleared a portion of the land. He died in that town, June 14, 1854, leaving a wife and six children—James, Catharine, William, Thomas, Amanda and Maria. The family continued to live in New Glarus for a number of years, and made considerable improvement upon the farm, but they are now scattered. James lives in Custer Co., Neb; Catharine is dead; William and Thomas reside in Washington; Amanda is the wife of Jacob North, and living in Chase Co., Kansas. Maria is the wife of Frank Loveland. Thomas was born in the town of Sylvester, Dec. 15, 1845. He grew to manhood in New Glarus, and in May, 1872, was married to Eminah Loveland, daughter of Argalus and Jane (Orwing) Loveland. They went to Nebraska and bought a farm in York county, where they remained four years, then returned to Green county and bought a farm on sections 27 and 22, of Washington, upon which was a large barn with a stone basement, and also a cheese factory. In 1883 he built a commodious frame house. He keeps a dairy of twenty cows. Mr. and Mrs. Lemon have one child—Eddie Elgin. Mr. Lemon was elected to the office of town clerk, in 1882, and has been twice re-elected. He has also been supervisor.

William Lemon, son of Thomas and Sarah Lemon, was born in Centre Co., Penn., Dec. 13, 1841. He was quite young when his parents came to Green county. He grew to manhood in this county, and on the 31st of August, 1864, enlisted in the 35th Wisconsin, company D. He first went to Tennessee, then to Arkansas, then to Alabama, where he engaged in the siege and capture of Mobile. He then went to Texas, thence to New Orleans, where he was discharged in July, 1865. He returned home, and in October, 1869, was united in marriage with Rebecca Willis. She was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, and is a daughter of Solomon and Lavina Willis, pioneers of Green county. He had been making his home with his mother, on the old homestead, but on his marriage he settled on land he had previously purchased on section 14. He has since bought land on section 23, and has erected a good set of frame buildings. They have four children—Jesse, Ethlen, William and Myrtie.

Samuel Holloway, a pioneer of Green county, was born in Worcester Co., Md., in 1799. He was there married, to Mahala Godfrey, also a native of Maryland. In 1835 they removed to Illinois, and were early settlers in Schuyler county, where he worked at his trade as blacksmith in the town of Brooklyn. They remained there until 1844, when they came to Green county, and took a claim on section 22, township 3, range 7 east, now known as Washington. Two years later, he traded that land for a claim in Monroe, where he lived until 1852. He then went to Richland county and settled in Rockbridge. He died in that town, two years later. He was twice married. His first wife died in 1848, leaving ten children, eight of whom are now living. He was again married in 1850, and by this union had one child, who now lives in Rockbridge, Richland county.

Ara S. Holloway, eldest son of Samuel and Mahala (Godfrey) Holloway, was born Maryland, Nov. 13, 1823. In his youth he learned the blacksmith trade. He remained with his parents until 1848, when he was married to Rebecca Rice, a native of Indiana, and settled in Monroe, where he opened a shop and worked at his trade three years. He then removed to Monticello and engaged in the same business, which he continued until 1878. In that year he sold out, and bought a farm on section 35, of the town of Washington. He has built a shop upon his farm and carries on blacksmithing in connection with farming. His first wife died ten months after marriage. He was again married to Emiline Rice, a sister of his former wife, who died eleven years later. His third wife was Ann Gates, who lived but two and a half years after marriage. He was afterwards married to Harriet N. Jones. The second Mrs. Holloway left two children—Jane and Thomas. The present Mrs. Holloway has one child.—Ara C.

John Baumgartner, son of Anton and Magdalena Baumgartner, early settlers of Green county, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Aug. 9, 1838. He was nine years of age when his parents came to America and settled in Green county, where he grew to manhood. He attended school in his native country, and also in the pioneer schools of Washington. In 1862 he bought the northeast quarter of section 21, on which he built a log house and kept "bach," until 1865. He was married January 19 of that year, to Anna Hefty, also a native of the canton of Glarus, born March 6, 1846. He continued to occupy the log house until 1882, when he erected a large frame house. He has also built a large barn, with a stone basement, a granary 16x26 feet, and a stable of the same dimensions. He is engaged in raising grain and stock. Mr. and Mrs. Baumgartner have nine children--Magdalena, Anna, Mary, Lydia, Herman A., Richard J., Reuben H., Otto M. and Bertha J.

Thomas Hefty, son of Fredolin and Rosanna Hefty, pioneers of Green county, was born March 15, 1846, and was one year old when he came to America with his parents. He grew to manhood in the town of Washington, receiving his education in the district schools. He was married Feb. 16, 1871, to Barbara Kundert, a native of the town of New Glarus, and daughter of Rudolph and Elsbeth Kundert, early settlers in that town. He settled then upon the homestead with his parents, on section 4, of the town of Washington, where he still resides. He has a large frame house and a frame barn, 40x72 feet, also a stone barn, 34x44 feet. His farm contains 400 acres, and he is extensively engaged in raising grain and stock, also keeps a large dairy. Mr. and Mrs. Hefty have three children—Fridolin K., born Sept. 20, 1871;

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Elsbeth K., born Dec. 27, 1873, and Rosina K., born March 4, 1877.

Jacob Burgy, one of the pioneers of New Glarus, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, March 9, 1794, and died in the town of Washington, Dec. 12, 1874. In his youth he was employed in a cotton factory, and also in gardening in his native country. He was married to Barbara Holsy, and they had one son—Jacob. In 1847 they started, April 1, for America, and arrived in New York city after a voyage of fifty-seven days. They came directly to Green county, traveling by steamer to Albany, thence by canal to Buffalo, where they embarked upon the lakes and came to Milwaukee. There he hired a team for $25 to bring them to Green county. They stopped for a few days in New Glarus, with a friend named Holsy, who lived on the present site of the village of New Glarus. Mr. Burgy then bought a claim on section 1, of Charles Parkin, and entered forty acres. There was a log cabin upon the claim, into which they moved, also ten acres of winter wheat and seven acres of corn growing. The wheat yielded 308 bushels, the most of which he had ground at the Attica mills and sold the flour to the people in the neighborhood. After the wheat had been gathered from the field the children in the neighborhood went into the field and gathered up the scattering heads of wheat which was ground into flour. Mr. Burgy soon after entered eighty acres adjoining his first entry. He cleared a good farm and resided here until 1862. He then bought a house and lot in the village of New Glarus, where he lived until the death of his wife, June 28, 1873, then went to live with his son, with whom he remained until his death. Their only son, Jacob, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Jan. 15, 1837, and was ten years old when he came to Green county, where he assisted his father in clearing the farm. He was married July 1, 1858, to Barbara Luchsinger, daughter of John and Barbara (Wilde) Luchsinger. She was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, Jan.

23, 1842. They settled on the homestead farm, where he built a large barn with a stone basement, and lived until 1872. He then rented the homestead and bought a farm of 124 acres in the town of Washington. He has since purchased land adjoining, and now has 310 acres in one body. There was a stone house upon this farm, which he now occupies, having enlarged it by a frame addition. In 1879 he built a barn, 34x56 feet, with eighteen foot posts and having a stone basement. He raises grain and stock, paying particular attention to the raising of fine blooded horses. Mr. and Mrs. Burgy are the parents of nine children—Barbara, Rosa, Julia, Amelia, Jacob, Louisa, Carrie, Olive and Herman.

Samuel P. Clayton was born in Bourbon Co., Ky., June 22, 1825. When he was but an infant his parents moved to Illinois and settled in Crawford county, where they were early settlers. His father bought timberland, improved a farm and lived there until the time of his death. The subject of this sketch there grew to manhood. When he was fourteen years old his father died, and two years later his mother was again married. He then started out for himself and went to Lawrence county, and there he found employment on a farm. He was there married, when he was eighteen years old, to Elizabeth Simmons, who was born in Green Co., N. C. They located in Crawford county and remained one year, then lived on a claim in Lawrence county two years, then moved to Richland county and rented land for two years. In 1848 they came to this county and spent the first winter at Monroe. He was there engaged in mining, and in teaming to the pineries, a distance of 200 miles. In the spring of 1849 he moved to Washington and engaged in mining two years, then returned to Lawrence county and rented a farm one year, then came back to the town of Washington and bought a claim of forty acres on the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 34, and subsequently entered the land. There was a small frame house on the place at the time. He did but little work on his land but engaged in mining and carpentering two years, then paid attention to farming. He now owns 140 acres and is engaged in raising stock and grain. They have eight children living—Mary E., Sarah C., George, Libbie, Nettie, Samuel T., William and Myrtle. Mary E. is the wife of Anton Baumgartner; Sarah C. married John W. Bailey; Libbie is married to Jacob Baumgartner. Mr. Clayton and wife are members of the M. E. Church.

Anton Baumgartner, a pioneer of 1848, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, in November, 1812. There he was reared to agricultural pursuits. When a young man he learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed in his native country until 1848. He made the voyage to America in a sailing vessel, landed at New Orleans and proceeded up the Mississippi river to Galena, where he hired a team with which to complete the journey to Green county. He settled in the town of Washington, moving into a log house owned by his brother-in-law, Jacob Marty, located on section 9. The following fall he bought sixty acres on section 28, where he built a log house, into which he moved the next spring. He improved this place, purchased more land, and in 1868, erected a frame house. He was married to Magdaline Marty, also a native of Switzerland. They were blessed with nine children, seven of whom are now living—Magdaline, John, Ursula, Euphemia, Anton, Anna and Jacob. Mrs. Baumgartner died in 1877, and soon after, Mr. Baumgartner went to live with his children. He lives at present with his son-in-law, John Jenny, in Mount Pleasant. Their son, Anton Baumgartner, was born in the canton of Glarus, Switzerland, in January, 1847, and was very young when his parents came to America. He grew to manhood in the town of Washington, and was educated in the district school. In August, 1869, he was married to Mary E. Clayton, and after marriage, remained on the homestead four years. He then bought his present farm on section 26. He has built a good frame house and other buildings. They have five children—Arthur, Henry, Clinton, Weltha and Bessie.

Jacob Baumgartner, youngest son of Anton and Magdalina Baumgartner, was born in the town of Washington, April 13, 1854. He obtained his education in the public school, and in 1878 was married to Libbie Clayton, a native of Washington. He then settled on the old homestead where he now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Baumgartner have two children—Winnie and Willie.

Andrew Jackson Smith was born in Newark, Licking Co., Ohio, Dec. 18, 1828. His parents, Jabez and Earlis (Standley) Smith, were natives of Massachusetts. Jabez Smith was a soldier in the War of 1812, was wounded in battle and drew a pension. Earlis Smith died at Newark, and Jabez Smith, died near Marengo, Ill., in 1861. In 1848, Andrew J. came to Wisconsin with his father and settled in the town of Jordan. March 30, 1849, he was married to Elizabeth Ellis. In 1855, they went to Richland county and settled in the town of Henrietta where they lived five years, then came back to the town of Jordan, where he died Jan. 6, 1862. There were seven children born to them—Richard A., Jabez N., Mary A., Earlis, Ella, Earl S., and Jessie, of whom Richard, Mary and Ella, only are now living. Mr. Smith was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

Richard A. Smith, son of Andrew J. and Mary (Ellis) Smith, pioneers of Green county, was born in the town of Jordan, Green Co., Wis., Jan. 25, 1850. He was twelve years old when his father died, leaving his mother with three children, of whom Richard was the eldest. He assisted his mother in supporting the family, working at farming in the neighborhood, for which he received, at first, $5 per month. His wages were increased gradually, until he received $18 per month. In 1872, he went to Iowa, and rented land, where he put in a crop which, after harvesting, he returned to Green county. In the fall of that year, he was married to Mary, daughter of Jacob and Eliza (James) Hammond, of Green county. Soon after marriage, they went to Iowa and lived two years, then came back to this county and rented land until 1883, when he bought his present farm on sections 23 and 26, of Washington. They have two children—Charlie and Roscoe.

David Benkert, was born in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, March 1, 1820. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and in his youth, worked with his father, who was a tanner. He afterwards engaged in the same business for himself. In 1851 he left his native country and came to America, landing at New York city and coming directly west to Green Co., Wis. He arrived on the 5th of June, and immediately engaged in farming in Monroe, receiving for his services, $12 per month. In 1852 he rented a farm which he carried on two years, then came to Washington, and bought a farm on section 22, upon which was a log cabin, and a few acres broken. Since that time he has improved and cleared a farm, and built a good frame house. He still makes this his home. In 1882, he bought another farm on the same section. He was married in 1843 to Catharina Kung, who was born in the canton of Bern. They have five children living—Mary, David, John, Jacob and Fred. Their sons, Jacob and Fred, are now engaged in mercantile trade in Albany. Jacob was born in the town of Washington, Dec. 25, 1857. He spent his early life on his father's farm, and obtained his education in the district school. When eighteen years of age he engaged as clerk in a dry goods store. In 1879, he began mercantile trade at Monticello. He continued in business there until 1881 when he closed his store, and moved his goods to Albany, where he established a good trade. The fire of November, 1883, destroyed his entire property, but in December, 1883, he resumed business in company with his brother, Fred. They carry a large stock of clothing and gentleman's furnishing goods with a tailor shop in connection. He was married in 1881 to Jennie Patterson, of Monroe, Wis.

Jacob zum Brunnen, Sr., was born in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, Nov. 2, 1802. When a young man he learned the tailor's trade, which business he followed until eighteen years of age. He then engaged in making hemp ropes, worked at that business for fifteen years. He worked at the pottery business for two years. The clay not being good, he lost money in the enterprise. He then engaged in the manufacture of ropes, and also opened a dry goods and grocery store. In 1845 he purchased some land and engaged in stock raising. In 1852 he sold out his business and emigrated to the United States with his family, which consisted of his wife and six children. They crossed the ocean on a sail vessel, being twenty-two days making the trip. They landed at New York, and came to Green county at once, arriving here on the 16th of October. He clerked in Monroe for six months, and in the spring of 1853 purchased some land on section 28, town of Washington. He lived there until 1867, when he removed to section 34, where he had purchased land the year previous. He erected a large frame house and barn, and resided there until the time of his death, which occurred May 20, 1869. His widow died Feb. 4, 1879. They had six children, three of whom are living—Jacob, Gottlieb and Martin. John, the second child was born in Switzerland in August, 1836, and died Jan. 15, 1870; Catharine, the only daughter, was born Jan. 20, 1838, and died in October, 1873, and Bartholomew, the youngest child, was born June 16, 1842, and died Jan. 5, 1870.

Martin zum Brunnen was born Dec. 28, 1840, in Switzerland. In 1852 his parents came to America. He made his home with his parents until their death. He was married in April, 1878, to Euphemia Marty, born in the town of Mount Pleasant. They have one child—Bartholomew. Mr. zum Brunnen owns and occupies the farm his father purchased in 1866, on section 34. He has altogether, on sections 19, 21, 27, 33 and 34, 480 acres of land. Sixty acres of this is timber land. He keeps seventy milch cows, and makes the milk into cheese. His father commenced cheese-making in 1856, with the milk from twelve cows, and continued in the business until his death.

Jacob zum Brunnen, Jr., oldest son of Jacob and Susanna (Sigris) zum Brunnen, was born in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, Dec. 12, 1830. He received his education in the public schools of his native country. In his youth he assisted his father in making ropes, and after his father purchased a farm, devoted his time to agricultural pursuits. He came with his parents to America in October, 1852, and in 1853 engaged with a carpenter and joiner at Monroe, for one year, to learn the trade at which he worked, after the first year in connection with farming, until 1857. Upon the 29th of April, of that year, he was married to Susanna Frautschy, who was born in the canton of Bern, July 22, 1836. He then settled in New Glarus and worked a few months at his trade, after which he moved to his father's place, and in company with his father and brother, carried on the farm until 1861. In the fall of that year he settled on his present farm on section 28, in the town of Washington. He erected a log house, to which he has since made a frame addition; and also erected a frame barn, 38x44 feet. He is the owner of 305 acres of land. He keeps a dairy and sells milk. Mr. and Mrs. zum Brunnen have nine children living—Jacob, John, Gotleib, Emma, Emil, Edward, Mary Susanna, Louise Helena, Clara Lidia. Mr. zum Brunnen and wife are members of the Lutheran Church. Mr. zum Brunnen's father and mother are dead.

Linus Hare was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., in September, 1812. He obtained his education in the common schools. When fifteen years of age he engaged with a blacksmith to learn the trade, which he followed a few years, then went to Salina, where he was employed as foreman in a lumber yard until 1852. He went to Michigan, in that year, and located in St. Joseph county, where he purchased a farm, which, in the spring of 1854, he sold, and came to Green Co., Wis. He bought a farm in the town of Sylvester, where he soon became prominent in public affairs, and filled many offices of trust, in the town. He was elected in the fall of 1880, to the office of county treasurer, and re-elected in 1882. At the time of his first election to that office, he moved to Monroe, where he died, Feb. 1, 1883. He was twice married, first to Ora Spencer, who died a few years after marriage, leaving three children, only one of whom is now living—Helen, who is married and lives in Syracuse. His second wife was Clarinda Hill, and by this union there were nine children, five of whom are now living—Henrietta, Alvah E., Lucy, Mary and Hester. Alvah E. was born in Salina, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Oct. 8, 1844, and came with his parents to Green county, where he grew to manhood in the town of Sylvester. He enlisted April 24, 1864, for 100 days, in company A, of the 40th Wisconsin regiment, and went to Memphis, Tenn., and was present when Forrest made his attack upon that city. He served five months, and was discharged with the regiment and returned home. He was married Nov. 13, 1866, to Sarah Hammond, a daughter of Jacob and Eliza (James) Hammond, pioneers of Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Hare settled in Albany at the time of their marriage, and remained one year, then moved to Mount Pleasant and rented a farm three years. He then moved into the village of Monticello, and kept the Monticello House two and a half years. He then resumed farming. In 1876 he bought a farm on section 26, of Washington, where he has erected a good frame house, and is engaged in raising stock and grain. They have two children—Myrtie and Linus.

Eldridge W. Chesebro was born in Knox, Albany Co., N. Y., March 14, 1822. His early life was spent in his native county, where he attended the district school, and afterwards, three terms at Knoxville Academy. He was married in March, 1850, to Elmina Ketcham, also a native of Knox, Albany county. He bought a small farm in his native town and lived there until 1854, then sold his farm and came to Wisconsin. He lived in Walworth county one year, then settled in Mount Pleasant, Green county, where he purchased a farm in company with his father, on section 26. Two years later he sold his interest and bought a farm on the same section, upon which was a log house and a straw stable, and fifty acres broken. He lived upon this farm four years, then removed to an adjoining farm which he had purchased, living there until 1868, when he came to Washington and bought his present farm on section 25, where he has since resided. Mr. and Mrs. Chesebro are the parents of seven children—Milton, Simmons, Oscar, Allen, Sarah, Edwin and Eldridge. Mr. Chesebro enlisted Feb. 22, 1865, in the 49th Wisconsin regiment, company G, and went to Missouri where he was stationed on guard duty. He was detached from the regiment a part of the time. He was discharged at Benton Barracks, Nov. 8, 1865.

Argalus Loveland came to Green county in 1854. He was born in Smithfield, Madison Co., N. Y., May 5, 1814. When he was three years old his parents moved to Springfield, Erie Co., Penn., where they lived until 1828, then moved to Salem, Mercer county, of the same State. He remained with his parents until twenty-one years of age, then went to Orleans Co., N. Y., where he was employed in farming during the summer and chopping wood in the winter. He staid there a year, then returned to his home in Mercer Co., Penn., remained a few weeks, then went to Michigan, where he stopped a short time and returned to Cleveland, Ohio, and went to work in a stone quarry, five miles east of the city. A few months later he went to Warrensville, near Cleveland, and commenced learning the carpenter trade. Some time later he returned to Cleveland and worked at his trade until 1837, when he went back to Mercer county and took an interest in his father's farm. He was married in that county, Oct. 11, 1838, to Jane Orwick, who was born near Coshocton, Ohio. The following spring he bought land two miles from his father's place, upon which he lived until 1853, then sold and went to Pavilion, Kendall Co., Ill., and remained one year, then came to Green county. He bought a farm of William Tucker on sections 22 and 23 of the town of Washington. There were fourteen acres of the land fenced and broken, and a log house was standing upon the place. He now has the land all improved and fenced, and has erected a large frame house, doing the work himself. Mr. and Mrs. Loveland have nine children living—Franklin, Orrilla, Jane A., Eminah, Temperance, William A., Edwin A., Alfred E. and Silas E. Harrison, the second son, was born in Mercer Co., Penn., June 25, 1841, and made his home with his parents until 1863. In the summer of that year he went to Monroe and engaged in a marble shop, to learn the trade, but soon after enlisted in the 1st Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and went to Louisiana. In the summer of 1864 he was taken sick at Brazier City and sent to the hospital at New Orleans, where he partially recovered, and with 200 others, started for New York on the steamer North America which, during a storm, sprung a leak and sunk. Nearly all on board perished, Harrison among the number. Mr. Loveland is the present town treasurer, which office he has filled for seven consecutive years. He has also been chairman of the board, a member of the side board, assessor and town clerk. He is a member of the Seventh Day Advent Church at Monroe. He is politically a republican, and has been elected to office in a town where his party is largely in the minority.

Frank Loveland enlisted April 22, 1861, at the first call for troops, in company C, of the 3d Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and joined the Army of the Potomac. He participated in the following battles: Bolivar Heights, Winchester, Cedar Mountain, second battle of Bull Run and Antietam, where he was wounded and sent to the hospital, and remained four months, then joined the command opposite Fredericksburg, in January, 1863. He afterwards participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Germania Ford and Gettysburg. In the fall of 1863, he joined the western army. He veteranized December 23, of that year, and went with Sherman on his march to the sea, and to Raleigh, N. C., taking part in most of the more important battles of that campaign. He was taken sick at Raleigh, but again joined the regiment at Alexandria, in June, 1865. He was mustered out in Kentucky in July, 1865, and returned home. He was born in Mercer Co., Penn., July 30, 1839, and came to Wisconsin with his parents with whom he remained until the time of his enlistment. He was married June 20, 1874, to Maria Lemon, a native of Green county. He then settled on his present farm on section 15, which he had purchased some years previously. He has improved the land and erected a good frame house and barn. Mr. and Mrs. Loveland have four children—Otto, William, Franklin and Ada.

Joshua Moore came to Green county in 1854, and bought eighty acres of land on section 36, of the town of Washington. There was a stone house upon the place and all the land was improved and under fence. In 1867 he sold this place and bought 120 acres of land on sections 14 and 15, forty of which was improved. A log house was standing upon the southwest quarter of section 14, into which he moved. He has since purchased more land and erected a good frame house in which he now lives. He was born in Guilford Co., N. C., March 15, 1799. He was reared in his native county, to agricultural pursuits. In 1822 he went to Tennessee and located in Roane county, where he engaged with a saddler and harness maker, to learn the trade. He served six months, then engaged in the same business for himself. He was married in Tennessee, in December, 1823, to Hepsey Ann Childres, who was born in Anson Co., N. C., Nov. 12, 1804. A short before his marriage he bought a piece of timber land and built a log house, in which they began house keeping. It was furnished with home-made furniture. In 1830 he bought 100 acres, opened a tan yard and then in 1837 sold his place and went to Indiana, and entered 400 acres of land in Davis county. He remained there but a short time, however, and returned in 1838 to Tennessee. The man to whom he had sold his Tennessee farm, for $1,000, failed to pay for it, and he had to start anew. He had $100 and he bought a piece of land on credit, built a log house and put in a tan yard. He afterwards built a good frame house, and lived at Post Oak Springs until 1854, when he again went to Indiana and remained one year, then came to Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have had three children—Mary R., John C. and Thomas. Mary R. is the widow of Jacob Berkey; Thomas is dead; John C. is a farmer and lives in Washington.

James Confer, class leader of the Centre M. E. Church, in the town of Washington, was born in Centre Co., Penn., Jan. 10, 1821. There he grew to manhood, obtaining his education in the public schools. At the age of eighteen years he commenced working in a tannery, which occupation he continued eight years. He was married Feb. 20, 1845, to Mary E. Ziebuch, who was born in Union Co., Penn., Sept. 3, 1824. In 1847 they removed to Illinois and located in Winnebago county, purchasing land in Harlem township, where he built a stone house and improved a farm. He resided there until 1854, then sold his farm and came to Green Co., Wis. He purchased unimproved land on section 34, of the town of Washington, on which he built a log house. A few years later he erected the frame house in which he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. Confer are the parents of four children—John W., who is a farmer, and lives in Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa; Francis M., a practicing physician at Monroe; Jacob S., a farmer, living at Monticello, and James K, who resides at home with his parents.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Melschior Schlittler came to Green county in 1858, and settled in the town of New Glarus. He was a single man at that time, and worked at farming. For his work the first year he received $100. In 1862 he purchased land on section 12, town of Washington. There was a log house on the place, in which he lived. He was married in July, 1867, to Elsbeth Zweifel, born in Switzerland. They have six children—Bertha, Emma, Albert, Lena, Mina and Amelia. In 1867 he rented a farm on sections 1 and 12, and the next year sold a part of his old farm and bought the one he had rented, and which he now occupies. He has 191 acres in the towns of Washington and New Glarus, and 200 acres in the town of Exeter. He has a large frame house and good barns, also granaries and other out houses.

John G. Bidlingmaier came to Washington in 1861, and purchased land on section 30, which consisted of sixty-seven acres, twenty acres of which were broken. A log cabin had been erected upon the land. He soon after purchased 133 acres of adjoining land. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1814, where he was reared upon a farm. He was married to Annie Woerner, and in 1851 they came to America, and settled in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, where he was employed in farming three years. He then rented a farm until 1861. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bidlingmaier, only one of whom is now living—Michael, who was born in Germany, Dec. 3, 1843, and was seven years old when he came to America. He was married in 1877 to Ann Mary, daughter of Christian and Verena (Buenker) Iseli. She was born in Ohio. They settled at the time of their marriage upon the homestead, where they still reside. They have three children—John G., Christian A. and Lydia Verena.

Christian Iseli came to this county in 1861, and bought wild land on section 30, of the town of Washington, all of which was timber and grub land. He has since cleared and fenced about 100 acres. He was born in the canton of Bern, Switzerland, July 4, 1828. His father was a gunsmith by trade, and also owned a small farm. The subject of this sketch assisted his father on the farm and in the shop until 1846, when he left his native land, and came to the United States. He first stopped in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, and engaged in mining four months. He then ran an engine at the iron ore furnace five years, after which he was engaged as engineer in different places for three years, then was again employed at the mines, doing outside work until 1861. He was married in 1857 to Verena Buenker, a native of Switzerland. They have had fourteen children, thirteen of whom are now living—Samuel, Ann Mary, Verena, John, Jacob, Rosina, Elizabeth, Louisa, Maggie, Henry, George, Wilhelm D. and Annie B., twins. Annie, the ninth child, died in 1880, aged seven years and six months. The family are members of the German Evangelical Reformed Church, of which Mr. Iseli was one of the first trustees, and is the superintendent of the Sabbath school.

John Norton came to Green county in March, 1865, and worked at farming for James Barney. In 1867 he bought 100 acres of land on section 24, of the town of Washington. He improved this land, and at the same time, worked Mr. Barney's farm on shares. In 1877 he removed to his own land. He lived upon this place until 1881 when he bought a farm on section 25, of the same town, where he has built a large frame house and a barn 36x70 feet, with twenty foot posts and having a stone basement. He owns 402 acres of land, the greater part of which is improved and under fence. He keeps a dairy of forty cows. Mr. Norton was born in county Limerick, Ireland, May 10, 1825. He was there reared upon a farm and educated in the common schools. In 1848 he left Ireland and came to America, landing at Philadelphia. He remained in that city three months, then went to Berks county, where he lived till 1851. He then removed to Ohio and located in Lake county where he rented a farm and remained till 1865, when, as before stated, he came to Green county. He was married in 1854 to Mary Codde, who was born in county Wexford, Ireland. They have eight children—Michael, Frank, George, John, Robert, James, Ella and Mary V.

John Bass came to Green county in 1874, and engaged in cheese making, in the town of Washington. In 1881 he bought the Fessenden farm, located on sections 23, 24 and 25. Here he built a large barn with a stone basement and enlarged the frame house he now occupies. He is still engaged in the manufacture of cheese, using at the present time the milk of 130 cows. He also has a factory in Dane county. He manufactures Limburger and brick cheese. He was born in the canton of Bern in Switzerland, June 6, 1836. He learned the art of cheese making when a boy, and when seventeen years old went to France, where he was engaged in that occupation. In 1856 he left that country and came to America, locating in New Jersey, where he lived one year. He then went to New York and engaged in making cheese in Oneida county, remaining there the greater part of the time till 1870 when he came to Wisconsin and located at Watertown where he started two cheese factories, which he sold in 1874, and as before stated, came to Green county. He was married in 1874 to Louisa Weismiller, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Weismiller, pioneers of Green county. Mr. and Mrs. Bass have three children—John, Bertha and one not yet named.

CHAPTER XLIV.

TOWN OF YORK.

This is the northwest town of the county. The territory is identically the same as that of congressional township 4 north, range 6 east, of the fourth principal meridian. It is bounded on the north by the town of Perry, Dane county; on the east by the town of New Glarus; on the south by the town of Adams; and on the west by the town of Moscow, Iowa county, and town of Blanchard, Lafayette county.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The western part of the eastern tier of sections make the water-shed between the waters that flow southeast, uniting with Sugar river, and the waters that flow southwest, uniting with the Pecatonica river. The eastern part of the town is very rolling, and generally prairie, interspersed with groves, and the larger part of the town, including the western part of the eastern half, and all of the western half is quite hilly. The hills in the western and southwestern portions reaches an elevation of from 150 to 250 feet above the valley level. Many of these hills are quite abrupt, but farmers living in the valleys are able to make roads leading to their lands on the ridges. Three considerable streams are made within the limits of this town, by spring branches coursing their way down the many valleys. These streams flow southwesterly, and finally find their way to the Pecatonica river. The many highways of the town are devious, now following a valley through a settlement, and now over a ridge or high land, and again entering a valley. There is one exception to this rule. One well traveled road passes north and south through the eastern tier of sections. This is what is known as the Argyle and Madison road.

The highlands with the exception of York prairie, spoken of, were originally timbered with the common varieties of trees, principally oak, black walnut, poplars, basswood and hickory. The valleys were generally filled with a rank growth of grass and weeds, varied by occasional patches of wild plum and wild apple trees, and plenty of wild grapes.

The soil of the prairies is a black loam, with a limestone and clay foundation. The valleys have generally an alluvial soil. The timbered highlands are principally clay with a limestone mixture. Plenty of limestone for all purposes is found, and in the southwest part considerable sandstone crops out.

The town is well watered, and especially well adapted to stock and dairy business.

EARLY SETTLEMENT

John Stewart made the first settlement in the territory now known as the town of York, in 1838. He came from Union Co., Ohio, in 1837, after which he spent one year in Wiota, Lafayette county. He made a claim upon section 27. This claim was mostly prairie, but the west side was covered with timber, in which, near a spring, he built his log house. Mr. Stewart was born in 1806. His father, Joseph Stewart, settled in Ohio in the early part of this century. John Stewart was married in Union Co., Ohio, to Adeline Robinson, March 2, 1830. She was born Oct. 13, 1809. When he came to Wisconsin he had five children. One child, John W., died at Wiota, when quite young. His death was caused by a singular accident. He was trying to blow a large tin dinner horn, and fell, driving the small end of the horn through the roof of his mouth and the side of his head, causing death a few days later. In 1884 only two of the children were living. Decatur lives in Turner Co., Dak.; and Ellen, who was born at Wiota, is the wife of Charles Green, and lives in Nebraska. The others were Adeline, who died when but a child, in 1847; Jerusha, deceased wife of E. N. Thayer; and George who died in California. His wife died Sept. 5, 1844. In 1850, accompanied by his son, George, Mr. Stewart went to California, returning in the winter of 1851—2. A few years later George went back to California where he died. Some years after his wife's death, Mr. Stewart married Mrs. Huldah Brown. Two children was the result of this union—Banks, who lives in Lincoln, Neb.; and Grant, who lives with his widowed mother in Albia, Iowa. John Stewart was one of the best blacksmiths and iron-workers ever known in this country, excelling in handling edged tools. Mr. Stewart is well remembered by the early settlers as an honest, industrious citizen, kind and charitable; genial in his intercourse with all men. He never was a party either as plaintiff or defendant in a lawsuit. His death, which occurred in February, 1867, caused much sorrow among his many friends. His youngest child by his first marriage was John W. Stewart.

John W. Stewart, son of John and Adeline Stewart, was born Sept. 4, 1844. He was married to Carrie M. Lundly, Oct. 30, 1870. She was born during an ocean voyage May 20, 1852. Her parents are now living in this town. They have three children—John W., Ida A. and Nellie M. Mr. Stewart now lives on section 22, town of York.

The next settler was William C. Green, who came here from Wethersfield, Wyoming Co., N.Y., in the fall of 1839, and built a small log house. He returned to New York, coming back the following spring with his wife and children. His children were—Rebecca, wife of Clark Hickox, of Iowa county; Jane A., wife of Duncan McDonald, Vernon Co., Mo.; Amy, wife of Thomas Biggs, died in 1855; William H., who enlisted in company C, 37th Wisconsin Volunteers. In one of the assaults made in the fall, 1864, upon the defenses of Petersburg, as 2d sergeant he had charge of the colors of the regiment. The charge was repulsed and being wounded in both legs he was unable to walk, and under the terrific fire of the rebel lines, he dragged himself (drawing the colors by his teeth), back to the Union entrenchments, a brave and glorious deed by a worthy son of a worthy sire. He died in the hospital from wounds received that day. Another son, John Murray, a veteran of the 3d Wisconsin Volunteers, died in the service at Fayetteville, Tenn. Franklin L. died in 1855. One daughter, Laura, is the wife of Decatur Stewart, Dak.; and Martha Ann lives in Woodstock, Ohio, wife of Ralph Burnham. Three children were born in this town—Albert M., (see his biography), Charles R., resident of Madison Co., Neb.; and Isabelle S., wife of Edward Ruff, of Denver, Col. Mr. Green settled on section 23. The old log house still stands, near the fine residence of his non, Albert M. He was a prominent man in public affairs in his town and county. He was a man of many sterling qualities, and represented Green county in the State legislature of 1850. Joanna, his wife, died in this town, Oct. 21, 1846. In the year of 1848, Mr. Green married Mrs. Eliza Hobbs, and in the year 1861 they made their home in Monroe, where Mr. Green died Aug. 3, 1870, aged seventy years. His widow is now living at Monroe.

Amos Conkey came from Wyoming Co., N.Y., in the year 1841, accompanied by Samuel and Josiah Eddy. Mr. Conkey settled on section 14, on land previously owned by Hall Chandler, who was from the same town and county in

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

New York. He built a log house and lived a bachelor several years. When about forty years of age he married Mrs. Mary Ann Marston. She was born and reared in England. Mr. Conkey died near Monroe, (where he lived the latter years), Dec. 21, 1874, aged sixty-five years. His widow yet survives him.

Albert M. Green, a son of Hon. William C. and Joanna Green, was the second child born in this town. The date was April 23, 1842. His father was the second settler of this town, and perhaps the most prominent man of the town in its early days. (For extended notice of him and family see history of early settlement.) Albert M. Green was reared a farmer. He was one of the first to respond to the call of his country upon its patriotic sons. He enlisted in company B, 18th Wisconsin Volunteers, and one week from the day of leaving Milwaukee the untrained regiment was fighting gallantly in the front of Prentiss's division at the battle of Pittsburg Lauding. In this engagement with many others of the regiment, who held out until retreat was impossible, he was taken prisoner; he was held until June and then paroled. He then went into the parole camp at St. Louis, and remained there until October. He was then sent to Superior City with a part of the reserve force in the Indian campaign against the Sioux (1862). He was exchanged and rejoined the regiment July 20, 1863. After some hospital experience he was discharged for disability in January, 1864. His disability was permanent and he now receives a pension. Dec. 6, 1864, he married Ella G. Brown, daughter of Mrs. Huldah Brown, the second wife of the old pioneer, John Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. Green have had four children—Ralph B., Dall H, (died at the age of eighteen months), Nellie Grace and Amy K. As one of the first born of this township, Mr. Green has witnessed its growth and development and to this has contributed his full share. He has always voted the republican ticket. Charles Reed, came with Mr. Green's family in 1840. He was a single man about twenty years of age. He worked for Mr. Green to pay for eighty acres of land, entered for him by Mr. Green, on section 23 This land he sold to Albro Crowel next year. Mr. Reed then made a new claim, and in 1846, he returned to New York, and married his affianced, Amelia Sherman. His wife died in this town in 1882. Later he sold his farm and moved to Dunn county, this State. None of the family are now residing in the town.

Albro Crowel with his wife and one child accompanied by his brother, Chester, came from Wyoming Co., N. Y., in 1841. He settled on section 23, on land purchased of Reed. His farm is now owned by B. Mosher, and part of the village of Postville is on this land. Mr. Crowel sold his farm in 1858, and moved to Kansas, where the same year his wife died. The following spring he returned to this town and bought a farm on section 25, where he died in February, 1880. His brother, Chester Crowel, married Lydia Ann Day, in November, 1843. This was the first matrimonial event in town. They went to Iowa in 1854, and shortly after to Kansas, where he died in 1875.

In 1842 William Crowel and his family settled on section 22. He was the father of Albro and Chester. The rest of the family came with him. Of the children only one now resides in this town, Roswell Crowel, a son, living on section 22. Mr. Crowel had two married daughters, Alma, wife of Simeon Allan and Polly, wife of Joseph Miller. The former came in 1841, and the latter came in 1842. Mr. Allan and his wife afterwards went to Iowa, where he died; his widow now lives in Minnesota. Mr. Miller and his wife are now residents of the city of Monroe. The other children, all sons, are away from here. Riley lives in Dakota; Dan, in Moody Co., Dak.; Harlow, in St. Joseph, Mo.; and Seth enlisted in the War for the Union, in an Iowa regiment, and died at

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Little Rock, Ark. The father, William Crowel, died in this town in 1859. His wife died in 1845.

Roswell Crowel, son of William and Polly Crowel, was born in Genesee Co., N. Y., Oct. 19, 1826. He came to the town of York with his parents, when sixteen years of age. He was married July 2, 1853, to Janet Scott, daughter of Joseph and Margaret Scott, of Argyle. Her mother died in Scotland, and she came to America with her father in the winter of 1842—3. Five years later, her father settled in Argyle, where he died in 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Crowel have six children—Flora, wife of Arthur Gabriel, of Calhoun Co., Iowa; Dan C., a resident of York; Lottie, wife of Andrew Peterson, a merchant at Postville; Lillie, Spencer and John S., are living with their parents. Mr. Crowel resides on section 22, where he owns a fine farm of 190 acres. Mr. Crowel is one of the pioneers of the town of York, and has contributed his full share to its growth and development.

Ezra Wescott, who came from State of New York, in 1840, was here transiently during the two or three years following, making his home with William C. Green, when in the town. He taught school at Wiota a portion of the time. He selected land on section 25, and in 1842, commenced improvements. In November, 1845, at Wiota, he married Nancy Brown. He was the first magistrate in the town of York, and a prominent public man in the township and county. He represented the south assembly district in the legislature of 1863. He also served as register of deeds and county treasurer. Before the war he became a resident of the town of Cadiz. He died in Minneapolis, while there for medical treatment. His widow in 1884, was living in Cadiz.

Jefferson F. Wescott settled on section 25, in 1842. He was one of the public spirited men of this town, farmer, merchant and magistrate. He represented his assembly district in the legislature of 1869. He died much regretted Feb. 16, 1879.

Jefferson Fayette Wescott was born March 26, 1826, in the town of Wethersfield, Wyoming Co., N. Y., where he lived until the summer of 1842, when he came to Farmer's Grove, Wis., in company with his brother Ezra, and A. L. Cleveland. They embarked on a brig at Buffalo, and after a long, tedious and perilous trip, arrived at Milwaukee. From there they came on foot, arriving at Green's Prairie one dark, stormy night, about midnight, having followed the Indian trail which led from Rock river to Galena. There was, at this time, only two set-tiers on the prairie, John Stewart and William C. Green, and they boarded with Mr. Green until fall, when they made a claim and built a cabin, where for more than a year they kept "bachelor's hall," supplying their table with bread from corn which they raised, and with meat from the deer and wild turkeys, of which they killed an abundance from the door and window of their cabin. In the winter of 1843 he taught the first district school ever kept in the northern part of the county, and in the years following taught several terms in different parts of the county. In 1849 the township form of government having been adopted, and his cabin being just within the limits of New Glarus, he was elected town clerk and justice of the peace, for that town; and as it had just been settled with Swiss people, unacquainted with our language or laws. Mr. Wescott and his father (who had been elected chairman of supervisors), really discharged the duties of all the town offices of that town, for that and the following year. He was married March 26, 1856, to Sarah E. Rogers, who was born in Bradford Co., Penn., Feb. 22, 1831, and her father, Dickerson Rogers, settled on section 31, in 1854, and now lives in Argyle, Lafayette county, aged eighty-nine years. Mrs. Wescott's mother died Dec. 7, 1861. One sister, Fannie, wife of William Brooks, lives in Exeter; one brother, Henry D., lives in Argyle. Mr. and Mrs. Wescott have had eight children, all of whom are now living—Myra E., wife of Charles E. Brooks; Frank, who is married and lives on part of the farm; Charles, who lives in Nebraska; Clara, who is a school teacher; Mary, wife of Albert Loveland; Nellie, Walter and Daisy are living at home. In 1869 Mr. Wescott was elected to the assembly from the first assembly district of this county, and discharged the duties of the office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He was a man of more than ordinary ability, having all his life been a student, and having a wonderfully retentive memory, was able to treasure up what he learned for future use. He was very diffident and retiring in his manners, and never effected a knowledge or an ability he did not possess. He was kind and courteous to all, as well as generous and just, and never intentionally wronged a human being. Politically, he was an active republican, having helped in the organization of that party, and ever afterward labored faithfully and earnestly to maintain its ascendancy. He was strictly a temperance man, having never used tobacco or liquors in any form. His health was always good, until the summer of 1877, when he was injured at a barn raising at a neighbor's, from the effects of which he never recovered. He died Feb. 16, 1879. His widow and family live on the old homestead, which now contains 350 acres. Mrs. Wescott is a lady of refinement and intelligence, possessing, in an eminent degree, those qualities of heart and mind which constitute the true woman.

William Spears came from Ohio and settled on section 25, in 1842. After a few years' residence here he sold his place and went to Primrose, Dane county, and died in Moscow, Iowa county.

Bolvin Day came also in 1842 with quite a family, and settled on section 35. He was a farmer and a mechanical genius. He procured a turning lathe; he made chairs, bedsteads, baskets, etc. he died in the State of Iowa. His son, David, settled on section 1, in 1843; he now lives in Brodhead. None of the family are now residents of this town.

Philander Peebles came in 1842, and settled on section 13. He was born in the town of Middlebury, Genesee Co., N. Y., Jan. 7, 1816. At the age of sixteen years he was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith trade. He followed that avocation until he settled in this town, and a portion of the time twenty years later. He was married to Hannah Hurlbut, March 12, 1837. They lived in Wethersfield, Wyoming county, until October, 1842, when they came here. Mr. Peebles bought government land on section 13, where he has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Peebles have had fourteen children, five girls and nine boys, eleven of whom are living.

Henry Hurlbut, a brother of Mrs. Philander Peebles, came at the same time, and settled on adjoining lands. He left this town in 1882, and now lives in Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa. His father, Augustus Hurlbut, with his wife and two children, in 1843, settled also on section 13, where he died in 1870, and his wife died soon after. He was an ordained minister of the denomination known as Christians. He held religious services frequently in the new settlement, and was always ready to respond to the calls of the afflicted, and to assist in Christian burial of the dead. He was a good man, and universally respected.

Silvenas Conkey family came from Ohio in 1843, and settled on section 14. He was elected magistrate in 1844. He went to California, in 1850, and returned in 1853, for his family. He died in California.

Lemuel Case settled on section 14 in 1843. His wife was a widow when she married him, and was the mother of the two Conkeys. He was the first postmaster in the town, and was a well-educated man. His last days were shrouded in poverty, He died in Dane county.

Hibbard Peebles came to this town in October, 1845, and bought land on section 13, leaving his family in Michigan. They joined him in May, 1846. He was born in Wethersfield, (now Genesee) Wyoming Co., N. Y., Feb 28, 1820. He was married Nov. 3, 1842, to Mary

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

Green, who was born in Gainsville of the same county, Aug. 1, 1822. Their only child, Guilford, was born Jan. 13, 1844. Mr. Peebles located in the town of York, on section 13, in October, 1845. His family joined him in May, of the year following. He lived on section 13 until 1879, when he sold out and bought his present home on section 23, a fine farm of 118 acres. He is a good citizen, an honorable, upright man, and is prominently identified with the Free Will Baptist Church. Guilford Peebles has always lived with his parents, excepting the time of his service in the army. He was drafted Sept. 29, 1864, and assigned to company B, 3d Wisconsin Volunteers. He was at Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 15, 1864, at the time of the great battle between Generals Thomas and Hood; did picket duty, etc., but was not brought into the battle. He was taken prisoner at the capture of a railroad train in Kentucky, December 23, and was paroled on the field. The parole was not recognized by his commanding officers, and he joined the regiment Jan. 8, 1865, at Savanna, Ga. He was in the campaign through the Carolinas, under Sherman, was in the engagement at Robertsville, S. C., Jan. 29, 1865, also at Averysboro, N. C., March 16; he was at Bentonville, but not under fire, March 19. He was in line at the grand review at Washington, June 24, 1865. He was married to Adeline Saddler, Dec. 7, 1870.

Hiram Gabriel came to this town in 1845, from Union Co., Ohio, and settled on section 34, where he now resides. He owns about 800 acres of land, mostly improved. He owns the hotel property formerly owned by Gilbert Post, at Postville. Mr. Gabriel has served as chairman of the town board of supervisors, town clerk and assessor; he also represented his assembly district in the legislature of 1882 and 1883.

The first Norwegian settler of the town of York, was Rasmus Dahlen. He came from Norway with his wife and two daughters in 1851, and settled the same year on section 4. His daughters were—Anna and Ingabor. He lived in this town several years and then moved to Kendall Co., Ill., where both he and his wife died during the same week, in 1879. Anna also died in that county.

The next settlers were Christian Ula and Ole Kanutson, who came together in 1853, from Albany, this county, where they had lived about one year; they left Norway in 1852. Both men had families. Mr. Ula settled on section 20, where he now lives.

Christian H. Ula was born in Norway, June 22, 1808, and was married in May, 1839, to Olang Oleson, born Oct. 14, 1804. They came to the United States in 1852, and to this county, bringing five children with them. They lived on a rented farm in the town of Albany one year. In the spring of 1853 they came to the town of York, and bought 120 acres of government land on section 17. He afterwards bought fifty acres of land on section 20, and moved there in the fall of 1866, where he and his wife still live, with their son, John C., who now owns the farm. Of the other children who came from Norway—Julia is the wife of E. L. Soper, of the town of Jordan; Hans C., lives in the town of York; Ole C., lives in Buffalo Co., Wis.; Inger is the wife of Iver A. Skindingsrud, of this town.

John C. Ula, the oldest son, with whom the parents are living, was born Aug. 31, 1840. He was married June 27, 1864, to Thora A. Skindingsrud, who was born in Norway, Aug. 11, 1847. She came to the United States with her parents in 1857, and settled in the town of Adams. This union has been blessed with twelve children, all of whom are now living, and make their home with their parents—A. Christian, C. Andrew, G. Olena, O. Jertina, I. Thoneta, Olia, Hannah, Peter O., Johan T., T. Julia, Anna E. and Clara T. Mr. Ula has now a farm containing 411 acres, and he is one of the prominent representative citizens of the town. He has held several offices in the town, two terms as chairman of the town board; has been supervisor eight years, assessor one year, town treasurer three years, magistrate six years and notary public the last ten years. He also took the United States census in this town in 1880. In February, 1865, he enlisted in company A, 46th Wisconsin Volunteer, and served until the close of the war, when the regiment was mustered out of service at Madison, Wis.

M. O. Eidsmore was born in Valdeis, Norway, Aug. 6, 1825. He came to the United States in 1852, reaching Blue Mounds June 13, of that year. On September 2 of the same year he was married to Annie Helland, who was born July 17, 1827, in Norway. They were members of the same party of emigrants. They settled in the town of York, May 10, 1854, when he pre-empted forty acres of land on section 10. He has added to this land until the homestead now contains 160 acres. He also owns a timber lot of seventeen acres on section 6. They have five children—Ole M., born in 1853; Gunhild O., born in 1855, the wife of J. A. Kittleson; Julia, born in 1858, wife of Otto Peterson, of Moscow; Martin, born in 1861, and Anton, born in 1863. The two last named are living with their parents. Ole M. suffered by a partial stroke of paralysis when three years old. He has but little use of his right arm. He is a school teacher by profession, having received his education in the district schools, the Normal school at Platteville and State University. M. O. Eidsmore served in the Kings army in Norway, from the spring of 1848 to the spring of 1852. In February, 1865, he enlisted in company I, 45th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the close of the war. He is a good citizen and possesses many commendable traits of character. A brother of his, A. O. Eidsmore, came from Norway in 1852. In his journey west he passed through Buffalo, and there embarked for Detroit in the fated steamer Atlantic. This boat left her dock at Buffalo on a beautiful midsummer night, filled with emigrants from every State in the east. She also numbered among her passengers an emigrant party of 132 Norwegians. The hundreds of human souls, filled with confident hope of a new life in the bountiful west, then beginning to develop its teaming wealth, were all joyous in the prospects before them. How sad the tragedy of the morning. Off the port of Erie, in the darkness preceding the break of day, the ill starred steamer was struck by the east-bound propeller Ogdensburg, and in less than twenty minutes, was engulfed in the waters of the lake, with hundreds of her passengers. The fates were merciful to Mr. Eidsmore and his. He was saved with his wife and two children, but with the lost were sixty-eight of the hardy sons and daughters of the Norsland. He made his home in Dane county until 1854, when he came to this town and made his home on section 10, where he now lives, (1884). Another brother, Christopher Eidsmore, also left Norway in 1852; each of the three families, though leaving Norway the same year, came at a different time. He settled first in Springdale, but came to this town in 1854, and settled on section 15. After several years he made his present residence on section 1.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first death which occurred in the new settlement was that of Harriet, daughter of Philander and Hannah Peebles. She died Jan. 1, 1843, aged two years and seven months.

The wife of John Stewart died Sept. 5, 1844.

The first birth in the town was that of Lucy Jane, daughter of Joseph and Polly Miller, which event occurred Dec. 2, 1841. She died March 12, 1859.

The second birth was that of Albert M. Green, son of Hon. William C. Green. The date was April 23, 1842.

Emeline, daughter of Albro and Elmira Crowel, was born March 30, 1843. She is now the wife of John Burr of this town. The first marriage solemnized in this town was that of Chester Crowel and Libby Ann Day, in November, 1843. Ezra Wescott and Nancy Brown were married in 1845. Thomas Biggs and Amy Green were also married in 1845.

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

The first stone house was built by Philander Peebles in 1851. The first to break land and built by in 1852. The first frame house was Hibbard Peebles raise crops was John Stewart. The first public house in the town of York was a log house opened on section 12, by Eli George. The York Prairie House was opened on the same section in the same year.

The first man to enlist in the Union army from the town of York in 1861 was Levi Bryant. He lost an arm at the battle of Chancellorsville; he afterwards found employment under the general government at Washington, in which he is now (1884) engaged.

The early settlers found market for their produce at Mineral Point, Galena, lead mining districts, and Milwaukee. They have drawn wheat to Milwaukee, a distance of 110 miles and sold it for forty and fifty cents per bushel. They would get a return load of store goods and emigrants, occupying seven days to make the round trip.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

In the winter of 1841—42 a meeting of the settlers was held to adopt a name for the settlement, at which time, the name Green's Prairie was adopted. After the organization of the State, the county of Green was organized, and being sub-divided into several townships, this town, in honor of the old home of most of its settlers—"York State," was called York. Its first election as a separate township was held in April, 1850. Among the men who have been prominent in town affairs, are William C. Green, John Stewart, P. Peebles, J. F. Wescott, D. C. Day, J. S. Gabriel, H. Gabriel, E. B. Crowel, A. O. Eidsmore and S. C. Campbell. The present officers of the town are: Hiram Gabriel, chairman; S. C. Campbell and Brindiel Syverson, side board; Dr. A. L. Day, town clerk; J. A. Kittleson, assessor; A. Peterson, treasurer; A. O. Eidsmore and A. Wheeler, justices of the peace.

The town of York has four full school districts: District No. 1 is the Postville district; the school house, a frame building, valued at $555 including site and furniture, is situated in the village. Number of pupils, fifty-seven.

District No. 2 has a stone school house on section 15, valued with lot and furniture at $500. Number of scholars, twenty-three.

District No. 3 has a frame school house on section 18, valued with grounds and furniture at $455. Number of pupils, thirty-two.

District No. 4 has a frame building on section 29, valued at $235. Number of pupils, forty-four.

There are five joint districts in the town. District No. 1, Perry and York. The school house is situated in Perry. Number of pupils in York, nine.

District No. 2, York and New Glarus. The frame school house is situated on section 19, town of York, valued at $125. Number of Pupils in this town, thirty.

District No. 4, York and Moscow. School house is located in Moscow. Number of pupils in York is five.

District No. 6, York and Perry, with the school house in Perry. Number of pupils in York, eighteen.

District No. 11, York, Perry and Moscow; the school house is located in Moscow. Number of pupils in York, one.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services were held in this town in the year 1842, by Rev. Mr. Halstead, (the Methodist minister then located at Monroe) at the residence of Joseph Miller. Services by that denomination from this time onward were held in this town with more or less regularity. They have always maintained an organization since that date, and in 1868 completed and dedicated a church in Postville. This building is 36x50 feet in size, has a belfry, but no bell; its cost was $2,300. Its trustees and building committee were: G. Post, James Byrne, S. C. Campbell, R. Crowel, Alvin Thatcher and others. Rev. P. W. Matthews, presiding elder of the Madison district, conducted the dedicatory services in December, 1868. Rev. Thomas Clawson was the first pastor of the Church. He was followed by Revs. A. D. Jenks, Richard Pengallie, Robert Burnip, E. W. Allan, P. K. Jones, W. N. Thomas, W. T. Briggs and the present pastor, appointed in 1883, Rev. Mr. Case.

The Free-will Baptist Society also built a church in Postville the same year (1868). They dedicated their church in January, 1869, the Rev. Dr. Graham, of Chicago, officiating. This church has a belfry but no bell. The building is 36x45 in size. Its cost is $2,300. The church was built under the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Dinsmore. The building committee were: Joseph Miller, Rev. J. S. Dinsmore and William Johnson, with Hibbard Peebles as treasurer. Rev. Dinsmore was succeeded by Rev. W. A. Potter, who was settled here about ten years, and was succeeded by Rev. O. H. True. He is now (1884) the pastor of that Church.

The Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran church is located on section 5. It was built in 1861. It size is 36x56 feet. It has a belfry but no bell, and its cost was $3,000. The building committee was E. S. Holland, William Tjentland and Christopher Gulson. Rev. Mr. Fjield was the first pastor. He remained until 1881, when he retired from the active ministry, and is now living in Black Earth, Dane county. The congregation has been divided, and one part is under the pastorate of Rev. M. Isberg, while the other is under the pastorate of Rev. Theodore Reimestead. Both societies worship in the store.

CEMETERIES.

The York Prairie Cemetery was located on section 23, in 1846. Joanna, wife of Hon. William C. Green, was the first person buried there; she died Oct. 21, 1846. Mrs. Molly Peebles, who lived to the age of ninety-one years, was buried in this ground in 1853. Mrs. Lucy Miller, who reached the same age, was buried here in 1867. Elisha Gorham, in his ninetieth year, was buried here in 1873.

On section 27 there was a private burying ground on the old John Stewart farm. Mrs. Adeline Stewart, wife of John Stewart, was the first one buried here; she died Sept. 5, 1844.

The Norwegian cemetery on their church grounds, was established the year their church was built. The first burial there was that of Karine, daughter of Thomas Thompson. This event occurred the day the frame of the church was put in position, in June, 1861. There is an older Norwegian cemetery located on section 17. This was the first Norwegian burial place in the town.

POSTOFFICES.

The first post office was established in 1846 and called Farmer's Grove. Lemuel Chase was made postmaster, and the office was kept at his residence on section 14. He was succeeded by Obadiah Ames. His wife, Mrs. Sarah Ames, was the deputy, and did all the business of the office. Gilbert Post was the successor of Mr. Ames; and he was followed by Robert Garrett, and he by J. F. Wescott, who kept the office at his residence on section 25, until his death in 1879. Then his widow, Mrs. Sarah E. Wescott, was made postmistress, and still retains the office. With each change of officers until the last, the office has been moved. The name of the office has attached itself, for the time being, to each neighborhood in which it was situated. The next post office established, about 1850, was called Bem; Charles Crowel was the first postmaster and kept the office at his residence on section 12. This office is now kept by William Owens, Jr., at his residence on section 13. The third postoffice established, about 1862, was named Stewart, in honor of the pioneer settler, John Stewart. Fred Durham was the first postmaster; he was succeeded by John Hollar and he by Albro Crowel, and he by Alanson Sherman. R. S. Mosher is the present postmaster, but the office is kept by Andrew Peterson, deputy, at his store in Postville.

John Stewart, soon after his settlement in 1838, built a blacksmith shop. All old settlers speak highly of his skill as a workman, particularly in making and handling edged tools.

Philander Peebles, who settled in 1842, also worked at the forge. He was an excellent mechanic and did work hard to excel.

John Stewart built a saw-mill on section 20, on a branch of the Pecatonica river, which was ready for operation in 1855. Alonzo Wheeler was the builder. Mr. Stewart, a few years later, sold the property to his son, Decatur, who afterwards sold it to John Presher. Mr. Presher operated the mill until about 1868, since which time it has been unused.

Albro Crowel, who settled in 1841, built the first house in Postville, which is now standing. A few years later he opened a small stock of goods at his residence. He was the first merchant in the town of York. He traded two or three years only. Some years later he was again in trade, in a larger way, and continued until he moved to Kansas, in 1868.

The next mercantile venture was that of Edward Sendel, who erected a small building on section 14, in 1848, and kept a small stock of goods. He closed out in about two years.

About 1850 E. T. Gardner, in the neighborhood of Farmer's Grove, on section 25, opened a store. Two years or so later he sold his goods to Gilbert Post, and his farm to Milton Kelly. Mr. Post traded there until 1858, when he moved his stock to what was afterward known as Postville. Trade was continued at Farmer's Grove by J. F. and W. S. Wescott, in a building erected by J. F. Westcott for that purpose. This business was commenced in 1862. In 1866 J. F. Wescott bought the interest of his partner, and continued the business until his death, in 1879. During the active business life of Mr. J. F. Wescott, Farmer's Grove was quite a point. There were two blacksmith shops open there, and several families living there. Nothing of its former business now remains (1884.)

POSTVILLE.

The growing corners began to assume the appearance of a village in about 1858, when Gilbert Post moved in from the prairie and commenced trade there. Mr. Post erected a building for a residence and store under the same roof. This property for many years has been known as the Postville Hotel, and in 1884 was owned by Hiram Gabriel. Mr. Post sold his goods to Pascoe & King in 1874, and in 1877 moved to Monroe. In 1883 he went to Lemars, Iowa. He had two twin sons—Owen G. and Orren C. The former left Postville in 1882, and the later in 1883. They also live in Iowa. The firm of Pascoe & King, who succeeded Mr. Post, was dissolved by the death of Mr. Pascoe in May, of the following year. His death was caused by injuries received from the running away of a team. The firm was changed to King & Crowel. They occupied a new building, erected by O. S. Jones during that year. The firm became King & Jones in February, 1876. They did business until May 1, 1879, when they sold to Andrew Peterson & H. Hurlbut. In September, 1880, Mr. Peterson bought the interest of his partner, and is now (1884) in the business. Postville has one other store, which was built in 1870 by E. Sherman, who, the next year, put in a light stock of goods. He only traded a short time, and now lives at Lemars, Iowa. In 1873 John W. Gabriel and R. M. Hurlbut stocked the store and continued in trade about one year, when they sold their stock to H. Cunningham, who moved the goods from the town. Mr. Gabriel now keeps a railroad hotel in Ohio. R. Barlow, F. E. Legler and R. A. Etter have successively occupied the building. Mr. Etter sold his stock to Hurlbut, of the old firm of Gabriel & Hurlbut, who, in 1883, closed out and moved his stock to Peterson, Iowa, where he is now in trade. The building is now occupied (1884) by Gabriel & Lundy, boot and shoe dealers.

Dr. A. L. Day opened a drug store in the spring of 1867. A year or so later he sold his stock to Gilbert Post. Dr. Rundlet owned the stock afterwards. After him Dr. Pierce kept a small stock of drugs. After the return of Dr. Day from Iowa, he kept a drug department in the store of King & Co., two or three years, then he sold his stock to the company, who sold out the trade.

A shop was built by Gilbert Post in 1859, and occupied by Thomas Mitchell, afterwards by Peter Olson, and later by Mr. Kayser, and after him by Andrew Thompson. When Peter Olson left the old shop, he built a new one, which he afterwards sold to Andrew Thompson, who closed the old shop. He continues the business of blacksmithing and wagon repairing. There is another shop in the village with Samuel Copeland as proprietor. Mr. Rathburn had a cabinet shop here in the early days. Mr. Fellows was the first wagon maker and repairer. He now lives in Iowa.

Dr. Smith located here in 1856. He owned a farm and lived within the present limits of the village. He was a botanical physician. He moved to Monroe about 1859. He died there not many years ago. The town some years after his removal was without a resident physician.

In 1867 Dr. A. L. Day commenced practice here, continuing two and one-half years, when he moved away. He returned here in 1875, and is now the resident physician of the town. He has the confidence of all and his practice is consequently large. He is skillful as a surgeon as well as a physician.

During the absence of Dr. Day, Dr. Rundlet was located here a short time, and after him Dr. Pierce.

A large well-built and well-furnished cheese factory was built and put in operation in Postville in 1874. It was built by a stock company at a cost of $2,500. The officers of the company are: S. C. Campbell, president; E. H. Miller, secretary. The association of farmers operating the factory have a board of directors with J. S. Gabriel, president; E. H. Miller, secretary; and D. Ash, treasurer.

The milk of about 450 cows is used in the manufacture of American cheese.

The Farmer's Grove Cheese Factory, located on section 25, was built in 1877. It is owned by an association of farmers with John Burr, president; J. M. Peebles, secretary; Jacob Hoesly, treasurer. The milk of about 200 cows is used in the manufacture of Limburger cheese.

A cheese factory was put in operation by a farmer's association on section 16, in 1882. They use the milk of about 200 cows in the manufacture of Swiss cheese.

A factory was put in operation the same year on section 29, which manufactures Limburger cheese.

On section 10 there is a factory in operation, using the milk of about ninety cows in the manufacture of brick cheese. This is also owned by an association of farmers, and put in operation in 1882.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Joseph S. Gabriel was born in Union Co., Ohio, Nov. 16, 1826. He was reared a farmer. He came to the town of York, in April, 1846, and worked for his uncle, John Stewart, on the farm now owned and occupied by himself, until October of the same year, when he went back to Ohio, and remained eighteen months. He then returned to this town and worked on a farm until the fall of 1849. He then took a trip through northern Iowa, and southern Minnesota, working a few weeks in a sawmill in Clayton Co., Iowa. In the spring of 1850, in company with his brother, Hiram, his uncle, John Stewart, and George, son of John Stewart, he went to California. Starting on the 22d of April, and crossing the plains, arrived at Georgetown on the 10th of September, mining on the American river with his brother, until October, 1851, when they returned to Ohio, by the way of San Francisco, Acapulco and Panama city, then came down the Shagres river sixty-five miles in a small skiff to Shagres. Then shipped aboard the steamer Ohio, for New York, landing there on the first day of November; thence by the way of Philadelphia to their destination, where Joseph remained until 1852. In that year, he again came to York and bought 280 acres of land on section 30, upon which he lived till 1868, when he bought his present farm on section 27, which was the first farm made in the town, by John Stewart, the pioneer settler. Mr. Gabriel was married June 3, 1853, to Eliza Jane Cunningham, who was born Sept. 11, 1834, and is a daughter of Matthew Cunningham, who came from Darke Co., Ohio, and settled in the town of Adams, in March, 1841. He died in 1872. His widow, Mrs. Prudence Cunningham, now lives in Iowa county, with her sister, Mrs. Mary King, widow of John King. Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel, have ten children—Letha M., wife of Fred L. Ames; Mary Jane, Huldah O., Maria S., John Houston, George L., Hittie Luella, Byron J., Hiram A. and Rodney C. Mr. Gabriel is a prominent representative citizen. He has served three or four terms as chairman of the town board, also as a member of the side board, as assessor, several terms as treasurer, and also as magistrate.

Samuel C. Campbell was born in Washington Co., Va., July 1, 1827. His father, James Campbell, was a farmer, and to this avocation the son was reared. His father died Aug. 18, 1840, aged fifty-four years. Samuel C. Campbell and Martha J. Cook were married Feb. 10, 1846. She was born Jan. 15, 1827. Being under age, they were obliged to leave the State to have the ceremony legally performed. They crossed the western line of the State, and were married in Tennessee, Oct. 16, 1847. They left their home destined for Memphis, Tenn. They remained there until March 7, 1848. Then they came to Green county, by way of Galena, renting a farm in this town the first season. In December, the same year, Mr. Campbell made a claim in Perry, Dane county. He moved there in February of the following year and lived there nineteen years. In the fall of 1867, he sold his farm there of 204 acres, and moved to York, buying the farm he now owns and occupies, on section 35. His farm was known as the "Gorham place," and contains 231 acres. They have had seven children and all are living—James R, a commission merchant in Eau Claire, Wis.; Frank B., who lives also in Eau Claire in the agency business; Charles C., living in Monroe, is in the agency business; Sarah A., the wife of E. H. Miller; Addie A, wife of R. A. Etter, of Monroe; Ulysses Grant, was (1884) attending school at Monroe; Samuel A., lives with his parents. Mr. Campbell is a prominent public spirited citizen of the town, an active promoter of everything tending to public good. He is now (1884) one of the board of supervisors of the town. His mother died Sept. 3, 1883. Politically he is a republican. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are both members of the M. E. Church.

Richard Gabriel came to Green county in 1845, locating in the town of Adams, where he purchased land and engaged in farming and prospecting for mineral, also worked a portion of the time, in the Badger Diggings, until 1850. In that year he moved to the town of York. He was born in Union, Union Co., Ohio, May 20, 1813. In November, 1836, he came west and located in Wiota, remaining in that vicinity about four years, engaged, generally, in mining. In 1840 he removed to Grant county, and settled near the headwaters of Cedar creek. He remained there about eighteen months, then returned to Wiota. In 1851 he purchased 160 acres of land on section 27, and made his home there. In 1872, he sold this farm and bought a farm a little west of, the village of Postville, where he and his wife now reside. Mr. Gabriel was married Jan. 14, 1846, to Elizabeth Cunningham, who was born in Marshall Co., Va., Nov. 11, 1830. They were the first couple married in the town of Adams, Green Co., Wis. The ceremony was performed by Sylvanus Conkey, Esq. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel—Prudence, widow of Rodney Gabriel, resides in Union Co., Ohio. Catharine died in infancy. Their twin sons, Arthur and Cyrus, live in Calhoun Co., Iowa. Joseph P. is a resident, of Ohio. John Wesley lives in Union Co., Ohio. Robert lives in Iowa.

Obadiah Ames came from the State of Maine in 1850. He lived for three years upon rented land, then settled on section 25. His family, who accompanied him from Maine, consisted of a wife and five children—Maria, now the wife of Jacob Garrett, Eau Claire, Wis.; Laban L. living at Fall City, Dunn Co., Wis.; George R. a resident of Nebraska; Lucinda, wife of C. O. Westcott, and Elwin are living at Farmer's Valley, Neb. One child—Fred L., was born in this town.

Fred L. Ames and Lethe Gabriel were married Dec. 23, 1875. They have one child—Theodore, born Sept. 7, 1880. He (Fred L. Ames) sold his farm on section 35, early in 1884, with the intention of removing to Farmer's Valley, Neb., in the spring of 1885, where he has purchased an improved farm. George R. Ames was a member of the 8th Wisconsin Volunteer regiment (the Eagle regiment) company E. He served four years and was wounded at the Spanish Fort at Mobile. The wound was not serious, but through an injury to the spinal nerve, he was permanently disabled, so as to prevent manual labor or active business life. He receives a pension of $30 per month. He was married to Olive Tibbetts, of Downs ville, Dunn Co., Wis. They have four children—Walter H., Hartley L., Maud and Earl. Their residence is in Aurora, Hamilton Co., Neb. Mr. and Mrs. Obadiah Ames removed to Monroe in the spring of 1881. Mrs. Ames, while on a visit to her children in Nebraska, died in the summer of 1883. Mr. Ames was at one time postmaster at Farmer's Grove, his wife attending to the business of the officers.

John Burr was born in Lincolnshire, England, Feb. 9, 1829. In 1837 he was brought to the State of New Jersey by his cousin, William Burr. About one year after he went to Ohio.

He lived with Gilbert Post during the latter part of Mr. Poet's residence in Ohio and came to this town with him in 1852. He worked here for Mr. Post and others at farm work, until he enlisted in company E, 8th Wisconsin Volunteers (Eagle Regiment) Aug. 21, 1861. He was wounded at the battle of Corinth, Oct. 3, 1862, which necessitated his discharge from the army. He now receives a pension. March 15, 1863, Mr. Burr married Emeline, daughter of Albro and Almira Crowel, who settled in this town in 1841. Mrs. Burr was the third white child born in this town, March 30, 1843. After their marriage they lived upon rented lands until the spring of 1866, when he bought, on section 16, a farm of 160 acres known as the Henry Green place. In the fall he sold his place and worked his father-in-law's farm in 1867. He afterwards made other changes and in the year 1874, he bought ninety-one acres of improved land of D. T. Biggs, on sections 24 and 36. His residence is on section 24. They have two daughters residing at home (1884)—Nettie A. and Almira E. Politically Mr. Burr has always been a republican.

William Owens, Jr., a native of Canada West, was born Jan. 3, 1853. In 1854 his father, William Owens, moved to the town of York, where he has, until recently, been engaged in farming. He now lives in the village of Postville. William Owen, Jr., was married May 10, 1875, to Mrs. Martha J. Byrnes. They have four children—Ernest E., Frederick L., Oliver Garfield and Lillie. Mrs. Owens' first husband, James Byrnes, came from Canada in 1851, and settled on section 13, of the town of York. He died Aug. 30, 1869, leaving four children—William J., Mary J., George and Emma. Mr. and Mrs. Owens reside upon the homestead of Mrs. Owens' first husband, which contains 300 acres of valuable land. Mr. Owens is postmaster of Bem post office which is kept at his residence.

Knute Olsen Syre was born in Norway, Feb. 6, 1818. In 1849 he was married to Gunheld Ellingsen, and they came to the United States the year following. One child was born to them in Norway—Catharine. She was two weeks old when they started for this country. His first settlement was made in Dane county. He bought 120 acres of land near Stoughton and lived there until 1854, when he sold out and came to the town of York and bought 214 acres of land, which he still owns and occupies. His residence is on section 2. They have had six children born in this country—Berthine, the deceased wife of Thorsten Eidsmore; Julia, wife of George Johnson, who lives in the town of Perry; Olena, a resident of Chicago; Olans, Susan and Gustav, who live with their parents. Mr. Olsen is a very intelligent, enterprising citizen, a man of strict integrity and a good neighbor.

Adne Burgeson was born in Norway in 1809. He came to the United States, with his wife and three children, in 1843, and settled in Christiana, Dane county, where he lived until 1855. In the spring of that year he sold his farm there and bought 160 acres of land on section 1, of the town of York, where he and his wife now live, advanced in years, with their son, Ole, who now owns the homestead. The children who came from Norway with them are—Elizabeth, the wife of Ole Kettleon; Rhoda, deceased, wife of Jacob Jorgeasen; William, who enlisted in the 15th Wisconsin Volunteers, in 1861, and died in the general hospital at Nashville, in October, 1863. There were born in this State—Ole, who died in infancy; Edwin, who died in 1882; John, a resident of Lake Mills, Iowa; and Ole, with whom the parents are now living. Ole was born Nov. 1, 1851, and was married April 14, 1882, to Julia Hadley. She was born Oct. 28, 1858. They have two children—Anna Helena, born in February, 1883; and Huldah Amanda, born in April, 1884.

James T. Hilton was born in Somerset Co., Maine, Oct. 1, 1830. His father, John Hilton, was a farmer, and to this avocation James was reared. He came to Green county in 1850, and lived in the town of Washington, seven years owning a farm of 100 acres on section 7. In 1857, he bought the farm he now owns and occupies, on section 25, this town. The land was entered as government land, by Amos and Horace Green. His purchase included 148 acres. He has added to this, and now owns 240 acres. Oct. 10, 1858, he married Ellen, daughter of Philander Peebles. She was born in Wyoming Co., N. Y., in October, 1838, and was four years of age when her parents settled in this town. Six children have been born to them—Edith, the wife of Frank Westcott; Nire, wife of John Snow; Elam, Hannah, Lucinda and Ernest. Mr. Hilton enlisted in company I, 46th Wisconsin Volunteers, and served until the regiment was mustered out. Daniel, his oldest brother, came west in the fall of 1850, and lived twenty years in the town of Washington. He now lives in Pocahontas Co., Iowa. One brother, Parker L. Hilton, lived in this town one year, 1849-50. He then went to California, and afterwards back to the State of Maine. Two brothers, Joseph and Gustavus, settled in Washington, in 1851, and the former moved to Sioux Co., Iowa, in 1884. His father died in Somerset Co., Maine, aged eighty-eight years. His mother has for many years lived with him. She was ninety-five years of age, April 17, 1884, and in good health. She reads and enjoys herself and is seldom absent from the family table.

Alonzo Wheeler was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., Nov. 6, 1819. His father, Joseph Wheeler, shortly after moved to Oswego county, where the subject of this sketch was married to Frances M. Rich, May 19, 1851, and came directly to Beloit, in this State. Living there one year, they went to Lafayette county, where he rented some land and worked at his trade of millwright. In December, 1853, he moved to the town of York, and lived in a house owned by William Crowel. In March, 1855, he moved to Adams, rented a farm and worked at job work of different kinds. In 1859 he bought 120 acres of land on section 8, of the town of York, where he lived until 1860, when

HISTORY OF GREEN COUNTY.

He bought the farm he now owns and occupies, which contains 190 acres, with the residence on section 14, and was the third place to be settled in the town, known as the "Amos Conkey place." The first post office of this town, "Farmer's Grove," was established on this place. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler have had twelve children, and eleven of them at this time (1884) are living, and with their parents. Don A., Willard R., DeAlton, Reuben L., Edward C., Laura A., Cora R., Isaac J., Mary, Frank, who died March 23, 1872; Julia and Lettie. Mr. Wheeler is a good mechanic. In early days he built the John Stewart saw mill on section 20. He is a good citizen, an upright man, and has the respect of the community in which he lives.

Jacob A. Kittleson lives upon section 10, where he settled in 1872. He was married in November of that year, to Gunhild, daughter of M. O. and Anna Eidsmore. Mr. Kittleson was born July 13, 1850, in Norway. His wife is a native of this town, born July 3, 1855. His father, Isaac Kittleson, came to the United States in June, 1855, and settled in the town of Perry, Dane county, where he now resides, and owns 240 acres of land. His family, who accompanied him from Norway, consisted of his wife, Ellen Christine (Lee) Kittleson, and three children, all boys—Jacob A., subject of this sketch; Christian E. and James E. The latter died at the age of seventeen years. The former is living in Trempealeau Co., Wis. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kittleson in Wisconsin—Anna M., now the wife of Herman B. Dahle, a merchant at Mount Vernon; Eliza, living with her parents; Elsie A., wife of A. P. Dalby, Edelle and Isaac E. are living at home. Jacob Kittleson purchased his farm of M. O. and C. O. Eidsmore. It contains 160 acres. He is a prominent and useful citizen. He served as town clerk in 1874 and 1875, and again in 1880 and 1881. He was elected chairman of the town board in 1882, and re-elected in 1883. He was elected assessor in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Kittleson have five children—Isaac M., Edward A., Clara A., James G. and Ellen G.
